$600 Group Fundraiser Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising programs Equals $1,000-$3,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for up to $600 in bonuses when you schedule your fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments. Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

Employment

The Big Ass Clothing Sale is coming: Brand name Warehouse, a liquidator of the hottest brands in the country, is looking for Setup/Teardown, cashiers and floor recovery assistants for our clearance sale running Oct. 30 thru Nov. 3 @ The Lincoln Campus Center/ Campus Center Auditorium. Please email us at: employment@bnwsale.com

Bartenders/ Waitresses/ Promoters Wanted. New Western Mass Night Club/ Sports Bar. Only 15 minutes from campus! Call Don @ (413) 536-8494 Email don@maximumpromo.com

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening experiments $10/hr English must be your first language email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience nees. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Web programmer with experience with graphics design wanted for work in the Office of ALANA Affairs. Up to $10.00 an hour. Apply at office in room 302 in Student Union or email ofalana@stuaf.umass.edu

Employment

Get paid up to $75.00 per on-line survey. www.MoneyAuthor.com

Employment

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

We Buy Used Manga $$ or Trade 584-6554 Sidekicks Inc. 206 Russell St. Hadley

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Travel

SPRING BREAK FROM $569 Bahamas, Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica! FREE PARTIES, FREE DRINKS. Sign up early and save. Organize a small group and you travel FREE. Or become a Campus Rep and Get Paid Commission on each trip sold. Call today and get started 1-800-GET-SUN-1

ACT NOW – SPRING BREAKERS Book Early & Save! Free meals/ parties by 11/7. Lowest prices. Be a rep & TRAVEL FREE! Get the ultimate hookups with STA TRAVEL 413-256-1261.

Travel

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Wanted

Your ads! Whether you're looking to put in a customized ad or simply a classified, you will reach over 14,000 readers each day you advertise! We have experienced graphic artists and ad reps standing by to help you with your advertising needs. Call 545-3500 today or visit 8:30am - 3:00pm.

Defense leads Minutemen

FOOTBALL from page 10

allowing a touchdown] streak going now, that's just making us more focused on executing more. We don't want to give up a touchdown now because it's gotten to this point."

The Minuteman offense is anchored by bruising tailback Steve Baylark, a junior who has a total of 541 rushing yards plus three trips to the end zone, and junior receiver Brandon London, who leads the team in receiving yards with 364. The offensive unit continues to put up numbers (averaging 18.1 points per game), despite dealing with constant injuries.

"I think we've played hard in every single game, I think we're in pretty good shape," Brown said. "We've had to fight through some adversity, especially on the offensive side with some injuries. And we've been able to overcome them and be successful."

Projected Starters

Offense
QB 12 - Liam Coen, Freshman
RB 5 - Steve Baylark, Junior
FB 40 - Frank McDonald, Junior
WR 81 - Brandon London, Junior
TE 44 - Mike Douglas, Senior
LT 67 - Brent Caldwell, Senior
LG 68 - Matt Austin, Sophomore
C 62 - Alex Miller, Junior
RG 73 - David Thompson, Junior
RT 63 - Sean Calicchio, Freshman
WR 9 - Dominique Stewart, Senior

Defense
LE 95 - Keron Williams, Senior
DT 57 - Justin Schweghardt, Senior
NT 55 - John Hatchell, Junior
RE 48 - David Burns, Sophomore
WLB 29 - Brad Anderson, Senior
MLB 51 - Serge Tikum, Senior
SLB 29 - Jason Hatchell, Sophomore
CB 26 - Tracy Belton, Junior
FS 6 - Shannon James, Senior
SS 7 - James Ihedigbo, Junior
CB 2 - Steve Costello, Senior

Offense
QB 12 - Ron Whitcomb, Junior
RB 33 - Montell Owens, Senior
FB 42 - Wellington Talkpa, Freshman
WR 5 - Kevin McMahan, Senior
LT 72 - Ryan Bird, Senior
LG 55 - Ryan Canary, Freshman
C 62 - Ben Lazarski, Senior
RG 58 - Shawn Demaray, Sophomore
RT 75 - Christopher Arnao, Freshman
TE 80 - Josh Radulski, Senior
WR 2 - Aral Gorden, Junior

Defense
LE 30 - Kurt Bulwith, Senior
LT 91 - Reginald Paramoure, Sophomore
NG 90 - Mike DeVito, Junior
RE 98 - Patrick McCrossan, Sophomore
OLB 94 - Jovan Belcher, Freshman
ILB 38 - Jermaine Walker, Senior
OLB 32 - John Wormuth, Sophomore
LCB 4 - Daren Stone, Junior
SS 17 - Joan Quezada, Senior
FS 3 - Jarrod Gomes, Senior
RCB 27 - Manaurris Anas, Junior

Injured list continues to grow for Patriots

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. (AP) — New England Patriots safety Guss Scott was placed on injured reserve Wednesday with a knee injury, joining the growing list of sidelined players in the team's secondary.

Scott became a starter when Rodney Harrison was lost for the season with a knee injury in the third game. Cornerback Chad Scott went on injured reserve last week and cornerbacks Tyrone Poole and Randall Gay have been sidelined most of the season.

The Patriots re-signed cornerback Hank Poteat on Wednesday, along with wide receiver Andre Davis. They also released linebacker Wesly Mallard.

Since Sept. 28, the Patriots have signed safeties Michael Stone and Arturo Freeman in addition to Poteat.

With Harrison and Guss Scott sidelined for last Sunday's 28-20 loss at Denver — and now for the rest of the season — rookie James Sanders started. He also was hurt and was replaced by Freeman, who had signed just four days earlier.

Poteat originally signed with New England last January after the last regular-season game and played in all three postseason games, including the Super Bowl win over Philadelphia. He was released on the final cut of training camp after being hobbled by a foot injury.

"I'm healthy. I'm ready to go," said Poteat, who had stayed in the Foxborough area and worked out regularly.

The Patriots acquired Davis from Cleveland on Aug. 22 and released him Sept. 28 after he was among their inactive players for the first three games.

Guss Scott, a third-round draft pick last season, spent his rookie year on injured reserve.

Mallard was signed April 19 after three years with the New York Giants, released Sept. 27 after appearing in three games and re-signed Oct. 12.

—Associated Press

Bruschi takes first step in returning to action

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. — Tedy Bruschi lifted both legs far over his head as he lay on his back and stretched. He chased teammate Mike Vrabel and blocked him playfully in the back. He ran to the next drill. And he smiled.

For the first time since a minor stroke eight months ago threatened his NFL career, the Patriots' star linebacker was practicing with his team Wednesday.

"I'm back playing the game that I love," Bruschi said before putting on his shoulder pads and his dark blue 54 jersey, carrying his helmet out of the locker room and walking into the noon sun.

After practice he said he had some jitters, but wasn't discouraged by anything that took place.

"If you haven't done something in a long time, you always have some nerves the first time back," Bruschi said. "I feel good with my conditioning level. It's where it needs to be, I think. Game shape is another thing, but we'll cross that road when we come to it. I thought it was a good day."

New England has a bye this week, so the practice was unusually short, lasting about 75 minutes, with no hard contact between players. Bruschi said he had no pain or discomfort and would try to be ready for the next game Oct. 30 against Buffalo.

"Today was the first step in my attempt," he said. "I felt good out there, like I was saying, but I'm not going to make any guarantees or promises [other than] that I'm going to give it my best shot."

The practice was the latest step on the road Bruschi has traveled since Feb. 6, when New England won its third Super Bowl in four years. A week later, Bruschi played in his first Pro Bowl. Three days after that, he was hospitalized after experiencing numbness in his left arm and left leg. Then he had surgery in March to repair a small hole in his heart.

As recently as September, the 32-year-old defensive co-captain said he wouldn't play this year. But he kept working out in the team's weight room, running and attending team meetings. He also stood on the sideline during home games.

Then he received medical clearance from several doctors to cross that barrier and play this season.

"I have no type of reservations," Bruschi said before practice. "I think I've done ... everything that I had to do to make sure that my confidence level is high for when I need to stick my face in there. I'm going to stick it in, and I'm going to stick it in hard."

But the night before his return was restless. He said he didn't get much sleep.

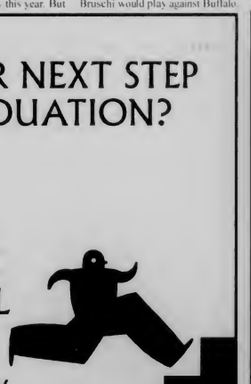
"[There were] a lot of things on my mind," Bruschi said, "a lot of things racing through my mind, but [I was] excited."

Coach Bill Belichick was excited to have Bruschi back and said he wouldn't wince when Bruschi gets hit on the field.

"Anything any other player would do, that's what he's going to do" in practice, Belichick said.

He said he didn't know if Bruschi would play against Buffalo.

MATT KRYGER/THE INDIANAPOLIS STAR



Patriots linebacker Tedy Bruschi returned to practice yesterday for the first time since suffering a minor stroke last February. The Pats now stand at 3-3 after losing to the Broncos 28-20 on Sunday.

On Monday, Belichick said that was possible, and Bruschi said he had no doubts he would play in a game this season.

Without Bruschi, the Patriots are 3-3 after losing just two games in each of the last two seasons.

They've also suffered significant injuries: Knee problems ended safety Rodney Harrison's season and sidelined defensive end Richard Seymour for the past two games; running backs Corey Dillon and Kevin Faulk missed last Sunday's 28-20 loss at Denver; and offensive tackle Matt Light is expected to sit out much of the season with a leg injury.

What's your next step after graduation?
Come to the Graduate & Professional School Information Day
Wednesday, October 26th
11AM-3PM
Student Union Ballroom
phone: 413-545-2224
fax: 413-545-4426
www.umass.edu/careers
CareerServices
Career Services Office
UMass Amherst
511 Goodell Building
a division of Student Affairs & Campus Life

It's your gig... run with it!
learn more at www.newgradnursing.com
Every New Graduate nurse hired between now and June 30, 2006 receives an iPod nano. And if you think that's cool...just wait.
Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center
New Hampshire's Only Academic Medical Center
Lebanon, New Hampshire

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 20, 2005

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen travel to Maine

By Eric Atlas
Collegian Staff

For the first time since Sept. 10, the Massachusetts football team (3-3 4-0 Atlantic 10) will get on the bus and leave the Pioneer Valley, taking on conference rival Maine (2-4 0-3 A-10) at Mosse Field in Orono.

The Minutemen are coming off of a thrilling 10-7 win over defending national champion James Madison, in which freshman kicker Armando Cukovic drilled a last-minute field goal to give the Maroon and White the edge. That contest was the end of a four-game homestand for UMass, and four of the remaining five games of the 2005 season will be played away from McGuirk.

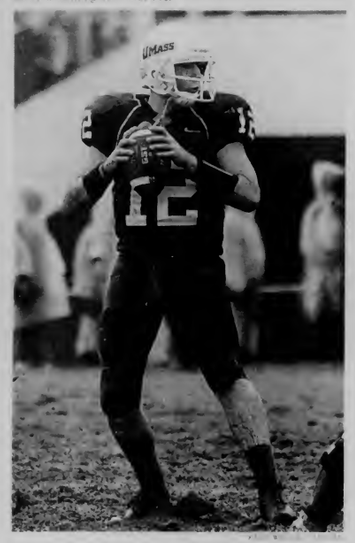
The match-up on Saturday will consist of the Minutemen who have not allowed a touchdown since Sept. 10, and have allowed an average of 2.5 points scored against them per game — and a Maine team, which is averaging 14.8 points per game on offense.

Despite the two teams' differing numbers, UMass will be facing off against a Maine team that has the potential to erupt, as it did last season against the Minutemen. The game in 2004 was the last time UMass played in an overtime period, when both teams racked up offensive yards all day until the Minutemen edged the Black Bears 35-34.

"We respect them, because we know [the Maine offense] gave us [34] points last year so we're not going to go out there and take them lightly because of their record," senior cornerback Steve Costello said. "We're going to go up there and do what we've been doing."

In that contest, current starting quarterback for Maine Ron Whitcomb went 22-for-33 with one touchdown and one interception. For UMass coach Don Brown, Whitcomb's experience as a junior gives him an advantage, while his main target, senior receiver Kevin McMahan, is also a deadly weapon.

"Their main quarterback is Ron Whitcomb," Brown said. "He has been their starter since he was a freshman. He is a very solid performer. McMahan is one of the best receivers in our league. [He] gets behind everybody."



This season, Whitcomb has thrown for 983 yards, completing 95-of-169 passes with six touchdowns and seven interceptions. This season, Maine has used second-string quarterback Chris Legree as a change of pace for the opposing defense. Legree has played in all six games this season and is the second leading rusher for the Black Bears with 110 yards on 35 attempts.

That offensive attack will have to be foiled by the Minuteman defense, which sits as the top defense in I-AA football. Leading the way for UMass has been senior Shannon James, who has made 30 total tackles this season and has picked off three passes, returning one for a touchdown.

Countering James in the defensive backfield is junior strong safety James Ihedigbo and Costello. Ihedigbo has made sure to disrupt the opposing passer this season, recording 6.5 sacks and one interception. Costello, who is also a punt returner, knows that his defense is a force and needs to be powerful against Maine.

"We've just got to go up there and execute, get out of there with a win, and get back home," Costello said. "It's a real fun experience to go out there with that unit because with the [not

See FOOTBALL on page 9

Freshman quarterback Liam Coen and the UMass football team will travel to Maine on Saturday. This season, Coen has completed 62-of-103 passes for 803 yards and four touchdowns.

GAME DAY CENTRAL

No. 8 UMass	Maine
(5-1 Overall 4-0 Atlantic 10)	(2-4 Overall 0-3 Atlantic 10)
Last Week Beat James Madison 10-7	Last Week Lost 44-0 to Hofstra

Moose Field at Alford Stadium - Orono, Maine (10,000)
Kickoff 2 p.m.

Television: WABI TV (CBS affiliate in Bangor, Maine)
Radio: UMass Sports Network - WRNX 100.9 FM Holyoke, flagship (Bob Behler, play-by-play, Matt Goldstein: color commentary, Mike Marzelli: sidelines)
Maine Radio - WZON 620 AM Bangor (Rich Kimball, play-by-play, Bob Lucy, color commentary)

UM tennis to finish season this weekend at Eastern Regionals

By Ben Hodgkins
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts tennis team (2-1) concludes its fall season this weekend at the Wilson ITA Division I Eastern Regional Championship at the U.S. Military Academy.

The winners of both singles and doubles play will earn automatic bids to the NCAA Championship in May.

The event takes place from Oct. 21-25 at West Point and features all the best teams and players in the region.

"The teams are the best in the Northeast — William & Mary, Virginia Commonwealth, Syracuse, Harvard and Maryland ... any teams in the northeast that are very good," UMass coach Judy Dixon said.

The teams mentioned by Dixon are, indeed, very good, as Harvard finished last season ranked No. 16 nationally, William & Mary No. 20, Maryland No. 41 and Virginia Commonwealth No. 54.

Harvard features possibly the strongest team in the tournament. It has the No. 40, No. 48, No. 78 and No. 104 singles players and also the No. 40 doubles team in the country.

VCU has the No. 22 and No. 96 singles players and the No. 4 doubles team, while William & Mary has the No. 23 singles player and also the No. 13 doubles team. Maryland does not have as many ranked players as the other teams, but still has the No. 31 singles player and No. 50 doubles team.

The Minutewomen will send three players to this year's event. Going for UMass will be its No. 1 singles player, Michele Spiess (7-0) and the doubles team of Dorothy Iwanowicz and Susan Johnson (5-2).

UMass originally had Masha Pozar (2-2) also going, but due to a nagging ankle injury, she will remain in Amherst.

"She could injure herself where she would be out for the entire year, so we're not taking her," Dixon said.

Despite only bringing one singles player and one doubles team, UMass hopes to make some noise.

"This is a chance to compete against the best schools in the Northeast region," Dixon said. "To do well here makes you one of the best in the region."

Last year, Spiess did make some noise, winning two matches before falling in the round of 32.

Spiess beat Courtney Michels of Albany (6-1, 6-1) in the first round and then defeated Richmond's Beatrice Grasu (6-3, 6-3) in the second round. Spiess lost in the third round to Julia Koulbitskaya of Pennsylvania (7-5, 6-2).

Also representing the Minutewomen last year was Pozar, who teamed up with Spiess in doubles action.

Their time was cut short in the regionals, as they lost in the first round 8-2 to Diana Srebrovic and Douglas Wink of Virginia.

The seeding for the tournament, which features 88 singles players and 64 doubles teams, has yet to be finalized.

Spiess is ranked No. 30 in the region by the ITA and should get a top-30 seed in the tournament.

"This is an honor to get to go and play," Dixon said. "This puts the punctuation point on the end of the season.

This marks the final set of matches in the fall tennis season, serving as the last chance for teams to prep for the spring season. The Minutewomen open up on Feb. 8 at Brown.

Ford learns from legend

By Dan Duggan
Collegian Staff

While you were sitting in some mind-numbing class watching the minute hand on the clock seemingly not move for hours at a time, Massachusetts men's basketball coach Travis Ford was doing some learning of his own.

The slight difference is that Ford's education didn't come in an overcrowded auditorium, but rather in a gym, and his "teacher" was none other than New York Knicks coach Larry Brown, a coach considered by many to be the greatest teacher of the game of basketball ever.

Two weeks ago, Ford spent three days in Charleston, S.C., observing the Knicks' training camp — and more specifically studying Brown and his coaching methods.

"It's a chance to go learn from a different technique and for me it was from somebody I've never heard before, so it was fun to go watch," Ford said. "You're kind of a fly on the wall and you sit back and watch and listen and take notes on different drills and ideas."

Ford tries to make these trips every year during the preseason to watch professional coaches in action.

Last year he spent four days in Houston with Rockets' coach Jeff Van Gundy, and back when Rick Pitino was coaching the Boston Celtics, Ford went and observed his former college coach.

Ford was able to learn some things from Brown about fast-breaks, and also about coming to a new team and implementing a system.

"Larry Brown is obviously one of the greatest coaches to ever live, and I picked up a lot of fast-break drills that we can do at practice," Ford said. "I'm watching it looks like the Knicks are going to run a lot this year and that's something we need to do a lot of. With the makeup of our basketball team we need to do some of that making."

Ford is excited for the first day of practice because then he can get to see how he's putting the pieces of our team together and how it's going with a new staff.

While Brown's teams are well known for their defensive aptitude, Ford obviously picked up a few defensive tips, but he's he picked up more specific coaching tools from Van Gundy.

"I picked up a lot of little things from Coach Brown," Ford said. "I probably picked up more things from Van Gundy when it comes to specifics, as far as how to set screens and how to guard certain things. Whereas from Coach Brown, I picked up more drill work."

Ford wasn't the only college coach to make the trip to Charleston to observe the coaching legend. Also attending the training camp were Oklahoma coach Kelvin Sampson, Florida coach Billy Donovan, Virginia coach Pete Gillen and assistant coaches from numerous other schools.

Ford feels that with the NBA season beginning earlier than the college one that this is a good opportunity for college coaches to take some time and focus on basketball.

"You just sit and watch," Ford said. "More than anything, it's great for college coaches to freshen up their minds about basketball."

This year in particular, Ford feels that he needs to get his mind back on basketball, as he has spent so much of his seven months at UMass promoting the team that he has gotten behind on thinking about on-court issues.

"It gets you thinking basketball again, and it's good for me this year because I've been doing so many things away from basketball," Ford said. "I was probably further behind this year than I've ever been, and actually, when I went to Charleston, that was the first time I've had a chance to sit down and really think about basketball.

"I've been so busy out promoting the program that I've gotten behind a little bit on trying to figure out X's and O's for our basketball team. We're behind a little bit, but it's nothing unusual for a first year."

Ford and the Minutemen have a month to kick it into gear and get ready for the season opener, which is at home on Friday, Nov. 18 at 7 p.m. against Hartford.

NOTES: On Monday, Marcus Matthews, a 6-foot-3 guard from Bishop Laughlin High School in Brooklyn, N.Y., made a verbal commitment to UMass. Matthews is in his junior year and is expected to join the Minutemen in 2007. Ford is not allowed to comment on recruits until they sign a national letter of intent, which Matthews will be eligible to do next November.

UMass men's basketball coach Travis Ford recently spent three days at the New York Knicks' training camp learning from legendary coach Larry Brown.

UMass falls in double OT

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

In a thrilling double-overtime game, the Massachusetts field hockey team dropped its final non-conference game Wednesday against Dartmouth 2-1. Under the lights at Garber Field, UMass (6-10 3-1 Atlantic 10) played its way to a 1-1 tie with the Big Green (6-7 2-2 Ivy League) in regulation, playing very strong defense, only to fall in a second overtime period.

The Minutewomen resume conference play on the road Friday at Saint Joseph's.

The first half was a promising one for UMass, who led 5-4 in shots at the half. At 28:36 the Minutewomen got one of those shots past Dartmouth goalie Lauren Balukjian as Racheal Mervine scored her second goal, redirecting a shot from Lauren Gillespie on a play set up by Jaime Bawden. Bawden then drove the ball up the right side of the field and worked it inside the Dartmouth circle.

UMass may have led in shots, but Dartmouth earned three penalty corners in the first half to just one for the Maroon and White. That trend continued in the second half as the Big Green led 4-1 in penalty corners. It would eventually catch up to the Minutewomen when Dartmouth sophomore forward Lizzie Bildner scored her third goal of the season at 63:11 on a pass from sophomore back Whitney Waugh.

With seconds remaining, UMass had a chance to end it with Mervine streaking into the Dartmouth circle and trying for her second of the game, but her shot went wide, barely missing the goal.

The first overtime period was completely dominated by the Minutewomen, who out-shot the Big Green 10-1 and had the only three penalty corners of the period. Their effort was fruitless, however, as several wide open scoring chances were thwarted by excellent defensive play by Dartmouth.

The best chance to score for UMass came from the stick of freshman forward Mary Shea, who carried the ball into the Dartmouth zone and lifted it over the stick and outstretched foot of Balukjian. The ball trickled along the goal line but was knocked away by a diving Waugh. On the play, Waugh slid on the wet turf and collided with the goal post, inciting a number of gasps from the crowd.

What would be the final period of the game was once again controlled by the Maroon and White, who had three shots to Dartmouth's one. That one was all that was needed for the Big Green to get their sixth win of the season.

Bildner added to her stats with her fourth goal of the year and the game-winner in Amherst. Breaking up a pass in the UMass circle, Bildner raced UMass goalkeeper Becky Letourneau to the ball in front of the cage. She won the race and with it the game, bouncing the ball past a diving Letourneau.

In a game that seemed to have so many small victories go to the Minutewomen, the most important one, the final score, did not.

"We had ample opportunity to put that game away," said UMass coach Patty Shea. "Our defense played really well, and it's a shame. You can only play so much defense, and when you have those opportunities, you have to put the ball in the back of the net."

The Minutewomen will finish the regular season 2-6 at home, but took two of three on their most recent homestand, something Shea was not satisfied with.

"It's great to get two out of three but we should have had three out of three," Shea said. "But two out of three does not make me happy. Three out of three would have made me happy."

The UMass field hockey team's three game winning streak was broken last night in a double-overtime loss to non-conference opponent Dartmouth. The team out-shot the Big Green 25-15 during that contest.

New England's Largest College Daily · Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Friday, October 21, 2005 — www.dailycollegian.com — Volume CXVI Issue 31

Gargano places 'stabbing' frats in suspension

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Staff

Yesterday at the Faculty Senate meeting, Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life, announced that the two fraternities involved in the stabbings two weeks ago, Pi Delta Psi and Zeta Beta Tau, have been placed under an interim suspension.

This suspension means the two fraternities will lose university recognition and they must cease all operations. Those fraternities were notified yesterday by letter.

Amherst Police turned over the investigation to UMass officials this week, and this led to a quick decision, according to Gargano.

"I think that the evidence at this point is overwhelmingly not in favor of the two fraternities because of what happened that particular evening," Gargano said after the meeting.

Gargano expects that those fraternities will appeal the decision. If they do so, he said that the hearings would occur next week.

Gargano believes that this decision will be supported by the community.

"I think that [the community's reaction] will be very positive," Gargano said. "Since this has happened two to three weeks ago, the general community has not accepted the behavior of the two fraternities and all of the people who have been involved in this type of behavior. Someone nearly lost their life."

The incident occurred on Oct. 2 on North Pleasant Street, outside of the Pi Delta Psi house, in the area commonly referred to as "Frat Row." Six people were stabbed, five of whom are UMass students.

Police first responded to the scene around 12:30 a.m. on a report of a large fight. Two people were found stabbed at that time.

Christopher Canton, 21, of 374 N. Pleasant St., which is the house of the Zeta Beta Tau fraternity, was found stabbed in the head.

Joseph Gratton, also of 374 N. Pleasant St. was found stabbed in the left bicep.

At 1:12 a.m., police were called back to the scene on a report of another fight. Three men were found stabbed.

Stephen Foore, 20, of Somerville was found stabbed several times in the back.

Alp Akiner, 18, of Woodcliff, N.J. received a stab wound to the side.

Police said Sean Fitzgibbon, of North Attleboro, was found stabbed in the arm. At 2:25 a.m., police were called to 17 Southpoint Drive on a report of a man who had been stabbed.

Thi Ly, 23, of 266 E. Hadley Rd. was found stabbed in the hand. Police believe he was involved in the fights on Frat Row.

UMass named first Microsoft Showcase School

By Megan Daley
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts, Amherst is set to be the first Microsoft IT Showcase School in the nation.

Microsoft Chief Executive Officer Steve Ballmer will make the official announcement today when the W.E.B. Du Bois Library opens the new Learning Commons, according to a recent press release issued by Ed Blaguszewski, the director of news and information at UMass.

The Learning Commons will hold new computers and updated technology. As was reported recently by the Daily Collegian, "165 computers are available on the main floor, some of which include oversized monitors ... a total of 58 workstations are located near the two sets of stairs ascending to the lobby level, enhanced with multiple outlets. Library officials also spoke of the accessibility the neighboring community will have to the Commons."

Technical innovations, such as these Commons, are what prompted Ballmer to say in the press release, "By recognizing UMass Amherst as a Microsoft IT Showcase School, we see the university as a true pacesetter in higher education, committed to providing an array of additional learning resources tailored to students' specific needs. It is a privilege to help the university share its knowledge more broadly."

This is not the first time Microsoft has worked with UMass to help enhance its technological undertakings. According to the press release, "Since 1998, Microsoft has provided approximately $11 million of support for campus initiatives."

For example, in 2002, the Microsoft Corporation gave UMass a $38,000 gift to fund a Center for Women in Engineering and Science.

The press release says that "Ballmer also noted Microsoft and UMass Amherst share a vision of employing information technology to improve the delivery of educational materials, engage students in active learning and encourage collaborative inquiry."

School administrators are excited by the prospect of being a Microsoft IT Showcase School. The Provost and Senior Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Charlena Seymour said, "We take pride in Microsoft's recognition of our leadership in this field. Together, we will address important national challenges: preparing more students to be competitive in a digital age and encouraging students from all backgrounds to pursue careers in science and technology. Much remains to be done, and we look forward to collaborating with Microsoft in new and significant ways."

Microsoft Corp. designated UMass as the first Microsoft IT Showcase School in the nation, recognizing the university's innovative leadership in applying information technology to teaching and learning.

Five projects have been selected for initial investment by Microsoft:

The Information Technology Program
This program allows a minor in Information Technology for students in any major. According to the UMass IT Web site, umass.edu/itprogram, "The goal of the program is to enable any interested student to confidently employ IT, and to secure an intellectual platform from which to develop capacity to innovate, using IT in his or her field."

IT Curriculum Case Studies
Two classes are offered in the Isenberg School of Management, which use Microsoft ConferenceXP for videoconferencing and interactive Tablet PC applications. These classes, "Introduction to Business Information Systems" and "Trustworthy Computing," will be case-studied and sponsored by Microsoft.

Learning Commons
Set to be dedicated today, the Commons are a new technological resource center for students and members of the surrounding community. "The Learning Commons will feature a 21st century-style workspace, which includes new Mac and Dell computers, wireless Internet and quiet rooms to study."

Women in Technology Initiatives
UMass Amherst encourages women to pursue majors in science, technology, engineering and mathematics. According to the press release, Microsoft wants to support that initiative with the growth of such programs at UMass.

Center for Teaching
The Hesberg Foundation has called the UMass Center for Teaching one of the top three centers of its type in the United States, according to the press release. This center has long been a supporter of classroom technology instruction. The center has also sponsored Microsoft's Tablet PC Community of Practice, where students and professors can share technical knowledge.

Faculty Senate addresses student plagiarism

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Staff

Yesterday, the Faculty Senate of the University of Massachusetts devoted its meeting to a discussion on plagiarism. The talk was led by a panel which included Professor of Education Maurianne Adams, Director of the Center for Teaching Mary Deane Sorcinelli, the Associate Director for User Services Anne C. Moore and University Ombudsperson Catharine Porter.

The discussion was based on what the university currently does to teach students about plagiarism, the resources the faculty and the students have and the procedures to report incidents of academic dishonesty.

"Most of the plagiarism instances with undergraduates is usually because they have searched through Google.com, and found something relevant, and copied and pasted it," Moore said.

In order to address this issue, the library is currently looking to subscribe to a service called Turnitin, where students upload their papers onto the service. The service then searches through Internet material. Turnitin has been collecting since 1996 and looks for matches of phrases eight words and longer. The professor has access to the results and decides how to deal with the information. This subscription would cost the university $20,000 a year.

"The library frequently assists faculty in researching suspected text and recognizes the importance of UMass Amherst taking a proactive, preventative and instructional stance towards plagiarism," Moore wrote in a handout to the Senate.

Yet, many faculty members voiced interest in teaching students about plagiarism instead of just focusing on penalizing them. Professor Curtis Connor of the Chemical Engineering Department believes it should be taught in the freshman writing course.

"It is something that is dishonest; it is something that is immoral. We shouldn't have to teach it to them more than once," Connor said. "It should be a school policy and not an individual faculty policy that this is plagiarism in my course, but it is not plagiarism in her course."

The panel responded that it is taught in freshman writing, but the students might not carry the information from one class to another.

Sorcinelli believed that much of this problem would be solved by instituting an online quiz on plagiarism that students would have to pass. Indiana University – Bloomington uses this system and offers a certificate of completion.

Another concern addressed by the faculty was how students are in fact disciplined for academic dishonesty and on what policy. Porter brought handouts describing the plagiarism policy at UMass.

"You should refer to this policy," Porter said. "I say this because I am well aware that a lot of schools and colleges and individual departments had their own policies. But, this is the only one that should be used on this campus."

This procedure would include a letter sent to the Academic Honesty Office informing them of an informal resolution between a professor and a student. If an informal resolution is not agreed to, then the professor must file a formal charge.

Yet, Porter is concerned that faculty are not following the procedure.

"I know what is happening, when I talk to faculty," Porter said. "The faculty are doing this on their own. That makes it hard for us because we can't create a database [of repeat offenders]."

Professor of Education, Maurianne Adams, Director of the Center for Teaching, Mary Deane Sorcinelli, Associate Director, Anne C.Moore and University Ombudsperson Catharine Porter discuss student plagiarism at last night's Senate meeting.

DEFA films used in N.Y art exhibit

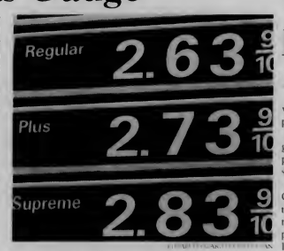
By Hayden Mary
Collegian Correspondent

The Deutsche Film AG (DEFA) Film Library at the University of Massachusetts lent 21 films to the New York Museum of Modern Art for a show on East German Films.

The DEFA Film Library was founded in 1960 by UMass in the Department of Germanic Languages and Literatures. It is the only archive and study center outside Europe devoted to the study of filmmaking by East German filmmakers or related to East Germany from 1946 to the present. The archive rents hundreds of titles on 35mm, 16mm, video and DVD throughout the United States and Canada each year. It has many rare and censored films, such as "Jahrgang 45" (Born in 45), which was banned in the summer of 1966 by the Socialist Unity Party of Germany and was not shown until 1990.

DEFA was founded in 1946 as the first film production company in Germany after World War II. It was located in the German Democratic Republic, or East Germany. Controlled by the communist state, it lasted until 1992, two years after the fall of the wall and the reunification.

See LIBRARY on page 2



The Gas Gauge

For the third consecutive week, the Gas Gauge found that the Hess station on West St. in Amherst has the cheapest gas in the UMass area at $2.59 per gallon of regular unleaded. The Shell on Route 9 in Hadley tied with Hess this week for the cheapest gas.

F.Y.I.: The Gas Gauge found some gas prices as low as $2.45 per gallon at stations in Northampton, including the Pride station on King St.

$2.59 Hess, West St. (Route 116), Amherst
$2.59 Shell, Stop and Shop strip Route 9, Hadley
$2.63 Pride, Route 9, Hadley
$2.64 Gulf, Belchertown Road, Route 9, Amherst
$2.65 Sunoco, Belchertown Road, Route 9, Amherst
$2.65 Mobil, Stop and Shop strip, Route 9, Hadley
$2.66 Mobil, North Pleasant Street, Amherst Center

—Dan O'Brien

The Mobil Station on Route 9 in Amherst is one of the highest priced gas stations in the Amherst area.

Campus steam pipes replaced

By Matt Pilon
Collegian Staff

One of four steam pipe replacement projects on campus was completed this week with more construction on the way in preparation for a soon-to-be-constructed central heating plant.

Construction crews this week finished installing underground steam valves on Hicks Way on the south side of the parking garage. The valves will eventually be hooked up to steam pipes that will service most of the expanding campus.

Construction work for the valve installation, known as the Central Heating Plant East Steam Connection, began this summer and cost approximately $4 million, according to project manager John A. Mathews. The entire central heating plant project is being funded through University of Massachusetts Building Authority loans.

See POWER PLANT on page 2

FEMA head criticises own Katrina agency

By Huiyi Yeo
Associate Editor

WASHINGTON — In the midst of the chaos that followed Hurricane Katrina, a Federal Emergency Management Agency official in New Orleans sent a dire e-mail to Director Michael Brown saying victims had no food and were dying.

No response came from Brown.

Instead, less than three hours later, an aide to Brown sent an e-mail saying her boss wanted to go on a television program that night — after needing at least an hour to eat dinner at a Baton Rouge, La., restaurant.

The e-mails were made public Thursday at a Senate Homeland Security Committee hearing featuring Marty Bahamonde, the first agency official to arrive in New Orleans in advance of the Aug. 29 storm. The hurricane killed more than 1,200 people and forced hundreds of thousands to evacuate.

Bahamonde, who sent the e-mail to Brown two days

See KATRINA on page 2

ARTS & LIVING
JOAN BAEZ COMES TO CALVIN
Folk singer, Baez, is performing in Northampton this Saturday.
PAGE 4

EDITORIAL/OPINION
THE FIGHT AGAINST PLAGIARISM
What professors and students should do to help in the fight.
PAGE 3

WEATHER
TODAY Sunny, H52°, L37°
TONIGHT Sunny, H60°, L39°
TOMORROW Partly Cloudy, H56°, L41°

SPORTS
MINUTEMEN DROP THE PUCK
UMass' men's hockey get's set for home opener against Holy Cross
PAGE 8

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Cameron J. Woods
BUSINESS MANAGER Hirak Shah
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerry O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egavian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Matthew O'Rourke
COMICS EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Allison Edles
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
PHOTO EDITOR Kate Sachsenmaier
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
HUMAN RESOURCE Phil Smoller
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Nathan Chomsky
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mackenzie Isler
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Jones
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Daley
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Bellavia
ASSISTANT PHOTO Elizabeth Caristi
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eric Atha
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Kristen LaCasse

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JAN. 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Allison Edles
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Elizabeth Caristi
COPY EDITOR
Ian Jones
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Ginny Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Belanger, Sean Duram

Bush calls for Middle East peace

By Barry Schweid
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush said Thursday he has never been more confident of peace between Israel and the Palestinians but "old feuds aren't settled easily" and it may not happen before he leaves office in 2009.

"It takes a while," Bush said as he lauded Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas, his aspirations for a Palestinian state and his plans for legislative elections in January. "We will work hard to lay that foundation so that the process becomes irreversible," the president said.

In June 2002, Bush set 2005 as his goal for Palestinian statehood.

At a joint news conference after an hour-long meeting in the Oval Office on Thursday, Bush cautioned the Palestinian leader that "the way forward is confronting the threat armed gangs present to creation of a democratic Palestine."

But Bush did not directly question Abbas' intention to permit political participation by Hamas and other Palestinian groups that have carried out terror attacks against Israelis. Nor did Bush publicly urge Abbas to screen out extremists in those groups from participating, a proposal discussed with other Palestinian officials before Abbas arrived in Washington for their first White House meeting since May.

In Jerusalem, Zalman Shoval, a former Israeli ambassador to Washington and an adviser to Prime Minister Ariel Sharon, said he was not concerned. Shoval said he was confident Bush had told Abbas privately that Hamas should not play a role in the January elections.

President Bush and Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas shake hands after holding a news conference in the White House Thursday.

State Department spokesman Sean McCormack said the U.S. view remains that Hamas is a terrorist organization. But he added, "It is also the case that how the Palestinian political process unfolds and evolves is a question for the Palestinian people."

The Palestinian view is that allowing everybody to participate in the election makes it more legitimate, while the Bush administration considers participation by armed militia a contradiction to building a democratic state, said a senior U.S. official.

And yet, the administration is not going to prescribe election laws for the Palestinians, said the official, who refused to be identified.

FEMA offical denounces own agency on Katrina

KATRINA from page 1

after the storm struck, said the correspondence illustrates the government's failure to grasp what was happening.

"There was a systematic failure at all levels of government to understand the magnitude of the situation," Bahamonde testified. "The leadership from top down in our agency is unprepared and out of touch."

The 19 pages of internal FEMA e-mails show Bahamonde gave regular updates to people in contact with Brown as early as Aug. 28, the day before Katrina made landfall. They appear to contradict Brown, who has said he was not fully aware of the conditions until days after the storm hit. Brown quit after being recalled from New Orleans amid criticism of his work.

Brown had sent Bahamonde, FEMA's regional director in New England, to New Orleans to help coordinate the agency's response. Bahamonde arrived on Aug. 27 and was the only FEMA official at the scene until FEMA disaster teams arrived on Aug. 30.

As Katrina's outer bands began drenching the city Aug. 28, Bahamonde sent an e-mail to Deborah Wing, a FEMA response specialist. He wrote: "Everyone is soaked. This is going to get ugly real fast."

Subsequent e-mails told of an increasingly desperate situation at the New Orleans Superdome, where tens of thousands of evacuees were staying. Bahamonde spent two nights there with the evacuees.

On Aug. 31, Bahamonde e-mailed Brown to tell him that thousands of evacuees were gathering in the streets with no food or water and that "estimates are many will die within hours."

"Sir, I know that you know the situation is past critical," Bahamonde wrote. "The sooner we can get the medical patients out, the sooner we can get them out."

A short time later, Brown's press secretary, Sharon Worthy, wrote colleagues to complain that the FEMA director needed more time to eat dinner at a Baton Rouge restaurant that evening. "He needs much more that (sic) 20 or 30 minutes," Worthy wrote.

"Restaurants are getting busy," she said. "We now have traffic to encounter to go to and from a location of his choise (sic), followed by wait service from the restaurant staff, eating, etc. Thank you."

In an Aug. 29 phone call to Brown informing him that the first levee had failed, Bahamonde said he asked for guidance but did not get a response.

"He just said, 'Thank you,' and that he was going to call the White House," Bahamonde said.

Senators on the committee were dismayed.

"We will examine further why critical information provided by Mr. Bahamonde was either discounted, misunderstood or simply not acted upon," said GOP Sen. Susan Collins of Maine, who heads the committee. She decried the "complete disconnect between senior officials and the reality of the situation."

Connecticut Sen. Joseph Lieberman, the committee's top Democrat, said Bahamonde's story is "ultimately infuriating and raises serious questions which our committee's investigation must answer."

In e-mails, Bahamonde described to his bosses a chaotic situation at the Superdome. Bahamonde noted also that local officials were asking for toilet paper, a sign that supplies were lacking at the shelter.

"Issues developing at the Superdome. The medical staff at the dome says they will run out of oxygen in about two hours and are looking for alternative oxygen," Bahamonde wrote regional director David Passey on Aug. 28.

Bahamonde said he was stunned that FEMA officials responded by continuing to send truckloads of evacuees to the Superdome for two more days even though they knew supplies were in short supply.

"I thought it amazing," he said. "I believed at the time and still do today, that I was confirming the worst-case scenario that everyone had always talked about regarding New Orleans."

At a separate congressional hearing, lawmakers considering Louisiana's request for $32 billion for Gulf Coast rebuilding were told that Mississippi would need tens of billions of dollars of its own to restore its coastline.

UMass construction continues

POWER PLANT from page 1

Heating more than 400 buildings totaling 10 million gross square feet requires more steam than the current coal plant, constructed in 1940, can produce.

With four new residence halls, a $73 million integrated science building and various other buildings on the way as a part of Mitt Romney's five year capital plan, the demand for steam and electricity has risen. The new plant will alleviate these demands in a cleaner and more efficient manner than the current plant on Campus Center Way by using natural gas as its primary fuel.

The downside of building an environmentally friendly plant, according to physical plant director Patrick Bailey, is that operating costs will increase approximately $2 million per year.

"We weren't able to get a permit for coal," Bailey said. "Coal is half the price of natural gas."

Administrators hope to offset the additional cost through the physical plant's Energy Performance Project, which included physical modifications to campus buildings to improve heating and electrical efficiency. Work on that project is in progress.

According to Bailey, university administrators are hoping to save $5.6 million per year in utility costs through the project.

In order for the new plant to be effective, three more steam pipe projects are to be completed on campus, one of which has already begun: the Campus Center Way Steamline Replacement. The steam tunnel runs from the current plant, around the north side of the Campus Center and across North Pleasant Street to the East Experiment Station. Crews will be replacing old steam lines and repairing the tunnel structure, as well as installing electrical duct bank systems to increase electrical capacity.

"We're going to have a big ditch running through campus for some time," communications manager of Facilities and Campus Planning Jim Hunt said.

Construction for the two remaining projects, the West Steam Connection and the installation of an electrical duct bank, each situated south of Thompson Hall, will take place from fall 2006 to spring 2008.

UMass films used in MoMA

LIBRARY from page 1

of Germany. During its approximate 50 years of existence, it produced more than 7,500 films. Except that due to East Germany's policies of censorship and animosity between it and non-communist parts of the world, the DEFA studio movies are largely unknown both in Germany and around the world.

The Museum of Modern Art (MoMA) intends to change this by showcasing 21 films from the DEFA Film Library in an exhibit entitled "Rebels with a Cause: The Cinema of East Germany." Jytte Jensen, Curator of the Department of Film and Media at MoMA, explains the name choice: "We looked for a range of voices and styles from five decades of filmmaking, placing an emphasis on creative energy, artistic innovation and challenges to authority – hence the title, 'Rebels with a Cause.'"

MoMA will show the films at the Roy and Niuta Titus Theaters until Oct. 23. It will include many rare titles, some of which have never been screened in this country. These films will be presented by scholars, directors and actors from the period who will reflect on the complexities of trying to create a movie in the state-owned DEFA studios. Several posters from the films will also be available for viewing.

After its initial run at MoMA, the films will travel to shows in Atlanta, Chicago, Ohio, Rochester, N.Y., the National Gallery of Art in Washington D.C. and eight cities in Germany.

HOMETOWN HIGH

DO YOU WANT TO VISIT YOUR HIGH SCHOOL, BUT CAN'T THINK OF A GOOD REASON WHY?

ARE YOU AN OUTGOING PERSON WHO LIKES TO INTERACT WITH GROUPS OF PEOPLE?

DO YOU WANT TO AFFECT THE LIVES OF OTHER PEOPLE IN A POSITIVE WAY?

IF YOU ANSWERED YES, THEN UNDERGRADUATE ADMISSIONS HAS THE PERFECT OPPORTUNITY FOR YOU!

GET INVOLVED WITH HOMETOWN HIGH

• VISIT YOUR HIGH SCHOOL AND EXPRESS YOUR WISDOM GAINED AT UMASS AMHERST TO HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS LOOKING AT COLLEGES!
• TALK ABOUT YOUR PERSONAL EXPERIENCE, YOUR CONCERNS DURING YOUR FRESHMAN YEAR, AND SHARE WHY YOU DECIDED TO COME TO UMASS AMHERST!

ALL YOU HAVE TO DO IS:
• FILL OUT AN INTEREST SHEET
• ATTEND A 1 & 1/2 HOUR TRAINING SESSION
• SET UP AN APPOINTMENT
• VISIT YOUR OLD HIGH SCHOOL

COME SEE US ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE TO SIGN UP!
MON 10/24–FRI 10/28
9:00 AM–3:00 PM

RECEIVE A FREE UMASS AMHERST T-SHIRT FOR YOUR EFFORTS

FOR MORE INFO EMAIL JILL AT JMURTAGH@EDUC.UMASS.EDU OR CALL JILL OR SARAH AT THE ROBSHAM MEMORIAL CENTER FOR VISITORS – 5450306

UMASS AMHERST

How Bentley turned Mark's entrepreneurial instincts into the business of life.

From his earliest days as a paper route tycoon in East Providence, R.I., Mark Hellendrung had the soul of an entrepreneur. After graduating from a liberal arts university, he went to Bentley to get the business education he needed to advance his career.

At McCallum Graduate School of Business at Bentley, Mark gained both the technical skills and the hands-on experience he needed to help launch a beverage business phenomenon, Nantucket Nectars.

Today he's busy doing the same for Narragansett Beer.

Thanks to Bentley, Mark is pursuing his passion in the world of business and succeeding in the business of life.

BENTLEY
McCALLUM GRADUATE SCHOOL of BUSINESS

Business in a Whole New Light

Learn more about our Master of Science programs in Accountancy, Finance, Financial Planning, Taxation, Marketing Analytics and Real Estate Management at the Graduate School Fair at the Student Union Ballroom at UMASS on October 26 from 11:00 am - 3:00 pm

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 21, 2005 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Plagiarism: How can this age-old problem be solved?

Plagiarism is a serious issue at any university. It was the main topic of discussion at the Faculty Senate meeting held yesterday here at the University of Massachusetts.

When professors catch students plagiarizing, some are reluctant to put themselves through the long, cumbersome process of reporting the grievance to the university. As a result, the student who plagiarized is only penalized with an "F" for that class. If the professor reports the act correctly, the student cannot take the class again and receive a new/better grade. Avoiding the process, however, allows the student to retake the class and potentially raise his or her GPA. This makes it look like the student never plagiarized at all and that isn't right.

Professors should follow procedure even though it results in a more severe punishment for the student who plagiarized. It is not fair to all of the students who work hard and complete their assignments honestly and with integrity. When professors don't report the student to the school there is no record that the student even plagiarized. This means that the student can still get a job without their employer ever finding out about how they plagiarized.

The grievance doesn't show up on the student's transcript. It only appears on his or her disciplinary record. This record is kept confidential, so there ends up being no real consequences for the student. Other schools go so far as kicking those guilty of plagiarizing out of school completely. Maybe this is a reason why some professors don't go through the procedure once they catch a student cheating. The fact is, the student should not be plagiarizing in the first place and he or she deserves what is coming to him or her.

However, in some cases students plagiarize on accident. So where should the line be drawn? In some Asian cultures, plagiarism is considered a very high honor to the original writer. Many students are just confused about the guidelines for plagiarism in general. So who is guilty and who should be considered innocent?

Part of the blame should go towards the schools themselves. They should take more action to rectify this problem. There should be more programs at UMass educating students about plagiarism. In College Writing 112, students are educated about plagiarism, but some are still confused even after they have taken the class. There should be even more programs to help with this age-old problem.

Professors should create assignments that deny students the possibility to plagiarize. It is possible to create these kinds of assignments, but it takes more imagination on the professor's part. This is a worthy sacrifice that professors should make for the well-being of their students. As a result grades will go up instead of being dropped to an "F" so everyone will be happy.

In a memo from the UMass Center for Teaching, Dr. Mary Deane Sorcinelli states, "All students at the School of Education at Indiana University – Bloomington are required to take and pass an online quiz on plagiarism." This is not a bad idea either. Students from IU are required to pass this quiz with a score of 100 percent or they are not admitted to the university. If this quiz were implemented to all educational facilities, we would all be better off.

New technology like Turnitin, a device used to detect plagiarism through the Internet, and Google.com make it easy to detect whether a student's work is honest or not. Professors will only get better at detecting plagiarism, so they should spend equal time trying to prevent it.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

We are all judgmental

Jennifer Lane

Do you ever feel like your whole life could fit into one musical, play or television program? It's as if it were written for or about you. It seems that all the problems the main character or supporting character has can be directly related back to your own life.

Take the musical "Wicked," for example. There is a rich, pretty, blond girl as Glinda. She's beautiful, popular and loved by almost everyone. Then, there is a poor, ugly, green girl named Elfaba. They hate one another at first and end up becoming best friends. After a while, Elfaba chooses a life of terrorizing others, and Glinda becomes even more popular by becoming the good witch.

The ending seems perfect for everyone. "Look what we've got, a fairytale plot with our very own happy ending." (Wicked) Elfaba gets the boy and a life in secret where she loves her boyfriend and doesn't have to worry about the conventions of society. Glinda gets the job as the good witch, like she's always wanted. But Glinda is left with no real friends, and Elfaba has been separated from her surroundings.

It's not fair for either, and yet it's fair for both of them. Life is just like that. People are always labeled and put down. We are all judgmental. Each and every one of us, whether or not we are the popular or unpopular, rich or poor, gay or straight, we all fit into special categories. Each category can start with one word (snob, terrorist, gothic, gay, etc.). What do these words have in common? They're labels that our society puts on people. And why do we have these labels? What good are they doing anyone?

There is a dirty, old man with trash bags on his feet. You walk right past him and try not to make eye contact because you're afraid he might ask you for money. When he walks up to you in the city, do you give him the money and pray that he won't spend it on beer, or do you walk away in disgust because he doesn't have a place to shower like you do? Dirt. Trash. Cold. Why? All he did was stand in the cold.

> We are all judgmental. Each and every one of us, whether or not we are the popular or unpopular, rich or poor, gay or straight, we all fit into special categories.

A white boy and girl sporting the latest brand name walk towards the Campus Center. They're holding hands and laughing, as she slings her Coach purse over her shoulder and he shuffles his feet in his brand new Timberland boots. Snobs. Spoiled. Popular. Why? All they did was walk by.

Riding the bus, a Middle Eastern man gets on and kneels down to say a pray before sitting down. Some Middle Eastern religions require a certain amount of praying each day, no matter where the person is or what they are doing, but your heart skips a beat and immediately you see adjectives flying through your brain. Sept. 11. Iraq. Bomb. Why? All he did was pray.

The certain words after each situation have seemed to become synonymous when in fact they are not. "Gay" and "stylish" are not the same word. Some gay men are the biggest slobs I've ever met in my life, and others have better taste than Ms. Versace herself. Thin, blond and dumb have nothing to do with one another, unless you're a model told to play dumb.

It's not fair that certain, single adjectives can be used to describe almost everyone. Everyone is judgmental and while looking around a room, labels fly around, whether or not they are spoken, they are thought of everyday.

What is freedom? Is it the right to use derogatory adjectives toward others? To write whatever you want? To have your own feelings and emotions used for and against one another in society? Freedom used to mean the right to live life without fear and without restrictions.

Our language has become vulgar and crude, and no one has been able to or wanted to stop it. It seems to be getting worse every day, so much so that people laugh at racist jokes. It's okay, though, because, "I'm not a racist, I just tell black jokes," covers you when you're accused of being prejudiced.

So the next time you're watching "Full House" or "Seinfeld" and relating your life to Stephanie or Jerry, realize you're not alone. Sometimes, "it's too late for second-guessing, too late to go back to sleep," so wake up and stop whispering one-word slurs when someone walks by.

Jennifer Lane is a Collegian columnist

Women have what it takes

Abbie Kopf

The United States of America has many things to be ashamed of. The environment is in shambles. The ozone layer has begun depleting and acid rain falls on barren land where vast rainforests used to flourish. The streets of America are lined with homeless men, women and children who have nothing to eat in the richest country in the world. Our youth are dying tragically in a war that is based on lies and manipulation.

Americans have become accustomed to living in speculative terror, preparing for the moment when some terrorist uses an atomic bomb to finally end it all. The most important and well-paid heroes of the United States are the sports players and coaches, while schoolteachers pay money out of their own pockets to educate the future of our country. Women are raped and beaten, and children are starved and molested because the country does relatively little to the deadbeat fathers and husbands who infect this country.

If any of these things exhibit the stellar leadership of the male presidents who have ruled the United States of America since its inception, let me be the first to say, "You've done a helluva job, boys." The men have had their chance with America, and it is high time the women take control and give us something to be proud of. It is time for America to elect a woman president.

Sadly, women remain an untapped source of power in the White House, a place that could desperately benefit from a woman's touch. The main reason for the lack of confidence in a woman's leadership is because typically female characteristics such as empathy, sensitivity and emotional involvement in decision-making are seen as deviant or less effective.

Judy Rosener, author of "America's Competitive Secret: Utilizing Women as a Management Strategy," argues this is the fallacy of the One-Best Model. According to this model, there is one type of efficient leader – usually the terse, direct, competitive and often forceful leadership of men.

Leadership styles differ, however, and differences don't imply inferiority. Stephen Robbins, author of "Organizational Behavior," writes that the single best predictor of success in leadership is the possession of emotional intelligence.

Robbins said, the leadership characteristics seen in males, such as technical skills, are "necessary, but not sufficient requirements for leadership." Instead, he attributes the most successful leaders as possessing traits such as empathy, social skills and self-awareness. These attributes are most commonly seen in female, not male, leaders.

> Robbins said, the leadership characteristics seen in males, such as technical skills, are "necessary, but not sufficient requirements for leadership." Instead, he attributes the most successful leaders as possessing traits such as empathy, social skills and self-awareness. These attributes are most commonly seen in female, not male, leaders.

Take, for instance, the leadership style of George W. Bush. Bush's rhetoric is reminiscent of Dirty Harry. Bush threatens, criticizes, picks fights with and dismisses those who oppose him directly or indirectly. Though Bush has acquired most of his desires while in the presidency, the country has never been more polarized.

There has rarely been such a volatile and virulent relationship between Republicans and Democrats, liberals and conservatives. Shouldn't a leader unite the nation and try to integrate the needs of all in order to form a more perfect union?

Imagine if a woman had led the country through the tumultuous times of post-Sept. 11 America. Instead of the vengeful and hasty reaction of the macho Bush, she might have replaced the terror with a calm and reassuring optimism.

When the United Nations suggested that the United States not invade a country in which no weapons of mass destruction had been found, perhaps she would have listened, instead of exhibiting a stubborn bravado. When grieving mothers pleaded with her that their sons were dying in vain, perhaps empathy would have allowed her to see past violent delusions of patriotism. As much as men who lead this country try to hide it, leadership is an emotional business.

Professor and author Stewart Tubbs researched the qualities of great leaders. When he asked Maj. Gen. John Stanford, then commander of the U.S. Army's Military Traffic Management Command, how to create a superior leader, he said, "When people ask me that question, I tell them I have the secret to success in life. The secret to success is to stay in love."

This answer may seem odd at first, but truly great leaders draw on their passions and dreams in order to motivate others. These important traits are often overlooked in American society simply because they are feminine.

In Greek Mythology, Icarius flew on artificial wax wings until he flew too close to the sun which scorched his wings, sending him to his death.

America, likewise, has grown strong under the wing of great male presidents. This Icarus Paradox, as Danny Miller calls it, means that "Ways of seeing become ways of not seeing."

Those who do not think a woman could sufficiently serve as president of the United States have probably seen so many years of history that their myopia cannot allow them to see the future. America cannot improve until we utilize the wonderful, and sometimes superior, leadership skills of all citizens – especially women.

As we move toward a time of inclusion, a woman president will someday use all of her emotions, intellect, logic and experience to make a country that once again flies high.

By Abbie Kopf, a columnist at Texas Tech, written for the Daily Toreador

Sex and the lame members game

Liz Stierwalt

Whore. How many sexual partners can a woman or man have until being slapped with this title? Depending on which study you look at, anywhere from 55 percent to 66 percent of all college students claim to be sexually active. I refuse to accept anyone's so-called "average" or "normal" number of partners, statistically speaking, because people lie about this dramatic and plaguing number.

In the movie "Clerks," the protagonist, Dante Hicks, played by Brian O'Halloran, argues with his girlfriend Veronica, played by Marilyn Ghigliotti, about the number of oral sex partners she has had (37). That scene reminds me that the number of sex acts in itself can teeter off into a taboo direction.

Veronica only slept with a few men, but that didn't matter to Dante. He could only envision the 37 men that she had fellated. Men are tricky. They have the option of inflating a number for the sake of ego, or they simply tell it like it is. There is an unspoken expectation among all women, however, to always have a lesser number of partners and activities in general than that of their mate. This, of course, is stupid. Why must we brush the male ego for fear of acceptance?

> And, considering many men suffer from the motherly fixations associated with an Oedipus complex, the end result is a love for the sacred wife/girlfriend with a lack of sexual desire for her because of a fear of incest (since the sacred woman is a symobol of the mother) and erectile dysfunction. Enter the happy blue pill.

I am not particularly trying to criticize men. I'm simply stating the obvious about a lame social stigma. Actually, women are usually the purveyors of criticism in regards to their fellow woman's actions. We sling "slut" around without batting an eyelash, and that is truly a shame.

To better understand why we loosely throw this word around, I looked up the history of "whore." This word contains Indo-European roots where several meanings of "desire," "adulterer," "dear," "lovemaking" and "caress" are indicated. Other than "adulterer," none of the other initial meanings have negative connotations.

The dummy definition of "whore" acknowledges sex acts for money, but in the modern tongue, a boyfriend thief, a scantily dressed woman, a man or woman who has several prestige female partners, someone who pisses off another individual – or someone who writes a sex column – can and will be labeled a whore. No matter how unfair, people regularly spew this word because of a narrow viewpoint riddled with judgment and hate.

Let's go back to the numbers game. Many women feel scrutiny and pressure from society to remain at five or less partners. In the insightful words of Chris Rock, "You take the number of guys your lady friend says she's had sex with and double it – at least. The reason is that she's probably had all sorts of sexual experiences that, to her, don't count."

Why do men care so much about how many, women? Do they feel inferior to this brooding number? Maybe the answer lies within the Madonna-whore complex, a theory based on the idea that men perceive women either as saints or sinners. And, considering many men suffer from the motherly fixations associated with an Oedipus complex, the end result is a love for the sacred wife/girlfriend with a lack of sexual desire for her because of a fear of incest (since the sacred woman is a symbol of the mother) and erectile dysfunction. Enter the happy blue pill.

Another symptom of this complex is the ability for the male to become easily aroused by women deemed naughty or sinful. So with the lacking middle ground between wholesome and whore, where does the average sexually active college student stand?

Can we go back to the land of truth – where numbers are not haunting faces peering down layers of brain tissue? A number is not that big of a deal, and it does not automatically indicate some weird level of whoredom, so relax people. But if you really care about someone, numbers aren't an issue.

By Liz Stierwalt, a columnist at the University of Alabama, written for The Crimson White

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

LET US NOT FORGET THE VOLUNTEERS

With all the disasters that have been happening across the world, it is easy to forget those who volunteer to help others. They help without question or fear. These are the men and women of the U.S. Marine Corps.

Many have disagreed with the decision to have troops in the Middle East. What these people forget to mention is that the Marine Corps is entirely made up of volunteers. Every single person made their own decision to enlist. On top of this, the United States has been involved in a military conflict during almost every decade since 1900. It was a well-known fact that the United States was going to be in another conflict. It was only a matter of time.

Many people state that the troops should be pulled out of Iraq and brought home. These are the same people who were for the invasion of Iraq. As President Bush would say, "they flip-flop." These people do not realize that it is impossible to simply pull the troops out. If the troops were pulled out, the nation of Iraq would be at the hands of all the people who are killing civilians with suicide bombs. To believe that they would be safe if the United States left is simply being naive.

After speaking with a number of Marines who have recently returned from Iraq, a common theme was found. They all wanted to return to Iraq. They were understandably upset that they had lost friends and fellow Marines during the fighting. However, despite that they were still eager to return to Iraq, their friends and the work they started.

Another idea that was brought to my attention was a very simple one. What makes the lives of Americans more important than those of the Iraqis? They were dying by the hundreds and thousands under the dictatorship of Saddam Hussein. Many stated that he should have simply been assassinated. What these people do not understand is the fact that his entire regime was as evil as he was.

The troops over there realize this. This is why they are willing to return without complaints. There may be American sacrifices, but the lives of thousands of Iraqis have been saved. We keep hearing how many have died, but this is far less than when Saddam was still in power. The Marines know the good they have done and continue to do. So remember, before you make comments about having troops there, they have volunteered and are proud of what they have done. Support the American troops and what they are doing. Remember, they are helping Iraq despite the losses. Also remember that there are still people volunteering for the armed forces. These are the men and women with courage and honor beyond what most of us could ever hope to reach.

Derek Bushey
UMass student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 21, 2005

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Calvin Theatre showcases the first lady of folk

By BRADLEY FARBERMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

In an industry that demands early retirement from e on its most timeless acts, Joan Baez has stood her ground for more than 40 years as the first lady of folk.

And it doesn't look like she'll be relinquishing her crown anytime soon. On tour now in support of "Bowery Songs," a five record, Baez is playing shows all over the country like it was 1964 again.

Don't believe me? Do yourself a favor, then: check her out when she comes through Northampton's Calvin Theatre Saturday night. I guarantee satisfaction.

But is it a money-back guarantee, you ask? Certainly not. I don't have the funds. But I'll let you in on some secrets, and then you'll see why I'm so sure that you'll dig it.

A little history: Baez cut her first record, "Folksingers 'Round Harvard Square," when she was 18 and followed that up with an impromptu appearance at the Newport Folk Festival that same year.

The folks at Newport Folk were duly impressed, and Baez got her own set the following year in 1960. Her first record for the Vanguard label, "Joan Baez," was out on shelves a few months later.

In 1962, she did a tour of Southern colleges under the condition that there be no discrimination at her shows, prompting TIME magazine to feature hers as the cover story in November. "Joan Baez in Concert," the live album of that tour, was nominated for a Grammy.

Bigger things followed. She toured the country with Bob Dylan in 1965 and performed in Europe for the first time at London's Royal Albert Hall. In 1966 she marched with Dr. King in Mississippi and in 1967 she was arrested and briefly jailed for protesting outside Oakland, Calif.'s Armed Forces Induction Center.

She was making an impact. Not just with her gorgeous soprano voice and songs of freedom, but with her actions and politics, which was just what she intended, and what she continues to do to this day.

In September, Baez performed songs such as "Where Have All the Flowers Gone?" "Joe Hill" and Dylan's "A Hard Rain's A-Gonna Fall" at the "Operation: Ceasefire" rally in Washington, D.C. In August, she spent a week with Cindy Sheehan at Camp Casey In Texas, sharing experiences from over 40 years of activism.

If you haven't noticed, Baez is as vital and relevant as she ever was. And now, with a new record under her belt (her second in three years), she's firing on all cylinders. "Bowery Songs," recorded live at New York City's Bowery Ballroom last November, covers material from all over the singer's career, with fresh energy and a great band in tow. Dylan songs ("Farewell, Angelina," "Seven Curses"), a Woody Guthrie piece ("Deportee (Plane Wreck at Los Gatos)"), newer stuff (Natalie Merchant's "Motherland") and the requisite traditional tunes ("Silver Dagger," "Jackaroe") are all here. There's even an a cappella song ("Finlandia").

So get ready for a night of folk, freedom, politics, history and, above all else, Joan Baez. Her live shows are the stuff of legend; Baez has released many live albums over the years, and you just might find out why these records were in such high demand. The first lady hits the Calvin at 8 p.m.; tickets are $25, $35 and $45. Don't miss it.

Joan Baez
Calvin Theatre
Northampton
$25, $35, $45
Oct. 22
8 p.m.

Indie-rockers bring their experimental sounds to Northampton

By MATT O'ROURKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

New York. Seattle. Montreal? No one could have guessed that the French-speaking neighbors to the north would produce the next great city for indie rock, but they did. Broken Social Scene, perhaps the leaders of this Canadian rock movement, will bring their rock-and-a-half-de-force to the Pearl Street Ballroom this Sunday, a live show not to be missed.

Formed by singer Kevin Drew, the 7-member band begins its tour of the United States on Saturday in Boston in support of their self titled third studio album.

The band was awarded a Juno award in 2003 (the Canadian equivalent of a Grammy) for Best Alternative album with "You Forgot It in People." Singer Leslie Feist (known only as "Feist") won three Junos this past year for her solo release, "Let It Die" in the Best New Artist and Best Alternative album of 2005 categories.

In a recent feature in Filter Magazine, Kevin Drew said, "This album will clean house a bit. We've had too many stray fans." However, this statement shouldn't hold fans (and those who love rock) back from attending, as Broken Social Scene is known for their intensity when performing.

The new album draws many parallels to their sophomore release, "You Forgot It in People." It can be difficult for a band to live up to the expectations of their fans, especially after such a defining record. The tracks can be a bit much at once and it will take one a few listens to fully appreciate and decode, however this is what's to be expected when a band has so many members playing at the same time. As their third album, it is also their self-titled.

"Ibi Dreams of Pavement," a clear reference to Stephen Malkmus' glory days with Pavement, features a very "Slanted and Enchanted" type sound, with the epic scale Broken Social Scene is known for. "7/4 (Shoreline)" sounds similar to "Cause Time," but that doesn't detract from the spirit of rock, as guitars duel and Leslie Feist's vocals soar. "Fire Eye'd Boy" features vocals not unlike the Flaming Lips and a dancehall style drum rhythm. "Swimmers" is less complicated than some of the other tracks, but much easier to handle, as Feist's vocals are simple yet elegant.

"Bandwitch" is another surprisingly nice switch, with acoustic guitar, and gentle vocals from both Drew and Feist. "It's All Gonna Break," may be the best concluding track Broken Social Scene has written yet. Probably the most straightforward song on the album, the track

See BROKEN on page 5

Broken Social Scene
Pearl Street Ballroom
Sun. Oct 23
8.30 p.m.
$20
CD Review
8.5/10

The 17 member band, Broken Social Scene, is bringing their unique vocals and array of instruments to Pearl Street. They have just released their newest album, which is self-titled.

Banhart teamed up with Hairy Fairy to give an eclectic show

By MICHAEL HARDMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Simply put, Devendra Banhart is one of a kind. A neo-psychedelic/folk hippie artist and musician, Banhart performed on Tuesday, Oct. 18 at the Pearl Street Night Club in Northampton. He played with Hairy Fairy, and they held the audience in their hands like the talons of an eagle clenching its prey for over two hours. The audience was helpless except to listen, sway and free dance to the raw music.

Banhart, 23, is at his peak when playing solo acoustically, but Hairy Fairy kept up with his Jim Morrison-esque stage presence, jumping around in a trance-like state with jerking movements while singing into the microphone. His voice is another thing altogether. The best way to describe his high-pitched, quivering warble is a blend of Bob Dylan and Grace Slick.

Their set opened with Banhart playing acoustically with Hairy Fairy, to "Quetate Luna." The song started with Banhart playing softly by himself and then the band joined in to finish the song at a fast pace to suck the crowd in. They continued to play quick upbeat tunes with Banhart telling short anecdotes in between songs, gathering laughter from all over the club. The scene made one feel like they had time traveled to 1965, from the shoulder length hair to the retro-hippie clothing that the band wore.

When they took a short break in order to get some more beer, two guys from the audience were selected to come up and play a song. It was amusing, and the two who played were pretty good. Banhart and Hairy Fairy wanted to hang out backstage a little longer, but the spontaneous duo didn't have any more material to play.

The featured guys then came back out to the stage and the crowd, which was teased with freedom from the musical talons during the break, was again in the grasp.

They broke into a song called "Long Haired Child," which received great applause from the counter-culture crowd. The song, with a pounding bass line, lured people onto the stage to free dance all around the band. Banhart was lost in the crowd for a minute, free dancing with them.

Banhart then decided to play some solo pieces. Sitting down in a chair with his guitar, Banhart had undivided attention. His masterfully stark playing coupled with his unparalleled voice resonated throughout the club.

It might have been the incense filled room, but one cannot explain what transpired. His dark, brooding eyes held the complete attention of every person there. Two songs, "Little Yellow Spider" and "At the Hop" were played exceptionally well.

Banhart was born in Texas, but moved to Caracas, Venezuela at the age of two. It was rough living there, but when he was in his teens, his family moved to Los Angeles. He enrolled in the San Francisco Art Institute in 1998 but was artistically held back by academia. In 2000, he dropped out and went to Paris. It was here that he was discovered, in a small club, opening for various indie rock bands. From there, he has bounced all over the United States playing gigs whenever possible.

Devendra Banhart has released four albums, three in the United States. A musician rarely likes to be labeled, but his extraordinary song writing is scary in its closeness to that of a young Bob Dylan. The almost haunting emotion that he pours into his work and performances should make him a magical musician for years to come.

Devendra Banhart (above) played with his newly formed band, Hairy Fairy, combining Banhart's acoustic style and Hairy Fairy's upbeat presence.

Spielberg and EA fuse Hollywood and the video game industry

The Game Room
Carlos Cruz

During recent years we have seen the rise of the gaming industry as a major play in the entertainment medium. The amount of money made by the games industry has even surpassed that great Americaninstitution, Hollywood. Games and movies are no new hybrid. Ever since the 80s, we have seen games based on movies and movies based on games, but the development of each franchise has been completely separate from each other. There is a movie team and a game team and never shall the two meet.

Historically, games based on movies have been mediocre at best and the same goes for movies based on games ("Super Mario Bros" comes to mind). Lately though, movies like "Resident Evil" and "Tomb Raider" have demonstrated that movies based on games can be profitable and that there is an audience. Games in general are becoming more cinematic and reaching production budgets that rival that of the biggest Spielberg movie. With all this said, wouldn't it make sense to have Spielberg himself make his own game? Ten years ago, one would have laughed and thought you were kidding if you even suggested that. What does Spielberg know about games? Apparently he thinks he knows enough to make three video games.

On Oct. 14, Electronic Arts and Steven Spielberg announced that they are going to team up in order to release three original titles over the coming years with the first to be released within the year According to the official press release, EA will hold the rights to whatever intellectual property Spielberg creates.

The effort seems to be very collaborative with Spielberg getting his own office in the Electronic Arts offices in Los Angeles. It is not yet known how involved the Academy Award-winning director will be in the project, but the fact that he will have his own office at EA seems to indicate that it will be quite hands on.

This isn't the first time Spielberg has been involved in video games. His movies have been made into video games many times over but none have had much commercial success. The Atari 2600 release of the "ET" game resulted in the manufacturing of more games than consoles. The game was made in one-third the average time it takes to make a game, and was a complete disappointment. The giant surplus of thousands of unsold games resulted in them being buried somewhere in the New Mexico desert. The exact location is unknown.

In the 1990s, the two "Jurassic Park" movies made by Spielberg both spawned video game adaptations. The first "Jurassic Park" title for Sega Genesis resulted in a mediocre game that needed to be remade into a more violent, action-packed version called "Jurassic Park: Rampage Edition." The game was loosely based on the movie and actually gave the player guns and other types of heavy duty weapons. Does anyone remember there being guns in the first "Jurassic Park" movie?

In 2002, we were once again treated to another Spielberg movie game. This time it was "Minority Report." The movie was pretty good. The game was not. It was paint-by-numbers run, kick, shoot and throw. The fact that the movie's star, Tom Cruise, wouldn't let the merchandising use his likeness didn't help either. Instead of the very recognizable Cruise, players were given the control of some strange blond dude that took the celebrity's place in the title role. Lame.

On the positive side, Spielberg's movie making buddy, George Lucas, has had great success in the video game industry. Lucas formed his own company, LucasArts, which is responsible for many classic games like the "Super Star Wars" games for the SNES, "Zombies Ate My Neighbors" and the legendary "Monkey Island" games. Clearly, Lucas understood the medium. The question for Spielberg is does he understand the medium? The proof is in the pudding, so the only way to know if he does is by getting a look at the results. Stay tuned.

Steven Spielberg has agreed to develop three games with Electronic Arts Inc. This union marks the first with Hollywood and video games.

'Broken' performs

BROKEN from page 4

builds with horns and evolves into the classic "wall of sound" that Broken Social Scene is known for.

Other tracks like "Windsurfing Nation" try to resemble art and experimental sound, yet come across as cluttered and unfinished. The limited edition of the album comes with an E.P. which would be a much better place to include this type of material.

However, at the live show, one can expect to hear these tracks and others off of their critically acclaimed second album, such as the guitar laden "Cause Time," and the beautiful "Anthems for a Seventeen Year-Old Girl."

As many indie rock acts do nowadays, Feist will be opening and performing tracks off of her solo debut as well as singing with the band. Here the listeners are in for a treat with an interesting musical dynamic — being able not only to hear an artist be creative on her own, but also how her own creativity contributes to the band as a whole.

Write for ARTS ...
E-mail us at arts@dailycollegian.com

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for FRIDAY 10/21 THRU THURSDAY 10/27
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Harry Potter Tickets for 11/8 Now On Sale!
North Country (R) 1:20 4:10 7:05 10:00*
Doom (R) 1:10 4:20 7:25 9:50*
Stay (R) 1:15 4:30 7:00 9:45*
Elizabethtown (PG13) 1:25 4:30 7:15 10:00*
Waiting (R) 1:50 4:50 7:30 9:55*
Domino (R) 1:00 4:05 7:20 10:10*
The Fog (PG13) 1:40 4:45 7:35 10:15*
The Wallace and Gromit Movie (G) 1:35 3:55 6:45 9:05
Waiting (R) 1:50 4:50 7:30 9:55
In Her Shoes (PG13) 1:05 4:15 7:10 10:05
Serenity (PG13) 7:10 9:55
A History of Violence (R) 1:30 4:35 7:00 9:30
Tim Burton's Corpse Bride (PG) 1:00 3:00 5:10
Flightplan (PG13) 1:55 4:25 7:40 10:10
* no passes or supersavers
Senior Show 10/27 North Country @ 10am
Friday Night Rewind Nov. 4th Batman @ Midnight
• NO PASSES, NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

STEVE MADDEN
ZANNA
Women's clothing, shoes and accessories.
downtown Amherst www.zanna.com

BIKRAM YOGA CHANGES LIVES.
Bikram Yoga Amherst
MIRACULOUS • REVOLUTIONARY • HOT www.bikramyogaamherst.com
665.9642
RT. 116 • SUNDERLAND
Across from Cliffside Apts

MIFA MASSACHUSETTS INTERNATIONAL FESTIVAL of the ARTS
Wire Monkey Dance
Multi-media, highly physical, inventive dance event performed on steel scaffolds and platforms.
...dancers who could fly. With a lightning speed, the seven dancers climbed, swung and soared across the bars of a sophisticated jungle gym..." THE ARTFUL MIND
Oct 21, 22, 23, 108 Cabot St., Holyoke
Fri. Sat 8pm, Sun 4pm
Tickets $15, $12
Sponsors: The Republican, The Irene E. & George A. Davis Foundation, The Evan Frankel Foundation, IMAF-International Music and Arts Foundation, Massachusetts Cultural Council, Masspike, MOTT/Massachusetts Office of Travel and Tourism, The Weissman Center for Leadership & the Liberal Arts at Mt. Holyoke College, Holyoke Community College and Holyoke Gas & Electric.
MIFAfestival.org 800 224-6432

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
From the movies "Deuce Bigalow: European Gigolo and "Undercover Brother"
EDDIE GRIFFIN
OCTOBER 29TH
7PM Only!
NOV. 5TH
Host of Comedy Central's "insomniac"
DAVE ATTELL
NOV. 12TH
Also known as "Dr. Dirty"
JOHN VALBY

Winter's around the Corner... Gear up this weekend and SAVE at
Oct. 21 Oct. 22 Oct. 23
FAT TRAX
www.fattrax.com
Oct. 21 Oct. 22 Oct. 23
Save 40% or more on New Leftover Snowboards
Select jackets & pants 50% - 60% OFF retail
Quality snowboard packages starting @ $239.95
Season Leases begin @ $139.95
Best Selection ~ Great Quality ~ Best Service
Why Go Anywhere Else?
19 North St.
Easthampton, MA
413 - 586 - 8766

UM to host Crusaders

HOCKEY from page 8

AHA semifinals, being ousted by eventual conference champion Mercyhurst, 4-3 in overtime.

The Minutemen, on the other hand, are fresh off a 1-1 road trip to upstate New York. After dropping a 2-1 decision to St. Lawrence on Friday night, the Minutemen bounced back nicely on Saturday to knock off Clarkson 4-2, and freshman goalie Jon Quick picked up his first collegiate win in his first ever start.

The biggest difference between the two nights had to do with the ability for UMass to keep the puck in offensive situations. On Friday night, the team's composure was a little shaky, and the Minutemen turned the puck over, giving St. Lawrence numerous offensive opportunities. Cahoon was happy with the way his team responded on Saturday, as they settled down and found more of an offensive rhythm.

Captains Matt Anderson and Marvin Degon have gotten off to hot starts in the goal-scoring department, each picking up two over the weekend. Anderson also tallied two assists during the weekend road trip just south of the border to lead UMass with four points. The Minutemen's third captain, senior Stephen Werner, leads the team with three assists.

Cahoon is also proud of the way his freshmen performed during the season's opening weekend, especially forward Chris Davis, who picked up the Mass Attack's lone goal on Friday night.

"Chris Davis has gotten off to as good of a start as any of our young freshman forwards," Cahoon said. "The freshmen have done what we hoped they would do, and that is contribute in an effective way."

NOTE: Freshman defenseman Topher Bevis is suffering from a minor shoulder sprain and is day-to-day. There is no official word on his return to the lineup, but Cahoon said he didn't want to rush his freshman prospect back too early during the first week of his college career.

KAREN WINGER/COLLEGIAN

Senior captain Marvin Degon and the Minutemen will take on Holy Cross tonight at 7 p.m. Degon has two goals in two games this season.

Minutewomen look to make return to A-10 Tournament

SOCCER from page 8

other teams didn't want to play on the uneven playing surface.

While the Explorers have struggled to score goals (17 in 15 games), they have been among the league leaders in one statistic: cards received. LaSalle has been given 23 red or yellow cards on the season, a number Rudy believes to be an A-10 record, adding that LaSalle has "more fouls committed than shots attempted."

Adding to the challenges of playing a physical team on the treacherous pitch is that LaSalle is also home to some of the rowdier fans in the conference and head coach Paul Royal is very vocal on the sidelines.

"It's a tough place to play, with all the fouls and the clamoring that comes out of the bleachers and the sidelines," Rudy said.

One thing that should be working in UMass' favor is that almost every player on the roster was a part of last year's squad and knows that the team will need to take care of business over the next two weekends in order to qualify for postseason play.

"I think our kids are going to be very motivated for this weekend because they felt embarrassed by their performance against St. Louis," Rudy said referencing last weekend's 1-0 loss to the Hilltoppers. "Their point-of-view was that St. Louis didn't win it, we gave it away. We'll start winning tight games when the team starts believing that we actually can do it."

UMass looks towards playoffs

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

finals at Garber Field. UMass is 20-1 all-time against the Hawks.

Atlantic 10 action will continue in Philadelphia on Sunday when they will face Temple (8-9 3-1 A-10) at noon. The Owls have won four of their last five, but are coming off of a 4-0 loss to No. 20 Richmond.

UMass and Temple are tied for second place in the A-10 with 3-1 conference records. Both teams have taken the same route in conference play thus far, defeating Saint Louis, La Salle and West Chester, and losing to Richmond.

The Maroon and White will have its hands full with Temple freshman goalkeeper Erin Hanshue. Hanshue is tied for first in the A-10 in shutouts with four on the season, but she will also be facing a reborn UMass offense.

The Minutewomen have outscored their opponents 11-3 during their three-game winning streak against A-10 teams, but coach Shea knows that this weekend's games will be different.

Both Saint Joseph's and Temple have a lot of team speed, and both teams have players that can take over a game, so Shea knows that her team must capitalize on its opportunities.

"When we get the ball into the offensive zone, we have to get a scoring opportunity from it," Shea said. "We have to negate their speed as well. Our forward lines have to be very active and take away their passing angles. We match up very well against these two teams, and we are going to have to take advantage of all of our offensive opportunities."

Healthy Patriots are the exception

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBOROUGH — Mike Vrabel and Rosevelt Colvin are unusual players on the New England Patriots defense. They have no crutches or bandaged hands.

The two linebackers have stayed healthy on a unit beset by injuries that have landed three defensive backs on injured reserve, hampered two other linebackers and sidelined its best defensive lineman the past two games.

"If you're saying that we'd like to have the same 11 guys out there for 10 straight weeks to end the season, obviously," Vrabel said, "but you know that's not going to happen."

The three-time Super Bowl champs are 3-3 and don't even have a game this weekend, but more bad news surfaced Thursday when cornerback Tyrone Poole appeared in the locker room on crutches. He has played in only the first game of the season before hurting his ankle but took part in practice last week.

He wouldn't discuss the injury and referred questioners to coach Bill Belichick.

Belichick already had conducted his daily briefing without mentioning Poole.

"It's not frustrating," said Poole, who began last season as a starter but was sidelined for most of it. "Football is not my life."

Another reminder of the rash of injuries, safety Rodney Harrison, walked through the locker room. He's out for the season with a knee injury suffered in the third game and is awaiting surgery.

"I'm doing good," he said, "just hanging out and trying to rehab a little bit and get better, spending some time at home, doing fine."

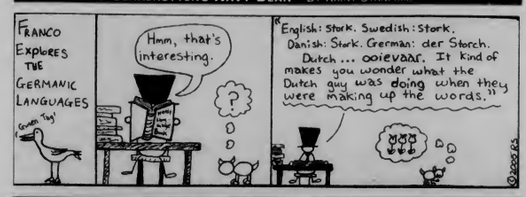
He repeated his determination to play next season. For now, the corps of experienced defenders is thinning, but Colvin said that doesn't expand his role to help others line up in the proper spots.

"Everybody has their own individual responsibilities," he said. "When you start worrying about somebody else's job or worrying about what somebody else is or isn't doing, then your house is not clean. So you just have to focus on your job."

LONG RADIO
Quality Sales, Service, and Installation
Audio
Video
Satellite Radio
NAV
Remote Starter
Alarms
Radar Detectors
Lazer Detectors
Performace Parts
30 Russell Street Hadley, Ma 01035 413-584-3259

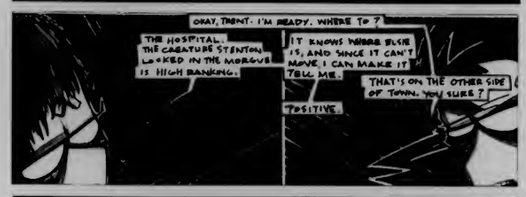
Regency Hair Stylists
"Get a new look for fall"
$ 5.00 OFF a haircut
Monday - Thursday
Bring this ad
and your Student ID.
Call for an appointment or step by the salon
253 - 9526
189 N. Pleasant St
Amherst, MA 01002

EASTERN MOUNTAIN SPORTS
Upgrade Your Gear SALE!
20% OFF
Everything in the Store.
October 21-23
Special Club Member Shopping Hours
October 20 4PM to Close
We're giving you a break on everything we've got.
That means all kinds of upgrade options.
Bring the right tools to the wilderness.
Don't go out there without prime gear.
Go to www.ems.com
for the store nearest you.
Not valid on gift cards or Merrell products



New WORLD Theater presents
Birth of a nASIAN
Written by Kate Rigg and Leah Ryan.
Featuring electric violin by Lyris Hung.
All Urban. All Comedy
All Spoken Word.
All Trip Hop with an Asian slant.
'Cultural terrorist' Kate Rigg's super-edgy, super-freaky comedy (in the style of Leguizamo/Ullman/Tomlin/Jones) fiercely reveals the contradictions and contemporary fictions of Asian America
October 26, 2005
8 pm, Bowker Auditorium, UMass Amherst
TICKETS ARE: $ 15-general public
$ 8-seniors/low income patrons, $5-students
Call the FAC Box Office 413-545-2511
For info about the shows, call NWT at 413-545-1972
www.newworldtheater.org THE FINE ARTS CENTER

Help change lives.
VISIT US AT THE COLLEGE FAIR
October 26
11am - 3pm
Start with your own.
GRADUATE AND CERTIFICATE PROGRAMS IN
Clinical Investigation • Nursing
Communication Sciences and Disorders
Medical Imaging • Physical Therapy
CHARLESTOWN NAVY YARD
BOSTON, MA
MGH INSTITUTE OF HEALTH PROFESSIONS
an academic affiliate of Massachusetts General Hospital
www.mghihp.edu | Advancing people. Advancing care.



Northampton running.co
Your One Stop Running Shop
Open 7 Days/Week
Hours: M-F 10-7
Sat 10-6
Sun 12-4
Bring in this coupon for:
$10 Off All Merchandise
*Sale items not included. Cannot be combined with any other offer.
Wide selection of road and trail shoes, technical apparel and accessories
XC and track spikes
Knowledgeable sales staff
Visit our website www.northamptonrunning.com
90 King Street, Northampton 01060 413.517.0059

The Empress Josephine
UPCOMING EVENTS
The Empress Josephine Weekend
Saturday, October 29th
10am- 4pm
Symposium
Queens, Queens, Queens & Empresses
Pruyne Lecture Hall, Fayerweather Hall
Amherst College. FREE
Sunday, October 30th
2pm
Concert
Music from the Salon of the Empress Josephine
Soprano, flute, harp, and fortepiano
Rotherwas Gallery, Mead Art Museum
By reservation only, call 542-2335. FREE
George Moutard Woodward and Captain Williams. (detail) The Progress of Josephine published 20 April 1808, etching hand-colored. McGill University, Rare books and Special Collections, Folio M7 W81
Film Series begins Thursday, October 20th!
Call 542-2335 for more information or visit us on the web www.amherst.edu/mead
Art & Royal Identity
MEAD ART MUSEUM AMHERST COLLEGE
ON VIEW THROUGH DECEMBER 18TH

FRANCO THE CLARINETTING NAVY BEAN By Rainy Stanford

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Kryzkowski

FUNCTIONAL DYSTOPIA By Zeid Rusan

NAILED By T.J. Pederson

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

Quote of the Day

"It's not so important happy ever after, just that it's happy right now."

—Grey's Anatomy

ACROSS
1 Matterhorn's range
5 Military vehicle
9 Saunter
14 Chess castle
15 Orchestral reed
16 Comic Burnett
17 Kalmandu's continent
18 Father Christmas
20 Pricey wheels
22 Altar boy
23 Ooze
24 Calculator key
25 Compass reading
27 Fan sound
29 Slanted type
34 Summoned to court
36 Liability
38 Tree trunk
39 Feed the pot
40 Secura asea
41 Diabolical
42 Train track
43 Actor Julia
44 Swipe
45 Complete flop
47 Gambling cubes
49 Flaks
50 Back than 52 Fifty percent
54 Hot sauce
58 Portentous
61 Building toy
63 Challenge
64 Tuscany tourist city
65 Big toe inflammation
66 Sum and substance
67 Slendar candle
68 500-mile race
69 Time periods

DOWN
1 Part of U.A.E.
2 Mesquite
3 Christmas plant
4 Rollerblade
5 Jacob and Rachel's elder son
6 Online auction site
7 Geological division
8 Floral segment
9 Confront
10 Shopping center
11 Sound like an ass
12 Oat
13 Otherwise
19 Sharpness
21 X-rated
24 Opera overture
25 Fashionable boa
26 Biblical mount
28 Mental impulse
30 Protect illegally
31 Romantic relationship
32 Greek epic
33 Casals instrument
35 Snoggler's pursuit
37 Isle near Java
40 Denver player
44 Ticket datum
46 Biking sharer
48 Gabby
51 Welsh dog breed
53 Rock shelf
54 Check out
55 Pavarotti showstopper
56 Player signal
57 Casarasi's target
58 Clan spat
59 Bear in the sky?
60 Tennis calls
62 Junior to senior

Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

www.andiamo.cc
256 • FOOD
andiamo
We apologize for any confusion. Also, we have panini.
256 • FOOD
www.andiamo.cc

Submit your comic!
e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your goal for tonight is to run around sticking "kick me" signs on people's backs.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
I know you probably get this all the time, but you have gorgeous eyes.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You will invite someone to a party in your pants before the weekend is up.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You are the only person that thinks it's okay for you to wear that ridiculous hat.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Obviously you weren't ready to give up that teddy bear. You're a wreck without it.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Take up pilates. Then pick up Carmen Electra's workout video.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
People aren't as comfortable being seen in public with you as you think they are.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Buy a magic eight ball and base your life on its responses.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You did great on that test yesterday, despite being extremely hung over.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Consider consequences before acting on impulses. In other words, don't eat that.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Take out your trash before it takes out you.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
The answer is no. Ketchup does not count as a vegetable unit.

★ Submit your comic ★
e-mail
collegiancomcis@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$600 Group Fundraiser Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising programs Equals $1,000-$3,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for up to $600 in bonuses when you schedule your fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments. Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

AUTO FOR SALE

92 Honda Accord Auto loaded 145K Good Condition $2200 obo David 253-3297

EMPLOYMENT

Wanted: Babysitter occasional nights and weekends for 3 and 5 year old. Experience preferred with own transportation. Non-smoking home. If interested please call 413-297-2146

Bartenders/ Waitresses/ Promoters Wanted. New Western Mass Night Club/ Sports Bar. Only 15 minutes from campus! Call Don @ (413) 536-8494 Email don@ maximum promo.com

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening experiments $10/hr English must be your first language email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Web programmer with experience with graphics design wanted for work in the Office of ALANA Affairs. Up to $10.00 an hour. Apply at office in room 302 in Student Union or email ofalana@stuaf.umass.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Get paid up to $75.00 per on-line survey. www.MoneyAuthor.com

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Want to do something special for your friend's birthday? Put a classified ad in the Collegian for them? It's cheap and easy! Call 545-3500 today.

SERVICES

Legal Questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SERVICES

We Buy Used Manga $$ or Trade 584-6554 Sidekicks Inc. 206 Russell St. Hadley

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK – Early Booking Specials – FREE Meals & Drinks - $50 Deposit – 800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

ACT NOW – SPRING BREAKERS Book Early & Save! Free meals, parties by 11/7. Lowest prices. Be a rep & TRAVEL FREE! Get the ultimate hookups with STA TRAVEL 413-256-1261

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Collegian Advertising: Call 545-3500 to speak with an experienced ad rep or visit us in the campus center basement 9-3.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 21, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass set for home opener

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

When the referee is set to drop the puck to officially kick off the home opener for the Massachusetts hockey team (1-1-0) tonight at 7 p.m. at the Mullins Center, UMass coach Don Cahoon and his squad will be staring across the ice at a Holy Cross team (0-0-0) that will prove to be much more formidable than the Mass Attack's fans are expecting.

The Crusaders are traveling west from Worcester and are looking to invade Maroon and White territory and conquer their intrastate rival Minutemen.

Holy Cross is laden with veteran leadership, as it is returning 20 players from last year's team, including five players who scored at least 22 points last season, headlined by Pierre Napert-Frenette's 38 points.

The centerman and team captain knocked home 13 goals and picked up 25 assists in 36 games last year, and he is also a force in the faceoff circle. He is also a strong preseason candidate for Atlantic Hockey Association's Player of the Year.

Tyler McGregor, the Crusaders' other captain, was far and away their best goal scorer last year, lighting the lamp 21 times, with eight of those coming on the power play. His 13 assists tabbed him fourth on the team.

And James Sixsmith was a perfect compliment on HC's offensive attack, providing a team-high 28 assists to go along with nine goals.

Perhaps no one on the Crusaders is more vital to the team's overall success this season than goaltender Tony Quesada. Two years ago, as a sophomore, Quesada posted a 17-6-2 mark in net for Holy Cross' NCAA Tournament team. His 2.23 goals against average and .925 save percentage were obvious factors in his record and team's overall play.

Last season, however, Quesada's numbers fell. He posted a save percentage of .905, allowed 2.70 goals per game and his record dipped to 9-9-4.

As a result, HC finished fourth in the AHA with a 16-14-6 overall record to go along with a 12-7-5 conference mark, and the Crusaders were eliminated in the

See HOCKEY on page 6

KAREN WINSOR/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore forward Zech Klann (right) and the Minutemen will host Holy Cross tonight at 7 p.m. at the Mullins Center in their home opener. UMass went 1-1 in its first action of the season last weekend.

Postseason fate to be decided

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team will resume conference play this weekend, as it will travel to Philadelphia to try and make its push for an Atlantic 10 Tournament bid.

The Minutewomen (6-10 3-1 A-10) will face Saint Joseph's (9-7 2-2 A-10) today at 4 p.m. as they will try to extend their conference winning streak. UMass has won its last three conference games, but are coming off of a heartbreaking 2-1 double-overtime loss to Dartmouth College on Wednesday at Garber Field.

Although they lost their last home game of the season, UMass senior Patricia Borneo knows that her team will keep the same momentum going into this weekend's crucial games in A-10 play.

"It is tough to lose in double-overtime," Borneo said. "But we are a strong team, and we know what we did wrong, and we will look to correct it. We are going to have to score early [this weekend] and keep the lead. We have to keep forcing it down our opponents' throats, and not give them a chance to get back into the game."

Saint Joseph's is currently in third place in the A-10 with a 2-2 conference record, and are just one game behind UMass and Temple for second place.

The Minutewomen will need a strong showing this weekend, as the team's fate could be determined in Philadelphia. In order to stay on top UMass will have to shut down St. Joseph's junior Nicole Antonini and senior Katelyn O'Brien.

Antonini leads the A-10 in goals with 12 on the season, and is second in the conference in points with 27. She also is an All-American candidate and is one of the most explosive offensive players in the East. O'Brien is right behind her at third in the A-10 with 24 points.

The Hawks have lost three of their last four games, and are coming off of a 2-0 loss to No. 17 Villanova.

The Minutewomen defeated Saint Joseph's twice last year, including a 3-0 victory in the A-10 semi-

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Familiar spot for UM

By Dan Duggan
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team will find itself in a familiar position this weekend. Last year, the Minutewomen found themselves with their postseason destiny in their own hands with four games to go, and despite going 2-2, they were able to sneak into the Atlantic 10 Tournament as the No. 6 seed.

Once again, the final four games will determine the postseason fortunes of UMass (6-7-1 3-2-0 A-10), as the Minutewomen are currently in fifth place in the A-10 standings, with the top six teams qualifying for the conference tournament.

The Minutewomen will not have an easy road to get to the postseason as their final four games are all on the road against conference foes, beginning this weekend with games at George Washington today at 3 p.m. and LaSalle at 1 p.m. on Sunday.

While both teams have struggled this year, they will pose challenges to UMass. George Washington (4-9 1-4 A-10) is an experienced team and is one that UMass coach Jim Rudy will not take lightly.

"Looking at their lineup, I'm surprised that they've been down this year," Rudy said. "They have a top-heavy team. They start six seniors and two juniors."

The biggest problem for GW this season has been putting goals on the board, as the Colonials have scored only 11 times in 13 games. One player that Rudy plans to keep an eye on is junior Shari Taylor, as Taylor is tied for the team lead in goals and is second in points.

George Washington also features a solid goalkeeping duo of seniors Kelly Paolucci and Anna Handzlik. The two goalies have split time this season, holding opponents to a 1.42 goals against average.

On Sunday, UMass will head to LaSalle (4-9-2 1-3-1 A-10), and more specifically McCarthy Stadium. While Rudy is wary of playing against a physical Explorers squad, his main concern is playing on the field at McCarthy Stadium.

"I won't mince words about this: it's the worst field I've ever been on as a player or a coach," Rudy said.

Rudy is certainly not alone in his opinion of the field, as LaSalle played its entire non-conference schedule on the road, clearly because

KAREN WINSOR/COLLEGIAN

Senior captain Lindsey Bellini and UMass will take to the road this weekend for a pair of critical games against Atlantic 10 opponents.

See SOCCER on page 6

Critical games for Koch's squad

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

Rudd Field will be the site of some very important soccer games this weekend. The Massachusetts men's soccer team is once again trying to break out of a three-game slump when George Washington and La Salle come to Amherst on Friday and Sunday, respectively.

The Minutemen (4-9 0-3 Atlantic 10) are on their second three-game losing streak of the season. Losses to Rhode Island, Duquesne and St. Louis last week put UMass into a hole at the start of the A-10 season.

UMass coach Sam Koch believes his team is better than its subpar record and encourages others to see for themselves.

"Come watch us and you'll see the record doesn't really show how good a team we can be," Koch said. "[With] as many young players as we have, playing against the teams we play, I think this team is playing very well. We're only going to get better."

This most recent stretch has been especially hard on the Minutemen. Besides their three-game losing streak they have also lost six of their last seven games.

To the team's credit, however, they have rarely been dominated this season. The 5-0 loss to St. Louis was the only game the Minutemen have lost by more than two goals.

According to Koch, the Minutemen continue to make little mistakes which have been putting them on the losing end of some very close 1-0 and 2-1 soccer games.

"At times we've have two very clear cut choices about what we should do with the ball and we're making the wrong decision," Koch said. "Those are simple things to correct if we're focused on what we're trying to do."

Koch also commented that his team's record is not reflective of the team's mood and confidence. "We had a hard physical practice yesterday which no one really likes, but to be honest I thought it was good. The spirits today were good," he said.

During Wednesday's practice it was evident that this wasn't a team hanging their heads. In a scrimmage towards the end of the session players were giving advice to one another and cheering on their teammates.

UMass needs to have a good weekend in order to keep its A-10 Tournament chances alive. The only team below the Minutemen in the conference standings is St. Joseph's.

Wins this weekend could put the team right in the thick of things in the A-10, depending on what else happens around the league. That, however, has been shown to be easier said than done.

The defending A-10 champion George Washington will be making its way to Amherst on Friday. So far on the season the Colonials are 4-6-2 overall and 1-3 in the A-10. The record is a little disappointing for GW but they are still the champs nonetheless.

The Colonials are coming off a shutout loss at the hands of Temple, 1-0. In the game, the Owls jumped out front early, netting the only goal of the game just over three minutes into the game.

All-time, the Maroon and White have been pretty successful against the Colonials. The series record stands at 9-7-1 in favor of UMass.

Last year's epic battle needed two overtime periods to decide the 2-1 contest won by the Minutemen. Senior (then junior) Tim Kitchell scored the winning goal at 104:43 by heading the ball into the net off of a throw in.

Sunday's opponent, La Salle (6-5-3 3-0-1 A-10), sits in third place in the A-10, behind only Duquesne and St. Louis. Along with those two and Fordham, La Salle is one of four teams with undefeated conference records.

The Explorers come to Amherst with much different recent fortunes than the Minutemen. La Salle is 4-0-1 in their last five games including a win against Dayton and a tie with Xavier, both teams that are right in the hunt in the conference.

Their latest victory came Tuesday when they downed Temple 1-0. The shutout was just the second time this season that the Explorers blanked a team (the other coming in a 0-0 tie at Bucknell on Sept. 14).

UMass has dominated the all-time series against La Salle with a 9-2 mark. Last season, however, UMass lost to the Explorers on the road in Philadelphia by a score of 2-0.

Koch isn't letting the success of his team's opponents get in the way of what they should be doing – worrying about themselves.

"To be honest we're more focused on us," he said. "Making sure we do the things we have to do. I think if we do that then it will take care of them. We're not concerned about them as much as we're concerned about us."

It's going to take a whole team effort to pull the Minutemen from the A-10 cellar and that starts this weekend.

Field conditions will play a role

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Despite what the records show, the pressure will be on the Massachusetts women's soccer team this weekend more than ever.

The Minutewomen (6-7-1 3-2-0 Atlantic 10) hit the road this weekend against a pair of teams that have just two conference wins between them, and eight overall. But considering the prestige of their final two opponents the following weekend, this could potentially be a trap game, especially when you take into account home field advantage.

George Washington (4-9-0 1-4-0 A-10) hasn't been very good at home this year, but it's still a unique environment for the Minutewomen to step into. Friday will be the first time UMass plays on FieldTurf, which could mean trouble in getting used to the different surface.

Traditionally, the Colonials are one of the toughest teams to play at home, once going a year and a half without a home loss. But clearly, GW is having an untraditional year, going 1-4 on their turf. Coach Tanya Vogel, one of the better coaches around the A-10, figures to have something up her sleeve for UMass.

But the aura of GW is still there in UMass coach Jim Rudy's mind. "I think there's a lot more pressure on us than them this weekend," Rudy said. "We're in it, [GW and LaSalle are] not, and we're playing traditionally two of the toughest teams at home."

Which brings us to LaSalle. Yeah, they're tough at home, but not in the way you might think.

Often, the playing surface of LaSalle's field acts as their version of the "12th man," or in this case "woman," providing one of the worst playing surfaces anywhere.

At the mere mention of LaSalle, Rudy is not hesitant to speak his mind, preferring to not call the surface what he deems as "Astrodirt."

"I do not mind talking negatively about that field, because that field should not be in the A-10, nevermind the NCAA," Rudy said. "If you want to compare it to our football field [last Saturday, when it was in horrific condition], you can't. McGuirk [Stadium] would be like playing in the World Cup."

His reasoning isn't unwarranted, though. LaSalle's first nine games of the year were all non-conference, and more importantly all on the road. They only have five home games, all A-10 games.

It seems like the only way to get opponents to come onto the field is by force. And with the different blends of grass, dirt, sod and overall discomfort of playing on it, it seems like they have reason.

"That should be a message there, somewhere, for those people in power to read," Rudy said.

Rudy's contempt towards LaSalle's "Astrodirt" might also stem from an incident in 1996, when he watched one of his most talented players in the program's history, two-time All-American Rebecca Myers, suffer a career-ending knee injury on that field while going for an uncontested loose ball.

The Explorers ought to be comfortable, as this would be their fifth and final home game. Which makes you wonder again, how much will home field advantage play this weekend?

Only time will tell

Tune-up meet for Minutewomen

Joey White
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts women's cross-country team will be in action this weekend at the Central Connecticut State Mini-Meet after having last weekend off.

This meet will be smaller in size – a 3K as opposed to the 5K that the Minutewomen are used to running – and will have fewer teams competing than in the previous meets that the Maroon and White have participated in recently.

The Minutewomen are in for a tough race, as earlier in the season Central Connecticut State hosted its 17th annual CCSU Blue Devil Invitational, where they finished second out of six teams, only behind UConn.

"A lot of teams are taking this weekend off for [the Atlantic 10 Championships] next weekend," UMass coach Julie LeFreniere said. "A lot of teams don't run the weekend before championship meets."

Massachusetts, ranked No. 8 in the Atlantic 10, will see another A-10 representative this weekend with the No. 4 ranked Rams of URI. The remaining A-10 schools are taking the weekend off.

"We're using it to sharpen them up. It's a nice break from the 5K. And it's a good refresher for the runners both physically and mentally," LeFreniere said. "It's a nice change, and they're looking forward to it."

LeFreniere is not resting any of her runners this weekend, saying that they're going to continue the season and do everything as a team as they've been doing so far. She also said that her runners are going to run hard and not hold anything back.

"If I thought it would hurt the team then I wouldn't have put it in the schedule," LeFreniere said.

The Maroon and White have practices that are longer than this meet, and LeFreniere admitted that if she didn't have this meet then she would've given the Minutewomen a much harder practice.

"This is fine, it's low key, and yet they're excited for it," LeFreniere said. "It's a refreshing event to run in, as opposed to the 5K. It's short and sweet; we've got to get out quick."

There are no major injuries for the Minutewomen that have LeFreniere worried, but sophomore Amanda Bodette is coming down with a cold. This worries LeFreniere as it is cold season, and she hopes that it, as well as their competition, doesn't catch up to her runners for next weekend's A-10 Championships.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, OCTOBER 24, 2005 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM VOLUME CXVI ISSUE 32

Expansion plans brew controversy

By Megan Daley
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – Smith College's plans to construct a new engineering and sciences building has recently been approved by the town planning board, but some residents are still protesting the decision.

Bids for the actual construction work have not yet been placed, but Kristen Cole, a Smith College spokeswoman, says that groundbreaking could begin as early as 2007. The project will cost about $65 million dollars and will be 140,000 square feet in size. Cole says the building will house the Picker Engineering Program, computer science, chemistry and molecular biology.

The building will be located along Green Street and Belmont Ave., just across the Street from the Mendenhall Center for the Performing Arts.

"This building is envisioned to be the first in a science and engineering complex in the area of Green and West streets," Cole said.

The problem with these plans is that the area selected is already occupied.

"Construction of the science and engineering building will require the removal of four houses containing 26 college-owned apartments," said Cole.

Cole indicated that accommodations are being made for those people whose residences are being demolished.

"Smith committed to replacing these units with similarly-priced housing, toward that end, Smith's building at 36 Bedford Terrace will be developed into permanent affordable housing." Residents were first given notice of the impending construction plans in January of 2004.

According to Cole, administrators feel that Smith needs these new buildings to promote women in majors involving science and engineering.

"Thirty percent of Smith students major in the sciences," Cole said. "Most of Smith's existing science facilities were built in the 1960's and Smith has insufficient space for its growing science program."

Cole also does not feel that clashes between Northampton residents and Smith College officials will have long-lasting, damaging effects on their relationship. She says Smith is a part of Northampton, and "the college and city have both grown around each other."

Smith also has a history in community involvement. Cole noted several programs that Smith has offered to the community. "The college is particularly proud to be involved in a host of outreach efforts in the community."

Smith student, K.T. Heir, a junior English major, disagrees with this assessment however, believing that Smith is damaging its relationship to the town by proceeding with the construction.

"It makes me really sad. The buildings there add so much to the school's atmosphere. Green St. has always seemed like a part of campus," Heir said, "Smith says it is doing this for the sake of its students, but a lot of us don't think it's a good idea."

Heir agrees that it is admirable that Smith is putting so many resources into its engineering and sciences program, but says, "I feel like we could build something within Smith's existing infrastructure."

Julie Xu, a junior East Asian Language and Culture and an Economics major agreed with this assessment.

"I have mixed views on this," Xu said. "I'm glad we have a women's engineering program and I know that we're one of the only women's schools that does but I still think things could be done differently."

Xu argues that the project will disturb the students who live on Green St. with the noise and inconvenience coming from the construction. She also feels that the community will lose something when it loses these residences and storefronts.

Other residents agree. According to the Coalition for Affordable Northampton Neighborhoods (CANN,) Web site, the area around Belmont Ave. and Green St. is "a unique mix of multi-unit residences, single-family dwellings, commercial space, and interspersed small-scale academic buildings. It provides an affordable place for a diversity of over two hundred residents... Storefronts along Green and West Streets offer business owners an affordable alternative to the escalating costs of downtown commercial space."

This project will not be the first of the college's to encroach on the neighborhood around Smith. According to the CANN website, "In the early 1920s, Smith College demolished eight houses along Moran Ave. (no longer existing) for the construction of Sage Hall and Scott Gymnasium. In the 1970s, Smith College closed two city streets (Green Avenue and Berenson Place a.k.a. Moran Avenue) and demolished an additional 12 houses...in order to construct the Mendenhall Arts Center. In 2000, Smith College demolished a residence at 50 West Street for the construction of Smith's parking garage. Two former houses on college-owned properties, 15 Arnold Avenue and 59 West Street, were demolished after separate fires and replaced with parking lots."

Remembering Franklyn

Hundreds gather to remember slain UMass student Franklyn Nwachukwu

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

More than 300 people packed into the Malcom X Center at the University of Massachusetts on Friday evening to celebrate the life of a slain student.

Franklyn Nwachukwu, 20, was shot to death on July 15 in the Hyde Park section of Boston. He was killed while two men tried to rob him of his chain necklace.

During the memorial's open floor session, an enormous amount of people, including Nwachukwu's close friends, acquaintances and faculty said they looked up to him. He was described as a student who was outgoing, did not drink alcohol or smoke, was religious, had long term goals to become a nurse and would go out of his way to help a stranger.

"I'm gonna think of him as another big brother," said one student who did not give his name. "Franklyn always used to let me stay at his place [when I had no place to go.]"

Nwachukwu worked as a Resident's Assistant in Washington dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area, which is how many of the people at the memorial first met him.

During the open floor, Shellian Smith, an Assistant Resident Director who worked with Nwachukwu, presented a large poster, which had a picture of him in the middle and messages of support to his family. Smith is having the poster sent to his family members, who could not attend Friday's service.

"It was kind of hard for me to take it down," Smith said. "There were a lot of wonderful messages."

Franklyn Nwachukwu

This photo of Franklyn Nwachukwu, the student slain in Boston over the summer, was displayed at his recent memorial at the Malcolm X Center.

"The last memory I had of Franklyn was food shopping," she said, as she described how Nwachukwu wanted to buy "crazy" items such as mangos to give to their residents.

Smith and others testified to the fact that Nwachukwu would often give people rides in his car.

"He took me anywhere because I didn't have a car," Smith said.

One of Nwachukwu's close friends explained how one day, without even asking, Nwachukwu phoned him from outside his dorm to say "I let's go, I'm gonna drive you [to class]" because he was going to be late turning in a paper.

"That's the kind of person Franklyn was," he said.

"Anyone who needed anything...he'd be there for them," said Nwachukwu's first roommate at UMass, Bob, as he choked back tears.

The memorial service lasted about four hours. More than half of the time was spent having an open floor discussion. Later into the service, the UMass gospel choir performed, before an emotional video tribute was presented.

Several people began sobbing as the tribute showed pictures of Nwachukwu hanging out with friends, dancing around and riding a bicycle.

After the video, many people wrote messages and gave money for Nwachukwu's family, which is still trying to pay his funeral expenses.

A candlelight vigil and a moment of silence were held, afterwards, at the basketball court in the Southwest Horseshoe. Navy blue ribbons and messages to Franklyn were tied to the basketball court's fence.

The mood in the memorial was not all somber. Many friends joked of Nwachukwu always trying to sell people things they didn't want, how he would always try to catch people off-guard and how he was "the best liar."

Drew, a good friend of Nwachukwu, told a story of how, one day, on a trip to the store, Nwachukwu told him that he was trying out to be a UMass cheerleader.

"I didn't believe him at all, but as the trip went on, and he kept saying [he was going to try out], I believed it more and more," Drew said to the crowd who was already bursting into laughter.

"I didn't believe him at all, but as the trip went on, and he kept saying [he was going to try out], I believed it more and more," Drew said to the crowd who was already bursting into laughter.

See FRANKLYN on page 4

UMass named 'Information Technology Showcase School'

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

The Microsoft Corporation officially designated the University of Massachusetts' flagship campus in Amherst as its first "Information Technology Showcase School" in the United States on Friday during the grand opening of the W.E.B. DuBois Library's Learning Commons.

The new partnership means Microsoft has provided UMass with $11 million in support of campus initiatives. Currently, Microsoft and campus officials have agreed to collaborate on five ongoing initiatives: The Information Technology Program, which is designed as a minor degree for students; The IT Curriculum Case Studies, which holds two courses in the Isenberg School of Management that teach students how to use the Microsoft ConferenceXP videoconferencing program; The Learning Commons at the DuBois Library, the new 25,000 square-foot study space that was dedicated on Friday; Women in Technology Initiative, which includes classes designed to help women into the technological sector, and the Center for Teaching, which is a technology learning center for students and faculty.

Two ceremonies were held at the DuBois Library on Friday morning. The first ceremony focused on the official announcement by Microsoft Chief Executive Officer Steve Ballmer at 7:45 a.m. The second ceremony featured ribbon-cutting and speeches from faculty, which began at 10 a.m.

Ballmer had to leave campus early to attend other engagements. He reportedly flew out of the campus by a helicopter, which was stationed behind the Mullins Center.

Ballmer explained that part of the reason UMass was the first university chosen as a showcase school was because of its growing emphasis on new technology in education.

"[Information Technology] is an important part of the transformative shape of all fields," said Ballmer, pointing out the growing Information Technology minor at UMass.

The university picked this particular day to announce Microsoft's decision, because Friday was the grand opening of the DuBois Library's new "Learning Commons."

The new center holds 165 new computers, some of which include oversized monitors, in addition to 58 workstations.

During the second ceremony, Chief Information Officer at UMass, John Dubach pointed out that the new Learning Commons will not be a quiet study area.

"This is a place that should be active... noisy," Dubach said. "People looking for quiet can go upstairs."

During the same speech, Dubach announced that the library will soon be open 24 hours a day on weekdays.

The Faculty Advisor to the Provost for Undergraduate Education at UMass, Richard Rogers, said he has been "waiting 20 years" for the Learning Commons to open, since he began working for the university. He thanked the help of Microsoft for making the plans come to life.

"This is a facility [that] no one entity

From left to right, UMass Amherst Chancellor John Lombardi, Director of Library Services Jo Sater, UMass President Jack Wilson, Microsoft C.E.O. Steve Ballmer, State Representative Ellen Story, Faculty Advisor to the Provost for Undergraduate Education Richard Rogers.

See MICROSOFT on page 3

Anti-expansion groups join, hold benefit

By Megan Daley
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – Two groups fighting against institutional expansion came together in a benefit rally Friday night to raise money and awareness for their cause.

The Coalition for Affordable Northampton Neighborhoods (CANN) – formed in response to Smith College's bid to expand its campus into land already occupied – was joined by a group of concerned citizens who oppose the proposed Wal-Mart Supercenter in Hadley.

The gathering was put together by Adam Frost, Karl Campbell and Shira Wolf, three Hadley residents who feel that both the Smith and Wal-Mart expansions are related enough that people fighting either expansion can sympathize with and support the other group.

Wolf, who graduated from Smith last year as an anthropology major is a member of CANN, while Frost is a retail worker and a member of the workers' union who feels that Wal-Mart's practices towards its workers should not be tolerated.

"I'm disgusted at how Smith is presenting this information to the community," said Laura Esmer, a Smith senior.

"Smith is setting this up to look like people who are against the new construction are against women in engineering and it's just not true."

CANN also feels that Smith is acting negligently of its responsibility as the landowner of the space on which they wish to build the new development.

According to the CANN website, "While Smith College has rights as property owners, their unique status as an educational and cultural institution within the city of Northampton gives them clear responsibilities as well.

"As an educational institution, the college is exempt from local zoning guidelines which gives them extraordinary privileges. By pursuing a project that destroys a Northampton neighborhood and is narrowly focused on the needs of the college exclusively they are not exercising their privilege responsibly," read the statement.

One Smith student, a junior Latin American studies major, who goes by the name of "Berg," says she has participated in CANN for three years, since close to its inception. Berg says she joined CANN because she felt the the projected demolition was "problematic" and "irresponsible."

Emma Mallon, a junior History major at Smith said the college calls itself a "private institution with a public conscience," and that she felt Smith was not living up to this ideal.

Also at the meeting was Andy Morris-Freidman, who has been a leading opponent to the Wal-Mart Supercenter. He most specifically opposes the proposed gas station at the Wal-Mart because of its proximity to the Rail Trail, a local biking path.

Morris-Freidman calls the gas station "a disaster waiting to happen." He pointed out that the underground gas tanks would be placed right above the aquifer, inviting water contamination if the tank leaks.

"The only way to make sure it doesn't happen is never to build [the tanks]."

Morris-Freidman also worries about the additional traffic that the Wal-Mart will bring, and about the storm water runoff from the expanded Wal-Mart parking lot that could potentially flood the Rail Trail.

"There are so many reasons why Wal-Mart is bad for America," said Morris-Freidman, "The most important thing is to focus on why this Wal-Mart will be bad for Hadley."

Northampton resident, Marie Despres said she was attending the meeting as a concerned citizen. "I decided to come here because I like the community. I live in and I thought that this would be a good way to keep the community in which I live the way I like it."

Some other attendees of the meeting were Steve Doddley, a member of MLCIO, an umbrella organization of unions across the nation, and Dan Clifford, a member of the local chapter of Jobs for Justice, a pro-union organization which has protested Wal-Mart before.

Doddley, in the night's spirit of bringing people together for a common cause, is in the process of making a Web site, mass walmart-voices.com, designed for people to network and communicate about their own Wal-Mart problems.

ARTS & LIVING
'STAY' SURPRISES VIEWERS
Unlike many other puzzle movies, 'Stay' keeps viewers interested in the mysteries it presents.
PAGE 6

EDITORIAL/OPINION
POWER OF WORDS
With all the words in the English language, why are we still so limited?
PAGE 5

WEATHER
TODAY Mostly Cloudy, 115°
TONIGHT PM Showers, 143
TOMORROW Rain, 1148 : 136

SPORTS
HUNTED
UMass football took down the Maine Black Bears, 35-14, on Saturday.
PAGE 14

Mark Stolze:
Early Riser
Rookie Surfer
Professional Rocker*
Is Welcome Here

Your life. You can bring it with you. Learn more about Mark and tell us more about you visit pwc.com/bringit

*connectedthinking

PricewaterhouseCoopers

© 2005 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a limited liability partnership in the United States), other member firms of PricewaterhouseCoopers International Limited, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. Equal opportunity employer. An Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Microsoft C.E.O. visits new 'Learning Commons'

MICROSOFT from page 1

could build, but with a collaboration," Rogers said.

Dubach said one of the main functions of the Learning Commons is to help students filter through material to find relevant information to their studies.

"It's my concern that the students of today can sort through what's relevant," he said, explaining that while researching a subject recently, he found "12.2 million options" on Google.com.

"We need these librarians to help students figure out what's relevant and what's not relevant," he said.

"The students deserve [Learning Commons,]" said Jay Schafer, Director of Libraries at UMass.

Ballmer recognized some of the strides the University has made in order to incorporate technology and education.

"The OWL (Online Web-based Learning) thing you guys have done here is absolutely first class," Ballmer said. OWL is an online homework program that many UMass professors use in their classes.

As Ballmer gave his announcement, he was being simulcast via Videophone to people in Ireland, Washington, D.C. and Seattle.

"This is just happy times for us," said UMass Provost Charlena Seymour, who UMass Chancellor John Lombardi called the "Godmother of this project."

The grand opening and major announcement did not happen without any protest, however. Members of the UMass Linux group attended the 10 a.m. event, two in full costume, to protest the Microsoft and UMass partnership.

Unfortunately for the protestors, they missed the premiere event featuring Ballmer.

"We thought he was gonna be here at 10!" said Doug Ramstel, teaching advisor of Linux.

Ramstel and Linux President Kristian Hermansen dressed in giant penguin costumes in an attempt to draw attention to their cause.

"They're a monopolist company," said Ramstel of Microsoft.

"We think Microsoft is trying to build an alliance with the Massachusetts government," Hermansen said.

Microsoft Chief Executive Steve Ballmer addresses the crowd at the grand opening of the "Learning Commons," announcing Microsoft's decision to make UMass its 'Showcase School.'

Volunteers raise funds at 'Shelter Sunday'

By Christina Baron
Collegian Staff

About 300 University of Massachusetts student volunteers and others have raised at least $15, 677 for local charities in a door-to-door campaign in Amherst and neighboring areas.

For the 17th annual Shelter Sunday, volunteers met on Amherst Common and then went door-to-door asking for donations to aid the area's hungry and homeless. The donations will go to four local charities, Not Bread Alone, The Amherst Survival Center, The Grove Street Inn, and The Interfaith Cot Shelter.

Aaron Bousel, president of the Amherst Friends for the Homeless, the parent organization of Shelter Sunday, said he expects that this year will be just as successful as last year, when the organization collected over $25,000 for local charities.

Bousel said that the organization is still waiting to receive the remittance envelopes, which are left at homes where no one answers the door, before tallying the fundraiser's total.

"Though we never know what will come in over the next few weeks, what we have so far is approximately where we were at this time last year, so we feel that we've been successful in our efforts," said Bousel.

"We really appreciate the effort of UMass students," said Bousel. "Everyone was able to get out and do some good canvassing," he said.

Most of the canvassing groups are made up of UMass students from the Boltwood Project and UMass fraternities and sororities, said Tom Plaut, a board member of the Amherst Friends for the Homeless who recruits volunteers.

Shelter Sunday was started by a group at the Unitarian Church when funding was needed to start their own shelter. While the actual shelter was open for just a few years, the fundraising effort was so effective that church officials decided to continue it and distribute the money to local organizations that helped the homeless and those in need, said Bousel.

Students have mixed reactions to recent fraternity suspensions

By Melissa Blankstein
Collegian Staff

Many University of Massachusetts students are voicing their opposition with the recent decision to suspend two fraternities involved in a stabbing incident that occurred on Oct. 2.

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life, Michael Gargano issued letters of suspension Thursday for the fraternities Zeta Beta Tau and Pi Delta Psi. The suspension means that the two fraternities must cease operations and are no longer recognized by the University.

"I can understand [the suspension] from the administration's point of view," said Long Tran, president of Pi Delta Psi. "I am a little upset because I think it was unfounded."

Tran has talked with university officials to schedule a hearing because he knows that none of the members of Pi Delta Psi were involved. "Hopefully at the hearing, they will hear our side and decide that they are wrong," Tran said.

Other students at the university agreed.

"If they are already victims, then why are they getting suspended?" Mike Nelson, a senior civil engineering major asked. "I just believe to deal with it on an individual basis [instead of suspending the fraternity.]"

"If it wasn't their guests, if it wasn't their younger cousins or whatever, then they shouldn't get suspended," said Shardei Vega, a pre-nursing sophomore. "You can't really stop people from getting into a party."

Some students believe that Gargano has acted too quickly against the fraternities since Amherst Police had turned over part of the investigation to UMass earlier last week.

"It seems like he [Gargano] is trying to eliminate fraternities and sororities in this school," said Zack Gordon, a sophomore hospitality and tourism management major. "Whatever he wants, he gets. It's just going to get worse and worse."

Some students, however, do not think that the fraternities are completely blameless.

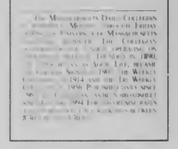
"I am not a terribly big fan of 'frat' parties," said Dane Scantling, a sophomore pre-med major. "I don't think it's their fault, but they obviously have problems."

"People could be lying," Rose Moriarty, a junior nursing major said. "That behavior right there makes all those stereotypes come true."

"I think it's too much testosterone," said Dana Carbone, a junior nursing major said.

The suspensions, however, have not changed many students views of the parties on "frat row."

"It doesn't change anything," Vega said when asked if she felt safer going to the parties.



Comments from the Interfraternity Council and Office of Fraternities and Sororities were unavailable by press time.

Six men were injured in the incident, including five students. Amherst Police have arrested two minors in relation to the case and are still investigating.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael A. Busack
Managing Editor Cameron J. Woods
Business Manager Hirak Shah
Production Manager Nicholas Belanger
Night Supervisor Sherel Wolnik
Advertising Manager Kerry O'Grady
Advertising Production Lauren Egozian
Editorial Production Amanda Allen
Arts & Living Editor Matthew O'Rourke
Comics Editor Amanda Allen
Editorial Editor Allison Edles
News Editor Dan O'Brien
Photo Editor Kate Sachsenmaier
Sports Editor Jeff Howe
Circulation Manager Thomas Hecht
Distribution Manager Nick Gleason
Finance Manager Daniel Conti
Human Resource Phil Smeller
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Caren Tortorici
Assistant Business Nathan Chomsky
Asst. Arts & Living Mackenzie Isler
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Jones
Assistant News Megan Dales
Assistant News Matt Belliveau
Assistant Photo Elizabeth Caristi
Assistant Sports Eric Athas
Assistant Sports Dan Duggan
Assistant Editorial Kristen LaCasse

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Michael A. Busack
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Kate Sachsenmaier
COPY EDITOR
Dan O'Brien
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Melody Natal
PRODUCTION STAFF
Irving Mercado, Jacqueline Ronan

Open Flu Shot Clinic 2005

ALL UMASS STUDENTS, STAFF AND FACULTY ARE WELCOME

UNIVERSITY HEALTH SERVICES IS OFFERING AN OPEN

CAMPUS FLU CLINIC

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 26
10 A.M. to 6 P.M.

AT THE CAMPUS CENTER
ROOM 168C

COST: $15.00

University of Massachusetts Amherst
University Health Services
577-5000 • www.umass.edu/uhs

The Graduate College of Union University at Union College
Masters in Business Administration (MBA)

MBA Graduates, Class of 2004 and 2005

Why Our Masters in Business Administration
World class AACSB accreditation • Small classes and accessible faculty
Career building internships • Located on the beautiful Union College campus
Impressive career placement rates

Look for our table at the Graduate & Professional Fair at UMass on October 26, 2005

The Graduate College of Union University
Lamont House 807 Union Street
Schenectady, NY 12308
Phone: 518.388.6148 Fax: 518.388.6686
Email: info@gcem.edu

Dodge ball tournament raises Katrina relief funds

By Jamie Mason
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A dodge ball tournament hosted at the Southwest Horseshoe by MASSPIRG raised $792.66 for the Oxfam America Hurricane Relief fund on Saturday.

Oxfam America is a Boston-based international development and relief agency and an affiliate of Oxfam International.

The winner of the coed bracket was the team, "Shenanigans," with students, Jenny Larrison, Eric McCoy, Melissa Partington, Mike Marturana, Tom Ducey, and Amanda Degan.

The winner of the men's bracket was the team, "Hungover," with students, Gordon Adams, Michael Kuchneski, Ryan James, Jeffrey Hamer, Christopher Cotton, and Andrew Peppone.

There were no teams participating for the women's only bracket, but 11 teams overall played in the double elimination tournament.

"This event went really well given the weather and that it was Parents' Weekend," said Kate Gilbert, MASSPIRG organizer for UMass. "I think this showed that people at UMass really care about making a difference and about dodge ball. This was a fun community service activity, which drew more people than would have come otherwise."

Akil Williams, a junior who is on the MASSPIRG Hurricane Katrina Relief committee, helped organize the event.

"This turned out better than I thought it was going to; everyone is enthusiastic and playing high energy games, and is into the cause," Williams said.

Williams was also a member of the MASSPIRG dodge ball team, which lost both games that it played.

"We had a great time, that's all that matters," he said.

Michael Todd, an Interfraternity counselor, was one of the referees for the event, which was marketed as being an event where UMass' registered student organizations came together.

"Greek life is a large part of this campus and we wanted to help out. We assisted in reserving the place and helped with other logistics. We paid for the dodge balls and for the place," Todd said.

"We got the idea from other MASSPIRG chapters who were playing dodge ball; it seemed like a good idea and a fun way to raise money," said Arianne Macy, a senior and member of the MASSPIRG Hurricane Relief Committee.

Jace Chaffee, a sophomore on the "Steel Balls," team said it was fun to make jerseys and play a competitive sport.

"Some people took it a little too seriously and were getting in fights with the referee...but it is a game of dodge ball, essentially for charity."

George Kennedy, a junior from the "Gorgeous George and the Pikeys" team said, "I played today to give money for Katrina and I wanted to win for the glory of dodge ball."

Amanda Degan, a member of one of the winning teams, "Shenanigans," said she was participating in the event because "this was for a good cause and we thought it would be fun."

Adam Szigjin, a sophomore player from the "Steel Balls" team said, "The money is going to a great cause. Dodge ball is a great game because there is not one trait that makes a great dodge ball player. All teams have the opportunity to win."

The tournament cost $75 per team and $12 per person. It cost $15 for people who registered the day of the tournament. There was also a $2 suggested donation for spectators.

The winners' prizes were donated from Bueno Y Sano, Chili's, Loose Goose Café, Henion Bakery, Mystery Train, Glamourpuss, and Turn it up.

JAMIE MASON/COLLEGIAN

Students play dodge ball at the Southwest Horseshoe. This event was organized by MASSPIRG to raise money for Katrina relief efforts.

RSOs' concerns prompt reopening

By Ryan Richardson
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center/Student Union Commission, which is responsible for addressing student concerns about the allocation of space in those two buildings, was reopened by the Graduate Student Senate and Student Government Association on Oct. 11.

The commission was dissolved in 2003, but leadership in the SGA and GSS have come together to reinstate it to alleviate the Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) concerns over the lack of space for those groups.

"There have been several RSOs that have voiced a growing concern about space this semester and we think that the commission will serve as a resource for students having these difficulties," said Pavel Payano, President of the SGA.

Many RSOs have been shuffled around during the semester because of concerns over space. One recent example of this was the Ballroom Dance Club, which was relocated from a room in the Totman building to the lobby of the Fine Arts Center. Many other organizations on campus have had trouble scheduling meetings and getting access to rooms during the semester.

"As there is a finite amount of space for students on the campus and a growing need for this space, it is more important than ever for student voices to be heard on this issue," said Uris Strauss, GSS President.

The commission was created in a joint act between the SGA and the Board of Governors, now known as the GSS, in 1971. Until 1993, the commission was known as the Board of Governors.

The commission was originally composed of appointed employees, including: nine undergraduates appointed by the SGA, five graduate students appointed by the GSS, two undergraduates appointed by the Department of The Hospitality and Tourism Management (HRTA) and two undergraduates appointed by the Dean of the School of Management. It was dissolved by a motion put forth by former SGA President David Carr in April of 2002, without consultation from the GSS.

"Both Uri Strauss and I are looking forward to a strong year of collaboration," Payano said

The commission will be made up of both graduate and undergraduate students who will be responsible for monitoring the Student Union and Campus Center to make sure that the student body's opinion is heard by the Campus Center Events Office, the administrative body that oversees the space.

RSOs have had more than space problems this semester. The Center for Student Development has caused a great deal of controversy amongst members of various student organizations. The reassignment of RSO advisers has also added to a sense of discontent.

Michael Gargano, the vice-chancellor for Student Affairs, has expressed a desire to see an increased number of RSOs on the campus, which might worsen the problem of finding meeting space on campus.

Students remember classmate

FRANKLYN from page 1

"Three weeks later, I made the team, and I asked Franklyn about it... He said 'Oh, I was just lying.'" Drew told the amused audience.

When the memorial first began at 4 p.m., about 50 people showed up, but by 7 p.m., there were well over 300 people in attendance.

A man who said he didn't know Nwachukwu personally, but would often bump into him around the dorm, explained how Franklyn used to carry his laptop around the building and play music to get laughs.

"He was the coolest guy ever," he said.

According to Boston police and family members who spoke to the Daily Collegian, Nwachukwu was leaving a friend's house at 22 Lewiston St. in Hyde Park around 10 p.m. on July 15 when he was shot once in the abdomen. He was treated at the scene by emergency medical technicians, but was later pronounced dead at Brigham and Women's Hospital.

Police have not made any arrests in Nwachukwu's homicide.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL OPINION
MONDAY, OCTOBER 24, 2005
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

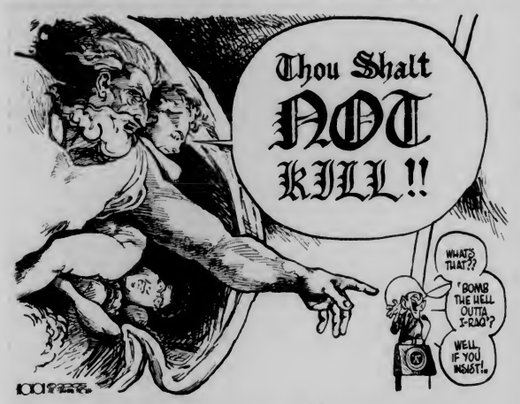
The power of words used wisely

Chris Eckel

Americans tend to not use language very well and this is a big issue. In particular, we don't apply words correctly, and that obfuscates the meaning of our writing. Consider the last time you were at the bars or at a big party. I'm willing to bet my half-used stick of Old Spice that you heard someone say something like "History 111 is wicked gay, the professor gives way too much work." It's a pretty common expression, after all.

But wait a second here. I'm no professor of semantics, but to be gay, wouldn't History 111 need to either have feelings for or be hooking up with other classes of the same sex? I mean, sure, History 111 has been winking at Chemistry 452 a lot lately, but I think that's just a nervous twitch, not a flirty thing.

So why use the word "gay" to describe something that clearly is not? Regardless of the etymology of the word "gay," which informs us that the original meaning of the word was "happy," people have twisted the word into a commonplace term for expressing anger or hostility. I'm not going to get into the underlying psychological theories about people who use words in a homophobic manner, because that's another column, but it's clear that we as a society are egregiously misapplying the word. In the last few years, I've only used the word "gay" a few times, and it's always in reference to Randall Gay, a cornerback for the New England Patriots. God, do we need that guy back in the starting lineup.



Seriously, folks, it's estimated that there are about 200,000 words in the English language in common use today. Of those, the average educated person uses about 20,000 different words per week. If there were 20,000 different women uptown each week, most of us guys would feel pretty good about mixing it up, right? We wouldn't keep hitting on the same two or three women all the time, would we? And yet, people keep going back to "gay" as a term to express disdain for things or people. It's astonishing to me that most people know how to say hello in at least four languages, but can't think of another insulting term other than "gay."

Seriously, folks, it's estimated that there are about 200,000 words in the English language in common use today. Of those, the average educated person uses about 20,000 different words per week. If there were 20,000 different women uptown each week, most of us guys would feel pretty good about mixing it up, right?

The problem doesn't stop there. Think of all the words or phrases you use every day that are being misapplied. At that same party, someone might have been passing a bong around, and, having been pleased with the product, mutters: "That's some good shit man." Oh yeah? You just smoked feces? I'm no D.A.R.E. cop, but if people nowadays are actually smoking something that belongs in a toilet or in a manure truck, then I am definitely glad to not be at those parties.

It is a reasonable assumption on my behalf to think that each and every one of us says or writes things they don't quite mean. Some of us can get away with it, and some of us, like those whose words are trapped in print, cannot. But even if the only writing you do is passing notes in class, never forget, the power of words is immense. We are a culture that holds the word as sacrosanct, whether it is the couplets of Shakespeare, the newest rhyme from 50 or the monologue from a John Cusack movie. Just because 10 million people aren't going to hear what you said, don't make the mistake of thinking your words don't matter enough to be correctly used. The aphorism "Sticks and stones may break my bones, but words will never hurt me," is a pile of something that is apparently getting smoked all over the Happy Valley. Words can hurt, and words can heal, and words can do everything in between. Use them wisely, use them well, use them as they are meant to be used and use them only if you truly mean them.

Chris Eckel is a Collegian columnist.

What a tangled web they weave

Matthew Giancola

Washington, D.C. resembles a high school more and more these days. Everyone is gossiping about the biggest story to hit town since the President botched Hurricane relief efforts no less than two months ago. That story of course is the Valerie Plame outing and its possible cover up. Conspiracy theories abound, and everyone is wondering just who Special Prosecutor Patrick Fitzgerald will indict. Will it be Karl Rove, Cheney's Chief of Staff, "Scooter" Libby, or will the indictments go higher, to the vice president himself?

At this point, everything is speculation. Already, this investigation has gone on longer than the Watergate affair, and we all know how that one turned out. Scandals within government are as commonplace as the rising of the sun, but this one is different. What started out as a simple investigation to discover the source of a leak has turned into a full blown dissection of the motives of the current administration. Iraq, loyalty, Weapons of Mass Destruction, lies, all are under the microscope here.

The problems for the administration began in 2003, when the conservative columnist Robert Novak wrote an article naming a covert CIA agent. Patrick Fitzgerald was assigned to ascertain whether or not any government official broke the law in leaking her name. Her name was not leaked for naively benign reasons, however. There was a reason that her name in particular was publicized. Her husband, Joe Wilson, was the man appointed by various executive agencies to discover whether Iraq was trying to acquire uranium from Niger. When the president declared in his State of the Union speech that there were, Wilson wrote an editorial contradicting his statement. Needless to say, the administration was not happy. As retribution, Wilson's wife's covert position within the government was publicized; which is against the law.

Fitzgerald has interviewed many members of the administration, from Chief of Staff Andrew Card to the vice president's Deputy National Security Adviser, John Hannah. Two reporters, Matt Cooper and Judith Miller were held in contempt when they refused to disclose who their sources were. Miller spent 85 days in jail, before agreeing to testify. When she finally spoke to the lawyers, the investigation really picked up steam.

The speculation and rumor raging in the capital these days is stunning, even for Washington's standards.

Libby was Miller's source, however she had refused to testify because she did not want to implicate Libby in any wrongdoing. She is now claiming difficulty in remembering just who she talked to. Huh? Libby is the one that wrote to her while she was in jail saying that it was alright for her to name him. The story gets stranger and stranger by the day.

The speculation and rumor raging in the capital these days is stunning, even for Washington's standards. Some voices from within the White House say that Vice President Cheney will resign with Secretary Rice being named the new vice president. Others say that the president will pardon all parties involved, putting a screeching halt to the case. And then there are those who believe the probe will end with no indictments being issued; Fitzgerald having found no illegal activity.

The signs don't point to a simple closing of the inquiry, though. Rove has testified four times before the grand jury, and it is widely believed that he may have periured himself or revealed some new information about the nature of Libby's dealings with reporters. While the 1982 law banning the outing of a covert operative carries a stiff penalty, it is fairly hard to prove. Ironically, obstruction of justice carries a harsher penalty.

Obstruction of justice is defined as deliberately keeping investigators from becoming aware of any illegal activity. It can range from attacking a witness to lying or withholding crucial facts from an investigation. With all the memory lapses and contradicting stories, it looks very likely that one or more individuals will be indicted this week.

New York Daily News reporter, Thomas DeFrank wrote last week that as early as 2003, President Bush angrily reprimanded Rove for his involvement in the case. A presidential counselor told DeFrank that Bush made "[Rove's] life miserable about this." But the president has stated publicly that he would fire anyone who was involved in outing Valerie [Plame] Wilson. He has since changed his stance, declaring anyone who was criminally involved would no longer work at the White House. One wonders, assuming DeFrank's account is true, just how much the president really knows.

Within the last week, Fitzgerald has set up a Web site with information about the probe. This is not the act of a prosecutor winding down a case with no leads. The grand jury expires on Oct. 28, but the trouble for the White House may just be beginning. The administration is spinning their webs, trying everything to get out of this scandal. Unfortunately, they are stuck in plain sight, with nowhere to hide.

Matthew Giancola is a Collegian columnist.

Prophecies of a college student

Allison Edles

I've decided, after a lot of thought that I want to be a prophet. I mean, rather than waiting for the Messiah to come, I say we speed it up. Hell, we live in the age of impatience anyway. We have cell phones that allow us to check our e-mail every 10 seconds in case we should miss something really important and wouldn't respond the second we receive it. So rather than waiting, as we all hate to do, I am going to solve that problem right now.

However, my prophecies will be slightly different, in accordance to the dictations and expectations of society. It does not concern me, nor should it concern many people right now, to know when exactly the world will end, as prophecies were inclined to focus on in biblical times. I think my style would be more similar to that of the Greek oracle at Delphi, except without that whole bribing thing.

There's a drastic change in subject matter that we deal with today. We live in a, to an extent, superstitious society. How many times have you made a wish on a floating dandelion or after you picked an eye lash off of someone's eye? There are plenty of hidden prophets within our culture that we take for granted. They're everywhere; we just don't term them as such.

Well, rather than waiting for the occasional eye lash, I'll be right here, like the kissing booth at the carnival, answering questions that occur to you as you walk by and realize "Hey, dude ... there's a prophet over there." I figure if a dandelion can do it, how hard can it actually be?

I only bring this up because it seems like it would just be another thing to be entertained by (and perhaps looked forward to). It's not much, and it's something that would make you laugh for the 10 second break between when the song you're listening to ends and when you decide to convince yourself to get back to work. Questions such as "Will it rain so hard that I won't have to play in this dodgeball game?" will be answered with the expected "How hard do you consider hard?" reply. After all, 90 percent of all expected responses from prophets are just that, expected. I'll be part of an illustrious service that provides all the details you want with none of the actual specifics. And I'm taking this method straight from the source.

How many times have you made a wish on a floating dandelion or after you picked an eye lash off of someone's eye? There are plenty of hidden prophets within our culture that we take for granted. They're everywhere; we just don't term them as such.

We all operate on the notion of uncertainty surrounding what we should know and what we shouldn't. Is it better to know how something's are going to turn out or if something interesting will happen along the way? The vagueness is where it's all at. That's why Miss Cleo had such a following and why horoscopes are so popular. As long as people are making a profit off of making things up, why can't we get the jollies for free? After all, we've become very good at getting things for free that other people have paid for. Does the whole Napster thing ring any bells?

Prophetical statements of wisdom, similar to those found inside fortune cookies, are perfectly able of being mass produced, especially when the term "in bed" added to the end of each makes them that much more interesting to receive. With all the different mediums we get our advice and helpful hints in, it seems the prophecy business is the new hot tip. Keeping this theme going, there is no reason to doubt that the prophecy franchise, and eventually a conglomerate, are out of reach.

Magic eight balls, tarot cards and even that stupid MASH game we all used to play as kids serve to show just how popular trying to find out the unknown is. However, I like to think my answers would be slightly more interesting since they would not be rotating from four or five routine choices. The established market and demand are factors enough for me.

And for payment for my lovely services? The confused and/or bewildered expressions are good enough for me. However, I hardly believe the gratification and appreciation the ancient Greeks received from the oracle at Delphi would be on the same level as that which I would receive. But in the end, it's all about the responses and the reactions, both from other people and myself. It's just another thing to do; another thing to try. And in the end, if it all fails miserably, at least I know that I saw it coming.

Allison Edles is a Collegian editor.

The lines that define us

Ben Duffy

I remember reading Leonard Pitts's May 31 column in my local newspaper. Pitts is a Pulitzer Prize winning syndicated columnist operating out of Miami.

"For Americans abroad, Warsaw feels like home away from home" was the title of his column, and it caught my eye on the opinion page because I was planning to visit Poland myself. Pitts returned from a trip to Poland stunned with the amount of American pop culture that he had seen there. "Welcome to the United States of Poland. At least, that's the way it feels sometimes, what with all the Pizza Huts, McDonalds, Mars bars, J.Lo, Levis and billboards of American pop icons like Iverson and rapper 50 Cent," he writes.

Pitts has a point. I spent five days in Poland last week, and I can attest that capitalism has definitely come to Poland. It's the invasion of the golden arches and Nike swooshes. Polish kids are raised on MTV, just like American kids. In a Warsaw nightclub I met a young Polish guy in a U.S. Army coat, a white bandana across his forehead, gold chains dangling from his neck and a giant New York Yankees logo on his shirt. He was a self-described "gangsta." When he found out that I was American, he chewed my ear off. Not that I didn't want to talk to the guy, but he seemed to have only one subject on his mind: rap music. Sorry, I'm not a fan, but it was nice to finally meet a real Polish "gangsta."

In the world we live in, different cultures are melting together, to the point where each country starts to look like the next. Blame improved communication and transportation, but the lines that define us are getting blurrier.

Capitalism can be tacky, there's no doubt about that. Sometimes, I wonder if Dunkin Donuts could possibly jam one more franchise into the already saturated New England market. Somehow, they always find a way.

"Still, I wish Poland looked more like Poland," writes Pitts. I can understand that. Sometimes our country resembles the "cultural steamroller" that Jacques Chrirac once called it. I respect the Polish people, and I hope that their culture survives for years to come. Poland should remain Polish, just the same way that England should remain English, and Switzerland should remain Swiss.

But "McWorld," as Pitts termed it, is not the only culprit. There is another global force that threatens the native cultures of our planet: multiculturalism. But don't expect Leonard Pitts, or any other columnist to write about the swath of cultural destruction that multiculturalism has cut through Europe and other western nations. It's taboo. Bemoaning the loss of national identity to the forces of capitalism is okay. Bemoaning the loss of national identity to the forces of multiculturalism is not.

There was a time when all of the nations of Western Europe had very distinct cultures. England had its tea and crumpets, France had its wine and baguette. Maybe that hasn't disappeared completely, but it seems like both of these countries are becoming a hodgepodge of other countries. "Do they understand that they are selling their uniqueness for the price of an MTV video?" Pitts writes about the Polish. Actually, we're all selling our uniqueness, for one thing or another and it's a shame.

In September, I took part in an intensive German class with students from all over the western (and westernized) world. One of the class assignments was to give a presentation, in German, about our countries. Some of the students seemed to have a problem explaining their cultures to the class, due to the fact they couldn't really define them themselves. A Canadian could only explain his Canadian culture in one way: it's definitely not like America. "Our culture consists of other cultures," he explained. In fact that's increasingly the case. Will the many cultures of the world continue to exist if all cultures consist of other cultures?

I challenge you to find a traditional German restaurant in the heart of Berlin. I tried it once, and I spent nearly an hour looking for a real German restaurant. I found every other type of cuisine on the planet earth, but I couldn't find a schnitzel to save my life. Eventually, I got smart and got off the beaten path.

Actually, "McWorld" and multiculturalism are two sides of the same coin. In the world we live in, different cultures are melting together, to the point where each country starts to look like the next. Blame improved communication and transportation, but the lines that define us are getting blurrier. Things cross borders with amazing ease.

Other countries worry me more than Poland. Poland seems like it still has its culture pretty much intact, despite the Big Macs. Let's look at Holland, France, Germany, Switzerland and the U.K. Current population projections indicate that none of these countries will have a majority of natives at the end of this century. In other words, the Dutch will be a minority in Holland, the French will be a minority in France and so forth. France will probably pass this mark sometime around 2040, with the others shortly thereafter. Holland's three largest cities are projected to have non-Dutch majorities sometime between 2010 and 2015. In present day Berlin, German children are a minority in some schools. They are almost nonexistent in the Frankfurt school system.

Just the same way that Leonard Pitts wishes Poland looked more like Poland, I wish that Germany looked more like Germany. But that's something you don't say in polite company. Let me be the first to break the silence.

Ben Duffy is a World Perspectives columnist. He is currently on exchange in Germany.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, OCTOBER 24, 2005

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Stay' offers compelling puzzles

"Stay"

Directed by Marc Foster

Starring Ewan McGregor Ryan Golsing Kate Burton

20th Century Fox

Rated R

99 mins.

Grade A-

BY JAKE MONTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"Stay," directed by Marc Forster, who directed "Monsters Ball" and "Finding Neverland," is a film that has the courage to keep its audience confused as to exactly what is going on for almost the entire picture, so as to remain mysterious. Very few films attempt to keep the audience guessing for long. Still, in order to hold our attention, there have to be some consistent elements, and there are.

In "Stay," it's Sam, played by Ewan McGregor, a psychiatrist who must unravel the confused mind of a patient of his who plans to commit suicide on his twenty-first birthday, three days away. The patient, Henry, played by Ryan Gosling, can predict the future, and is troubled primarily by a fire he torched that we're told had his parents in it. Naomi Watts, who plays Lila, Sam's girlfriend, tells Sam that Henry's favorite artist killed himself on his twenty-first birthday after burning all his paintings and declaring that a good suicide is the ultimate art. From Sam must figure out how to prevent Henry's suicide and in so doing gets pulled into a world that makes less and less sense as the film progresses.

For instance, Lila calls Sam by accident. Then, he witnesses a group of men moving a piano across a street, talk to a young girl, and sees the same event the next day. It gets even more puzzling when Henry discusses the man Sam plays chess with, played by Bob Hoskins, is his father who he thought was killed in the explosion of the car. Then Sam meets family members of Henry's family who should be dead.

In order to properly explain "Stay," director Marc Forster must call to your attention the films of a certain type that are unsuccessful attempts at puzzle movies that leave us confused and unsatisfied. "Stay" made me think of "Lost Highway," for instance, which is a "puzzle movie" that was far too ambiguous in meaning to be interesting and lacked any consistent elements that would keep us involved in the story. It seems films of this type walk a thin line between being engrossing and delivering with a sufficient pay-off, versus those that don't.

In order to really enjoy "Stay," you have to have some patience and faith. The film is slow and you must allow it to draw you into its world. Furthermore, you must give the film the benefit of the doubt that it is going to deliver with an explanation that is satisfactory. For me, this was one of the most captivating films I've seen in a very long time. The ending is a decent answer to the film's questions. Not every bit of the mystery of the film is explained to us, but looking back, I came up with theories about levels of profundity to the script.

The acting is flawless. To watch Gosling, McGregor, Watts and Hoskins in this enigma of a plot is totally engrossing. Gosling proves his versatility after appearing to be playing himself in "The Notebook." He's so disturbed and creepy here, it's clear that he can play a wide range of characters. McGregor is wonderful too, having thoroughly understood the nuances of the way a psychiatrist handles himself with his patients and friends. At one point Watts says to him, "You sound like you're talking to one of your patients."

"Lost Highway" was a textbook example of how not the make a film like this and by comparison proves just how good "Stay" really is. "Stay" communicates so much depth and intelligence you'll find yourself thinking about it and wanting to discuss it with friends long after it's over. This is a film where every choice was carefully thought through, and asks us to do the same. If you're happy to do so, then you'll enjoy the film as much as I did.

The real horrors lurking in 'The Fog' are weak story and acting

BY JEFFREY HOROWITZ
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"The Fog" lurks behind Maggie Grace of ABC's "Lost," who discovers the murderous ways of her forefathers.

"The Fog"

Directed by Rupert Wainwright

Starring Tom Welling Maggie Grace

Columbia Pictures

Rated PG-13

100 mins.

Grade D-

Hasn't I've never crossed anyone's mind to take a second look at a movie like this horror film with a budget, opening as the #1 movie of the week's release, starring actors borrowed from the WB and opening in the month of October as the new Cameron Crowe film and the newest Keira Knightley movie. It doesn't stand a chance.

You need to predict the number one movie's weekend's profits, your prediction probably would have put "The Fog" at the top and Halloween right behind it. It would be quite surprising to see if "The Fog" is even in the top five, let alone the number one. But it boggled the mind of anyone who recently experienced with predicting such numbers and came to the number one. This means that the majority of filmgoers on Friday and Saturday nights, predominantly young people adults between the ages of fourteen and twenty-eight, chose this. They chose to watch a corny, WB-level horror movie over watching Keira Knightly in "Domino" or Kirsten Dunst in "Elizabethtown." Why? What happened?

How did anyone even hear about this? It got no press, it was not screened for critics, it had no major stars and it's a corny horror movie. Ah, but I may have just answered my own question. It's a corny horror movie. Horror movies are well known to attract young audiences over any other type of genre. But "The Fog?" Who'd have thought?

Maybe, since we are so close to Halloween, kids will jump at whatever horror movie is within reach. Next week "Saw II" will top the charts at number one over the new Nicolas Cage movie and the new Meryl Streep movie, and the newest "Zorro" doesn't stand a chance. Despite the fact that the original "Saw" was one of the worst movies of last year, it would be surprising if the sequel didn't top the charts, much like the mind-shakingly awful horror film "The Fog."

The movie contains supernatural fog, constructed with the fakest looking special effects seen this year. The fog engulfs a town and starts killing people. "There's something in the fog," someone screams. Yes, that would be the pirate ghost. Oh, yes, the pirate ghost. You see, what really lurks in the fog is a pathetic story. About a hundred years ago some men sold their land to some pirates with leprosy.

See FOG on page 7

'The Fog' disappoints with horror movie clichés and pirate ghosts

FOG from page 6

However, instead of upholding their part of the deal, the four men took twice the money they were promised, locked the pirates and their wives inside the ship and burnt it down. Then they went back to the land and built their town twice as big. In present day they are hailed as the visionaries that created this town. Little does anyone know the forefathers were murderers.

A hundred years to the day after the leprous pirates were swindled of their land and money, their ghosts come back to kill the descendents and reveal the truth.

Maggie Grace, from the TV series "Lost," plays Elizabeth, the descendent that learns of her forefathers' murderous ways. Tom Welling, who plays Superman and Clark Kent on "Smallville," plays Nick, a fisherman who runs after his girlfriend in numerous scenes and yells "Elizabeth!" and "there's something in the fog!"

Selma Blair plays Stevie, a radio DJ too raspy and unenthusiastic for radio, but pretty enough for TV if the town had a station. She has a son, who will also encounter the fog when he returns to his mom's beach to inspect noises and steal artifacts that look like they came from a pirate ship.

Of course, "The Fog" doesn't come all at once to destroy the town. It returns a couple of times and raises suspicion. Maybe the pirates want to warn them first. The town has the usual ominous nut jobs who babble terms in Latin that mean "Revenge" or old sailors that develop leprosy and run up to the stars, screaming, "Blood for blood," and then running away. There's even a priest who drinks from one of those flasks and asks to be forgiven for the things he's done. He's among the nut jobs warning that the pirates want their revenge. Nobody seems to get it, until the fog kicks into gear and goes after the town.

Of course, the leprosy gives the ghosts scary faces and so when the fog gets a little clearer, you can see pirates with decaying ghost faces coming at the stars, contract in hand. That contract's going to do them a lot of good now. They've pretty much sidestepped the legal process and gone into murdering mode. Had they gone to court they might have had some kind of result.

This all moves at a pace much too slow and much too confusing for a horror movie. The storytelling abilities of these filmmakers are seriously inept. The characters seem to know what's going on as the movie progresses and we understand only by the time the pirate ghosts come. The rest of the time we're watching, bored and impatient, understanding only that some serious omens have occurred and nobody is paying them any attention. At a certain point I just gave up and accepted that something bad was going to happen, and that the weather would probably be foggy when it did. It was around the point that somebody screamed for the tenth time, "There's something in the fog!"

Tom Welling of "Smallville" tries to avoid the pirate ghosts murdered by the founders of his town in "The Fog."

Tucker stars in new show

BY MARISA GUTHRIE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Tanya Tucker has sowed her share of wild and woolly oats.

She scored her first hit, "Delta Dawn," at the tender age of 13. She had a tumultuous affair with Glen Campbell, 22 years her senior, when she was 21. And she acquired a cocaine habit in her 20s.

But the country music icon makes no apologies.

"I've done some crazy things," she said during a phone interview last week from Delaware, where she was performing at a NASCAR event.

"It hasn't always been easy," she continued. "So, maybe people will ... think, 'Man, if I was her, I might be out drinking and drugging.' My life was hard. I've had to make a lot of compromises."

Tucker hopes that her latest project, the TLC reality series "Tuckerville" (premiering Saturday at 10 p.m. EDT), will put the past to bed.

"Maybe people will see this and they'll understand me," she said. "I have some of the same problems as everybody else and maybe after this, they'll be able to relate to me a little better."

Tucker is a single mom to three children, Presley, 16, Grayson, 13, and Layla, 7, on a 500-acre estate outside Nashville.

She deals with the same issues every mother faces: getting the kids to school on time; helping them with their extracurricular projects, in Presley's case launching a singing career. And she faces the same battles with her children that every parent does.

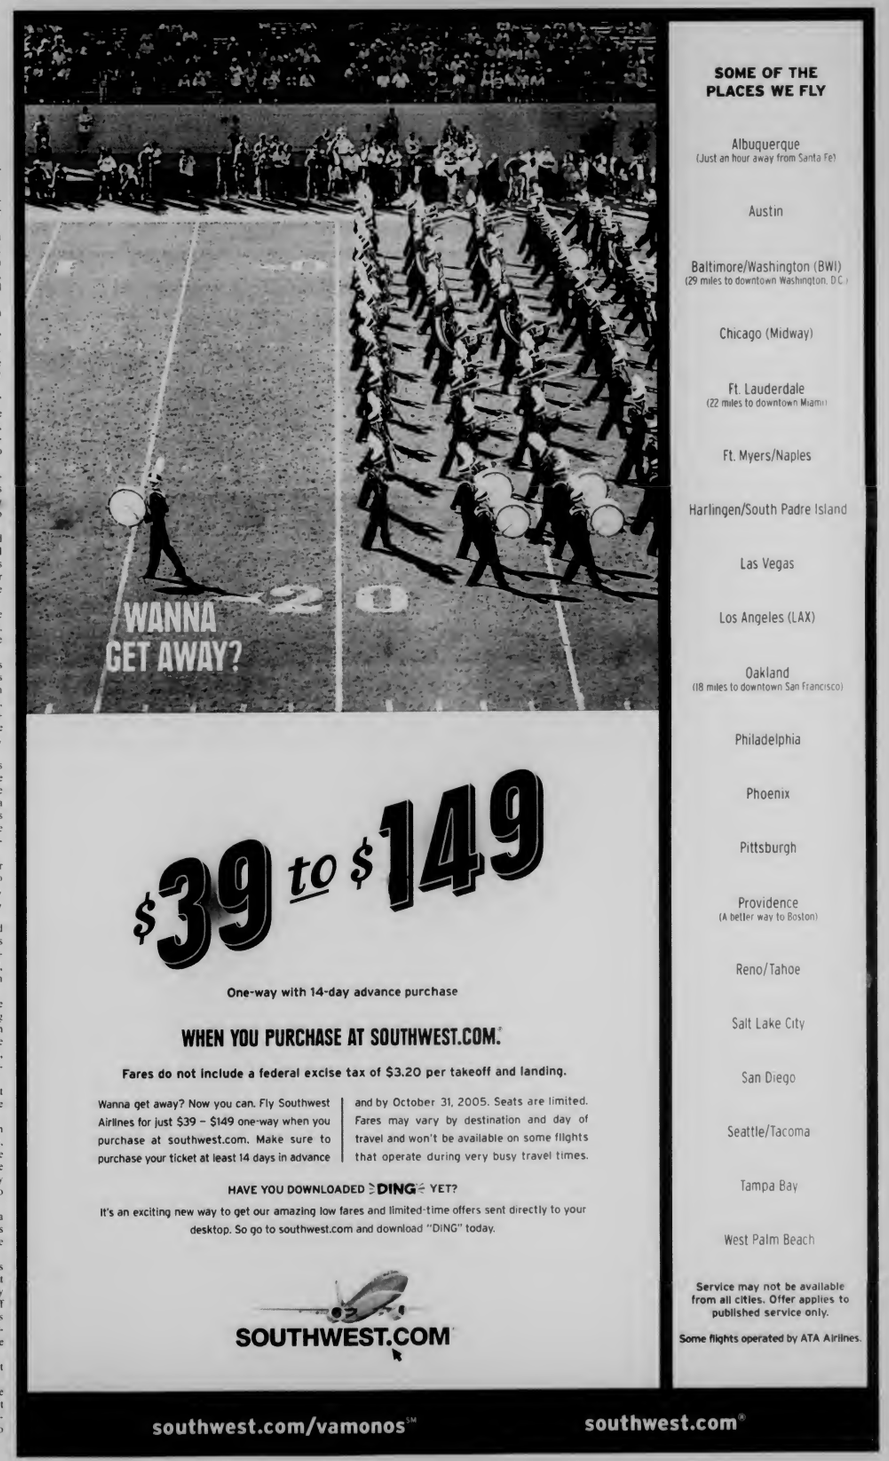
In one episode, while she is doing a TV appearance to promote her book "100 Ways to Beat the Blues," son Grayson is buying a python (and a supply of frozen rats to feed it) and sneaking it into the house. Of course, she had previously told him, no snakes.

And daughter Presley and her friends have sneaked off to a bar to sing with a local band when they are supposed to be at the county fair.

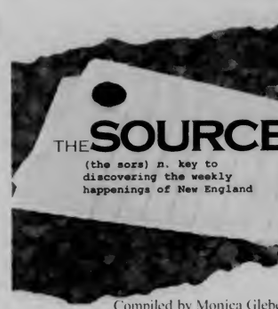
Asked if she was concerned about putting her parenting skills on display for all the world to second-guess, she laughed and said, "I'm not sure if you can call them 'skills.'"

Tucker knew exactly where Presley was because a friend rang her from the bar to tell her. When she got home, Tucker played the reproachful mom for about, oh, three minutes before asking conspiratorially, "How'd ya do?"

She's also not concerned that the exposure will have a negative effect on her kids.



"I've always shared them with the world," she said. "I told them, 'You know once this thing hits the screen, you may have a harder time doing things and some things may be a little easier and you just got to be prepared for it.'"



"Tuckerville" will likely be a good thing for Presley, who has inherited her mother's throaty voice if not her relentless work ethic.

"I told (her), in this business you gotta do stuff all the time that you don't like,'" said Tucker. "My life was constantly filled with stuff that I didn't want to do. Sometimes you gotta go out there (and perform) when your biggest heartache is happening."

"Presley," said Tucker, "has not quite accepted that. Of course."

"I was a lot hungrier than she is," she added. "I didn't have a lot of alternatives. The less alternatives, the more you're willing to do."

Compiled by Monica Gleberman

MondayOctober24

Art

"An Afternoon with Shan Shan Sheng, '87 MFA" will have the professional artist Shan Shan Sheng give a public demonstration and discussion. Reception will follow. The reception will be from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. at the Memorial Hall.

"Hieronymus Bosch Revisted" will be available in the Hampden Gallery until Oct. 30. A full sized transcription of Bosch's painting, "Garden of Earthly Delights," circa 1500. The piece is a triptych depicting scenes of heaven, hell and paradise.

Academic

University Without Walls Information Session will be available at 5:30 p.m. in the Montague House. You will learn more about how you can design your own degree program, and how you can earn credit for learning you have done "outside the walls" of the university.

TuesdayOctober25

Lecture

Chapin Auditorium at Mount Holyoke College. Jonathan Kozol reads from "The Shame of the Nation." Co-sponsored by the Weissman Center. The reading will begin at 7 p.m. at The Odyssey Bookshop.

Health

Fresh and Sober will be available in the Health Center from 5 p.m. to 6 p.m. Are you a student in recovery from drugs and/or alcohol? Are you a student questioning your drinking and/or drug use? Then come check out Fresh and Sober.

Academic

"Stressed is Desserts Spelled Backwards" is a workshop in Melville at 7 p.m. "Stressed is Desserts Backwards" – a Peer Health Education workshop. By students, for students.

Cultural

Cultural Film Night will be in Chadbourne from 8 p.m. to 11 p.m.The film "Doe Boy" takes place in Cherokee Nation Oklahoma and tells a story of a young Hunter, of mixed parentage, who is never at home in the complicated circumstances of his life.

WednesdayOctober26

Food

"Fall Under the Spell of Harry Potter" will be going on in all the dining commons. Come try Bat Wings, Rubeus Hagrid, Dumbledore's Password, Dobby's Sticky Toffee Pudding or Magic Wands for lunch at your favorite DC.

Cultural

"Birth of a nASIAN" will be going on at 8 p.m. at the Bowker Auditorium. All Urban. All Comedy. All Spoken Word. All Trip Hop with an Asian Slant.

ThursdayOctober27

Academic

Nanomanufacturing Challenges for Semiconductor Manufacturing at the Conte National Center For Polymer Research from 4:30 – 6 p.m. The lecture will be given by Dr. Daniel Herr, Director of Nanomanufacturing Sciences Research, Semiconductor Industry Corporation.

Cultural

"Private Ordering, Political Islam: Debates Around Muslim Family Arbitration" is a lecture that will be given in Isenberg School of Management at 4:30 p.m. Annie Bunting of York University will give the second lecture in the 2005-2006 Law & Society Colloquium series.

Theater

Calpulli Mexican Performance with Didactic Transitions will perform from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. Mexican folkloric dance group will perform a varied selection of dances from various states and ethnic regions in Mexico, each with unique costumes and music.

Theater Performance of "Gum" will be at the Curtain Theater. In an unnamed, repressive society, chewing gum is rumored to contain aphrodisiac qualities — but for two sisters who live in this claustrophobic world, the juicy treat is a symbol of defiance and freedom. For more information check out www.umass.edu.

FridayOctober28

Health

Chapin Auditorium: Dr. Andrew Weil, author of "Healthy Aging," will be available for an onstage interview. The show begins at 7:30 p.m. at The Odyssey Bookshop.

Academic

Economic History and Development Workshop will be available at 1:30 p.m. in Gordon Hall. "Understanding the Relationship Between Institutions and Economic Development — Some Key Theoretical Issues."

Cultural

IBDA Dancers will perform at 7:30 p.m. in the Bowker Auditorium. Arab Student Club presents IBDA Danvers. These dancers will be performing the traditional Arabic dance called the Dabke.

Health

WFCR Presents Dr. Andrew Weil at 7:30 p.m. in the Chapin Auditorium at Mt. Holyoke College. Dr. Weil, one of America's most trusted doctors and authors, will visit the Pioneer Valley as part of a national tour which coincides with the release of his new book.

Comedy

Black Comedy Show will be in the Student Union Ballroom from 8 to 10 p.m. BSU's annual comedy show featuring comedians from BETs ComicView and other special guests, followed by an after-party at the X. For more information check out www.umass.edu.

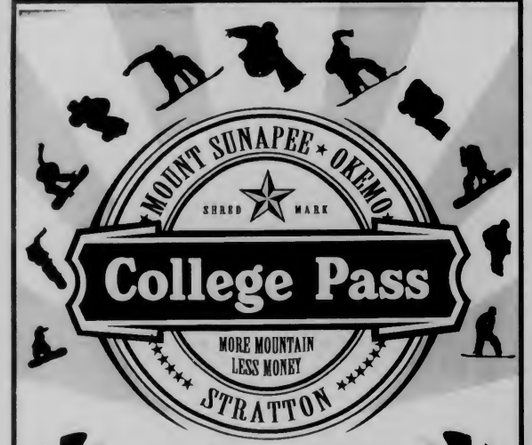
Weekly Pinup

WHAT'S UP WITH LOVE?

The second event of the New Asian Cinema series is a free showing of "Ada Apa Dengan Cinta?" ("What's Up With Love?") in SOM 137 at 7 p.m. on Tuesday, Oct. 25.

SaturdayOctober29

Theater



Choral Spectrum will be at the Fine Arts Center in the Concert Hall. The annual choral showcase featuring the UMass Amherst Chamber Choir, Chorale and Women's Choir. For more information check out www.umass.edu.

"A Murder of Crows," by Mac Wellman, directed by Roger Babb, is an environmental tragic-comedy which features a young teenage heroine who is fervently involved with the weather. The show will begin at 2 p.m. in Rooke Theater at Mt. Holyoke College. Ticket prices are $5 / $3. for more information call the box office at (413) 538-2406.

SundayOctober30

Art

Smith College Museum of Art Exhibitions will have Yoruba Art for Spirits and Kings through Oct. 30. This show celebrates the artistic imagination of the Yoruba people of southwestern Nigeria with examples of sculpture and beadwork related to the powers and forces that shape their lives

Only $299*

With a combined 1,437 rideable acres of terrain, 272 trails, 41 lifts, and 9 terrain parks, you can't beat this deal. Take a break from the books and get free with the Stratton/Okemo/Sunapee College Pass. Ski and ride three of New England's best mountains, with one pass, all season long for as little as $299. College students must provide proof of full time status with documentation from the Registar's Office.

Purchase By 12/9/05

Good 7 Days A Week · No Blackout Dates

STRATTON VT 1.800.STRATTON STRATTON.com

OKEMO MOUNTAIN RESORT 1.800.78.OKEMO OKEMO.com

MOUNT SUNAPEE NEW HAMPSHIRE'S RESORT 1.603.763.2356 MOUNTSUNAPEE.com

* If purchased before 12.9.05. $399 thereafter. Tax not included. Must be 25 or under.

www.umasslug.org IBM

Thursday October 27th, 2005
4:00-5:00 lecture by Paul Coates
5:00-5:45 demonstration

UMass W.E.B. DeBois Library Learning Commons, South Corridor

Open Standards, Open Source And Web Application Development

What does it mean to be "open" in today's IT environment? What are the challenges and benefits of using "open" or "closed" technology?

The talk will briefly introduce an open source research and teaching initiative at UMass and current and future collaboration between IBM and UMass. There will be a demonstration of the open source Eclipse 3.0 Integrated Development Environment, Apache Tomcat, and development with an open source relational database package (Derby/Cloudscape).

Friday October 28th, 2005
9:00am - 1:00pm

UMass W.E.B. DeBois Library Learning Commons, South Corridor

LinuxFest

LinuxFest is an opportunity to participate in a hands-on workshop where you get to learn and "test drive" Linux at three different levels. The workshop modules include installation and configuration of Fedora Core 4 (http://www.redhat.com/fedora), basic Linux usage fundamentals, or Linux intermediate administration tasks such as the installation and configuration of SAMBA or installing various open source tools such as the Eclipse IDE. There will be free gifts available and we will raffle off an iPod Nano!

Session requirements include a laptop running Windows XP or a Red Hat Linux distribution with at least 6-8GB of available disk space. Participants are encouraged to download and install a 30 day trial version of VMWARE Workstation 5.0 at http://www.vmware.com on their laptop PRIOR to attending the LinuxFest workshop.

For people without machines, there will be about 40 laptop machines available for participants who do not have their own equipment.

Seating is limited for the LinuxFest. To make a reservation, please register at http://www.umasslug.org/ibm/ibmfest.php.

These events are co-sponsored by IBM, Court Square Data Group, and The University of Massachusetts Open Source Lab, Information Technology Program, Linux User Group, College of Social and Behavior Sciences, the Research Liaison And Development Office, and the W.E.B. Du Bois Library and new Learning Commons.

Movie 'Doomed' by inconsistency

By Carlos Cruz
Collegian Staff

"Doom" is the latest in a long line of movies based on video games to totally alienate the source material. In the game, you play as a marine on the planet Mars that battles demons from Hell that made it to our world though a portal that was created by scientists on the red planet.

In the movie, Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson plays Sarge, the leader of a crack team of Marines that are sent to a research facility on Mars to investigate a strange series of events.

So far, the plot is quite on par with the game. Upon arriving at the Mars facility, the audience gets bombarded with loads of science talk that leaves one asking, "What did that guy just say?" Apparently, the monsters that are loose on the Mars facility are simply genetically altered humans that, for some reason, just want to kill all humans. As you can see, this is where the movie starts to derail and go in a completely different direction than the game.

"Doom"
Directed by Andrzej Bartkowiak
Starring Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson
Universal Pictures
Rated R
100 mins.
Grade D-

Inconsistencies continue throughout the rest of the movie. Some of them are forgivable but the rest are downright blasphemy to the mythos of the game. The most appalling of all is the transformation of Sarge into another one of the monsters. That's correct, ladies and gentlemen; The Rock turns into a bad guy in the end. That is the big twist at the end of the movie (apparently every movie today needs one) and I know that I'm spoiling it, but better you know now than waste money by going to see this atrocity. The Rock gets turned into a monster with the aid of cheap prosthetics comparable to those of "Buffy the Vampire Slayer" the show, not the movie, and does some really bad wire based kung fu (another gimmick that movies need these days).

In all fairness, the movie does resemble the game in several ways. Unlike most movies based on video game, you can tell that the creators of the movie at least looked at the games it's based on for a few minutes. The look of the movie is largely based on "Doom III." Everything from the large UAC logos hanging all over the research facility to the way the doors open and even the sounds of the labs are straight out of "Doom III." One of the minor characters is even named Dr. Carmack, a tribute to the creator of the hit games. I have to give the movie credit for including all these things, but making the monsters genetically altered humans and not demons from Hell is just way too wrong and unforgivable.

If you were to go see this movie, there is one scene that might be worth shelling out cash for. That scene is near the end of the movie when the camera switches to a first person perspective just like in the game and you get to see the world through the eyes of the real hero of the movie. Done completely in CG, the scene is gorgeous to look at and makes you want to go home and play the game, if you own it. In short, it's like the battle with Darth Maul at the end of "The Phantom Menace"; the scene that makes up for the rest of the movie.

When all is said and done, the movie is far from great but it is a better video game movie than "Super Mario Brothers" or "Tomb Raider." Save your money. With the amount of money it would cost to go see this movie you can go and donate to Katrina relief or something of that sort. In the end, you'll feel far more satisfied.

Duane "The Rock" Johnson plays Sarge, the leader of the Marine team who becomes a monster in "Doom."

Show gives soldiers' view of Iraq

By Aaron Barnhart
Knight Ridder

"Off to War," a remarkable series for the Discovery Times Channel, tracks a group of Arkansas reservists through their 18-month tour of duty in Iraq in 2004 and 2005.

It shows in agonizing and touching detail how their unexpected military service turned their families' lives upside down.

Craig and Brent Arnaud, brothers and filmmakers from Little Rock, Ark., collaborated on the series, which began airing last weekend. The idea began with a chance encounter at a wedding.

In the summer of 2003, after the president had declared the end of major combat operations in Iraq, retired National Guard Lt. Col. Neil Bryant pulled Craig Arnaud aside. He knew the Arnauds had filmed in Iraq during the war, and he had a proposal for them.

"Do you know that 3,000 soldiers are about to be deployed from Arkansas?" Bryant asked. "A good buddy of mine is going to be in charge of the entire brigade. Are you interested in filming this?"

It was a proposal borne out of trust — Bryant's son and Craig Arnaud had played soccer since they were young boys. Trust would prove to be the constant through the two years the brothers spent on "Off to War." By earning it from the soldiers and their families, they were allowed to film moments of almost unbearable intimacy, as family members learned that loved ones had been wounded, while other families broke under the strain while cameras rolled.

In October 2003, as the 39th Brigade of the Arkansas National Guard began its six-month training in Little Rock, the Arnauds, who are based in New York City, were on the scene, making acquaintances.

"We spent a lot of time getting to know the families," Brent Arnaud said. "We had to make sure we had the families on board."

They selected a compelling handful of soldiers and their families to film. One of the first we meet is Sgt. Ron Jackson, a turkey farmer forced to turn over a staggering list of chores to his wife and father while he and his stepson, 19-year-old Tommy Erp, go to war.

Friends of the Arnauds, or friends of friends, turned up among the 2,800 reservists deployed. They made further introductions at the armory. In Arkansas "everyone knows each other," Brent Arnaud said. "It happened pretty organically."

All the subjects in the series are from Clarksville, Ark., population 7,000. More than 125 members of the 39th Brigade came from Clarksville, where for half a century the Guard was made up of weekend warriors, most with no military experience.

Discovery Times aired the first hour of "Off to War" in 2004. A few months later it aired another hour, then a third. Since the story was still unfolding, the Arnauds were reluctant to commit to further episodes. Vivien Schiller, who runs the network, said most producers want more hours of their work aired than she does, but this was the reverse.

In all, they made 10 hours of "Off to War," which airs at 10 p.m. EDT Saturdays through November.

"If you were just covering soldiers in the war, it would be an interesting documentary," Craig Arnaud said in an interview this summer. "But viewers don't identify with Iraq so much as the families in Arkansas. The plight of the families really tugs at your heartstrings."

That becomes clear just days after the reservists arrive in Iraq, when a rocket attack grievously wounds one of them.

But much of the drama of "Off to War" is more mundane: suffering in 115-degree heat, trying to communicate in Arabic with the locals and dealing with a way of life and political culture that these Arkansans find bewildering and absurd.

"I don't think these people appreciate what we're doing," says Spc. Matt Hertlein, still a teenager as he begins his tour of duty. "I think all half of them wanna do is watch us die."

Sgt. David Short agrees. "These people would cut your throat without a second thought."

But other soldiers, like Lt. Brian Mason, defend the mission.

"Saddam hurt these people for 30 years," he says. "We need to help these people and see it through."

It's a refrain heard throughout "Off to War": the almost mechanical recitation of democratic platitudes by some reservists, paired with the cynical rebuttals of others. And really, who can say which point of view will ultimately be proven right, or mostly right? Not the directors.

"We said from the beginning it was going to be nonpolitical," Brent Arnaud said. "We never asked our characters what their political views were. By the end we certainly know."

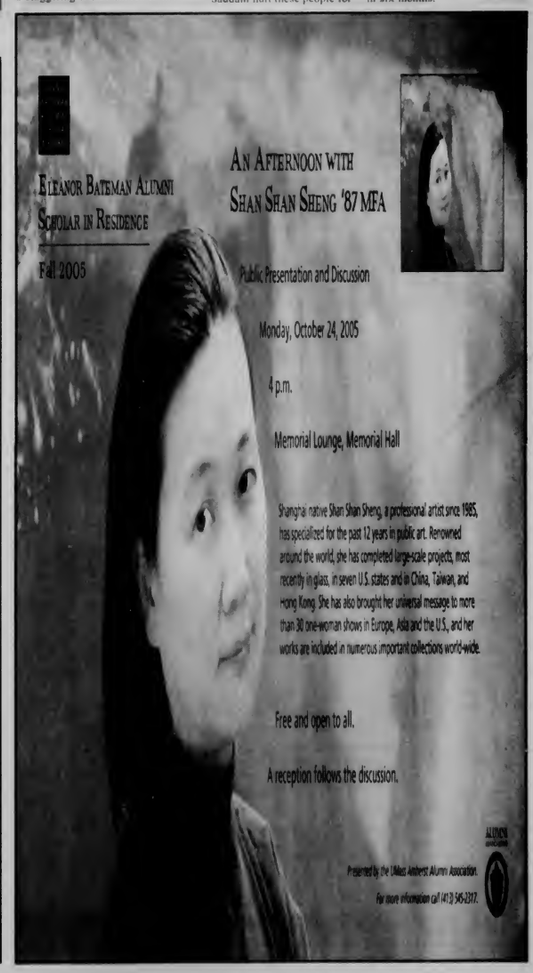
Unlike the fictionalized stories currently seen on the FX war drama "Over There," the people and situations in "Off to War" are real. The realism is enhanced by the Arnauds' preferred style of documentary-making, with no narrations, explanations or music (other than a couple of bars of John Mellencamp's "Small Town" just before the commercials).

But thanks to the program's simple, straightforward editing, it becomes clear how each reservist's time away is affecting loved ones back in Arkansas. No family shown on "Off to War" is more visibly strained than that of Sgt. Joe Betts, a soft-spoken minister of a small Baptist church.

He got married to Amy, a woman with children from a previous marriage, not long before his call-up. While he is away, their relationship sours, though they make continuous efforts to save it in long-distance phone calls. According to Craig Arnaud, 20 percent of the marriages in the 39th Brigade ended during the Iraq mission.

The Arnauds platooned so that they could cover the war from both points of view. One brother stayed in Arkansas and was in contact with the families, while the other was in Iraq with the reservists. Every three months the brothers traded places. This allowed them, for instance, to cover both ends of an emotional phone call between the Betses that airs in a future episode.

"This is a unique situation that will never happen again," Brent Arnaud said. "Part-time soldiers who never expected to be deployed. I don't think you'll ever have this kind of bombshell dropped on soldiers and their families (again), that they're shipping out in six months."



YELLOW SALE 2005

Big Savings on books spanning the spectrum of Mathematics!

Sale prices valid through December 31, 2005.

Springer

UMass Amherst University Store and Textbook Annex
Phone: (413)545-2619

Bullpen secures White Sox win

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Yes, the Chicago White Sox do indeed have a bullpen, and they have the lead in the World Series, too.

Neal Cotts and Bobby Jenks got out of an eighth-inning jam, Joe Crede hit a go-ahead homer and saved two runs with a pair of diving stops and the White Sox beat the Houston Astros 5-3 on Saturday night in Chicago's first World Series game since 1959.

"Hey, don't see the bullpen," Chicago manager Ozzie Guillen said. "Now they see it."

On a night when 43-year-old Roger Clemens hoped to become the oldest pitcher to win a World Series game, the Rocket hobbled off after just two innings, done in by the hamstring injury that has hampered him since early September.

Winner Jose Contreras allowed the Astros three runs in seven-plus innings in their first World Series game, and tied a Series record by hitting three batters.

Chicago pitched four straight complete games in finishing off the Angels in the AL championship series, a feat not achieved in the postseason since 1956. But when Willy Taveras hit a leadoff double off Contreras in the eighth with Houston trailing 4-3, manager Ozzie Guillen took him out after 81 pitches.

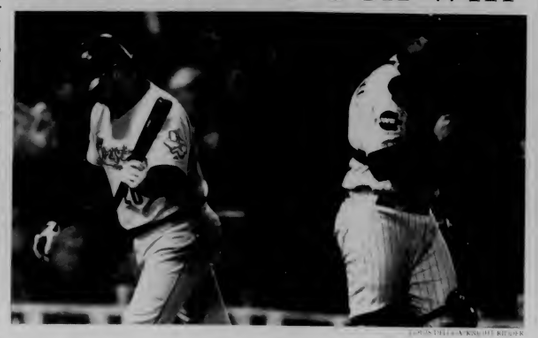
Cotts, a left-hander whose seven pitches and two outs was Chicago's only relief work against the Angels, came in and allowed a sharp single to left by Lance Berkman; a ball hit so hard that Taveras had to stop at third.

Cotts then struck out Morgan Ensberg and Mike Lamb, and Guillen went to his bullpen again, raising both arms high and wide to signal for the burly right-handed rookie Jenks to face Jeff Bagwell.

"I don't want to embarrass the kid, but I want the big boy," Guillen said.

Jenks didn't mind.

"I think it's pretty funny," he said.



Throwing fastballs that reached 100 mph, Jenks struck out Bagwell on a 2-2 pitch, raising his right hand and pumping a fist as he came off the mound.

"He chases fastballs up," Jenks said.

Scott Podsednik added an RBI triple in the eighth against Russ Springer to boost the margin, and Jenks retired the side in order in the ninth, striking out two. Crede had broken a 3-3 tie in the fourth inning with a solo homer off Clemens' replacement, 26-year-old rookie Wandy Rodriguez. As the ball went just over the glove of a leaping Taveras in left-center, Crede strolled around the bases, and Chicago was truly a toddlin' town.

"You got the nerves and butterflies going in and you know what, the game starts and you calm yourself down and realize you got a job to do, and that's go out and win a ballgame," Crede said.

With the infield in, Crede sprawled to make a backhand grab on Ensberg's hard grounder with a runner at third and one out in the sixth. With runners at the corners and two outs in the seventh, he made another backhand play on Craig Biggio, in his 18th season with Houston and appearing in his first World Series game.

Mike Lamb walks away from the plate after being struck out by White Sox relief pitcher Neil Cotts during the Houston Astro's 5-3 Game 1 loss to the Chicago White Sox in the World Series.

"They put the good wood on the ball, tough situations, and I was fortunate enough to get leather on it," Crede said.

Jermaine Dye hit a solo homer for the White Sox, and Lamb hit a solo shot for the Astros.

Chicago, which has not allowed more than four runs in any of its nine postseason games, will try to try to make it 2-0 on Sunday night, when Mark Buehrle goes against Andy Pettitte, making his 11th Series start.

Clemens became the second-oldest pitcher to start a World Series game, trailing only 46-year-old Jack Quinn for the 1929 Philadelphia Athletics. He wasn't sharp from the start, needing 54 pitches to labor through two innings, and he appeared to be limping as he left the dugout and headed down stairs back to the clubhouse after the second.

The Rocket, who signed with Houston before the 2004 to lead his hometown team to its first World Series, allowed three runs and four hits.

Rodriguez replaced him with the score 3-3 in the middle of the third. He got into a two-on, one-out jam only to escape, but threw Crede turned on a high 0-2 pitch.

Rodriguez had control problems, walking five in 3 1-3 innings, but that was the only run he allowed.

Houston threatened to tie it in the sixth, when Taveras doubled leading off and advanced to third on a grounder. But, with the infield in, Crede dived to his right to backhand Ensberg's hard grounder and threw to first as Taveras held, and Contreras retired Lamb on a groundout.

Contreras, Clemens' teammate on the 2003 New York Yankees, became the sixth Cuban pitcher to start a World Series game. He didn't allow a run after the third.

When the World Series was last in Chicago in 1959, box seats went for $10.31, a fraction of the $185 price this year. In a town where the Cubs usually dominate, there were "Go Sox" banners over entrances of Orchestra Hall and the Art Institute of Chicago.

A sellout crowd of 41,206 filled U.S. Cellular Field, next to where the old Comiskey Park played host to the Series 46 years ago. It was 53 degrees at game time, cold enough for commissioner Bud Selig to be wearing a scarf as he watched from his front-row seat.

Players, most of them in the Series for the first time, waved to people in the stands when they lined up on the foul lines for the introductions. Many Astros watched the early innings standing on the top step of the dugout, and Rodriguez's excitement was clear when he spiked the ball across the infield after catching a relay at first to complete a 3-6-1 double play in the fifth inning.

Dye's first-inning homer to center, which came on Clemens' ninth pitch to him, was wiped out by Lamb's second-inning homer to center.

Carl Everett singled leading off the bottom half, third on Aaron Rowand's hit-and-run single to right and scored on A.J. Pierzynski's grounder to first, waiting for Lamb to throw to second before sprinting home and scoring with a headfirst slide. Juan Uribe's run-scoring double made it 3-1, but Berkman pulled a two-run double to right in the third that made it 3-all.

NOTES: Starting in 1997, the Game 1 victor has won the World Series each year except for 2002. ... Sandy Koufax is the only Hall of Fame pitcher to end his career in the World Series. ... Pittsburgh's Bruce Kison hit three batters in Game 4 in 1971. ... Houston was 2-for-10 with runners in scoring position, Chicago 2-for-11.

Badgers prove critics wrong

By Jeff Potrykus
Knight Ridder

MADISON, Wis. — Barry Alvarez was beaming Sunday morning.

"It's always nice to prove people wrong," the Wisconsin football coach said during his weekly TV show. "I don't know if anyone thought we would (clinch) a bowl game in Week 8."

No one would have been so brazen.

Yet that is what Wisconsin (7-1, 4-1 Big Ten Conference) accomplished Saturday with its 31-20 victory over Purdue.

Even more remarkable is that Wisconsin, tied for first place with Penn State (7-1, 4-1) and one-half game ahead of Northwestern (5-2, 3-1) and Ohio State (5-2, 3-1), remains in position to send Alvarez off with his fourth Big Ten title.

No one was brazen enough to predict that ending before the season began:

Athlon magazine picked Wisconsin to finish sixth in the Big Ten race. The Sporting News tabbed Wisconsin for seventh.

Street & Smith's had the Badgers stumbling in at No. 9, ahead of Illinois, UW's opponent this week, and Indiana.

The Badgers were unranked in the national pre-season polls for the first time since the 1996 season.

With three Big Ten games left, in addition to the regular-season finale Nov. 24 at Hawaii, UW is ranked No. 15 in both the Associated Press and USA Today top 25 polls.

"I wouldn't say we're surprised," said senior cornerback Brett Bell, who, according to teammates, played his best overall game this season Saturday. "Going into the season . . . Coach Alvarez's favorite teams are when you're not ranked and nobody knows who anybody is. .

"In the beginning of the season when you're 44th in the country or something and now we're playing as well as we are, it shows a lot of people that we've got heart and the will to win."

Here is the road UW and the other title contenders must travel:

UW: Saturday at Illinois, Nov. 5 at Penn State and Nov. 12 against visiting Iowa. The Illini (2-5, 0-4) are coming off a 63-10 loss to Penn State and are relying heavily on underclassmen. UW should win this game if it avoids uncharacteristic errors.

Winning at Penn State will require a tremendous effort. The Nittany Lions haven't lost at home this season and came within one play of winning at Michigan. And unlike UW, they found a way to win at Northwestern.

Iowa (5-3, 3-2) has beaten UW three consecutive times and was on the rise until losing at home Saturday to Michigan. Quarterback Drew Tate could give UW's defense fits but the atmosphere at Camp Randall Stadium for Alvarez's last home game should be electric.

Penn State: Saturday at home against Purdue, Nov. 5 at home against UW and Nov. 19 at Michigan State.

Joe Paterno's team has the inside the track to the title. The Nittany Lions have beaten Ohio State and Northwestern and play two of their final three games at home. However, the finale at Michigan State could be hazardous only because the Spartans are unpredictable.

Ohio State: The Buckeyes should win their next three games, this week at Minnesota this week, Nov. 5 at home against Illinois and Nov. 12 at home against Northwestern.

But the Buckeyes will lose on Nov. 19 at Michigan. The Wolverines are playing better and haven't forgotten their loss last season in Columbus.

Northwestern: The Wildcats have enjoyed a tremendous run but can they successfully navigate through their next three games — Michigan, Iowa and Ohio State — and remain in the race for the regular-season finale at Illinois?

Don't count on it.

Then again, no one counted on UW still being in the running for the Big Ten title at this point in the season. At least one Milwaukee Journal Sentinel writer predicted that UW probably wouldn't qualify for a bowl game.

The only people not surprised to see UW still in the race are the players and coaches.

"Why should we be surprised?" co-offensive coordinator Brian White said. "We certainly don't have to read . . . predictions. Why should we listen to the silliness?"

Glover wins his first PGA Tour

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — In a script right out of Fantasyland, Lucas Glover captured his first PGA Tour victory Sunday with birdies on the last two holes, making a 40-foot putt from the fringe and a 35-foot bunker shot on the last hole to win the Funai Classic at Disney.

Glover, who closed with a 7-under 65, was among 10 players who had a chance to win over the final four holes under threatening skies across from the Magic Kingdom. When he went from the left rough into the front bunker on No. 18, it looked as though his best chance would be getting into a playoff.

Then came a dramatic finish, typical at this tournament.

His bunker shot exploded from the sand, high in the air, landed about 5 feet short of the cup and rolled in for birdie.

"I was trying to get it close and hope for the best," Glover said. "And then the stinker went in."

Glover finished at 23-under 265, and had to wait to make sure that held up. He was on the practice range, trying to stay loose as workers noisily tore down the grandstands behind him.

He stopped long enough to look across a strand of trees at Tom Pernice Jr., who had a 15-foot birdie putt to force a playoff. Pernice's shoulders slumped when he struck the putt, which never had a chance.

"I didn't hit a great putt," said Pernice, who closed with a 69 but made only one birdie over the last 14 holes. "What are you going to do? Lucas played a great round. My hat's off to him."

-Associated Press

Princeton grabs Head of the Charles Regatta

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - Princeton on Sunday became the first U.S. university in more than 20 years to win the Head of the Charles Regatta championship men's eights title.

Princeton trailed defending champion Cambridge University of England by eight seconds at the second checkpoint but gained 13 seconds on Cambridge in the final 750 meters to escape with a five-second win, in a time of 14:41.895.

The Royal Dutch Rowing Federation finished third.

"We always planned that the last mile we'd bring it home," Princeton stroker Sam Loch said. "From the last mile on, we'd really power on and see what we could do."

Princeton, which finished third in 2004, started from the third bow and became the first American college to capture the eights title since the U.S. Naval Academy won in 1983.

Princeton's Steve Coppola said his experience last month helping the U.S. National Team win a gold medal at the World Rowing Championships in Gifu, Japan, paid off Sunday. The U.S. National team failed to field a team this year for the Head of the Charles, and Cambridge was the favorite to defend its title.

The World Rowing Championships "gave me a little more confidence, and hopefully that transferred over to some of my teammates," Coppola said. "It just means I'm that much more sure of my talents."

-Associated Press

Want to write for Sports? Call the Collegian at 545-0719

Bentley Business Gateway. It's a better answer than "I don't know."

What are you doing after graduation? If you think you might be interested in a business career, we have three words for you: Bentley Business Gateway. Our new summer immersion program is designed to put non-business majors on the fast-track toward a graduate business degree in Accountancy, Finance, Financial Planning, Marketing Analytics, Real Estate Management or Taxation.

Offered by one of New England's leading business universities, the Bentley Business Gateway invites you to:

- Complete the prerequisites for a Master of Science in just one summer
- Enter the Bentley MS program of your choice without taking the GMAT
- Complete your Bentley MS program in as little as one year, including an internship
- Investigate business careers, network with faculty and business leaders and participate in social and cultural events on campus and in the Boston area.

Graduating from college fluent in the language of business, like Adam Smith or Sir Isaac Newton. Fluency is our promise. Bentley will prepare you to speak the language of finance, marketing and accounting.

BENTLEY
McCALLUM GRADUATE SCHOOL of BUSINESS

Business in a Whole New Light

Learn more about the Bentley Business Gateway at the Graduate School Fair at the Student Union Ballroom on October 26 from 11:00am – 3:00pm

HAUNTED HALLOWEEN BASH AT THE HARP

Live Music with Savoy Shuffle

Free midnight buffet!

Look your Halloween Best: 5-Category Costume Contest $$$!

Hundreds of $$$ worth of Prizes!

Sat. 9 - close
Come celebrate the other great Irish Holiday!

"Come party like you're Irish"

Win keeps UM alive

W. SOCCER from page 14

first time in 2005, not to mention some rain and mist to add to it, the Minutewomen needed a little time to adjust.

"It took us about one half of play to get used to the surface," Rudy said.

Which might help explain how GW registered a goal in the 41st minute — then again, maybe not. Down near the left side, a Colonial player appeared to have kicked the ball out of bounds. The referee signaled a GW throw-in, leaving UMass out of position. That allowed Keara Mehlert to deliver a cross to Kerry Philbin, who headed it in from two yards out for a GW goal.

The Minutewomen changed up their style of play in the second half and seemed to be more effective, limiting the Colonials to just one shot in the half. But for one reason or another, they could not finish off well, their best chance coming on a Caitlin Footit header that was just wide of the net.

"We really didn't deserve a loss," Rudy said. "We played good enough to get a tie but we just couldn't get it in. It would have been great to get a tie here."

Yesterday's match was almost a polar opposite of Friday's struggle. Playing on LaSalle's drab playing surface, a field Rudy likes to call "Astrodirt", the Minutewomen were pushed into double-overtime by the explorers before finally emerging victorious on the first shot of that period — a clean left-footed shot by Canfield for her fourth goal of the season and a team-high 12 points.

Traditionally a possession-oriented soccer team, the Minutewomen had to change their game plan on LaSalle's surface that, aside from the patches of grass, dirt and mud, is only 62 yards wide from sideline to sideline. UMass had to play a more direct, straightforward style of soccer, which turned out to give them the win in the end.

UMass also had to adjust to "Phillyball" — that is, a chippier, more rough-and-tumble kind of physical soccer. The players were clearly getting into it, as UMass and LaSalle combined for 40 fouls (UM 17, LA 23).

The Explorers struck first in this game, notching a goal in the 13th minute on penalty kick by Alexis Petrucci.

But just when the game looked like it was about to be over, UMass made yet another adjustment. The Minutewomen brought everybody forward by switching to a 2-4-4 for the last five minutes of regulation, essentially putting eight players in position to create a score of some sort.

The switch paid off in the 11th hour. With 15 seconds remaining in regulation, defender Stephanie Barrett took a feed from Adair Bilyer for her first goal of the season. Then in the 109th minute, back in a regular formation, Barrett served up a pass to Canfield, and she delivered the goods.

"It was poetic justice in the end, really," Rudy said. "[Yesterday] was just blood and guts. We carried the game, I thought. We played better possession even with the crappy field, we got more crosses in. I'm pleased with them."

Morgan Czaja, a senior member of the UMass women's soccer team, has registered one point during her two starts this season.

Texas receives first-place votes

By Ralph D. Russo
Associated Press

Texas is changing some minds. The second-ranked Longhorns picked up two more first-place votes in The Associated Press Top 25 on Sunday, gaining on No. 1 Southern California.

USC is on top of the rankings for a record 27th straight poll. The Trojans received 55 first-place votes and 1,615 points. The Longhorns, coming off a 52-17 victory over previously unbeaten Texas Tech, received the remaining 10 first-place votes and 1,569 points in the media poll.

"I didn't move USC down as much as I moved Texas up," said Joe Giglio of The News & Observer of Raleigh, N.C., one of two voters to switch Texas and USC this week. "I feel (the Longhorns) have a more complete resume and I'm really impressed with how they've handled their business."

After a Saturday with no major upsets, the top nine teams held their positions in the Top 25. Virginia Tech is No. 3, followed by Georgia, Alabama, Miami, LSU, UCLA and Notre Dame.

Texas Tech was the only top-10 team to fall. The Red Raiders dropped seven spots to No. 17 after their first loss of the season. That leaves six unbeaten teams — USC, Texas, Virginia Tech, Georgia, Alabama and UCLA.

With USC and UCLA set to finish the season against each other and a Georgia-Alabama matchup in the Southeastern Conference title game possible, the regular season could end with four unbeaten teams.

Northwestern moved into the rankings this week for the first time since 2001. The Wildcats (5-2) defeated Michigan State 49-14 on Saturday and are now 21st in the country. The Spartans fell out of the rankings.

Michigan is back in the rankings after a 23-20 overtime win at Iowa. The Wolverines have been in and out of the poll in an up-and-down season that has been filled with close games.

Earlier this season, Michigan snapped a string of 114 straight weeks in the rankings, which was the longest in the nation and dated back to 1998. The Wolverines moved back into the poll after a win, then dropped back out after another loss. Two straight last-play victories over Penn State and the Hawkeyes have Michigan at No. 25.

The top five teams in the USA Today coaches' poll were identical to the AP rankings with USC, Texas, Virginia Tech, Georgia and Alabama.

In the AP poll, No. 10 is Florida State, followed by Penn State and Ohio State.

No. 13 Boston College, which has its highest ranking since the end of the 1993 season, plays at Virginia Tech on Thursday night.

No. 14 is Oregon, followed by Wisconsin and Florida, which has a big game coming up on Saturday.

The Gators will try to hand Georgia its first loss in the World's Largest Outdoor Cocktail Party at Jacksonville, Fla. The Bulldogs will likely be without quarterback D.J. Shockley, who injured his knee in a 23-20 win over Arkansas.

After Texas Tech at No. 17, West Virginia is 18th and Auburn fell three spots after losing 20-17 in overtime at LSU.

No. 20 TCU is followed by Northwestern, Fresno State and Tennessee, which remained in the rankings with a 3-3 record. California is No. 24.

Falling out of the rankings along with Michigan State was Virginia. The Cavaliers followed up a win over Florida State with a 7-5 loss at North Carolina on Saturday.

A Boston tradition
The UMass rowing team competed in the prestigious Head of the Charles Regatta yesterday afternoon and fared well among other schools. With over 7,000 competing, Princeton University won the race, while the Minutewomen finished the three-mile race 25th overall in the Collegiate Eights Women's competition with a time of 19:34.171

Minutewomen fall short of A-10 tournement bid with loss

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team lost a pair of crucial conference games this weekend in Philadelphia, leaving the team unable to clinch a spot in the Atlantic 10 tournament.

The Minutewomen will be back in action next Saturday, when they play their last game of the season on the road against A-10 rival Rhode Island. UMass can clinch a spot in the A-10 tournament with a win.

The Minutewomen (6-12 3-3 A-10) suffered a 4-3 loss to Saint Joseph's on Friday, giving them their first loss

St. Joe's	4	to an A-10 team since Oct. 7, when they lost to Rich-mond 4-1. It was a tough loss for UMass, as it gave up a one goal lead late in the second half and ended up losing in regulation.
UMass	3
Temple	2
UMass	1

Freshman Erin Parker scored two goals and senior Jaime Bawden had a goal and an assist, but the Maroon and White still could not gather their fourth conference victory.

The Minutewomen ended a quiet second half with a goal by Bawden with no time left on the clock. Bawden's second goal of the season gave UMass a 4-0 lead going into the half.

While there were not many scoring chances in the first half, the second half was a different story. Saint Joseph's tied the game at one with 28:16 left in regulation with a goal from the Hawks' Katelyn O'Brien after a Minutewomen turnover.

Just over two minutes later, UMass regained its lead, with Parker's third goal of the season. Parker scored on a rebound from Bawden's shot, giving UMass a 2-1 lead.

The Hawks tied the game again with a little more than 10 minutes remaining in regulation, but Parker scored her second goal of the game two and a half minutes later to give the Minutewomen a 3-2 lead.

UMass was able to hold onto the lead until 3:21 remaining in regulation. Saint Joseph's tied it at three when O'Brien scored her second goal of the game. The Hawks were then able to take their first lead of the game with 1:47 left in regulation on a penalty corner.

Freshman Lauren Gillespie and the UMass field hockey team could have clinched an Atlantic 10 tournement bid, but fell to Temple 2-1 in overtime.

Saint Joseph's held on to win the game 4-3, and gave the Minutewomen their second straight loss in a last minute heartbreaker.

The Minutewomen headed into Sunday's game against Rhode Island with a chance to clinch an A-10 tournament berth. A UMass win, or a Saint Louis loss on Sunday would have put the Minutewomen in the postseason for the second straight year, but neither ended up happening.

In its second contest of the weekend, UMass was defeated by Temple (10-9 5-1 A-10) by a score of 2-1 in a game that was decided in overtime. The Owls took a 1-0 lead with 21 minutes left in the first half. The score would stay that way going into the second half, with the Minutewomen being out-shot 8-5.

As the second half went on, things got a little out of hand. UMass coach Patty Shea was ejected, but that did not stop the Minutewomen from getting back in the game. Bawden scored her third goal of the season to tie the game at one with 7:36 remaining in regulation. The goal came on a rebound as a result of UMass' only penalty corner of the second half.

Temple put UMass away in overtime with a goal from Megan Hannahoe with 10 minutes remaining in the first "sudden victory" period. The goal gave UMass its third-straight loss, and put a slight delay on their return to the postseason.

For now, the Minutewomen are on the outside looking in on the A-10 tournament. It will be a must win for UMass on Saturday, as they will need to come out on top if they want to get back to Philadelphia.

HOMETOWN HIGH

DO YOU WANT TO VISIT YOUR HIGH SCHOOL, BUT CAN'T THINK OF A GOOD REASON WHY?

ARE YOU AN OUTGOING PERSON WHO LIKES TO INTERACT WITH GROUPS OF PEOPLE?

DO YOU WANT TO AFFECT THE LIVES OF OTHER PEOPLE IN A POSITIVE WAY?

IF YOU ANSWERED YES, THEN UNDERGRADUATE ADMISSIONS HAS THE PERFECT OPPORTUNITY FOR YOU!

GET INVOLVED WITH HOMETOWN HIGH

- VISIT YOUR HIGH SCHOOL AND EXPRESS YOUR WISDOM GAINED AT UMASS AMHERST TO HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS LOOKING AT COLLEGES!
- TALK ABOUT YOUR PERSONAL EXPERIENCE, YOUR CONCERNS DURING YOUR FRESHMAN YEAR, AND SHARE WHY YOU DECIDED TO COME TO UMASS AMHERST!

ALL YOU HAVE TO DO IS:
- FILL OUT AN INTEREST SHEET
- ATTEND A 1.5 – 2 HOUR TRAINING SESSION
- SET UP AN APPOINTMENT
- VISIT YOUR OLD HIGH SCHOOL

COME SEE US ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE TO SIGN UP!
MON 10/24–FRI 10/28
9:00 AM–3:00 PM

RECEIVE A FREE UMASS AMHERST T-SHIRT FOR YOUR EFFORTS

FOR MORE INFO EMAIL JILL AT JMURTAGH@EDUC.UMASS.EDU OR CALL JILL OR SARAH AT THE ROBSHAM MEMORIAL CENTER FOR VISITORS – 545-0306

UMASS AMHERST

Minutemen win on the road

FOOTBALL from page 14

With the help of junior tailback Steve Baylark, the UMass offense amassed a total of 440 yards on Saturday. The team now stands at 6-1, with a conference record of 5-0.

looking at a third down, with the ball spotted at the 14-yard line of Maine. The fifth Baylark carry of the drive was up the middle, where Baylark powered past the Maine defense and into the endzone for the first score of the game.

Of the 71 plays called for the Maroon and White offense on Saturday, 36 of them involved junior tailback Steve Baylark. In a career-day, Baylark rushed for 198 yards with one touchdown and caught six passes for 64 yards and two touchdowns (all career bests).

Three plays and 1:14 was all it took for the Black Bears to respond to Baylark's TD. Whitcomb dropped back and delivered a dead-on strike to his favorite target, senior Kevin McMahan, who broke loose from the coverage and took the ball for 57 yards into the endzone.

Maine was able generate more offense than any opponent UMass has faced all season and did so using a four-receiver set for most of the game.

"We knew we'd get [Maine's] best shot," UMass coach Don Brown said. "They did a nice job in going to four wides and throwing it around. Obviously that gave them a chance."

With the game tied at 7-7 and Maine beginning the second quarter at the Minuteman 27-yard line, UMass senior linebacker Serge Tikum prevented the Black Bears from getting any further into his territory. Whitcomb dropped back and whipped an awkward sidearm pass, which was picked off by Tikum, who returned the pick down the right sideline for 22 yards.

A fumble by UMass two plays later was the first of three recovered by Maine during the contest, which Brown attributed to a tough Maine defense.

"Unfortunately today, it just seemed like every time we were getting it rolling, we were kind of stopping ourselves with the key turnovers," Brown said. "I've got to credit Maine with that."

With 11:37 left in the first half, runs by Mongomery and Baylark set up a second down on Maine's 17-yard line. Coen took his steps back, looked at his two receivers on his right side, but then shifted to his left and passed to senior tight end Mike Douglas, who was wide open and walked into the endzone.

With James on the sideline, Maine continued it's air attack and went right for the jugular on several plays. Whitcomb scampered 33 yards and then, from the 35-yard line of UMass, threw a strike to Gordon to give Maine the lead 14-13.

That would be the final time the Black Bears would have an advantage on the scoreboard, as UMass upped it's points with two passes from Coen to Baylark at the end of the third quarter. Cesar Rosario capped off the game with an 89 interception return for a touchdown with less than three minutes left in regulation.

Brown was positive about the win, knowing that conference games are difficult.

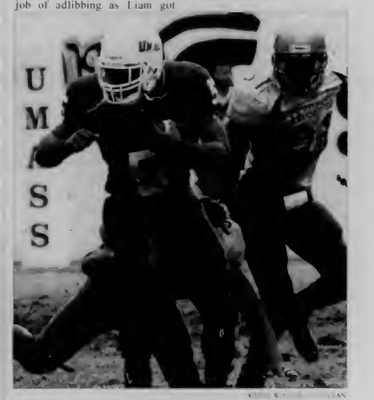
"Anytime you go on the road in the Atlantic 10 and you find a way to win, I've learned just to be happy with that," Brown said.

Baylark posts his best career showing

BAYLARK from page 14

It took Baylark three seasons to catch the first touchdown pass of his career, but it only took him 54 seconds to pick up number two.

On the ensuing kickoff, Black Bears' return man Arel Gordon fumbled the ball, giving UMass possession at the Maine six-yard line. Two plays later, Coen scrambled right and tossed a pass – while being taken down by defensive end Patrick McCrossen – to Baylark in the right side of the endzone, and he made a one-handed diving catch to ultimately seal the victory.



"[His second touchdown] was a circus thing off a scramble, and he just makes a great catch in the endzone," UMass coach Don Brown said. "It was a very good throw and catch. The only guy that is going to catch it is Steve. If he doesn't, nobody is going to. I thought it was a good job of adlibbing as Liam got chased around there a little bit, scrambled out to his right and made a nice throw."

Coincidentally, it was the seventh game of last season that Baylark provided his biggest performance, running for 192 yards and three touchdowns in a 38-21 win over No. 7 New Hampshire.

That performance started a five-game stretch in which he ran for 750 yards and five touchdowns after only rushing for 388 yards and three touchdowns during the first six contests of 2004.

He was well ahead of last year's pace entering Saturday, with 512 yards on the ground, but still with three touchdowns. Baylark now has 710 rushing yards and six total trips to the endzone.

"If you look at last year around this time, it's when he got on a nice roll," Baylark said. "Hopefully for us, we can keep him healthy, and he'll get on a similar roll."

Steve Baylark rushed for a total of 198 yards and one touchdown on 30 carries, and caught six passes for 64 yards and two TDs.

Crusaders spoil hockey home opener

HOCKEY from page 14

Freshman Cory Quirk assisted on one of the goals by UMass during the team's 3-2 home opener loss to Holy Cross on Saturday. The assist was the first of Quirk's young collegiate career.

quick start but they were forced to wait. Neither Holy Cross nor UMass were able to generate offense in the opening frame. On the other side the Maroon and White only got six shots on HC goalie Tom Quesada.

Winer, however, played particularly well in the period. He was able to fend off 11 Crusader shots to keep the game tied at zero.

UMass had opportunities in the period but could not capitalize.

"It made it very difficult that we didn't generate any offense," Cahoon said. "In the first period especially we had grinds we had initial rushes and a couple of semi-breakaways and a two-on-one and never got the puck into the net."

Senior Jamie Solon broke the ice for the Minutemen at the 6:42 mark of the second period to put his team up 1-0. Assists on the score were awarded to freshman Cory Quirk and senior captain Marvin Degon.

Quirk won the draw in the HC zone and the puck found Degon. The defenseman unleashed a rocket on Quesada who saved it but left the rebound out in front of the net. Solon collected the puck and netted it home for the first goal of the game.

The Crusaders came right back with a goal of their own to knot the game up at one with under two minutes remaining in the second.

Reinhardt was able to beat Winer for his first goal of the season. James Sixsmith was able to find Reinhardt from the back of the net for the assist. Nappo was also credited with an assist on the goal.

UMass senior captain Stephen Werner put the Minutemen ahead for the second time when he scored his first goal of the season.

Werner initially passed the puck to Anderson and then rolled to the right corner of the net. Anderson fired a shot on goal that was saved by Quesada, but he once again left the rebound right in front for Werner. Quesada saved Werner's initial shot but the captain stuffed his second rebound over the goalie's leg pad for the score.

Mixed results for UM

M. SOCCER from page 14

Yesterday was rainy and cold at Rudd Field, making the playing surface slick for both teams. Senior Emie Billitier gave the Minutemen reason to celebrate on Sunday as he netted the only goal of the game for either side.

Billitier, who sat out much of the beginning of the season with injury, put UMass up for good at the 6:36 mark of the game with his first score of the season. Senior Oral Ballen sent a pass to Scudamore to start the play.

Scudamore then dribbled the ball into the Explorers defense before seeing a streaking Billitier. Scudamore perfectly timed the past and hit Billitier on the run up the left side of the 18-yard box. Billitier took the ball and beat one La Salle defender before sending a laser that hit nothing but net.

"It felt good to get out and back into the swing of things and help out," Billitier said after the game. "Not just because I've been injured but I also haven't been producing. It felt good to get on the board and help out."

The UMass defense held strong the rest of the way to secure the shutout for Simmons, his third of the season. It wasn't an easy task however.

La Salle had the ball in the UMass half for much of the second half. Only a few times were the Minutemen able to get the ball into Explorer territory to relieve some pressure off the defense.

Unlike Friday, however, the Maroon and White held onto their lead and brightened up they're future a little bit.

"We kept them off the board," Koch said. "But I certainly have more gray hairs now than I need because of it."

Fordham, George Washington and St. Bonaventure, who entering Sunday were all ranked just above the Minutemen in the A-10 standings; all lost their respective games yesterday. That greatly improves UMass' chances of entering the six team conference tournament.

break from the ordinary
Acapulco airFare & 7 nights at El Presidente $899
Cancun airFare & 7 nights at Dos Playas $749
Negril airFare & 7 nights at Fun Holiday Beach Resort $769
Prices based on quad occupancy. Subject to change and availability. Taxes and applicable fees not included. All flights out of Boston, MA be a spring break rep and travel FREE!
U of M Campus Center Rm 224
(413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.northamherstmotors.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repairs & Glass Replacement

Regency Hair Stylists
"Get a new look for fall"
$ 5.00 OFF a haircut
Monday - Thursday
Bring this ad
and your Student ID.
Call for an appointment or stop by the salon
253 - 9526
189 N. Pleasant St
Amherst, MA 01002

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
WANT A HOT JOB?
Learn to be a Professional Bartender!
Classes Starting Now!
Boston Bartenders School
218 Memorial Avenue • West Springfield
1-800-357-3210
www.bostonbartender.com

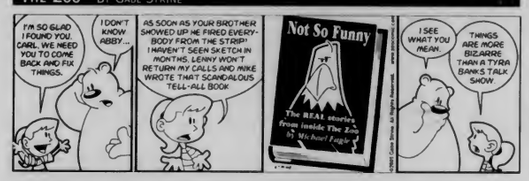
Monday-Friday 7:30-6
Thursday 7:30-8
Saturday 7:30-4
SATURN
Saturn of Hadley
40 Russell St, Route 9
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 584-6066
Our service center repairs all kinds of cars...not just Saturns.
Oil & Filter Change Only $19.99
Includes topping off all fluids, adjusting tire pressures, Check anti/freeze for winter protection. FREE wash & vacuum FREE 27 point inspection
• Mass State inspection Station
• Free shuttle service to & from UMASS
• Located directly on bike path & PVTA stop.
No Appointment Needed
10% off mechanical repairs
Late hours on Thursdays

ROADHOUSE C•A•F•E
The Roadhouse Cafe features
• Organic fruits and vegetables
• Healthy and nutritious homemade meals
• Custom-baked cakes
"WHERE BAY ROAD MEETS ROUTE 9"
A Healthy Place To Eat!
Mention this ad and receive $1.00 off a breakfast special!
OPEN: Monday-Friday 6:30 a.m. - 3 p.m., Sat.-Sun. 7 to 2 p.m.
BELCHERTOWN, MA • 323-6175

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

Franco the Clarinetting Navy Bean By Rainy Stanford

Elsie Hooper By Robert D. Kryzkowski

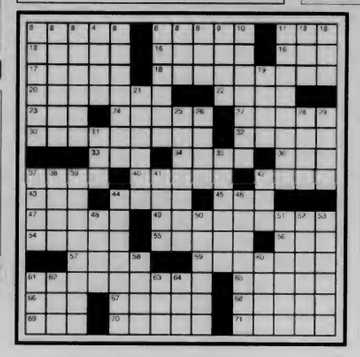


Functional Dystopia By Zeid Rusan

Nailed By T.J. Pederson

The Zoo By Gabe Strine

Quote of the Day



"All love that has not friendship for its base, is like a mansion built upon sand."

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox

ACROSS
1 Nebraska city
6 Suffers defeat
11 Spider's lair
14 Wanderer
15 Dickens' Heep
16 Tiller's tool
17 Stagnant
18 Creating farmland on hillsides
20 Monstrous
22 Coin channel
23 ___ Garcia, CA
24 Flock members
27 Fertile loam
30 College of botany?
32 Kukla's friend
33 Clergyman's title abbr.
34 Take a break
36 Rage
37 Effortless
40 Key of 'Eroica'
42 Hive dwellers
43 Fruit beverage
44 Ab. formerly
45 Top card
47 Mrs. Dooite
49 Halfway items
54 Wide grin
55 Follow subsequently
56 Ignited
57 Diplomat's skill
59 Provencal verse
61 Loco in the Old West?
65 "Dining Miss Daisy" star Jessica
66 Nol of Cambodia
67 Disney's mobile name
68 Napoleon's fate
69 Civil War general
70 Swine supper
71 Chopped into small cubes

DOWN
1 Baseball bird
2 Genghis Khan, for one
3 Strongly disinclined
4 In this place
5 Pretentious performer
6 Part of M.I.K
7 Mined mineral
8 Tilled Brit
9 Jug lugs
10 Onion relative
11 Harmless fib
12 Long time
13 Say pretty please
19 Groovy
21 Duggie's tool
25 Near the beginning
26 Petition
28 Address for a king
29 Goes out with
31 Wail like a baby
35 ___ of Liberty
37 Has a meal
38 Comic Sandler
39 Musical half step
41 Visage
42 Arthur or Lilke
44 Nativity scenes
46 Peaked, as a flood
48 Spirited style
50 Evaluate
51 Medical facility
52 Ignite
53 Failed to leave
58 Pew
60 DeVito TV series
61 Feeling under the weather
62 Fish eggs
63 Duran Duran song
64 Blackjack

Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

Gelato of the Month:
Pistachio
Word of the Week:
Sarsparilla
Superstition of the Day:
It's good luck to send email, and then immediately receive email from that person (before she or he got it). If this happens, you will get a baked good you did not expect.

andiamo
256 • FOOD
www.andiamo.cc

Submit your comic!
e-mail collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You are doing an excellant job not biting your nails.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Share that banana bread with your neighbors and they might like you more.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Your mouse pad is getting awfully worn-out.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You will see a giraffe in an unexpected place tonight.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Stock up on lotion and chapstick before winter sets in.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You are running dangerously low on duct tape.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
If you decorate your room for Halloween you will suddenly have many friends.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You are wearing entirely too much green today.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your goal for the day is to drink at least eight cups of water.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Your first class today will be cancelled. Go back to sleep.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your goal for the week is to attend one UMass sporting event.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
If you stop checking your e-mail you will forget your password.

New in Town?
Amherst Hairstylists
Caren's Place
You can trust us with your hair.
40 Main St.
Downtown Amherst
(Next to Newbury Comics)
413 253 1200
Mon-Fri 10-6
Sat 10-4
Visa/MC/S
This Ad Will Run Mon & Thurs
•Haircuts & Styling
•Hair Coloring (Free Highlighting Consultation)
•Multi-Color Highlighting
•Body & Facial Waxing
•For Both Men & Women
•Walk Ins Welcome!
Get it done right the first time!
Fall Semester Coupon Specials!
1/2 price facial waxing on Wed through December.
$1 off any service with this ad until 12/05
Only with this coupon
www.carens-place.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

$600 Group Fundraiser Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising programs Equals $1,000-$3,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for up to $600 in bonuses when you schedule your fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments, Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

Auto for Sale

92 Honda Accord Auto loaded 145K Good Condition $2200 obo David 253-3297

Employment

Kitchen help wanted. Must be able to work 20hrs/week. Apply at DP Dough Downtown Amherst, MA 01003

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8.00 Hr. 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location – NO SALES! Night & wknd; shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

Employment

Bartenders/ Waitresses/ Promoters Wanted. New Western Mass Night Club/ Sports Bar. Only 15 minutes from campus! Call Don @ 413 536-8494 Email don@maximum-promo.com

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience nees. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Web programmer with experience with graphics design wanted for work in the Office of ALANA Affairs. Up to $10.00 an hour. Apply at office in room 302 in Student Union or email ofalana@stuaf.umass.edu

Happy Birthday

Happy 19th Birthday, Jess Redman! We love u!

Instruction

Private Boxing Lessons for both males & females in Northampton www.westernmassboxing.com

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening experiments $10/hr English must be your first language email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Travel

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Travel

SPRING BREAK – Early Booking Specials – FREE Meals & Drinks - $50 Deposit – 800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

Wanted

Pregnant? Bi-lingual Spanish couple, waiting to adopt. Love nature, music, and animals. Will share these interests with your baby. Happy to share letters, pictures and to stay in touch. Call Brightside 24/7 and ask about Dawn and John. 1-877-777-7774 license #1465107

Collegian Advertising: Call 545-3500 or visit us between 8:30am & 3pm.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, OCTOBER 24, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Black Bears get hunted

UMass outlasts Maine for win

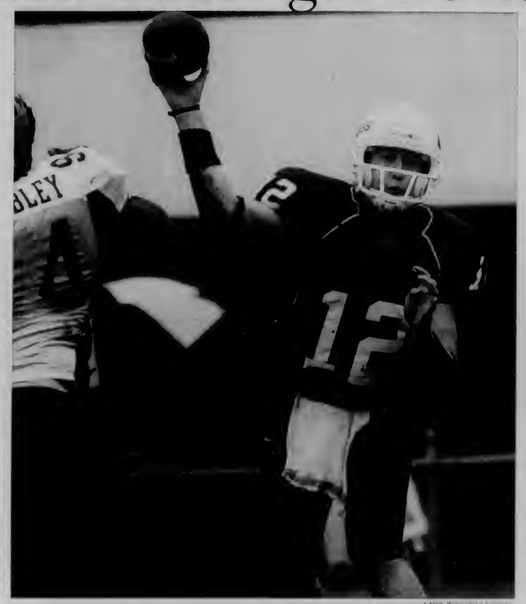
By Eric Adias
Collegian Staff

ORONO, Maine — For the first time this season, the defense of the Massachusetts football team (6-1, 5-0 Atlantic 10) let up more than seven points and surrendered its first touchdown since Sept. 1. Despite the difference in trend, the Minutemen were able to overcome the Black Bears of Maine (2-5, 0-4, A-10) on both sides of the ball and beat them 35-14 on Morse Field at Alfond Stadium on Saturday.

UMass will play it's final home game of the season on Saturday against the UNH Wildcats.

Throughout the season, the spotlight has been shining brightly on the Minuteman defense, which continues to lead the nation in all defensive categories, but against Maine, the UMass offense broke out as well. Along with Baylark's performance, freshman quarterback Liam Coen got into a groove from the start and by the end of the day completed 21-of-31 passes for 236 yards, three touchdowns and no interceptions.

Following a three-and-out by Maine, the Minutemen began the offensive drive with 80 yards of turf in front of them. Baylark gave the Maine defense a taste of things to come on his first carry, taking the ball right up the gut for 19 yards.



UMass	35
Maine	14

Two completions from Coen to junior receiver Brandon London, including a crucial third down and nine, brought the Maroon and White close to Maine territory at it's own 48-yard line.

A second third down came three plays later. With an empty backfield behind him, Coen rolled out to his right, stepped into the pocket and fired a bullet to the right sideline, where senior receiver Dominique Stewart caught the pass, which was good for 20 yards and a first down.

After two Baylark rushes, the Minutemen were again

See FOOTBALL on page 12

Freshman quarterback Liam Coen and the UMass football team were able to knock off Atlantic 10 foe Maine 35-14 on Saturday. Throughout the contest, Coen completed 21-of- 31 passes for 236 yards and three touchdowns.

Baylark leads the way for UM on the ground

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

ORONO, Maine — It shouldn't have come as much of a surprise that Steve Baylark just played the best game of his career on Saturday.

After spending two straight weeks running the football at McGuirk Stadium, where the mud was at least ankle-high after rain of biblical proportions hit the area, Baylark got to do his thing on Alfond Stadium's fully carpeted surface.

What ensued for the Massachusetts football team's junior running back were career highs in rushing yards (198), receptions (six), receiving yards (64), receiving touchdowns (two) and yards from scrimmage (262).

And it was a game that Baylark needed to step up in, as senior R.J. Cobbs, UMass' second tailback, stayed in Amherst with a hip injury.

So he took the ball 30 times and ran it down Maine's throat by hitting the right holes, making players miss and breaking tackles.

"I come to play every game thinking I'm going to have a big game," Baylark said. "It's a lot easier with R.J. [in the game] because of our one-two punch, but if somebody is out, you've got to step up."

When he wasn't running the ball, he was finding himself open downfield and was able to catch the first two touchdown passes of his career.

After rushing the ball three times for 23 yards to set the offense up on third-and-six from the Maine 10-yard line, quarterback Liam Coen faked the handoff to Baylark, who managed to slip past the defense before Coen hit him with a 10-yard strike, giving the Minutemen the lead for good in the third quarter, 21-14 following a successful two-point conversion pass to Brandon London.

See BAYLARK on page 12

Ihedigbo earns football version of triple crown

By Eric Adias
Collegian Staff

ORONO, Maine — Some would call it the triple crown or a hat trick, but UMass' strong safety James Ihedigbo was able to do it all during the Minutemen's 35-14 win over Maine on Saturday, recording a sack, an interception and a forced fumble throughout the contest at Morse Stadium.

Ihedigbo, who currently leads the Atlantic 10 in sacks with 7.5 in 2005, was able to pick up some slack when All-American senior free-safety Shamon James left the game with a sprained shoulder and a concussion during the first play of the afternoon on Saturday.

With Maine coming out shooting, Ihedigbo responded, telling his defensive squad, which ranks atop the nation in scoring, passing and rushing, what they needed to hear.

"Defensively, we didn't come out and play the way we're capable of," Ihedigbo said. "We talked at halftime and said, 'lets pick each other up lets play how we know we're capable of playing,' and we came out the second half as the UMass Minuteman defense.

The second half is exactly when Ihedigbo took control of the game.

With Maine on it's 21-yard early on in the third quarter, Ihedigbo did what he has done best all season — he blitzed. Getting into the backfield, the multi-tasked defensive back took Maine quarterback Ron Whitcomb to the ground for a loss of eight yards, resulting in a punting situation.

Later in the third quarter, after UMass took the lead 21-14, Ihedigbo did not conserve his energy as a member of the kick-off team. Ihedigbo sprinted down the field and as Maine return-man Arel Gordon cut to the left, Ihedigbo hit him hard, forcing the ball to come loose. The forced fumble set-up a TD pass from UMass quarterback Liam Coen to tailback Steve Baylark, which resulted in a 28-14 lead for the Minutemen.

For Ihedigbo, the key turnover represented a spring-board for the Maroon and White, both offensively and defensively.

"I think that was really the turning point in the game," Ihedigbo said. "I just knew my assignment, ran down field and keep contain, and I just tried to hit [Gordon] as hard as I could."

The third play by the Amherst-native came at the beginning of the fourth quarter when Whitcomb through a blooper of a pass to the right side of the field, which Ihedigbo stepped in front of and picked off.

Along with his sacks, Ihedigbo is also second in the A-10 in tackles for a loss with 11 and has 33 total tackles this season.

Maroon and White falter lead

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

What looked to be a sure win for the Massachusetts hockey team (1-2) over Holy Cross (1-0) turned into a devastating 3-2 loss in a matter of minutes.

The Crusaders scored two goals in two minutes near the end of the third period to tie the game and take the lead to spoil the Minutemen's home opener in front of 4,708 at the Mullins Center on Friday night.

With UMass leading 2-1, the Crusaders' Rob Godfrey tied the game at the 16:35 mark. The play began when HC's Sean Nappo won the faceoff in the

HC	3
UMass	2

UMass zone and the puck was scooped up by Dale Reinhardt. The defensemen then slid the puck to Godfrey who slid it past a screened Gabe Winer.

The puck was not shot hard by Godfrey, and it was apparent that Winer was never able to get a good eye on it. After the goal the crowd became immediately silent as if someone had hit the mute button.

"I'm sure Gabe would like to have that shot back," UMass coach Don Cahoon said after the game. "Obviously, there were a couple of breakdowns one on face off coverage and our defensemen could have knocked it down, there were a couple of things that we could have done to change that second goal."

UMass senior captain Matt Anderson also commented on Winer's lack of sight on the tying goal.

"I don't think Gabe really got a good eye on it, it was a pretty good screen out front," he said.

Despite a 2-1 lead in the third period, senior captain Marvin Degon and the UMass hockey team were outlasted by Holy Cross at the Mullins Center on Friday. Degon assisted on the first score by the Minutemen.

Then, no more than a minute and a half later, the Crusaders stunned the Minutemen and the crowd by taking the lead.

This time Godfrey took the puck and passed it through the neutral zone where he found teammate Dewey Thompson. Thompson then slid a pass to winger Kai Magnussen who got the shot off and beat Winer for the game-winner.

The Minutemen pulled Winer with under a minute to play was unable to capitalize with six skaters on the ice.

"The third goal was a bad change and a forward not picking up his check," Cahoon said. "You make two huge mental mistakes like that in three or two minutes it turns the tide of the game."

In the first period the crowd was eager for their team to get off to a

See HOCKEY on page 12

Minutewomen split

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

It appears the Massachusetts women's soccer team will have played fourth regardless of where it plays.

For the second week in a row, and the third time this season, the Minutewomen (5-8-1, 4-3 Atlantic 10) went over the weekend, this time on the road at two completely different environments in George Washington and LaSalle.

LaSalle	1
UMass	0

UMass lost a hard-fought 1-0 decision to the Colonials (5-9-0, 2-4-0, A-10) on Friday but bounced back on Friday with a dominating shut-out victory over the Explorers (4-11-2, 1-5, A-10), 2-1 on the turf of speedster Britt Cardoso.

With the win, the Minutewomen play to guarantee for the final two spots for the 2005 A-10 Tournament, and will close their regular season this weekend on the road against Charlotte and Richmond.

This time around, the wild card was the playing surface. At both fields, where home-field advantage is explicated in its playing surface, there was a period of adjustment for the Minutewomen to get used to the pace of the ball on the surface.

UMass	2
GW	1

"We basically played on two very distinct playing surfaces," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "One was like being at a race track, and the other was like playing in the infield at a NASCAR race."

On Friday, the adjustment came too little and too late.

Playing on FieldTurf for the

See W. SOCCER on page 11

Men's soccer remains in the playoff hunt

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

In order to keep its postseason hopes alive, the Massachusetts men's soccer team needed a big weekend against George Washington and La Salle. The Minutemen were able to do just that with a 2-2 double-overtime tie on Friday against the Colonials and a 1-0 shutout victory over the Explorers yesterday.

UMass	2
GW	2
UMass	1
LaSalle	0

Entering the weekend, UMass was in 8th place in the A-10 standings, with Temple being the only team looking up at it. Had the team not produced this weekend it looked as though their playoff hopes would have slipped away.

"[These games] were huge. We got to turn it around," UMass coach Sam Koch said on Sunday. "If we didn't get a result today our season probably would have been over."

On Friday it took a come from behind effort for the Colonials to force overtime. UMass squandered a two-goal advantage late in the second half and neither team could put home the game winner in the extra frames.

UMass got on the board first with sophomore Kenny Cook's fourth goal of the season. At 17:22 Cook headed a ball past GWU goalie Derek Hss. The assist on the play was credited to Matt Lemire as he was the one who inbounded the corner kick. It was just the second UMass goal this season off of a corner kick.

The two teams battled back and forth for the rest of the first half.

Then just five minutes into the second half, freshman Costa Isolirides extended the Minutemen's lead to 2-0 when he netted his first collegiate goal. The play began when junior Jason Scudamore stole the ball at midfield and advanced it to freshman Prince Ofosu, who then found Isolirides on the left side.

Greg McKay put the Colonials on his back and carried them the rest of the way. At 55:19 the sophomore cut the UMass lead in half when he headed the ball past freshman goalkeeper Zack Simmons.

McKay then came right back with the equalizer in the 79th minute of play. He took a pass from Steve Brown and sent a rocket past Simmons from just three yards out.

"Good thing is that after they got the second goal we didn't cave in, we kept going at them," Koch said.

It turned out that Simmons would be the key to preserving the tie for the Minutemen. The walk-on made a career high 13 saves on the day. He especially played well when it counted most. During the second overtime Simmons stopped three GWU shots.

"For the most part we did some good things made a couple of mistakes that cost us. That's just the way our season's been," Koch said.

See M. SOCCER on page 12

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 25, 2005 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM VOLUME CXVI ISSUE 33

Online police scanner proves controversial

By Caleb Lyons
Collegian Correspondent

A controversial Web site, umasspolice.com, which broadcasts a police scanner tuned into local police frequencies, has drawn an unexpected amount of attention on and off campus at the University of Massachusetts since its launch roughly a month ago.

"I've heard a gunman holding up someone in the dorm recently, car chases, [and] fights broken up," said the Web site's creator, Jared Stenquist, regarding the content he broadcasts. "It's basically like you are right there with the police."

A primarily self-taught Web designer and the Webmaster for the UMass Stockbridge School of Agriculture, Stenquist is a junior communications major who hosts the site in his spare time.

The idea to stream his police scanner into a Webcast came after noticing the amount of attention his own scanner drew from his roommates, said Stenquist.

Now living off campus and able to broadcast with an Internet connection not provided by the school, Stenquist is gaining some notoriety stemming from his Web site.

Radio scanners pick up the wireless transmissions that are broadcast on a given frequency or set of frequencies. Stenquist says his site switches between UMass and Amherst Police transmissions. The scanner then locks onto a given area of activity on one of the frequencies and plays it.

While Stenquist's site doesn't break any laws and therefore must be allowed to run, the reactions to the service that the site offers vary.

See SCANNER on page 3

Home Depot construction worries residents

By Gabriel Dye
Collegian Staff

The construction of a new Home Depot on Route 9, expected to begin in the spring, has some Hadley residents concerned over the town's future.

A little over a year ago the Hadley Planning Board approved a 323,401 square foot "Hadley Corner" project, which will include the Home Depot and as many as eight other retailers. The shopping center, located on the corner of Route 9 and North Maple Street, will be about the same size as the Mountain Farms Mall directly across the street.

The Home Depot, with its signature orange box design, is the "world's largest home improvement retailer," according to its Web site. It operates more than 1,900 stores throughout North America.

Workers began preparing the site at the end of September. Currently a leveled mound of dirt, the site is about 800 feet behind the Awesome Blossom's greenhouses.

"[The Home Depot] development that's coming in is a single story massive building," said David Elvin, a member of the Hadley Neighbors for Sensible Development. "Those kinds of retail establishments depend on thousands of cars every day and Route 9 isn't fully developed."

Hadley Neighbors is a group dedicated to "preserving Hadley's rural beauty," according to its Web site (www.Hadleyneighbors.org). They have initiated a long-range planning process to curb issues of land loss, excessive traffic and an insufficient water supply.

Traffic and land loss stand as the most important issues in this development, according to Elvin, a transportation planning consultant for major projects, including the Big Dig in Boston. He estimates that the Home Depot could bring in four to five thousand customers per day, potentially clogging Route 9.

The Home Depot plan also required an expansion of the town's business zones. An additional 30 acres were added to the project, settling the total site area at 52 acres.

"The zoning change required a two-thirds majority vote [by the planning board]," Elvin said. "It passed by six votes; our vote is in the minority."

Home Depot isn't the only big box development in the works. A 212,000 square foot Wal-Mart Supercenter may join The Hampshire Mall as part of a 309,172 square foot expansion. An area running adjacent to the Long Hollow Bison Farm in Hadley has been proposed for a new 140,000 square foot Lowe's Home Improvement building.

The Hadley Planning Board is considering several traf-

See DEPOT on page 3

Route 9 in Hadley, which runs next to the Hampshire Mall, is expected to see an influx in traffic when new developments, such as Home Depot, are built and opened.

Hurricane Wilma sweeps across Florida

By Curt Anderson
Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Hurricane Wilma knifed through Florida with winds up to 125 mph Monday, shattering windows in skyscrapers, breaking water mains and knocking out power to 3.2 million customers, with still a month left to go in the busiest Atlantic storm season on record.

At least four people were killed in Florida, bringing the death toll from the storm's march through the tropics to 23.

After a slow, weeklong journey that saw it pound Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula for two days, Wilma made a mercifully swift seven-hour dash across lower Florida from its southwestern corner to heavily populated Miami, Fort Lauderdale and West Palm Beach on the Atlantic coast.

"We have been huddled in the living room trying to stay away from the windows. It got pretty violent there for a while," said 25-year-old Eddie Kenny, who was at his parents' home in Plantation near Fort Lauderdale. "We have trees down all over the place and two fences have been totally demolished, crushed, gone."

The 21st storm of the 2005 season — and the eighth hurricane to hit Florida in 15 months — howled ashore around daybreak just south of Marco Island as a Category 3, knocking out power to the entire Florida Keys. A tidal surge of up to 9 feet swamped parts of Key West in chest-high water, and U.S. 1, the only highway to the mainland, was flooded.

"A bunch of us that are the old-time Key Westers are kind of waking up this morning, going, 'Well, maybe I should have paid a little more attention,'" said restaurant owner Amy Culver-Aversa, among the 90 percent of Key West residents who chose to ignore the fourth mandatory evacuation order so far this year. As it moved across the state, Wilma weakened to a Category 2 storm with winds of 105 mph. But it was still powerful enough to peel away roofs, flatten trees, litter the streets with billboards, turn debris into missiles and light up the sky with the blue-green flash of popping power transformers.

Officials said it was the most damaging storm to hit the Fort Lauderdale area since 1950.

The storm left homes and businesses without power as far north as Daytona Beach, an eight-hour drive up Interstate-95 from Key West. A tornado spun off by the storm damaged an apartment complex near Melbourne on the east coast, 200 miles from where Wilma came ashore.

By early afternoon, Wilma had swirled out into the open Atlantic, back up to 115-mph Category 3 strength but on a course unlikely to have much effect on the East Coast. Forecasters said it would stay well offshore.

In Fort Lauderdale, Miami and Miami Beach, countless windows were blown out of high-rises. Along downtown Miami's Brickell Avenue, broken glass from skyscrapers littered streets and sidewalks. Broken water mains in the Fort Lauderdale area prompted advisories to boil water, and a ruptured main in downtown Miami sprayed water 15 feet in the air.

The Miami police department building lost some letters on its sign.

"It was a wild and crazy night," Lt. Bill Schwartz said. "This building, built in 1976, shook like it was 1876."

In Weston, near Fort Lauderdale, Kim DuBois sat in her darkened house with her two children and husband, with the only light coming from the battery-powered pumpkin lantern they bought for Halloween.

"I could hear tiles coming off the roof," she said. "There are trees on cars and flooding at the end of our street."

In the snowbird enclave Marco Island, where only about 3,000 of the 15,000 residents were believed to have stayed for the

See WILMA on page 2

Tina Albrecht looks at her Mazda 626 after a large tree crushed it Monday morning. High winds from Hurricane Wilma and an approaching cold front caused power outages and damage to the area.

College tuition rates escalate at a slower rate

By Nicholas Joy
Daily Pennsylvanian (U. Penn)

PHILADELPHIA — The price of a college education continues to rise, but not as quickly as it has in years past. According to a study by the College Board, the average tuition and fees at four-year private institutions rose $1,948, or 5.9 percent, this year, while four-year public college tuition rose $365, or 7.1 percent.

While both numbers are higher than the rate of inflation, they are also lower than corresponding percentages for previous years.

This year, the average private-school tuition was $21,235. Penn's tuition for the 2004-05 school year, at $30,716, will be significantly higher than the average private university's. It is comparable, however, to those of peer institutions such as Princeton, at $31,450, and Harvard, at $28,752.

The consistent increases in tuition that have become a fixture of annual budgets in higher education have led some to question why college is becoming so expensive.

U.S. Secretary of Education Margaret Spellings has convened a National Commission on the Future of Higher Education, in part to study the tuition increases.

The College Board study "just underscores the need for the higher-education commission the Secretary appointed to look at, among other things, why it costs so much to get a college education," said Susan Aspey, a Department of Education spokeswoman.

Penn's tuition rose 4.6 percent for the 2004-05 year, according to Bonnie Gibson, University vice president for budget and management analysis.

"We've been controlling our increases," Gibson said. "From 1994 to 2006, Penn has increased its tuition at a lower rate than the average private school in all but two years."

Tom Pals, a spokesman for the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, of which Penn is a member, cited drops in endowment returns and donations as reasons for tuition increases at private schools over the past few years.

Penn's endowment grew by 8.5 percent during the past fiscal year. This rate — a drop from the previous year's 16.8 percent returns — was the lowest in the Ivy League.

"There have been lower-than-average college-endowment returns over the past few years, so colleges have no choice but to turn to tuition," Pals said. "Last year was the first year since 2001 that giving to colleges increased."

Pals added that these challenges in raising money have been coupled with dramatic increases in the costs of running a university.

"Part of that increase [in tuitions] is the need for institutions to protect computer networks and personal information from hackers," Pals said.

Gibson said that while decreasing spendable endowment during the early-decade stock-market slowdown "informed [administration] conversations about increases," the largest factors in Penn's increases have been the rising costs of health care and energy.

"The cost of health care and other benefits [is important], since over 60 percent of our budget is compensation," Gibson said. "Utilities is driving us. Even before Hurricane Katrina hit, we had increased our steam by 17 percent."

Sandy Baum, a senior policy analyst at the College Board, said that while it is much harder for schools to cut costs than it is in many other private-sector industries, schools have also spent money on amenities, such as increasing the number of singles in dormitories. She said these amenities do not necessarily influence the quality of the education that the schools provide

See TUITION on page 3

UMass becomes home to South American alpacas

By Adam Goldcock
Associated Press

HADLEY, Mass. — With mops of shaggy hair flopping in front of bulging, alien-like eyes that stare with a mix of curiosity and cluelessness, the latest newcomers to the University of Massachusetts seem like they'd be more at home in the make believe world of Dr. Seuss.

But the herd of alpacas — wooly, long-necked natives of South America with a barely 20-year history in the United States — is an increasingly popular sight in Massachusetts and on farms across the country.

The problem is that not too many people know how to care for them when they get sick or injured, which is why the creatures have made their way to the UMass animal farm in Hadley.

Thanks to a $500,000 gift from a Vermont family that breeds alpacas, the University has launched what it calls a first-of-its kind undergraduate program devoted to the study of camelids — animals such as alpacas, camels and llamas that are a bit like horses, something like sheep and a little like cats.

"There are burning questions that need to be answered in terms of reproduction and immunology with alpacas," said Stephen Purdy, director of the new UMass program. "If we can train classes of undergraduate students in alpaca care, we'll be able to supply a whole new breed of farm managers. Those students will have no problems getting a job when they graduate."

Talk to an alpaca farmer, and they're likely to tell you that their attraction to the animals is based on a mix of love at first sight and the realization that the exotic creatures can be cash cows.

Most alpacas sell for anywhere between $15,000 and $50,000, but one male recently fetched $226,000 at auction, said Amy McCroskie, president of the Alpaca Owners and Breeders Association. Although a few farmers specialize in sheering the animals' luxurious wool, most make their money in livestock sales.

"People just simply fall head-over-heels in love with the animals," said McCroskie, who owns about 100 alpacas. "But when they start doing some research, they discover this could be a wonderful business."

Many of the organization's 4,300 members are like Steve and Susan Rice, first-time farmers looking for a change of career or lifestyle.

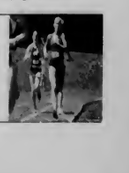
The couple moved to Shrewsbury from Texas in March to raise alpacas.

"We were ready for a new adventure," said Susan Rice. She had been a high school teacher for 25 years, and her husband is a former food scientist for Frito Lay.

"Our children were independent, and we had freedom to make a change," she said. "The lure of life in the slow lane after being in a Dallas suburb was so appealing."

The animals are relatively low mainte-

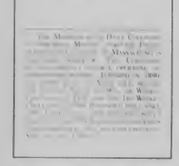
See ALPACA on page 2



ARTS & LIVING
WARHOLS RELEASE NEW ALBUM
"Oddfitorium or Warlords of Mars" is their newest album.
PAGE 5

EDITORIAL/OPINION
MORALE LOW
Within the poor student turn out for fridays game, one fears a pattern developing.
PAGE 4

WEATHER
TODAY Heavy Rain/ Wind, H 48
TONIGHT Showers/ Wind, L 37°
TOMORROW AM Showers, H 48°, L 32°



SPORTS
MINI SUCCESS
UMass women's cross country places third in weekend mini-meet.
PAGE 12

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael Busack
Managing Editor Cameron J. Woods
Business Manager Hiral Shah
Production Manager Nicholas Belanger
Night Supervisor Sherd Wolnik
Advertising Manager Kerry O'Grady
Advertising Production Lauren Egastan
Editorial Production Amanda Allen
Arts & Living Editor Matthew O'Rourke
Comics Editor Amanda Allen
Editorial Editor Allison Edles
News Editor Dan O'Brien
Photo Editor Kate Subsenmarc
Sports Editor Jeff Rose
Circulation Manager Thomas Hecht
Distribution Manager Nick Gleason
Finance Manager Daniel Conti
Human Resource Phil Sandler
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Caren Tortorice
Assistant Business Nathan Chomicki
Asst. Arts & Living Mackenzie Isler
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Jones
Assistant News Megan Daly
Assistant News Matt Bellveau
Assistant Photo Elizabeth Caristi
Assistant Sports Eric Athas
Assistant Sports Dan Duggan
Assistant Editorial Kristen LaCasse

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Cameron J. Woods
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Julie Turco
COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Belanger
PRODUCTION STAFF
Tiffany Van Langen, Jessie Sussman

Area news in brief: Man gets 3 year sentence in UMass beatings

By Dan O'Brien
Associate State

Man gets 3 years for U Mass beatings

NORTHAMPTON — A Ware man who pleaded guilty to severely beating three University of Massachusetts students was sentenced to three years in jail on Thursday.

Timothy R. Lamora, 20, of 61 Glendale Circle was among a group of five men who drove to the UMass campus on Oct. 24, 2004 following the Red Sox World Series victory "looking for trouble," according to prosecutors.

U Mass students Brian Kelley, Brett Blanciforti and Donald Murphy were returning to the Washington dormitory in Southwest when the five men allegedly began beating them. The five men were identified by U Mass police as Lamora, Roger Menard, Ryan Sinclair, Eric Kuzniar and Jason Cancel. All five were charged with two counts each of assault and battery resulting in serious bodily injury and single counts of assault and battery and disorderly conduct. Menard is expected to go on trial this month; the remaining three will go on trial in December.

When UMass police arrived on scene, Blanciforti was lying semi-conscious in a pool of blood. He later underwent surgery and had 12 metal plates inserted into his face. Kelley had several teeth knocked out and suffered a fractured jaw. Murphy suffered severe bruising on his face.

Woman reports carjacking incident

NORTHAMPTON – Police are still investigating a report by a 24-year-old city woman that she was kidnapped outside the Daily Hampshire Gazette offices on Saturday, Oct. 15.

Leonsi Thomas told police she was sitting in her pickup truck around 8:30 p.m. in the Conz St. parking lot when a white man between 20 and 30 years old, approximately 5 feet, 8 inches tall got into her car and forced her to drive up Interstate 91.

Police say Thomas deliberately crashed her car on a highway off-ramp in Brattleboro, Vt. The suspect fled on foot shortly after the crash.

He was described as wearing a white t-shirt, blue jeans and gloves. His face was covered by a winter scarf.

Anyone with information is urged to call Northampton police at 413-587-1100.

Local salon robbed at gunpoint

HADLEY — Two masked men robbed a hair and body salon at gunpoint last Thursday, making off with $1,000 in jewelry and an undisclosed amount of cash, according to police.

The robbery happened at the Auraio at 31 Campus Plaza Road at approximately 6:40 p.m. The salon is located in the Stop and Shop plaza near Liquors 44.

Four employees and four customers were inside at the time of the hold-up. None were injured in the robbery.

Police said the two suspects wore black ski masks and gloves. One was between 6-feet-2-inches and 6-feet-4-inches tall with pale blue eyes and a thin build. He was wearing a black and gray sweater with a snowflake pattern on the front.

The second suspect was about 5-feet-9-inches tall with a heavier build, according to police. He was wearing jeans and a gray, hooded sweatshirt.

The owners of Auraio, Jessica and Gilbert Sarkis of Williamsburg, were not present at the time of the hold-up.

Anyone with information on the case should call Hadley police at 413-584-0803.

Police log: liquor violations reported

By Arka Sen
Collegian Staff

On Friday, there was an animal complaint about a dog tied to a meter at the Black Sheep Deli at 79 Main St. The police arrived at 9:33 a.m. The owner was reprimanded by the Animal Welfare Office.

On Friday afternoon, there was a fight at the West Cemetery at 204 Triangle St. The police arrived at 3:55 p.m. They found a group of teenagers fighting; the teens claimed to be practicing boxing.

On Friday evening, a false alarm went off at the Bank of America at 75 East Pleasant St. The police arrived at 8:54 p.m. A disconnection and a power shortage were found to have set off the alarm.

On Saturday, the Amherst Police assisted the Amherst Fire Department. The police arrived at Puffton Village 391 at 12:04 a.m. At least one personal injury was reported.

Later that morning, there was a disturbance at the Amherst Brewing Company at 24 North Pleasant St. The police arrived at 1:29 a.m. Valentin Gheorghe Burlacu, 24, of New York City, was arrested for disorderly conduct.

On Saturday evening, there was a liquor law violation. The police arrived at 29 East Dr. at 8:08 p.m. William R. Boysen, 19, of Greenwich, CT, was arrested and charged with underage possession of liquor and unlawful possession of a keg.

On Sunday morning, there was another liquor law violation. The police arrived at 1040 North Pleasant St. at 12:13 a.m. Bryan Paul Garrity, 20, of Peabody, and Anthony Santos, 20, of Chelmsford were arrested for underage possession of liquor.

There was a report of vandalism later that morning at the corner of Pine St. and Henry St. The police arrived at 108 Henry St. at 12:55 a.m. A red 1998 Audi had its window smashed.

Later that morning, there was a fight at 563 Bay Rd. The police arrived at 2:11 a.m. The fight cleared up after the police arrived.

UMass farm in Hadley cares for new alpacas

ALPACA from page 1

nance. A few alpacas can live comfortably on a quarter acre of land with plenty of water and hay, and their padded feet mean they won't tear up a pasture.

But as easy as the animals are to manage, Rice says there aren't many places to turn if something goes wrong. She's taking Purdy's camelid studies class to learn more about the animals she and her husband are raising. And the couple will likely turn to Purdy's students when it comes time to hire a full-time farm manager.

"There's definitely a shortage of people who know anything about camelids," she said. "And they're not inexpensive animals, so you want to be sure that you can have them taken care of pretty well."

Along with a peculiar reproductive system – they have a horse-like uterine lining but ovulate like felines – alpacas are easy prey for parasites. Much of the care and treatment for their breeding problems and health ailments are administered by trial and error simply because there haven't been widespread studies of camelids, Purdy said.

The animals spit when they're annoyed and whine when they're agitated. But they have a knack for hiding their weaknesses, so it takes a skilled observer to pick up on subtle symptoms of poor health, Purdy said.

Alpacas are relative newcomers to America. A small number of them were first imported in 1983, and the national herd has grown to about 70,000.

Christine Navarre, a Louisiana State University veterinarian who specializes in camelid studies, said Purdy's program is the first undergraduate program of its kind that she's aware of.

"There are specialists who travel the country, but there are definitely shortages of vets for camelids," she said.

Kristina Flegel of north St. Louis County, Missouri, carries a cria (a young alpaca) at Dos Donas Alpaca Farm. UMass has also recently become the home of several alpacas.

Wilma causes extensive damage

WILMA from page 1

storm, the streets were littered with damaged street signs, roofing shingles, awnings and fences.

The storm impressed even amateur hurricane chaser Josh Morgerman. A marketing executive from Los Angeles, Morgerman flew to Tampa on Saturday to meet the storm, left Naples as the eye passed and drove to Everglades City.

"It was very serene and there were birds flying," a wet and shivering Morgerman said. "And then when we got here and got out of the car, it was like a rocket went off."

The insurance industry estimated the insured losses at anywhere from $2 billion to $9 billion.

A man in the Fort Lauderdale suburb of Coral Springs died when a tree fell on him. Another man in rural Collier County died when his roof collapsed on him or a tree fell on his roof. In Palm Beach County, a man went to move his van and was killed when debris smashed him into the windshield. An 83-year-old St. Johns County woman died in a weekend car crash while evacuating.

Wilma also killed at least six people in Mexico and 13 others in Jamaica and Haiti as it made is way across the Caribbean.

In Cuba, rescuers used scuba gear, inflatable rafts and amphibious vehicles to pull nearly 250 people from their flooded homes in Havana after Wilma sent huge waves crashing into the capital city and swamped neighborhoods up to four blocks inland with 3 feet of water.

In Cancun, Mexico, troops and federal police moved in to control looting at stores and shopping centers ripped open by the hurricane, and hunger and frustration mounted among Mexicans and stranded tourists. President Vicente Fox announced plans to start evacuating some 30,000 frazzled tourists.

Wilma's arrival in Florida came five days after it astounded forecasters with terrifying Category 5 winds of 175 mph. At one point, it was the most intense storm – as measured by internal barometric pressure – on record in the Atlantic basin.

Wilma shared space in the Atlantic with Tropical Depression Alpha, which became the record-breaking 22nd named storm of the 2005 season. Alpha, which drenched Haiti and the Dominican Republic on Sunday, was not considered a threat to the United States.

Cars attempt to cross flooded waters west of Canan, Mexico, in the aftermath of Hurricane Wilma on Sunday. The hurricane left thousands homeless and approximately 35,000 tourists stranded.

Fall Under The Spell Of
Harry Potter
Wed. October 26th
11:30-2:00pm in all DCs
Lunch menu featuring:
Bat Wings chicken wings
Rubeus Hagrid corn on the cob
Dumbledore's Password lemon sorbet
Dobby's Sticky Toffee Pudding
Magic Wands pretzel rods dipped in chocolate with sprinkles
Enter to win the latest book... "The Half Blood Prince"
Dining Services UMassAmherst
Naguib Loyal R. Horton Dining Award
Grand Prize Winner '05

Route 9 traffic increase expected

DEPOT from page 1

fic signal and road changes to accommodate the Wal-Mart Supercenter traffic. Changes will be necessary for the other developments as well.

"Hadley has two great resources," Elvin said. "One of them is Route 9. Transportation is a tremendous resource. The other is the farm land, all of these wonderful open spaces. We're not making the best of our resources; not developing it in ways that are sensible."

Elvin believes that the problem may lie in Hadley's lack of "big picture" planning. Hadley doesn't have a professional planner on staff; unlike Amherst, which has a planner and a full-time support staff.

"All [of the planning] is handled by a volunteer board that comes in two or three nights a month to try to get a handle on this," he said. "We don't have a master plan on where the town should go."

The new projects will potentially collect a sufficient amount of tax revenue for the town, although Elvin questions the decision to rely too heavily on such large chain retailers.

"Hadley is relying too much on its commercial revenue," he said. "It's putting all your eggs in one basket if we're going to be depending on a super Wal-Mart for our revenue. With a much larger pool of small business, you're much more stable. That's what communities need to be stable."

"It's crunch time. There are really a lot of decisions that need to be made about these three big projects."

Tuition increases prompt questions

TUITION from page 1

"Colleges and universities need to find ways to be more efficient," Baum said. "I think they will, of necessity, find ways to cut costs."

Tuition increases at both public and private schools have prompted questions as to whether a college education is becoming less accessible to lower- and middle-income students.

The study showed that the average private-school student receives $9,600 in financial aid, nearly cutting costs in half.

Pals said that "stagnant" federal funding of college aid and rising tuition could make it hard for low-income students to afford a college education.

"There is the potential for low-income families to be shut out of higher education," Pals said.

Gibson discounted the influence of federal funding levels on Penn's tuition and financial support for its students.

"I think for an institution like Penn, I'm not sure that has as big an effect on us," Gibson said. "We still find money for financial aid. I think we're always concerned about making sure we're accessible."

Baum, also an economics professor at Skidmore College, believes that the rate of increase in tuition will likely slow in the coming years.

"I think it could slow down some," Baum said. "I would expect that the rate of increase will continue to be above the rate of inflation."

Pals agreed, citing a stronger economy as a key factor.

"This year's 5.9 percent increase at private institutions is the lowest in five years," Pals said. "I'm not going to predict that we'll see a drastic slowdown in the next year, but I think it will slow."

Chicopee resident charged

WESTFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A Chicopee man charged with murdering a college student was ordered held without bail Monday.

Frank Bruso, 27, pleaded innocent in Westfield District Court to killing John O'Connell, a senior at Westfield State College. His next court date was set for Nov. 22.

Police said O'Connell died after getting into a fight outside a Westfield bar early Friday morning. He was injured by a blow to the head, and died several hours later at Baystate Medical Center.

– Associated Press

Students discuss new Web site

SCANNER from page 1

"I think it's a good example of how alternative media empowers individuals," said junior Phil Marsh, a history major.

"People will probably overreact to the Web site, when it's most likely just something college kids will get a kick out of," Marsh added. "It's not like kids are going to use it to coordinate elaborate crime schemes."

Another student, who asked to remain anonymous due to the subject matter, was far more vocal about his negative feelings towards Stenquist's Web site.

"I think that the site is stupid and pointless, because the police aren't going to just broadcast all of their conversations over a frequency they know is being listened to," he stated. "The fact that someone had that much time that they created a Web site dedicated to trying to listen to police broadcasts is stupid. Sure, it's a nice idea and wouldn't it be interesting to listen to all the crime and stuff that happens around here, but we don't need to hear it."

Though they long ago heard of Stenquist's site, the UMass Police appear to be unconcerned about the threat of a student body that intercepts their radio activity. After all, police frequencies are far from private knowledge, as books that contain dozens of such country-wide police dispatch frequencies have been sold for decades and nearly every Radio Shack in the country sells police scanners for under $160.

According to Patrick T. Archibald, deputy chief of UMass Police, the station has been business as usual since the Web site's launch.

"There is no law against listening in on police scanners," Archibald said. "It's all FCC regulated. It's really no different here than any other jurisdiction. I can't see why the department would have anything to hide."

This lack of concern towards Stenquist's site can be attributed to the fact that any given police scanner can only broadcast one channel of communication at a time. With twenty or so frequencies, the listener is only getting a small part of the police force's overall activity. There is also a large amount of code that police use in radio communications making it less likely that a threat would be posed by people listening to the frequencies.

In addition to the constant radio contact, Archibald explained, UMass police are equipped with both cellular phones and in-ear laptops, all of which are used on a day-to-day basis.

Stenquist has also argued that his Web site is more geared toward protecting the student body than it is toward antagonizing the police.

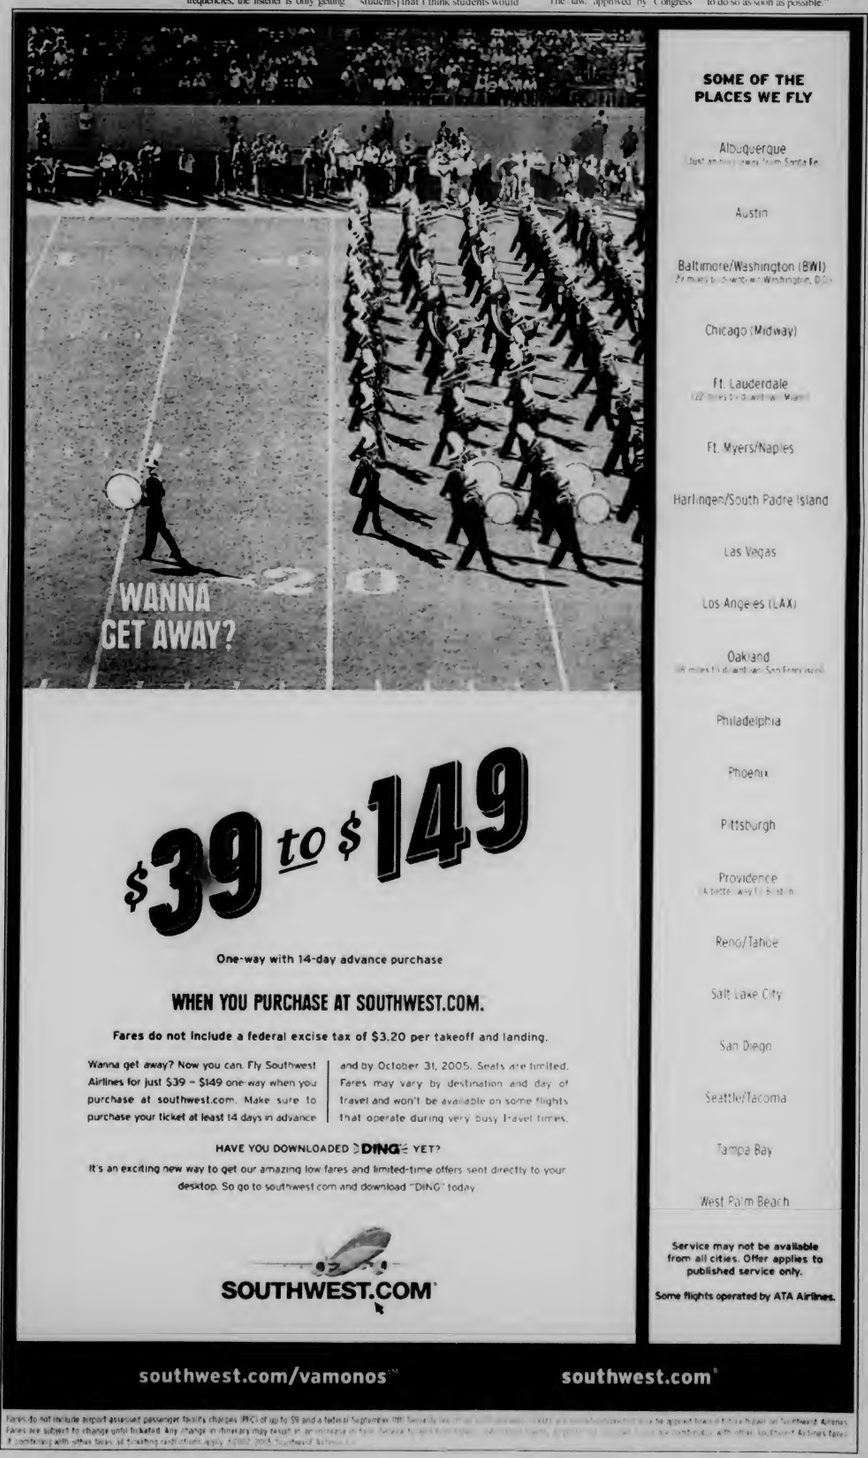
"I feel like there's so much going on in the world we don't know about, whether it be media censorship or just … the University not letting students know what's going on," Stenquist said. "It's not even that I'm trying to hurt [the police] operation or it's something that I enjoy listening to and think the student body would as well. There is information centered there that normally wouldn't be [heard by students] that I think students would

Campaign finance reforms to come soon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Election Commission must begin work on writing tougher campaign finance rules to govern the 2006 elections after a federal appeals court declined to intervene in a challenge.

In a one-page order, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit declined to reconsider a decision requiring the FEC to write new rules to carry out a 2002 campaign finance law.

The FEC requested the full court's review in August after a three-judge panel upheld U.S. District Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly's 2004 ruling striking down several FEC rules interpreting the new law.



Commissioner Michael Toner said Friday's order means the FEC must start drafting tougher rules on political donations, including how Internet activity will be regulated. The FEC could still appeal to the Supreme Court, but has not indicated whether it will do so.

The law, approved by Congress and signed by President Bush in 2002, bans congressional and presidential candidates and national party committees from raising corporate and union money. It also bans unlimited donations from any source.

The law also bans the use of corporate and union money for election-time ads, among other new limits.

Kollar-Kotelly struck down more than a dozen commission regulations that she said opened loopholes for savvy political players to exploit. The law's sponsors, including Reps. Christopher Shays, R-Conn., and Marty Meehan, D-Mass., had sued to try to force the FEC to write stronger regulations.

"I'm very disappointed in the circuit court ruling, but I respect and accept the court's decision," said Toner, a Bush appointee, on Monday. "The FEC has an institutional obligation to revisit all the regulations at issue and to do so as soon as possible."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 25, 2005

"I may not agree with what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Student morale faltering in light of hockey opener

This past Friday night was the University of Massachusetts men's hockey season opener when they played Holy Cross. The routine faithful fans were there, but there was a severe amount of enthusiasm lacking for a team that is arguably UMass' most popular sport. This event mirrors what happened during Homecoming weekend with the UMass football team beating out James Madison with a dismal number of fans actually there to see it. This lack of school spirit is something that will not only affect UMass' sports teams' morale, but will also reflect negatively on the school as a whole.

The hockey game was very intense and, despite the loss, the student population should have been there to cheer them on and encourage what was a very difficult game to play. There was even an attempt to bring students in by awarding free t-shirts to the first 500 spectators. Given the attitude on this campus towards past sporting events, it seems that the only way a decent amount of students will attend a sporting event will be if UMass Athletics is offering to pay for a semester's tuition.

This past weekend was Parent's Weekend and a lot of interested and prospective students were there to see the UMass hockey team in action. The message portrayed to them wasn't one of student participation and enthusiasm, but one of apathy and disinterest. Granted, this school is here for the students and not for the parents (however wealthy they may be), but the feeling they get from seeing a half-empty Mullins Center on opening night is not one that makes them feel good about shelling out money for this school, whether it be through taxes or tuition.

This cannot be a continuing pattern seen throughout the rest of the year. The sports games here are one of the few things that you can always count on to go see if you're looking for something to do. They demand a lot of respect and consideration from the student body and a turnout like Friday's 4,708 (when the maximum seating capacity of the Mullins Center is more than twice that, 10,500) is just insulting. Those banners hang in the Mullins Center for a reason: to show pride and accomplishment among UMass athletics. It's time the student body took acknowledgement of that fact.

This is also only the beginning. The weather is going to get colder and the elements more disagreeable. Trekking out to the Mullins Center or to McGuirk Stadium on a cold and rainy/snowy day is only going to be more difficult. We should all enjoy the games we have available to us now when it's still fall and sweatshirt weather. Hopefully this won't be a trend that will continue into the later sports seasons. While it is very difficult to get to see every sports game one would wish to see, there are a few important ones, such as the first game of the season, which should demand students' attention.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board

Locked in the boiler room

Mike Sances

There's been a lot of press recently about special prosecutor Patrick Fitzgerald's investigation into the outing of Valerie Plame, a formerly undercover CIA operative and the wife of diplomat Joseph Wilson. Wilson was the author of an op ed piece printed in the New York Times in 2003 refuting President Bush's claim, included in his State of the Union address that year, saying Saddam Hussein's Iraq had sought to purchase uranium from Niger. And if that sounds confusing, it's only scratching the surface.

Pity the readers of the New York Times, for they have been literally inundated with coverage of the affair, sometimes dubbed "Plamegate," since Judith Miller, one of their reporters, was jailed for 85 days for refusing to cooperate with Fitzgerald's investigation. Last week, it was widely reported that the inquiry had expanded beyond the disclosure of Plame's identity to the broader question of whether the White House's campaign to promote the war and to discredit any naysayers violated federal law. Rumors are now circulating about possible indictments of Karl Rove, Bush's longtime political guru, and I. Lewis Libby, Dick Cheney's chief of staff.

By Sunday, Times columnist Frank Rich was putting two and two together (or thought he was), self-righteously decrying Libby and Cheney's plottings in "the boiler room of the disinformation factory," and reaffirming the false narrative of a conspiracy to mislead the nation into war with Iraq, a hoax pulled off by a "cadre of neocon zealots."

I must say, it's ironic that Rich can overlook his own organization's role in all this. Right away, when we hear the name Judith Miller we should think of her series of stories published in the Times before the war containing false claims of Iraqi weapons of mass destruction, courtesy of the now discredited informant Ahmad Chalabi. We should also pay attention to Miller's excuse: everyone else was doing it, too. "The analysts, the experts and the journalists who covered them — we were all wrong," she said in comments printed in the Oct. 16 edition of the Times. Sadly, as far as the major news outlets are concerned, she's largely correct.

> From the beginning, this has been a war waged for the benefit of the American elite at the expense of the "average American citizen," whose opinion the New York Times cares about once every 35 occasions. The current scandal over Valerie Plame is nothing more than a shouting match between elites.

That takes care of the self-serving liberal fantasy that this war was sold on some isolated conspiracy localized in the office of Dick Cheney. But it's still only half-true: while such erroneous views were virtually uniform in the mainstream media, there were many of us who knew enough to view the case for war as fraudulent in as early as fall 2002. In fact, most people did: public opinion outside the United States was overwhelmingly against the war. Was this because they thought Hussein was going to attack us but didn't care? Or was it because they knew the information was wrong?

But let us return to the New York Times, the most powerful newspaper in the world, regardless of what we might think of it. Amy Gershkoff and Shana Kushner, two political scientists at Princeton, studied the media's effect on the shift in public opinion toward the war from September 2002 to May 2003. Specifically, they looked at the "paper of record." "The Times," they explained, "sets the tone and agenda for other newspapers and also influences opinion leaders on foreign affairs."

Their results were published in the September issue of the journal Perspectives on Politics (you can read it for free via the library Web site). Out of 35 stories on Bush's speeches given in this time period, "only 12 stories quoted Democrats, and 14 stories quoted criticism from members of the United Nations." But far more significant was the "paucity of quotes from non-elite opponents, including members of peace movements ... Quotes from Iraqi leaders and citizens appeared sparsely, in only four stories, while only one article quoted an average American citizen." Most interesting of all, the authors found that the more news a person consumed, the less skeptical of the war they were.

But these findings are really nothing we didn't already know. From the beginning, this has been a war waged for the benefit of the American elite at the expense of the "average American citizen," whose opinion the New York Times cares about once every 35 occasions. The current scandal over Valerie Plame is nothing more than a shouting match between elites. And listen to what they're arguing over: Frank Rich, the most liberal columnist you can find in the American media, believes the war is wrong because, he says, Bush lied. Would he be complaining about that if the United States had won the war in two weeks? I doubt it. Those of us who would have should focus on ending the war, not some bizarre argument over who can better conquer and dominate disguised as a serious debate.

Mike Sances is a Collegian columnist

'Dean's Readers' fell short

David B. Lawrence

They really dropped the ball this time. Thanks to last year's "Dean's Readers," Commonwealth College students were subjected this semester to the worst the "Dean's book" course has to offer: "Remaking Eden," a pseudo-nonfiction work which is poorly reasoned, dated and frames an important debate as something it isn't.

"Remaking Eden" is a book about genetic engineering that was rushed to bookstores and airport newsstands alike in late 1997 shortly after the cloned sheep Dolly made national headlines. Author Lee M. Silver attempts to offer an explanation to the layman reader of what genetic engineering (GE) is, how it has developed and the potential implications of its use.

Genetic engineering is a medical tool that, Silver argues, follows historically in a long line of morally questionable reproductive technologies (including surrogacy and in vitro fertilization) that eventually gained general public acceptance. Silver suggests that genetic engineering is highly potent and probably cannot or will not be stopped from impacting the way we live. As it could lead to drastic changes in humans, genetic engineering will undoubtedly lead to drastic changes in humanity.

That's probably true; genetic engineering is important and it is on the horizon. It is a topic that should be brought to the attention of students, but "Remaking Eden" is a lousy introduction. The issues we will be facing in the coming years are moral and ethical: Is it wrong to clone a human? Can we justifiably clone a human just to harvest an organ? Is it right to tamper with the genetic makeup of a person for non-medical reasons? Isn't that playing God?

Instead of discussing these issues, Silver paints a fanciful picture of a distant future where the "GenRich" outclass normal humans. This science fiction story is his explanation of the issues with cloning and genetic manipulation. With a wealth of significant moral and ethical questions lying before us, Silver remarkably asks, "How will cloning affect our social hierarchy?" How poorly that question frames the contemporary debate.

Today we have a nation already at odds over the moral implications of embryonic stem cell research. We may in the distant future have to deal with social stratification due to genetic engineering, but for the present and the near future it is the moral implications of cloning (which Silver ignores) that will be on our political plate. It is around these issues that a good introduction to genetic engineering would center. The debate surrounding the funding of embryonic stem cell (ESC) research was a major point in the 2004 presidential election, and it is based entirely on moral concerns that Silver doesn't believe are worth analysis.

> Silver's categorical dismissal of religious or ethical discussion is alarming. He flippantly passes off potential moral pitfalls with little respect to the millions of religious Americans who would certainly disagree with them.

Silver's categorical dismissal of religious or ethical discussion is alarming. He flippantly passes off potential moral pitfalls with little respect to the millions of religious Americans who would certainly disagree with them. Whether or not he believes in the sanctity of life, Silver should realize that he will need a sound argument to convince most who do. Instead of providing such an argument, he often bases his reasoning on brief and incomplete analogies that misrepresent the situation. His "because I said so" approach to important issues makes me wary of believing even the most reasonable of his claims.

Worse than his inept style of argument (which can basically be described as "logic by decree") and questionable passing over of the moral implications of GE is the date printed inside the front cover of Silver's "Remaking Eden." The book was written in 1997, before embryonic stem cells became an important issue. Embryonic stem cell research is undoubtedly the important contemporary genetic engineering topic. It is crucial that we become better educated about ESC research, and work out our disagreements through democratic debate. "Remaking Eden" provides little basis from which to do that. This book about genetic engineering features no significant discussion of genetic engineering's most important contemporary characteristic.

I might have thought that, given recent events, the "Dean's Readers" who selected "Remaking Eden" would have scanned through the work for some significant description of embryonic stem cell research and, finding none, passed the dated pop-science book over. I also might have thought they would be as offended as I was by the dogmatic arrogance of Silver, who flippantly discards moral principles that are fundamental to the philosophies of millions of Americans. I'd like to believe that our "Dean's Readers" would realize that Silver's description of a "GenRich" future is science fiction and not pertinent fact, but the truth is they didn't. They made a mistake. Is it too late to flunk them?

David B. Lawrence is a Collegian columnist

Focusing while on the clock

Daniel McGrath

It's 9:15 p.m. on Sunday and the deadline is midnight. What do I do? I've got a hundred ideas but not enough time to outline any, so I'll start by writing as I think. Do I dress up an old assignment to look like something original? Do I scratch my head for an excuse? I know my roommate could Photoshop a doctor's note. Maybe a couple beers would help get the creative juices flowing?

Whatever your thought process, we've all been here. Out of time. It's funny how often I'm out of time. People are always telling me this is the age when I have all the time in the world. So where is it? And what do I do when I find it? "Well, you've got to learn how to manage your time," my father says. "Organize it based on priorities." Today my priorities were playing the guitar, watching Seinfeld and making a chicken sandwich with stuffing and cranberry sauce, which was delicious. Now I'm writing a column.

In college it's easy to be very busy or very lazy. There is always something to do and at least five ways to put it off. Every semester I try to get organized and every semester I discover new ways of procrastinating. I'm actually getting better at it ... which is not good. Granted, procrastination has its positive and negative aspects. I feed off the energy of stress, the pressure of a deadline. In a way it can add excitement to an otherwise boring activity. But then again, how often do we wait until the last minute to start assignments, only to find out we would've really enjoyed doing them if we had more time. In fact, I'm starting to like this column a great deal. Too bad.

> Out of all the things that life teaches us outside the classroom, I wish structuring my time was a hundred-level course. I'm sure there's a lame book out there with that title. The fact is, I can logically solve the problem in my head, but in my life, it takes more than thinking about it to get the job done.

So my problem isn't a lack of time, it's the mismanagement of time. OK, so who teaches that course? Was I supposed to have learned that in high school? It certainly wasn't on the SATs, or was it? "Danny is given an assignment. He has until 12 p.m. Sunday night to complete it. It is exactly two weeks before the due date. Should he: a) Do it this week. b) Do it next week. c) Do it the day it's due. d) Wait until the last possible minute to decide how to handle the situation."

I know the answer; it's just not the right one. Out of all the things that life teaches us outside the classroom, I wish structuring my time was a hundred-level course. I'm sure there's a lame book out there with that title. The fact is, I can logically solve the problem in my head, but in my life, it takes more than thinking about it to get the job done.

If you're like me, and you've come from a place where there was always food on the table and a warm bed to sleep in, most of your struggles in life aren't solved by a formal education. I can't think of any problems I have that doing my homework will fix, other than having homework due. A college degree is important in providing opportunities for your future, or so they tell me, and I don't want to discredit those who've struggled to get here and continue to work hard.

I just feel that the only aspect of my school-work I struggle with is getting it finished. The rest of my time is occupied with problems school can never fix, like how to talk to women without looking like an ass. Also, how to have a great time at a party without getting a hangover, a negative balance in the bank or an STD. These are questions that no professor has the answer to because they are far too old to have these problems. This leads me to believe that some of the struggles we have as college kids are actually because we're in college. How delightfully ironic.

I guess at the end of the day, which is actually right now and which means this assignment is late, I could use some focus, and so could this column. I don't have any final thoughts about how to solve your problems, so if you're still reading because you were holding out for some grand revelation about life, I'm sorry. All I can say is this column wrote itself. It took writing about why I couldn't write it to get it finished, which may be pretentious, but it was also the answer to the problem. Perhaps when something draws attention to itself it becomes something else, or in this case, simply becomes something. As for the lack of focus, I would hope that you could at least be empathetic, and if not, well, you already read it.

Daniel McGrath is a Collegian columnist.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 25, 2005

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

"Dandy Warhols get lost in their "Odditorium"

Dandy Warhol

6/10

Odditorium or Warlords of Mars Capital

BY NICK ROMANOW
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In last year's rockumentry "Dig!" The Dandy Warhols' retro-pop stylings were criticized, mocked and thrown into direct comparison and competition with The Brian Jonestown Massacre's acclaimed psychedelic genius. The end result: The Massacre are underrated appreciated geniuses and the Warhols are the pop-lite version made for mainstream consumption. So when the time came for the Warhols to make a follow-up to 2003's "Welcome To The Monkey House," the band seemingly decided the best path of retaliation was to make a massive, ambitious album to prove that they were just as good as their more critically celebrated friends.

Sadly, The Warhols either lost their focus or were too intently focused on trying to appear brilliant that they generally overlooked everything that made their past albums great on "Odditorium or Warlords of Mars," an album whose title indicates every bit what is wrong with the content. The Warhols are simply trying too hard to be something they are not and to be compelling and challenging, ignoring the fact that the songs themselves, as dressed up as they might be, are often empty and boring.

The opening track, a spoken intro that jokingly sets the band up as the creators and saviors of rock 'n roll, leads into "Love Is The New Feel Awful" a slow-burning slice of psychedelia that will entice fans and newcomers to the band. "Love..." proves to be the most representative track of the album. A brilliant first four minutes gives way to five and a half minutes of droning and endless noodling that just begs the listener to hit the next track button. It's not that the Warhols are presenting something challengingly difficult, let alone innovative and provoking, but that they are treading ground that hundreds of third-rate psych-rock imitators have been across and it's simply boring. While songs like "Everyone Is Totally Insane" and "Down Like Disco" are amongst the Dandy's best, promising tracks like "Easy" and "Holding Me Up" fall pray to the overindulgence and semi-incompetence that mars most of the album.

Between their career-long desire to be the Velvet Underground and the newly invigorated desire to compete with the Brian Jonestown Massacre, the Dandy Warhols stumble through their "Odditorium," often forgetting how to be themselves. "Odditorium" has some real gems but the band is often alternately trying too hard to sound like they aren't trying or trying too hard to sound like geniuses. Sadly, the Dandy Warhols seem to be so down on themselves post-"Dig!" that they forgot well-deserved praise has been thrown at them their whole career. The Dandy Warhols have made a career out of bringing something fresh to the table with each release but "Odditorium" is just scraps of Dandy goodness mixed in with a lot of stale bits and recycled ideas. The only odd thing about this album is just how disappointing and boring it is coming from such an exciting and talented band.

COURTESY MUSIC HALL OF WILLIAMSBURG/LIGGY

'Black and White' takes over college night in Boston

BY TIM MCCALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Thursday, Oct. 27, the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston is having a college night from 7 p.m. to midnight. Despite the fact that Boston is a good two hours away, students in the Amherst area who attend the University of Massachusetts are still invited to partake in the activities free of charge. All they have to do is bring their UCards to the event, present it to the west wing entrance to the museum and they will be allowed into the event.

College Night
Museum of Fine Arts
Boston
Oct. 27
Free

The event is called "Black and White through the Night." The name may remind some of a scene from an episode of Seinfeld when Jerry rambles on to Elaine about the beauty of a black and white cookie, but alas, the event does not include any Seinfeld-related articles or art.

What the event does include is a pass to see the work of the late photographer Ansel Adams. Who is Ansel Adams, you ask? Adams was a famous photographer who took black and white photographs of various landscapes in national parks such as Yosemite National Park. Adams also took black and white portraits and self-portraits. This gallery includes Adams photographs of landscapes and portraits and is one of world's largest private galleries of his work. This exhibit has been open since the last week of August and it would normally cost a student $13 to get into the exhibit if they did not go during the "Black and White through the Night" event.

Another feature of this event is a screening of the movie "Coffee and Cigarettes." This is the perfect movie for the event because it was filmed entirely in authentic black and white film by writer and director Jim Jarmusch. "Coffee and Cigarettes" was originally shown in limited release and quickly went to video and DVD; students who attend should consider themselves lucky to see this movie on the big screen. Students will notice some of the cast in the movie since it features many musicians and actors including Iggy Pop, Tom Waits, The White Stripes and Academy Award Nominee Bill Murray, as well as various independent movie stars.

At 7:30 p.m. a performance by indie bands The Mountain Goats and The Prayers and Tears of Arthur Digby Sellers will take place at the museum's Remis Auditorium. The first 25 students to attend the museum will be offered tickets to this concert, another free event that would normally cost around $14 or $15 at their shows in Northampton on Oct. 26 (and that is before ticket service fees).

Throughout the night the museum will also be offering free drinks (non-alcoholic of course) and snacks to the students. Each student who attends will also have a chance to win many surprise prizes from the museum.

In total, students have the possibility of saving over $25 if they attend the event by not having to pay for their way into the Ansel Adams gallery, seeing "Coffee and Cigarettes" and the possibility of seeing the concert at the Remis Auditorium.

Unfortunately, the only way to get to the event is by driving to Boston, because the trains don't come back to Amherst and the last bus to Amherst leaves before the event ends unless you want to leave early and miss some of the fun.

COURTESY OF THE ANSEL ADAMS GALLERY

Ansel Adam's black and white photographs from the Lane Collection are on display at the Museum of Fine Arts and this exhibition is one of the many free things offered at college night in Boston.

New Music Tuesday

Week of [illegible] 10/31

APSCI

3/10

Thanks For Asking

Quannum Projects

APSCI, a husband-and-wife rap duo, are definitely living in a world of happily ever after, which might be good for their personal lives but doesn't do much for their careers. "Thanks For Asking" introduces an innovative, refreshing take on modern rap: funky, soulful and often very electronic-sounding. In a world where it seems like most up-and-comers are content to latch on to the latest fad, it's notable and laudable that APSCI are trying something new. Unfortunately, their fresh style grows stale very quickly, the duo sticks to pretty close perimeters from song to song, and the raps themselves don't stir up anything interesting.

By the sixth song, "Voice Print Identification," on the 17-track album, APSCI sound bored with themselves, lifelessly reading off a brief biography that leads into "Anais & Godzilla," which features some of the best beats and effects of the whole album but never quite gets off the ground.

The same can be said for the entire album, which is filled with video-game beats and irritating chorus vocals. "Thanks For Asking" isn't bad but it's a repetitive, forgettable experience. On the track "See That," about halfway through the album, Mr. Lif shows up to lend some talent and some cred, waking the audience up long enough to once again lead into an unnecessary and unpleasant chorus.

Putting APSCI up against Lif, one of the better rappers around, only highlights exactly what's missing with this band. They have nothing to say and very little to do. "Thanks For Asking" is an album that's as complacent as a married couple could ever be, and while APSCI probably has a happy home

Fruit Bats

8.5/10

Spelled in Bones

Sub Pop Records

it doesn't make for interesting music.

Hearing "Spelled In Bones," the latest album from Chicago's Fruit Bats, is the type of experience that doesn't come along very often. "Spelled In Bones" has all the signs of a breakthrough album by a band that has toiled away for some time and finally perfected their sound.

This isn't a next-big-thing type of band or a savior-of-rock listen; it's the sound of a band that is confident but not complacent. Fruit Bats have found a unique footing in the world of indie-pop, showing up all the other new bands that have rushed in on what has become the new trend in music. However, where most bands fail by falling victim to formulas and similarities is where Fruit Bats thrive.

From the opening acoustic strumming of "Lives Of Crime" to the subtle electronics and beach-evoking slide guitar in "TV Waves" to the huge melodies of "Canyon Girl," Fruit Bats prove song after song to be the cream of the crop, an inimitable band that knows how to make pure pop music with unique twists. And like any good pop experimentalists, Fruit Bats have a perfect ear for tones and sound. Incorporating myriad instruments and effects, including so-obvious-it's-clever use of field recordings on the closing "I very Day That We Wake Up It's A Beautiful Day," Fruit Bats paint a soundscape that usually only the most seasoned veterans can create. Likewise, the lyrics steer away from the clichéd hopeless-romantic standard of the current crop of indie-pop. Instead, Fruit Bats create landscapes with a keen, literate style that occasionally turns Pavement-style clever (such as the "Legs Of Bees" couplet "I've been tryin' I've been tried") or melt into a Nada Surf-esque intelligent-love song (such as the Prince referencing "Earthquake Of '73).

Combined perfectly with front man Eric Johnson's soft but powerful voice and ear for melody, "Spelled In Bones" is a deep, but not dense, experience that only grows on multiple plays. With a natural feel and a grand scope, "Spelled In Bats" clearly spells out that Fruit Bats have arrived.

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

From the get-go of their first album "Going Out Heavy," the Milton MA band Superlow lets it be known they play their instruments fast and loud.

What makes them worth a serious listen is the fact that they continue to play fast and loud throughout the entire album: a whole ten songs for over 30 minutes. The guitars never stop wailing and the drums never stop pounding as vocalist and guitarist Ed Thrill sings into the microphone.

The very first note out of Thrill is a misleading one. At first he sounds similar to Bruce Springsteen as he sings, "Hey there, are you looking at me," but as the song and album go on he sounds similar to Dave Grohl of the Foo Fighters. Despite the two comparisons, Thrill is a one-dimensional singer. This is no insult of him or his abilities, but he is; the dimension he uses works well with the album.

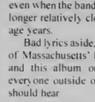
The rest of the band features Thrill's twin brother, drummer Mark Thrill, as well as bassist and backing vocalist Pete Abajoli. They also sound a lot like the Foo Fighters, but where the Foo Fighters lose is in that Superlow is obviously a three-piece band and the Foo Fighters are

Superlow

7.5/10

Going Out Heavy

Barebonz



a four-piece band.

The only negative aspect of the album is the relatively bad lyrics.

Lyrics don't have to be poetic or even storytelling, but they should at least make sense. On "Like Heroin," Thrill sings, "You need her like heroin, you know she'll put the needle in." These two lines may sound out of context with their randomness, but they really were in a row and they make no sense. The rest of the album has better lyrics than this song. Their themes of teenage angst and dead-end jobs are not that bad, but they are done much too frequently in today's rock 'n roll even when the band members are no longer relatively close to their teenage years.

Bad lyrics aside, Superlow is one of Massachusetts' best local bands and this album only shows why every one outside of Massachusetts should hear

Hobart Smith

7/10

In Sacred Trust

Smithsonian Folkways

Before today's Bright Eyes and before yesterday and today's Bob Dylan, the folk world had a hero named Hobart Smith.

Smith was born in the south and raised in a musical family. From his upbringing Smith was a multi-instrumentalist that gathered popularity performing with the guitar, banjo, fiddle, accordion and harmonica among other instruments commonly found in folk music in the first half of the 20th century.

Smith took songs from all over the music spectrum ranging from white performers to African American performs and tweaked them to his own style, but never forgot where they came from.

Sometimes he would record with friend and fellow musician Fleming Brown. The results of some of these sessions created Smith's only release still in print today, "The 1963 Fleming Brown Tapes — In Sacred Trust."

This release is the product of a trip Smith had went to Chicago in October 1963 at Fleming Brown's house in Chicago. Ironically, the music recorded that day was never intended to be released for the public to hear.

This is obvious because Fleming's children enter and leave the room where the recording is being done and his dog is sometimes heard in the background.

The music that ended up in this session showcases a different world untapped in today's music. Folk music was political then as it is today, but it was a different era of songs about topics such as the Civil War and growing up in the south. Growing up in the south is now a common subject for country music, but folk does it better and this is shown when Smith performs these songs. With this folk music, the listener disappears back to an earlier time well before rock 'n roll.

Unfortunately, Smith died only a couple years following the creation of these songs due to complications from a stroke. Before his stroke, Smith was still in prime shape to create more music, learn more instruments to perform the music and continue to teach the musicians of the future

Thrice has always been a force to be reckoned with. Their music has always been slightly louder and heavier then their musical peers. So when Thrice signed to the major label Island Records, one had to figure success was just around the corner.

Thrice's 2003 "The Artist and

More men and women use the Heimlich maneuver, life-threatening injuries than ever before for one reason. We have the most elite nurses in the world. As a U.S. Air Force nurse you receive the most advanced training and have access to the best medical technology on the planet. And whether you're treating Airmen on foreign soil or their families on bases here in the U.S. you can put all of that training to use. If you're interested in learning more about a better place to practice medicine, call or visit us online.
1-800-588-5260 • AIRFORCE.COM/HEALTHCARE

HOMETOWN HIGH

DO YOU WANT TO VISIT YOUR HIGH SCHOOL, BUT CAN'T THINK OF A GOOD REASON WHY?

ARE YOU AN OUTGOING PERSON WHO LIKES TO INTERACT WITH GROUPS OF PEOPLE?

DO YOU WANT TO AFFECT THE LIVES OF OTHER PEOPLE IN A POSITIVE WAY?

IF YOU ANSWERED YES, THEN UNDERGRADUATE ADMISSIONS HAS THE PERFECT OPPORTUNITY FOR YOU!

GET INVOLVED WITH HOMETOWN HIGH

- VISIT YOUR HIGH SCHOOL AND EXPRESS YOUR WISDOM GAINED AT UMASS AMHERST TO HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS LOOKING AT COLLEGES!
- TALK ABOUT YOUR PERSONAL EXPERIENCE, YOUR CONCERNS DURING YOUR FRESHMAN YEAR, AND SHARE WHY YOU DECIDED TO COME TO UMASS AMHERST!

ALL YOU HAVE TO DO IS:
- FILL OUT AN INTEREST SHEET
- ATTEND A 1 & 1 1/2 HOUR TRAINING SESSION
- SET UP AN APPOINTMENT
- VISIT YOUR OLD HIGH SCHOOL

COME SEE US ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE TO SIGN UP!
MON 10/24–FRI 10/28
9:00 AM–3:00 PM

RECEIVE A FREE UMASS AMHERST T-SHIRT FOR YOUR EFFORTS

FOR MORE INFO EMAIL JILL AT JMURTAGH@EDUC.UMASS.EDU OR CALL JILL OR SARAH AT THE ROBSHAM MEMORIAL CENTER FOR VISITORS – 545-0306

UMASS AMHERST

New Music Tuesday

Week of the Ambulance" came and went. Success was had in small amounts. The band was no longer supporting

Thrice

9/10

Vheissu

Island Records

headliners, they were now the headliners. Kids flocked to see every show they could, causing the concerts to sell out.

Now it is two years later and Thrice is back with a new album. "Vheissu" takes the band's sound for a spin turn. They have softened up a bit compared to their older stuff; not in a Goo Goo Dolls kind of way, but in a more mature way. As bands age they cannot stay heavy; it's just one of those things, similar to the Deftones. The softer music is still relatively fast and noticeably so. This time around the lyrics just mean so much more – a sentimental value that their other albums did not have.

The biggest change in the band's sound is the addition of the piano. This adds an interesting mix because so many bands out there deny the coolness of the piano, when in fact the piano is just as rock 'n roll as a guitar – just ask Billy Joel. The piano notes in songs are mostly in an intro. We hear this proven with songs such as "For Miles."

What is somewhat missing is the backing screams of the band's older albums, though screams are definitely still around if you're looking in the right songs (such as "The Earth Will Shake").

If you let Thrice take over, they will surprise you. "Vheissu" is an album that in its entirety is almost flawless. There are songs for everyone: fast songs, medium songs, even a ballad or two. If this is not the music you pump your fist to when you're alone in your dorm, then what is?

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

Pop music from the late 1990s seems to be making a comeback. Even though the original fan base of such boy bands as the Backstreet Boys and 98 Degrees has grown up and possibly outgrown the pop years, it's clear the market is still here. Last year, pop goddess Britney Spears released her greatest hits album, and earlier this year the Backstreet Boys released a new album paired with a club tour and full arena tour. Both brought in large amounts of revenue. It would only seem logical to

*NSYNC

8/10

Greatest Hits

Jive

have *NSYNC follow in these footsteps in an attempt to recapture their glory days.

Their newest album is a compilation of what they consider their 12 greatest hits. It proves to bring the listener back to a time when life was simple, music was just for fun, and a little bit of Justin Timberlake was all we ever needed.

The songs vary from early to later, and in one case, the rare. Starting off with "Bye Bye Bye" and then moving right along to "Girlfriend (featuring Nelly)," and singing along seems inevitable. Ballads such as "This I Promise You," "God Must Have Spent A Little More Time On You," "Drive Myself Crazy" and "Gone" bring back memories of a middle-school relationship that would fast forever and an unrequited crush that would never go away.

Classic songs like "It's Gonna Be Me," "Learn To My Heart," "I Want You Back" and "Pop" renew one's latent desire to learn all the dance moves featured in the flashy and lavish music videos. Track 11 is a song that was a bonus track on the foreign release of "No Strings Attached" called "I'll Never Stop." This song seems familiar because of the typical pop structure and common pop metaphor of "hearts" and "hands." And finally, "Music of My Heart" provides a mellow end through the voices of Justin, JC, Chris, Lance, and Joey with special guest Gloria Estefan.

"What's the deal with this pop life and when is it going to fade out?" No one really knows. This greatest hits CD has everything a not-so-former pop fan could want. The only thing that is missing is the song "It Makes Me Ill," which could easily replace the ballad "Gone." It's just a fun CD that people should include in their collection. Lately, the trend in music has been focused towards more serious and intense music. For times when seriousness needs to be juxtaposed with familiar fun, this CD is more than willing to provide the latter

By Allie Roth
Collegian Correspondent

'Thumbsucker' reveals life through a common addiction

By Peter Frisman
Collegian Staff

The protagonist in "Thumbsucker," Justin (teenager above) battles his thumb sucking addiction. The movie is very raw in its presentation and at times leaves the viewer discomforted.

While Mike Mills' "Thumbsucker" may at first glance appear to be like any other teen-angst film, there is one significant difference: The main character is not alienated in a painfully apathetic world; in fact, his family, teachers, and orthodontist all sincerely want to help him with his problem, which is described by the film's title. While this may deviate from the typical conventions of the genre, the message that will most likely be extrapolated from the movie is not Be yourself, no matter what others think of you, choose friends who accept you for the way you are; be wary of chemical substances designed to alter your behavior. But even as "Thumbsucker" gradually slinks back into cinematic tradition, it's hard not to appreciate this affable study of adolescent social dynamics.

Lou Taylor Pucci plays the drapery-haired Justin Cobb, a seventeen-year-old misfit trying unsuccessfully to kick his thumbsucking habit. He is far from being the only oddball in his family, however – his mother (Tilda Swinton, "Adaptation") is infatuated with a television personality to an almost unhealthy degree, and his father (Vincent D'Onofrio, "Full Metal Jacket") never even bothers to hide his disappointment at failing to become a professional athlete. Also trying to rid Justin of his habit is the new-age-obsessed orthodontist, played by Keanu Reeves. After his prescription of a power animal only increases Justin's problems, Justin is given Methylphenidate to combat his supposed hyperactivity. Things, finally, seem to look up for Justin, but the effects of his new medication soon come crashing down on him.

"Thumbsucker" seems to be a departure from the style of the modern indie comedy-drama. There is no meaningless banter, no scenes specifically designed to show off the film's artistic design, no hip montage sequences, no characters that are quirky for the pure sake of quirkiness. While many of the film's characters are openly neurotic, their neuroses are essential to the plot.

Rather than take the typical route of simply letting the audience quietly giggle at the off-center mental states, "Thumbsucker" is strikingly raw in its presentation, often to the point of discomfort. One scene is devoted to a nasty procedure where Justin's mother goes to drastic measures to relieve the physical pain of the celebrity she admires. Justin's little brother subjects him to detailed interrogations concerning his activities with his girlfriend. Most unnerving, of course, is Justin's relationship with his mother. What with Justin's first-name basis with his parents, his mother's demands that he judge her appearance in different dresses, and his orthodontist's analysis of what his thumb represents, "Thumbsucker" presents an Oedipal character study that is likely to cause the audience to squirm in their seats.

The film is beautifully shot by Joaquin Baca-Asay, sharply detailing the components of modern suburbia – boy-ridden white garages, industrial-looking public schools, and new age furniture. Keanu Reeves, who apparently had his emotion projector stuck on "mild bewilderment" for the past ten years, takes a solid, self-aware turn as Justin's orthodontist and mentor and also the message-carrier of the film.

Despite its timeworn plot and an ending that, for an independent film, is disappointingly Hollywood, "Thumbsucker" is a likable little film that former alienated youths can perhaps relate to.

THE UPCOMING WEEKS ARE BIG IN ARTS!

THIS FRIDAY'S PAPER IS THE HALLOWEEN ISSUE WHICH FEATURES CLASSIC HALLOWEEN MOVIES AND THE TOP FIVE THINGS TO DO THIS WEEKEND!

KANYE WEST IS COMING TO UMASS ON HALLOWEEN! CHECK OUT MONDAY'S PAPER TO READ ALL ABOUT HIM!

GRADUATE AND CERTIFICATE PROGRAMS IN
Clinical Investigation • Nursing
Communication Sciences and Disorders
Medical Imaging • Physical Therapy
CHARLESTOWN NAVY YARD
BOSTON, MA
MGH INSTITUTE OF HEALTH PROFESSIONS
www.mghihp.edu | Advancing people. Advancing care.

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on eyeglasses from the on-site Optical Services at UHS
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 Convenient hours and location
4 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5383
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

Newman Center Cafe
Located behind SOM building
GRAND REOPENING!
*Breakfast All Day
*Subs
*Pizza
*Sandwiches
*Freshly Made Salads
*Fried Clams
*Shrimp
*Chicken Fingers
*Daily Lunch Specials
*Ice Cream
*Appetizers
*Rao's Coffee
Open:
Daily 7am-8pm
Weekends 8am-2pm
Come in for Breakfast, Lunch, Dinner, or just a quick snack!
413-549-0401

HAUNTED HALLOWEEN BASH AT THE HARP
Live Music with Savoy Shuffle
Free Midnight Buffet!
Look your Halloween Best: 5-Category Costume Contest $$$!
Hundreds of $$$ worth of Prizes!
Sat. 29 close
Come celebrate the other great Irish Holiday!
"Come party like you're Irish"

Ashado won't run against the boys

By Richard Rosenblatt
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Ashado has run at 10 racetracks in eight states, won 12 of 20 starts and earned more than $3.7 million. The one thing she hasn't done is run against the boys.

And she won't get that chance.

On Saturday, the champion filly will attempt to close out a Hall of Fame career by repeating in the $2 million Breeders' Cup Distaff.

"We talked about running against colts, but the timing never worked out," Ashado's trainer Todd Pletcher said. "Not stepping out, though, hasn't hurt her. I think she has a pretty strong following."

While Lost in the Fog shoots for his fifth straight win in the Sprint, and Saint Liam and Rock Hard Ten battle for Horse of the Year honors in the Classic, Ashado could make racing history on her own.

In her final race before being retired, the 4-year-old daughter of Saint Ballado has a chance to become the leading money-earner among fillies and mares (Azeri is No. 1) and only the second horse to repeat in the Distaff (Bayakoa did it in 1989-90).

"It would be a real feather in her cap, and would secure her place in history," Pletcher said. "And kind of a proud moment for our organization to send one out on that note."

By finishing first or second in the Distaff, the fearless bay filly would top Azeri's mark of $4,079,820 — Ashado stands at $3,711,440.

In six starts this year, she's won three Grade I's — the Beldame, the Go For Wand and the Ogden Phipps. At Belmont, host of the eight-race, $14 million Breeders' Cup, Ashado has won her last three races.

In what looks like a full field of 14 for the 1 1/8-mile Distaff, Ashado will take on her toughest rivals, including Society Selection and Stellar Jayne — two fillies she defeated in last year's Distaff. A win would add the older female championship to her 3-year-old filly title.

The Pletcher camp is confident.

"When she runs, we don't think she's a cinch, but we think she's going to win," said Angel Cordero Jr., the retired Hall of Fame rider who exercises Ashado and other horses for Pletcher.

What sets Ashado apart has been her consistency at the highest level, her ability to handle different tracks and win over both fast and wet surfaces. It's rare these days for a horse, male or female, to be so good for so long.

At 2, she won four of six races, including the Grade 1 Spinaway and finished second to Halfbridled in the 2003 Breeders' Cup Juvenile Fillies at Santa Anita. At 3, she won five of eight, including the Kentucky Oaks and the Coaching Club American Oaks before beating older horses in the 2004 Distaff by muscling her way between horses and into the lead.

"She's just an extremely good filly," Pletcher said. "And she's been on top of her game since she was a 2-year-old. She's a remarkable filly that we just tried to keep pointed in the right direction."

In an uncharacteristic off-day, Ashado finished fourth in the Personal Ensign at Saratoga two months ago. However, it turned out the filly had a bruised foot.

"We immediately went to work on it naturally, by foot-tubbing her, and we worked the little bruise out," Pletcher said. "And she was back to her old self."

Ashado proved it in the Beldame at Belmont on Oct. 1, moving out to a comfortable lead in the stretch under regular rider John Velazquez, then holding on for a half-length win over Happy Ticket, who will try again in the Distaff.

"I don't think she ran her best" in the Beldame, Pletcher said, "but hopefully having that race under her belt and a couple of good works we would see her at the top of her game for the Distaff."

Cordero said Ashado will always be near and dear to Pletcher, especially since she gave the nation's leading trainer his first Breeders' Cup win.

"She's got to be one filly that he's never going to forget," Cordero said. "He'll be around for a long time training a lot more horses, but she is going to be on his mind all the time. Whenever he talks about horses, she is going to be there."

'Classic' Parcells costs Cowboys

By Randy Galloway
Knight Ridder

SEATTLE — Drew Bledsoe had a demotion in rank on a rainy Sunday afternoon in the Great Northwest.

Despite having been one of the NFL's most productive quarterbacks, Bledsoe was busted down to the Bill Parcells' game-plan version of bus driver.

Bad idea, Mr. Parcells. Real bad.

In the end, Bledsoe drove that bus off the side of the cliff. But it might as well have been Parcells at the wheel.

One fatal mistake on an errant pass by Bledsoe allowed the Seattle Seahawks to flat steal a 13-10 victory, prompting Cowboys owner Jerry Jones to call it "as tough a game to lose as we've ever had, I ever."

I'd't just say this disaster will rank right up there. Way, up there.

But as Josh Brown's 50-yard field goal sailed true on the game's final play, there was also a nagging thought that the Cowboys got what they deserved.

Not the defense, certainly not even Bledsoe and the offense, putting up a mere 10 points.

In the final two minutes of play, all those systems failed.

But this loss became clogged in windpipes because the Cowboys didn't go for the throat. The offensive game plan turned them into conservative patsies, who were trying to hang on at the end instead of hanging one last punch on the Seahawks.

If Parcells had been nearly as aggressive with his offense as he was with receivers coach Todd Haley, then maybe this is a key road win instead of what will surely be the biggest second-guessing barrage Big Bill has faced since he's been in Irving.

Haley got half-punched and half-shoved by Parcells because Haley interrupted a Parcells sideline tirade aimed at the officiating crew.

Haley didn't deserve that embarrassment.

Hey, it wasn't his game plan.

Back to Jerry Jones, in his postgame anguish.

"I'm not second-guessing anything," he said from the locker room, "because I thought we'd be in here, pumping our fists, celebrating a classic Parcells football game."

That meant playing field position with defense and running the ball and the clock, trying to protect a 10-3 lead.

Exactly the kind of "classic" stuff that eventually got the Cowboys beat.

Twice in the fourth quarter, with a 7-3 lead, the offense had the ball inside the Seattle 10. It came away with a grand total of three points.

Jose Cortez missed a 29-yard field goal after a poor snap early in the fourth quarter. He kicked a 21-yarder with 2:06 left for the 10-3 lead.

Go back to that first-norm-service possession, early in the fourth.

After recovering a fumbled punt, the Cowboys had first-and-goal at the 9. Rookie Marion Barber carned twice, to the 6. No imagination with the play-calling at all. Play to protect the field goal.

On the have-to-throw third down, Bledsoe was sacked, but there appeared to be a reprieve.

A flag fell in the end zone. Tight end Jason Witten was almost tackled by a falling defender.

The officiating crew, however, waved off the flag. Witten: "They said it was incidental contact; that the guy slipped, so it wasn't intentional. It's hard for me to realize that's what they decided."

After an argument on the sidelines and Haley being bruised up by Parcells, rookie L.P. Ladouceur continues deep-snapping adventures for the Cowboys. His aim was off about a foot inside. Holder Tony Romo got the ball down, but Cortez tanked it.

That one would come back to beat the Cowboys.

Then, after a Roy Williams interception late in the game, the Cowboys were at the Seattle 12. Here we go again — Barber for 4, Barber for 3. Pathetic.

Then on the have-to-throw third down, Bledsoe rolled right, found no receiver, and ran it a yard short of the first down. He fumbled out of bounds after being racked by three tacklers.

A field goal saved that possession, but a touchdown was obviously needed.

This was an afternoon, however, when Parcells never really turned loose Bledsoe and the air game.

Was it because of the two tackles the Cowboys were playing (rookie Rob Petitti had an awful day)?

"No, we were just trying to keep [the Seattle offense] off the field," said Parcells.

Speedskaters compete

By Gary D'Amato
Knight Ridder

MILWAUKEE — When Chad Hedrick and Shani Davis went to the starting line for the men's 10,000 meters, the final race of the U.S. Single-Distance Championships, there was absolutely nothing at stake.

Both long-track speedskaters were pre-qualified for the U.S. World Cup team. It was 10 a.m. Monday and there were fewer than 50 spectators in the stands at the Pettit National Ice Center.

This was basically a training race, a glorified workout. Hedrick and Davis could have coasted ... and paired with any other skater, both would have done exactly that.

"I was going to come out and skate easy," Hedrick said, "but when Shani and I step on the ice together, that never happens."

And so they went at it for 25 grueling laps around the 400-meter oval, adding another chapter to a friendly but intense rivalry that promises to burn brightly at the 2006 Winter Olympics in Turin, Italy, and perhaps beyond.

For a dozen laps, they skated nearly side-by-side, turning consistent 32-second laps. But Hedrick, the slightly stronger skater over long distances, pulled away over the final 3,000 meters to win.

He finished in 13 minutes 22.93 seconds, breaking the Pettit Center record of 13:23.94 set by Gianni Romme of the Netherlands on Feb. 6, 2000.

Davis finished in 13:31.21.

"I told my coach [Sunday] I was going to work on my technique and take it easy and he said, 'OK,'" Hedrick said. "But warming up, I looked at Shani and he looked at me and we just knew. We could sense it in each other."

The two had taken turns setting Pettit Center records the first three days of the competition. Davis won the 1,000 and the 1,500, breaking his own records in both. Hedrick won the 5,000 and broke Romme's record at that distance.

"I greatly enjoy the challenge of skating against Chad," Davis said. "It's kind of like a Michael Jordan-Larry Bird type of competition. Michael Jordan had the dynamic dunks but Larry Bird had the long ball.

"Chad brings me up to my game and I bring him up to his."

Perhaps never before has the U.S. long-track team had two men so dominant at the same time. Davis is the world record-holder in the 1,500 and is the reigning world all-around champion. Hedrick is the world record-holder in the 3,000 and won the world all-around title in 2004.

Davis, 23, of Chicago, is slightly faster in the shorter distances. Hedrick, 28, of Spring, Texas, has the edge in the longer races.

They rarely go head-to-head, however, because Hedrick trains in Salt Lake City and Davis trains in Calgary.

"It would be nice to skate more with Shani," Hedrick said. "I think it would only help both of us."

Davis agreed.

"His schedule doesn't cross with mine," he said. "When we do cross paths, it is a pretty good battle."

It would surprise no one if Hedrick and Davis met in the finals of two or even three races at the Winter Games.

"It's a great possibility in the 1,500, may be the 1,000 and maybe the 5,000," Davis said. "I look forward to it. I greatly appreciate the caliber of skater Chad has become."

The women's 5,000 meters also was contested Monday. Maria Lamb of River Falls, Wis., a member of the U.S. junior team, won in 7:38.05.

Culpepper gets the job done

By Bob Sansevere
Knight Ridder

MINNEAPOLIS — Daunte Culpepper did something Sunday he hasn't done often enough this season.

He did his job.

He completed passes. He moved the chains. He led scoring drives.

And he didn't screw up.

This was the Daunte the Minnesota Vikings and their fans have been itching to see all season. If this Daunte had shown up in every game the Vikings have played, they probably would have a winning record.

Instead of being 2-4.

Culpepper played a huge part in both of the Vikings' victories — a 33-16 win over New Orleans on Sept. 25 and Sunday's 23-20 triumph over Green Bay.

"Everyone had glimpses of what Daunte can do against New Orleans," wide receiver Nate Burleson said. "This was a little taste of what people are going to see."

If that's true, if Culpepper performs the way he did in Sunday's second half, the Vikings just might be able to finish with a .500 record. Or better.

To get to .500, they would have to win six of their final 10 games. In the rickety NFC North, that could be enough to win the division title.

Vikings coach Mike Tice said he told his players after the victory over the Packers that if they don't beat the Carolina Panthers next Sunday, "this win means nothing, absolutely nothing."

The season already would have a nothing feel to it if Culpepper hadn't put together one of the best halves of his career Sunday.

"He had a tremendous second half," Burleson said. "Daunte did some great things."

He did what the league's elite quarterbacks do. He became a difference maker.

When the third quarter began, the Vikings trailed 17-0. They had five drives in the second half. Every one of them ended with a score.

Culpepper completed 17 of 23 passes for 228 yards in that second half. Two of his passes went for touchdowns. The others helped set up three Paul Edinger field goals, including the game-winner, a 56-yarder, as time ran out.

"I thought he played smart," Tice said.

Anyone who has watched Culpepper in losses this season knows what a switch that is.

There were 17 seconds remaining when the game-winning drive began at the Vikings' 36. Culpepper completed a pass over the middle to Mewelde Moore that went for 14 yards. The Vikings used their last time-out. There were eight seconds left on the clock. The ball was on the 50. The Vikings would have one more play to set up a field goal.

It was no secret to the Packers or anyone watching that Culpepper had to complete a sideline pass and his receiver had to quickly step out of bounds to stop the clock. This is where some quarterbacks crack. They'll sail a pass over their receiver's head or skip the ball off the turf or, worse yet, throw an interception.

In a departure from most other games this season, Culpepper kept his cool. And, as he had done throughout the second half, he made a big play. He completed a 12-yard pass to Marcus Robinson. Two seconds remained for Edinger.

"It was a textbook win," Culpepper said.

Textbook or not, any kind of win would have done, particularly when you've reeked the way Culpepper has much of this season.

"You get frustrated when you don't win and when you're not successful," Culpepper said. "You have to keep battling. You don't give up. You don't start second-guessing yourself."

Now it's the Packers who are left to second-guess if they could have done anything to keep Culpepper from beating them.

"I was concerned about him when we came out in the second half before everything happened," Packers coach Mike Sherman said. "He did a great job managing the game. He was accurate, made good decisions and also ran and completed some third-down conversions for them. Hats off to him. He is a great player."

He was in the second half Sunday.

Despite early troubles, Vikings quarterback Daunte Culpepper has found late success completing passes to such teammates as Jermaine Wiggins

WE ARE COMING TO YOUR CAMPUS!
University of Pennsylvania's Graduate School of Education is coming to your school's graduate fair. Stop by our table and speak to our admissions representative about the wide range of opportunities in the field of education.
For more details on your graduate fair, please visit:
www.gse.upenn.edu/admissions_financial/events.php
Graduate School of Education
PennGSE
3700 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, PA 19104
1-877-PENN-GSE • admissions@gse.upenn.edu • www.gse.upenn.edu

rebecca taylor • diane von furstenberg
Seven for all Mankind • Susana Monaco
Wendy Hill • Nicole Miller • James Perse
G1 • Plenty
cathy rosfashion
FOR WOMEN
[illegible] Main Street • Downtown Northampton • 413.586.9398
www.cathyrosfashion.com

New WORLD Theater presents
Birth of a nASIAN
Written by Kate Rigg and Leah Ryan.
Featuring electric violin by Lyris Hung.
All Urban. All Comedy
All Spoken Word.
All Trip Hop with an Asian slant.
"Cultural terrorist" Kate Rigg's super-edgy, super-freaky comedy (in the style of Leguizamo/Ullman/Tomlin/Jones) farcically reveals the contradictions and contemporary fictions of Asian America
October 26, 2005
8 pm, Bowker Auditorium, UMass Amherst
TICKETS ARE $15-general public, $-8-seniors/low income patrons, $5-students
Call the FAC Box Office 413-545-2511
For info about the shows, call NWT at 413-545-1972
www.newworldtheater.org
[illegible] FINE ARTS CENTER

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
• a grade dispute?
• teacher, roomate or job concerns?
• billing problems?
• harassment?
• ...or any other University related problem?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course!)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
823 Campus Center
Office hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
telephone: 413-545-0867
fax: 413-545-9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Houston park has unique traits to it itself.

WHITE SOX from page 10

But then you factor in the ballpark and the Sox are facing an uphill battle if they want to keep the Series from coming back to Chicago.

What makes the park unique?

The wall. Left field is short and the wall is high, sort of a Western version of Fenway's Green Monster. The Crawford Boxes are just above the wall, and the fans there are rahid, though they got quiet fast when St. Louis' Albert Pujols hit a homer way over their heads in Game 5 of the National League Championship Series.

The hill. Yes, there is a hill in the ballpark, right at the deepest part of center field. It goes up steeply, and there is a flagpole to complicate things.

The roof. It is retractable, but Astros officials already have said it will be closed the three games of the World Series. It is an intimidating place when the roof is shut and the noise has no place to go but into your ears.

"The fans in Houston are going to be crazy," Bagwell said. "The last two postseasons, they've been just so loud, into every pitch."

And if that weren't enough, when the Sox play there Tuesday, they will be facing Roy Oswalt, who already this postseason is 3-0 with a 2.11 ERA.

Hurricane Wilma damages speedway

By Cammy Clark
Knight Ridder

MIAMI — Homestead-Miami Speedway suffered "significant damage" to light poles, the grandstands, catch fencing and the garage suites during Hurricane Wilma. But the necessary repairs are expected to be completed in time for the speedway's biggest event, NASCAR's Ford Championship Weekend that runs Nov. 18-20, speedway president Curtis Gray said Monday.

"Yes, we'll definitely be ready, no doubt about it," said Gray, who rode out the storm at the speedway. "The track itself is fine."

The major damage was caused by the quarter-mile long garage suites structure, which Gray said literally seemed to be lifted into the air around 6:30 a.m.

The flying structure took out 12 of the custom-built light poles along pit road that are part of a new $8.5 million lighting project for night racing.

Parts of the structure landed in the catch fencing that is in place primarily to prevent airborne cars and flying debris from leaving the racetrack and hitting fans in the grandstands.

One part of the garage suites structure flew over the grandstand and took out another custom-built light pole.

Another part of the structure flew over the grandstand, landing on the outside of the track and doing damage to a sixth-floor suite along the way.

"When it landed it snapped a royal palm tree in half," Gray said.

As soon as the high winds subsided, assessment of the damage began. No immediate dollar amount was available. Repairs will begin today.

"Folks from all over the country already are rolling," Gray said.

On Monday morning he talked with Bill France Jr., NASCAR's former CEO and current board member of International Speedway Corp., which operates the 1.5-mile speedway.

Operation teams from ISC sister tracks Daytona International Speedway and Talladega Superspeedway are being sent to help with repairs that will be both permanent and temporary in order to be done in time for the three championship races of NASCAR's national series: Nextel Cup, Busch and Craftsman Trucks.

Iowa-based MUSCO, the lighting contractor, is working on those repairs.

Grandstand seating will be shipped from Nazareth Speedway in Pennsylvania, which recently went out of business, to replace the damaged 20 rows.

"There is a race that must go on, and I'm sure that Curtis and his bunch are very much like our group," said Atlanta Motor Speedway spokesman Ed Clark, whose track suffered more than $40 million in damage from a tornado in July and worked hard to be ready for NASCAR's Bass Pro Shops MBNA 500 on Sunday.

"They will immediately recognize that they do not have a minute to spare and will do whatever they need to do," Clark said. "But we had three months, and they only have a month.

"But the urgency will kick in and dealing with the situation takes away from the shock of it happening."

With the new Chase for the Nextel Cup format that was instituted last season, the season finale at Homestead-Miami Speedway has gained importance.

In addition to lighting, ISC also invested another $14.5 million into the construction of a Turn 1 Tower that features a luxury club and 16 corporate suites.

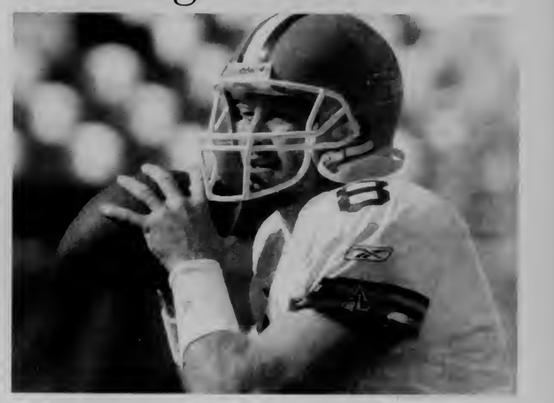
Gray said there appeared to be no damage to the outside of the new tower, which was still under construction. But he had yet to be able to check inside.

Several Nextel Cup teams had been scheduled to test this week, but cleanup will prevent that from happening. They might be able to test next week, but the damaged 50 feet of catch fencing must be repaired.

With less than a month before the race, Gray said some temporary repairs might have to suffice, "but it will be things fans won't really notice."

CALDER DAMAGED

At Calder Race Course, several of the barns lost their roofs during the hurricane, but no horses lost their lives.



"The infield tote board basically is history," said Mike Cronin, vice president for marketing at Calder.

Cronin is not sure when the track will be open for live racing and hopes to open for simulcasting Wednesday.

Check out the best coverage of UMass athletics online at dailycollegian.com

Time is running out for Dilfer

By Terry Pluto
Knight Ridder

Browns' quarterback Trent Dilfer has not been performing up to par as of late. Dilfer has recorded six interceptions over the pas three games, including three against the Detroit Lions on Sunday.

BEREA, Ohio — The Cleveland Browns had a plan.

Trent Dilfer plays; Charlie Frye waits.

Trent Dilfer handles the stress of playing for a team with limited talent; Frye learns how to be a starting NFL quarterback.

Trent Dilfer plays the role of Jon Kitna; Frye is Carson Palmer.

In 2003, Palmer was the No. 1 pick in the draft, but the Cincinnati Bengals played Kitna all 16 games, and Palmer watched. The Bengals were a surprising 8-8. Kitna had a superb season with 26 touchdown passes, 15 interceptions and an 87.4 passer rating.

The Browns wanted something like that to happen here.

If you're a Browns fan, you know nothing goes according to plan. Six games into this season, the Browns are 2-4. Overall, Dilfer has a decent 75.6 passer rating with six touchdowns and eight interceptions.

In the past three games, Dilfer has thrown six interceptions and lost two fumbles. He bottomed out with a 22 percent passer rating and three interceptions in the 13-10 loss to the Detroit Lions on Sunday.

Browns coach Romeo Crennel said Dilfer will start Sunday in Houston, but you can sense time is running out.

Sam Rutigliano was at the news conference Monday, listening to Crennel discuss his quarterback problem. The former Browns coach knows exactly what Crennel is thinking.

"If he turns to Frye, the message is this season is pretty much over and you're building for next year," Rutigliano said. "You make that decision, you can't turn back. It's over for Dilfer."

Rutigliano understands why the Browns are reluctant to do that.

"It's a tough situation for any rookie," he said. "They'll blitz him the moment he gets off the bus. He'll see stuff that he hasn't seen before. Remember when they put [Luke McCown] in last year, he nearly was destroyed."

Rutigliano said Dilfer is pressing, "trying to make big plays on offense because no one else is doing it right now."

He mentioned some key dropped passes by receiver Antonio Bryant, and how rookie receiver Braylon Edwards ("their only home run hitter") is just coming off an injury.

"It doesn't matter who is the quarterback, you still have a lack of playmakers," Rutigliano said. "Does throwing Charlie Frye into that right now help him?"

Rutigliano is not sure.

Neither are general manager Phil Savage and Crennel, which is why they are staying with Dilfer, for now.

Some fans want Frye to play in hopes he can do for the Browns what Ben Roethlisberger did for the Pittsburgh Steelers last season. But that's an entirely different situation as that Mid-American Conference rookie joined a winning, veteran team.

These Browns probably are one step ahead of pure expansion, despite being in their seventh year of existence.

Understand that Crennel hates losing. He hates how his defense has played so well while his offense seems to be getting worse each week. He hates talking and thinking about the possibility of changing quarterbacks.

He knows he [illegible] a "downhill" side. [illegible] describes how Dilfer and the offense have performed in the last [illegible] games.

Crennel also said he will [illegible] his quarterback "the benefit of the doubt."

At least, for now.

"I think Romeo [illegible] Trent can [illegible] against Chicago, where he made a couple of big plays at the end and then got a victory," Rutigliano said. "The idea is Trent gives [illegible] best chance to win now, and for a while, you can't run this thing. You have to do it."

Kapono to start as replacement for Posey

By Israel Gutierrez
Knight Ridder

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The last thing Miami Heat coach Stan Van Gundy needed was another setback as his team entered the final stretch of preparation for the regular season.

But that's exactly what he got when James Posey sprained his right thumb Saturday against the Detroit Pistons. The injury will keep Posey out at least two weeks, which means he'll miss the early portion of the regular season, and Van Gundy is looking for a starting small forward to replace Posey.

For now, that starter will be Jason Kapono, whose shooting creates spacing so Shaquille O'Neal and Dwyane Wade can work in the paint with less congestion.

"It gives us the shooting on the floor that we would like to have," Van Gundy said hours before Monday's preseason game with the Atlanta Hawks at the Gaylord Entertainment Center. "I think if you look right now, our concern from an offensive standpoint, our whole thinking right now is, with James or without James, is getting the people on the floor that we think are the best complements to Dwyane and Shaq.

"A big part of that has to do with shooting. Kapono is a very good shooter — he's a proven shooter — so we want to get him on the floor. Now he needs to get back to rebounding. He was a good rebounder last year."

Other options at small forward include Antoine Walker, but the natural power forward might struggle to defend small forwards. Shandon Anderson is another possibility once he returns from a back injury.

Posey is a top defender, and his absence will put more stress on Wade when facing quality perimeter players.

"It'll be a big challenge for me," Wade said. "But it'll be a bigger challenge for Jason than me."

But for now, shooting is more important than defense. And despite the Heat's awful .246 three-point shooting percentage this preseason, Van Gundy remains confident the team has enough quality perimeter shooters.

"I think our guys will shoot the ball better," he said. "If you go back to last preseason, Eddie Jones couldn't make a shot, Wes Person couldn't make a shot. There's a lot of that that goes on in the preseason."

Van Gundy's original plan for this four-game preseason trip was to start [illegible] Walker at [illegible] Haslem and O'Neal [illegible] could still happen [illegible] Kapono performs [illegible] Gundy wants to [illegible] One option Van Gundy expected to [illegible] Mourning [illegible] O'Neal, who [illegible]

DO YOU LIKE MONEY???
$$$$$$$$
DO YOU HAVE A CAR?
CAN YOU DELIVER PAPERS AT 7AM?
$$$$$$$$
NORTHAMPTON DRIVER WANTED
CALL 413.545.3500, ASK FOR TOM

Open Flu Shot Clinic 2005
ALL UMASS STUDENTS, STAFF AND FACULTY ARE WELCOME
UNIVERSITY HEALTH SERVICES IS OFFERING AN OPEN
CAMPUS FLU CLINIC
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 26
10 A.M. to 6 P.M.
AT THE CAMPUS CENTER ROOM 168C
COST: $15.00
University of Massachusetts Amherst
University Health Services
577-5000 • www.umass.edu/uhs

Richmond on top in A-10 South Division

A-10 from page 12

ing in week one against Massachusetts. Following its bye week, Richmond won three straight, capped off by a double-overtime decision against Hofstra, which the spiders won 43-37. The game was put away by quarterback Stacy Tutt, who fired the ball to receiver Amian Shields for a touchdown. After compiling 450 passing yards in that contest, Tutt added to his season total, which now stands at 1206. Shields has 37 catches for 470 yards and two touchdowns in 2005.

Moving up

Winner of four-straight, William and Mary is the only team to handle New Hampshire, holding a team that averages 41.1 points per game to only 10. After acting on Towson in a similar manner on Saturday, winning 44-13, the Tribe found their way into this week's top 10 rankings at No. 9. William and Mary is averaging 40 points per game on offense and have done so using tailback Elijah Brooks who has carried the ball 150 times for 699 yards and nine touchdowns. The story in the passing game has been the surprise upbringing of red-shirt freshman quarterback Jake Phillips, who has completed 62-of-78 passes for 858 yards, eight touchdowns and one interception in six games. Defensively, junior Ryan Nickell was recently named the A-10 defensive player of the week for his six tackles, two sacks and a 72-yard INT returned for a TD during the team's win over Towson on Saturday. Nickell has 38 total tackles two sacks this season.

Chicago preps for away games

By Dave van Dyck
Knight Ridder

CHICAGO — The supposed easy part of the World Series is over for the White Sox.

Now comes the hard part, playing three straight games at Houston's Minute Maid Park, which has a harmless enough name but has a way of putting visiting teams to shame.

U.S. Cellular Field is just another ballpark compared with the Juice Box, which has enough quirkiness to have helped the Astros tie for baseball's best home record at 53-28. And while the Sox had baseball's best road record at 52-29, they didn't compile any of it in such hostile environs as what Houston will be for Game 3.

"It's a little bit unique," Astros manager Phil Garner said. "Ours is unique because of the configuration of the outfield more than anything."

The Astros are comfortable at home, at least compared to the road where they were 36-45.

"As for the difference between home and road, I don't know," Garner said. "I don't have an explanation for it. We do seem to play better in our own ballpark. We seem to be comfortable in it."

Most of the Sox have never played there. The Sox's only visit there came in 2000, when they went 1-2 in an interleague series.

Of course, with the World Series moving to the National League, the Sox will be without the DH. With pitchers having to bat, that is a disadvantage in

See WHITE SOX on page 9

The Chicago White Sox will travel to Minute Maid Park in Houston to take on the Astros in Game 3 of the World Series.

Replay an option for other sports

REPLAY from page 12

a ham sandwich in the time it took Norm Van Brocklin to get back to the huddle," he told reporters.

So, he came up with the idea of reshowing plays immediately after they happened. Until that point, replays were available only at half-time and postgame. Verna chose the Army-Navy football game in Philadelphia as a guinea pig because Roger Staubach was the hottest quarterback around.

He spent three quarters trying to get it right, at one point discovering an I Love Lucy episode where he had hoped a football play would be.

Finally, in the fourth quarter, he got it to work and alerted game announcer Lindsey Nelson, "Here it comes." Viewers got an immediate second look at Army quarterback Rollie Stichweh's 1-yard touchdown.

"This is not live," Nelson screamed into the microphone. "Ladies and gentlemen, Army has not scored again."

Voila. Instant replay.

Within a few years, it was a regular part of sports programming.

Television viewers have come to expect to see every play at least twice, and often five or six times. But it has taken a long time for instant replay to become integrated into the games themselves.

Sports fans the world over have been left to wonder what might have been had officials been able to see the footage home viewers saw before making their final rulings.

If instant replay had been allowed at the 1972 Olympics in Munich, one of the greatest controversies in the history of sport could have been avoided. The Russian men's basketball team was erroneously awarded three extra seconds on the clock in the final against the United States, and Sasha Belov scored the gold medal-winning basket. To this day, the U.S. players have refused to accept their silver medals out of protest.

If instant replay had been allowed at the 1986 World Cup, the referee clearly would have seen that Argentina's Diego Maradona hit the ball over the head of England goalkeeper Peter Shilton with the back of his left hand, not his head. Maradona, who has since admitted he hit it with his hand, said at the time that the goal was scored by "the hand of God."

And, most recently, if Eddings had been permitted to see the footage of the questionable play that the home viewers saw, he might have seen that the pitch didn't appear to hit the dirt.

Still, many in baseball are not sold on the idea.

"Baseball has been played for 100 years, maybe longer than that, and they don't have it and I don't know the reason to do it now," White Sox manager Ozzie Guillen said.

Other sports, though, are ready to erase some of the imperfection. In tennis, 79 percent of the players on the men's tour voted in favor of instant replay, although top-ranked Roger Federer said: "I'm absolutely against it." The Hawk-Eye system, which determines the point of impact by the ball on the court, has seen significant improvements and could be unveiled in the next 12 months.

"I'm all for it," Martina Navratilova said. "People are worrying about the game slowing down; it's slowed down more by arguments than it would be by instant replay. They talk about margin of error of two centimeters; please let me have that."

Patrick McEnroe, TV analyst and Davis Cup captain, added: "If the chair umpire has a replay right there, even if it's proven to be 99 percent accurate, it's probably still more accurate than some of the line calls we're seeing. It would be fun for the fans and good for the game."

Soccer is also warming to the idea. The topic heated up again early this year when Tottenham Hotspur failed to win an English Premiership game against Manchester United after a ref failed to see United goalkeeper Roy Carroll mishandle a shot and scoop it after the ball had clearly landed over the goal line. It ended in a 0-0 tie and set off a worldwide debate on instant replay.

"It's absolutely inevitable that video replay is coming to soccer," said Ray Hudson, the former Miami Fusion coach. "People better get used to it, because it's going to happen, as sure as night follows day. It is needed. But it is going to be a sad, sad day. Something very sentimental about our game will be taken away. The phrase 'in the opinion of the referee' will have to be junked.

"Our game isn't like any other the movement, the continuity, the uninterrupted flow ... but it has gotten so fast and the stakes are so huge that video replay is going to become reality, just like in the NFL."

Said Tottenham boss Martin Jol: "What really annoys me is that here we are in 2005, watching something on a TV monitor within two seconds of the incident, and the referee isn't told about it. Why can't we just stop the game and get the decision right? When that technology is available, why are we not using it?"

Though instant replay will solve some on-field disputes, Hudson predicts the debates will live on.

"The good news is, no matter what they put in, there will still be raging in the coffee bars and pubs," he said. "They'll blame the cameramen."

Texas grabs the No. 1 ranking

TEXAS from page 12

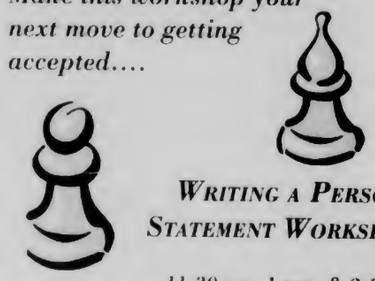
BCS analyst Jerry Palm said the gap between USC and Virginia Tech in the polls is so big that the Hokies would have to be at least four spots ahead of the Trojans in each of the six computer rankings to catch them in the standings.

"USC has nothing to worry about, as long as these poll margins stay the same," Palm said, "and one and two are as solid as we've ever seen in the BCS at this point in the season."

USC plays Washington State (3-4) on Saturday, then finishes the season against four teams with winning records: Stanford (4-2), No. 24 California (6-2), No. 22 Fresno State (5-1) and No. 8 UCLA (7-0).

"USC is in the middle of a lull in the schedule," Palm said. "Texas is about to hit a lull."

The Longhorns finish the regular season against Oklahoma State (3-4), Baylor (4-3), Kansas (3-4) and Texas A&M (5-2).



Virginia Tech's next two games are against No. 13 Boston College (6-1) and No. 6 Miami (5-1), so it wouldn't be surprising if the Hokies close some of the gap in the computer rankings if they win.

But unless a large group of voters in the Harris and coaches' poll move the Hokies past USC and/or Texas in the polls, coach Frank Beamer's team is still looking at being the odd team out.

Being No. 1 in the polls though not in the BCS is nothing new to USC. The Trojans finished the 2003 regular season atop the AP and coaches' polls, but were third in the BCS standings behind Oklahoma and LSU and left out of the BCS title game.

Is Graduate School Your Next Move?

Make this workshop your next move to getting accepted....

Writing a Personal Statement Workshops

11:30 am, 1 pm, & 2:30 pm
The Suffolk Room in the Student Union

phone: 413-545-2224
fax: 413-545-4426
www.umass.edu/careers

CareerServices

Career Services Office
UMass Amherst
511 Goodell Building

a division of Student Affairs & Campus Life

www.umasslug.org

IBM

Thursday October 27th, 2005
4:00-5:00 lecture by Paul Coates
5:00-5:45 demonstration

UMass W.E.B. DeBois Library Learning Commons, South Corridor

Open Standards, Open Source And Web Application Development

What does it mean to be "open" in today's IT environment? What are the challenges and benefits of using "open" or "closed" technology?

The talk will briefly introduce an open source research and teaching initiative at UMass and current and future collaboration between IBM and UMass. There will be a demonstration of the open source Eclipse 3.0 Integrated Development Environment, Apache Tomcat, and development with an open source relational database package (Derby/Cloudscape).

Friday October 28th, 2005
9:00am - 1:00pm

UMass W.E.B. DeBois Library Learning Commons, South Corridor

LinuxFest

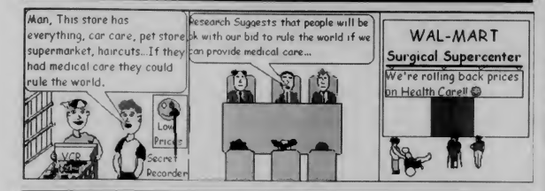
LinuxFest is an opportunity to participate in a hands-on workshop where you get to learn and "testdrive" Linux at three different levels. The workshop modules include installation and configuration of Fedora Core 4 (http://www.redhat.com/fedora), basic Linux usage fundamentals, or Linux intermediate administration tasks such as the installation and configuration of SAMBA or installing various open source tools such as the Eclipse IDE. There will be free gifts available and we will raffle off an iPod Nano!

Session requirements include a laptop running Windows XP or a Red Hat Linux distribution with at least 6-8GB of available disk space. Participants are encouraged to download and install a 30 day trial version of VMWARE Workstation 5.0 at http://www.vmware.com on their laptop PRIOR to attending the LinuxFest workshop.

For people without machines, there will be about 40 laptop machines available for participants who do not have their own equipment.

Seating is limited for the LinuxFest.
To make a reservation, please register at http://www.umasslug.org/ibm/ibmfest.php.

These events are co-sponsored by IBM, Court Square Data Group, and The University of Massachusetts Open Source Lab, Information Technology Program, Linux User Group, College of Social and Behavior Sciences, the Research Liaison And Development Office, and the W.E.B. Du Bois Library and new Learning Commons.



Franco the Clarinetting Navy Bean By Rainy Stanford

Labrat By Richard Martelly

Random Chatter By Chris Sala

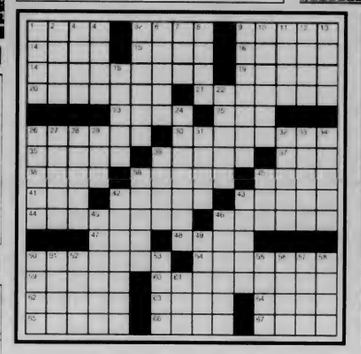
Functional Dystopia By Zeid Rusan

Nailed By T.J. Pederson

Quote of the Day

"It's not until you lose everything that you are free to do anything."

—Fight Club



ACROSS
1 Lousy thespians
5 Largest continent
9 Perfect
14 Urgent acronym
15 Highland group
16 Casals' instrument
17 Unwilling
19 Double curves
20 New England football player
21 Most agile
23 Very in France
25 Fleur-de-
26 Complete sequences
30 Recognize
35 Saintly circles
36 Type of preview
37 Regret bitterly
38 Nautical shout
39 Green's course
40 Home in Leon
41 S promise
42 Horse opera
43 Provide food
44 Prominent ones
46 Illegal coercion
47 Also
48 Box for practice
50 Bond's drink
54 Put into order
59 Rap-sheet datum
60 Kid's mom
62 Abovehoard
63 Algonquian language
64 Majestically impressive
65 Inclines
66 Pinned down
67 Adam's third son

DOWN
1 Type of seal
2 On a cruise
3 Grain beverage
4 Urge on
5 Made up people?
6 List of candidates
7 Author Fleming
8 Colony dwellers
9 Skaters' milieu
10 Forbear
11 Otherwise
12 Pub choices
13 Missing
18 Issues a ticket to
22 Appeal earnestly
24 Innocent
26 Sequence
27 Loudmouth
28 Influence
29 Actress Myrna
31 Letter opener
32 Furious
33 Melts together
34 Decade parts
36 Burliest
39 Beauty parlor
40 Ford or Dodge
42 Certain woodwind musicians
43 Spicy sauce
45 Reach
46 Mended as socks
49 Discussion group
50 Shopping center
51 Away from the wind
52 Latvian capital
53 Move by small degrees
55 Ripens
56 Stingy negative
57 Manner of walking
58 Engrave
61 Exist

Find today's answers online

www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP
NEW!! Wireless Internet
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
October Special!
$1.50 PBR Bottles: Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 a pitcher
Tonight: • TRIVIA NIGHT!
Wed. • Cold Duck Complex
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments

UMassYoga
Flexibility • Strength • Focus
Experience for yourself the state of relaxed well-being that yoga has to offer
Drop in For Only $10
Studio: Curtis Hinds Recreation/Boyden 215
15 minutes before class to register
Bring your own mat and any clothes comfortable
Fall 2005 Semester
Classes in Boyden 10
Mon./Wed. Power Yoga 11:10am - 12:10 pm; 12:30 - 1:45 pm
Tues./Thurs. Yoga Basics 10:30 - 11:30 am; 2:30 - 3:45 pm
Recreation Yoga 2:30 - 3:45 pm
Intermediate Yoga 4:00 - 5:15 pm
7 classes per week Only $80
2 classes per week $150
To Register
Campus Recreation • Boyden 215
545-0022 • www.umass.edu/rm

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your use of paper plates is killing rainforests.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your attendance record is so good it's scary.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Buy stickers and decorate your desk with them.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Instead of buying a new pencil sharpener, make the switch to mechanical.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Your crush will see you before you've showered today.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will get a free book of coupons today.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You could really use some coffee. You look terrible.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Your last-minute studying skills are impressive.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
If you get any more parking tickets this year you will slip into debt.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You haven't left the sofa in days. Go for a walk.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Order pizza today. It's too gloomy to go outside.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Start meditating now. This week is going to be quite stressful.

★ Submit your comic ★

e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

$600 Group Fundraiser Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising programs Equals $1,000-$3,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for up to $600 in bonuses when you schedule your fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments. Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

Auto for Sale

92 Honda Accord Auto loaded 145k Good Condition $2200 obo David 253-3297

Employment

Kitchen help wanted. Must be able to work 20hrs/week. Apply at DP Dough Downtown Amherst, MA 01003

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8.00 Hr. 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location NO SALES! Night & wknd; shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening experiments $10/hr English must be your first language email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

"Bartending" $300 day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Web programmer with experience with graphics design wanted for work in the Office of ALANA Affairs. Up to $10.00 an hour. Apply at office in room 302 in Student Union or email ofalana@stuaf.umass.edu

Services

Have you been ripped off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Travel

SPRING BREAK FROM $569 BAHAMAS, CANCUN, ACAPULCO, JAMAICA! FREE PARTIES, FREE DRINKS. Sign up early and save. Organize a small group and you travel FREE. Or become a CAMPUS REP and GET PAID COMMISSION on each trip sold. Call today and get started 1-800-GET-SUN-1

ACT NOW — SPRING BREAKERS Book early & Save! Free meals parties by 11/7. Lowest prices. Be a rep & TRAVEL FREE! Get the ultimate hookups with STA TRAVEL 413-256-1261.

Travel

SPRING BREAK Early Booking Specials — FREE Meals & Drinks - $50 Deposit — 800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

SPRING BREAK Early Booking Specials — FREE Meals & Drinks - $50 Deposit 800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

Wanted

Pregnant? Bi-lingual Spanish couple, waiting to adopt. Love nature, music, and animals. Will share these interests with your baby. Happy to share letters, pictures and to stay in touch. Call Brightside 24/7 and ask about Dawn and John. 1-877-777-7774 license #1465107

Submit your comics for publication in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian! Just email collegiancomics@yahoo.com or drop your comic off in the graphics room of the Collegian located in the Campus Center Basement. Ask for our comics editor, Amanda.

Richmond on top in A-10 South Division

A-10 from page 12

ing in week one against Massachusetts. Following its bye week, Richmond won three straight, capped off by a double-overtime decision against Hofstra, which the spiders won 43-37. The game was put away by quarterback Stacey Tutt, who fired the ball to receiver Amran Shields for a touchdown. After compiling 450 passing yards in that contest, Tutt added to his season total, which now stands at 1206. Shields has 37 catches for 470 yards and two touchdowns in 2005.

Moving up

Winner of four-straight, William and Mary is the only team to handle New Hampshire, holding a team that averages 41.1 points per game to only 10. After acting on Towson in a similar manner on Saturday, winning 44-13, the Tribe found their way into this week's Top 10 rankings at No. 9. William and Mary is averaging 40 points per game on offense and have done so using tailback Elijah Brooks who has carried the ball 150 times for 690 yards and nine touchdowns. The story in the passing game has been the surprise upbringing of redshirt freshman quarterback Jake Phillips, who has completed 62-of-78 passes for 858 yards, eight touchdowns and one interception in six games. Defensively, junior Ryan Nickell was recently named the A-10 defensive player of the week for his six tackles, two sacks and a 72-yard INT returned for a TD during the team's win over Towson on Saturday. Nickell has 38 total tackles two sacks this season.

Chicago preps for away games

By Dave van Dyck
Knight Ridder

CHICAGO — The supposed easy part of the World Series is over for the White Sox.

Now comes the hard part, playing three straight games at Houston's Minute Maid Park, which has a harmless enough name but has a way of putting visiting teams to shame.

U.S. Cellular Field is just another ballpark compared with the Juice Box, which has enough quirkiness to have helped the Astros tie for baseball's best home record at 53-28. And while the Sox had baseball's best road record at 52-29, they didn't compile any of it in such hostile environs as what Houston will be for Game 3.

"It's a little bit unique," Astros manager Phil Garner said. "Ours is unique because of the configuration of the outfield more than anything."

The Astros are comfortable at home, at least compared to the road where they were 36-45.

"As for the difference between home and road, I don't know," Garner said. "I don't have an explanation for it. We do seem to play better in our own ballpark. We seem to be comfortable in it."

Most of the Sox have never played there. The Sox's only visit there came in 2000, when they went 1-2 in an interleague series.

Of course, with the World Series moving to the National League, the Sox will be without the DH. With pitchers having to bat, that is a disadvantage in

See WHITE SOX on page 9

The Chicago White Sox will travel to Minute Maid Park in Houston to take on the Astros in Game 3 of the World Series.

Replay an option for other sports

REPLAY from page 12

a ham sandwich in the time it took Norm Van Brocklin to get back to the huddle," he told reporters.

So, he came up with the idea of reshowing plays immediately after they happened. Until that point, replays were available only at half-time and postgame. Verna chose the Army-Navy football game in Philadelphia as a guinea pig because Roger Staubach was the hottest quarterback around.

He spent three quarters trying to get it right, at one point discovering an I Love Lucy episode where he had hoped a football play would be.

Finally, in the fourth quarter, he got it to work and alerted game announcer Lindsey Nelson, "Here it comes." Viewers got an immediate second look at Army quarterback Rollie Stichweh's 1-yard touchdown.

"This is not live," Nelson screamed into the microphone. "Ladies and gentlemen, Army has not scored again."

Voila. Instant replay.

Within a few years, it was a regular part of sports programming.

Television viewers have come to expect to see every play at least twice, and often five or six times. But it has taken a long time for instant replay to become integrated into the games themselves.

Sports fans the world over have been left to wonder what might have been had officials been able to see the footage home viewers saw before making their final rulings.

If instant replay had been allowed at the 1972 Olympics in Munich, one of the greatest controversies in the history of sport could have been avoided. The Russian men's basketball team was erroneously awarded three extra seconds on the clock in the final against the United States, and Sasha Belov scored the gold medal-winning basket. To this day, the U.S. players have refused to accept their silver medals out of protest.

If instant replay had been allowed at the 1986 World Cup, the referee clearly would have seen that Argentina's Diego Maradona hit the ball over the head of England goalkeeper Peter Shilton with the back of his left hand, not his head. Maradona, who has since admitted he hit it with his hand, said at the time that the goal was scored by "the hand of God."

And, most recently, if Eddings had been permitted to see the footage of the questionable play that the home viewers saw, he might have seen that the pitch didn't appear to hit the dirt.

Still, many in baseball are not sold on the idea.

"Baseball has been played for 100 years, maybe longer than that, and they don't have it and I don't know the reason to do it now," White Sox manager Ozzie Guillen said.

Other sports, though, are ready to erase some of the imperfection. In tennis, 79 percent of the players on the men's tour voted in favor of instant replay, although top-ranked Roger Federer said: "I'm absolutely against it." The Hawk-Eye system, which determines the point of impact by the ball on the court, has seen significant improvements and could be unveiled in the next 12 months.

"I'm all for it," Martina Navratilova said. "People are worrying about the game slowing down; it's slowed down more by arguments than it would be by instant replay. They talk about margin of error of two centimeters; please let me have that."

Patrick McEnroe, TV analyst and Davis Cup captain, added: "If the chair umpire has a replay right there, even if it's proven to be 99 percent accurate, it's probably still more accurate than some of the line calls we're seeing. It would be fun for the fans and good for the game."

Soccer is also warming to the idea. The topic heated up again early this year when Tottenham Hotspur failed to win an English Premiership game against Manchester United after a ref failed to see United goalkeeper Roy Carroll mishandle a shot and scoop it after the ball had clearly landed over the goal line. It ended in a 0-0 tie and set off a worldwide debate on instant replay.

"It's absolutely inevitable that video replay is coming to soccer," said Ray Hudson, the former Miami Fusion coach. "People better get used to it, because it's going to happen, as sure as night follows day. It is needed. But it is going to be a sad, sad day. Something very sentimental about our game will be taken away. The phrase 'in the opinion of the referee' will have to be junked.

"Our game isn't like any other – the movement, the continuity, the uninterrupted flow – but it has gotten so fast and the stakes are so huge that video replay is going to become reality, just like in the NFL."

Said Tottenham boss Martin Jol: "What really annoys me is that here we are in 2005, watching something on a TV monitor within two seconds of the incident, and the referee isn't told about it. Why can't we just stop the game and get the decision right? When that technology is available, why are we not using it?"

Though instant replay will solve some on-field disputes, Hudson predicts the debates will live on.

"The good news is, no matter what they put in, there will still be raging in the coffee bars and pubs," he said. "They'll blame the cameramen."

Texas grabs the No. 1 ranking

TEXAS from page 12

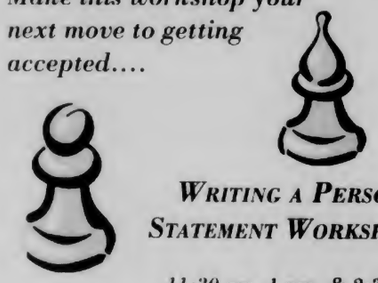
BCS analyst Jerry Palm said the gap between USC and Virginia Tech in the polls is so big that the Hokies would have to be at least four spots ahead of the Trojans in each of the six computer rankings to catch them in the standings.

"USC has nothing to worry about, as long as these poll margins stay the same," Palm said, "and one and two are as solid as we've ever seen in the BCS at this point in the season."

USC plays Washington State (3-4) on Saturday, then finishes the season against four teams with winning records – Stanford (4-2), No. 24 California (6-2), No. 22 Fresno State (5-1) and No. 8 UCLA (7-0).

"USC is in the middle of a lull in the schedule," Palm said. "Texas is about to hit a lull."

The Longhorns finish the regular season against Oklahoma State (3-4), Baylor (4-3), Kansas (3-4) and Texas A&M (5-2).



Virginia Tech's next two games are against No. 13 Boston College (6-1) and No. 6 Miami (5-1), so it wouldn't be surprising if the Hokies close some of the gap in the computer rankings if they win.

But unless a large group of voters in the Harris and coaches' poll move the Hokies past USC and/or Texas in the polls, coach Frank Beamer's team is still looking at being the odd team out.

Being No. 1 in the polls though not in the BCS is nothing new to USC. The Trojans finished the 2003 regular season atop the AP and coaches' polls, but were third in the BCS standings behind Oklahoma and LSU and left out of the BCS title game.

Is Graduate School Your Next Move?

Make this workshop your next move to getting accepted....

Writing a Personal Statement Workshops

11:30 am, 1 pm, & 2:30 pm
The Suffolk Room in the Student Union

phone: 413-545-2224
fax: 413-545-4426
www.umass.edu/careers

CareerServices

Career Services Office
UMass Amherst
511 Goodell Building

a division of Student Affairs & Campus Life

www.umasslug.org

IBM

Thursday October 27th, 2005
4:00-5:00 lecture by Paul Coates
5:00-5:45 demonstration

UMass W.E.B. DeBois Library Learning Commons, South Corridor

Open Standards, Open Source And Web Application Development

What does it mean to be "open" in today's IT environment? What are the challenges and benefits of using "open" or "closed" technology?

The talk will briefly introduce an open source research and teaching initiative at UMass and current and future collaboration between IBM and UMass. There will be a demonstration of the open source Eclipse 3.0 Integrated Development Environment, Apache Tomcat, and development with an open source relational database package (Derby/Cloudscape).

Friday October 28th, 2005
9:00am - 1:00pm

UMass W.E.B. DeBois Library Learning Commons, South Corridor

LinuxFest

LinuxFest is an opportunity to participate in a hands-on workshop where you get to learn and "testdrive" Linux at three different levels. The workshop modules include installation and configuration of Fedora Core 4 (http: www.redhat.com/fedora), basic Linux usage fundamentals, or Linux intermediate administration tasks such as the installation and configuration of SAMBA or installing various open source tools such as the Eclipse IDE. There will be free gifts available and we will raffle off an iPod Nano!

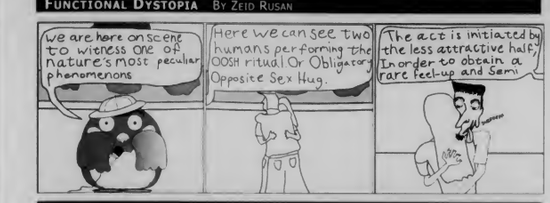
Session requirements include a laptop running Windows XP or a Red Hat Linux distribution with at least 6-8GB of available disk space. Participants are encouraged to download and install a 30 day trial version of VMWARE Workstation 5.0 at http://www.vmware.com on their laptop PRIOR to attending the LinuxFest workshop.

For people without machines, there will be about 40 laptop machines available for participants who do not have their own equipment.

Seating is limited for the LinuxFest.
To make a reservation, please register at http://www.umasslug.org/ibm/ibmfest.php.

These events are co-sponsored by IBM, Court Square Data Group, and The University of Massachusetts Open Source Lab, Information Technology Program, Linux User Group, College of Social and Behavior Sciences, the Research Liaison And Development Office, and the W.E.B. Du Bois Library and new Learning Commons.

Franco the Clarinetting Navy Bean By Rainy Stanford



Labrat By Richard Martelly

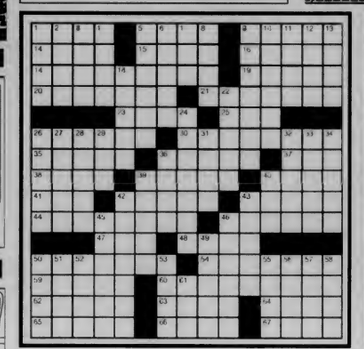
Random Chatter By Chris Sala

Functional Dystopia By Zeid Rusan

Nailed By T.J. Pederson

Quote of the Day

"It's not until you lose everything that you are free to do anything."



—Fight Club

ACROSS
1 Lousy trespass
5 Largest continent
9 Perfect
14 Urgent acronym
15 Highland group
16 Casals instrument
17 Unwilling
19 Double curves
20 New England football player
21 Most agile
23 Very in France
25 Fleur-de-
26 Complete sequences
30 Recognize
35 Saintly circles
36 Type of preview
37 Regret bitterly
38 Nautical shout
39 Greens course
40 Home in Leon
41 $ promise
42 Horse opera
43 Provide food
44 Prominent ones
46 Illegal coercion
47 Also
48 Box for practice
50 Bond's drink
54 Put into order
58 Rap sheet datum
60 Kid's mom
62 Aboveboard
63 Algonquian language
64 Majestically impressive
65 Inclines
66 Pinned down
67 Adam's third son

DOWN
1 Type of seal
2 On a cruise
3 Grain beverage
4 Urge on
5 Made-up people?
6 List of candidates
7 Author Fleming
8 Colony dwellers
9 Skaters' milieu
10 Forbear
11 Otherwise
12 Pub choices
13 Missing
18 Issues a ticket to
22 Appeal earnestly
24 Innocent
26 Sequence
27 Louismouth
28 Influence
29 Actress Myrna
31 Letter opener
32 Furious
33 Melts together
34 Decade parts
36 Surfeit
39 Beauty parlor
40 Ford or Dodge
42 Certain woodwind musicians
43 Spicy sauce
45 Reach
46 Mended, as socks
49 Discussion group
50 Shopping center
51 Away from the wind
52 Latvian capital
53 Move by small degrees
55 Ripens
56 Stingy negative
57 Manner of walking
58 Engrave
61 Exist

Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP
NEW!! Wireless Internet
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
October Special!
$1.50 PBR Bottles; Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 a pitcher
Tonight: • TRIVIA NIGHT!
Wed. • Cold Duck Complex
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
413-548-6900 | www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments

UMassYoga
Flexibility × Strength × Focus
Experience for yourself the state of relaxed well-being that yoga has to offer
Drop in for Only $10
Stop by Campus Recreation Boyden 215 15 minutes before class to register. Bring your towel and yoga clothing.
Fall 2005 Semester
Classes in Boyden 10
Mon, Wed: Power Yoga 1:10 pm - 12:10 pm; 2:30 - 1:45 pm; Recreation Yoga 2:30 - 3:15 pm
Tues, Thurs: Yoga Basics 8:30 - 9:25 am; 4:00 - 5:15 pm; Intermediate Yoga 2:30 - 1:45 pm
1 class per week Only $80
2 classes per week $150
To Register
Campus Recreation × Boyden 215
545-0022 × www.umass.edu/umrm

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your use of paper plates is killing rainforests.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your attendance record is so good it's scary.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Buy stickers and decorate your desk with them.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Instead of buying a new pencil sharpener, make the switch to mechanical.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Your crush will see you before you've showered today.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will get a free book of coupons today.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You could really use some coffee. You look terrible.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Your last-minute studying skills are impressive.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
If you get any more parking tickets this year you will slip into debt.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You haven't left the sofa in days. Go for a walk.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Order pizza today. It's too gloomy to go outside.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Start meditating now. This week is going to be quite stressful.

★ Submit your comic ★

e-mail
collegiancomcis@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

$600 Group Fundraiser Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising programs Equals $1,000-$3,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for up to $600 in bonuses when you schedule your fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments. Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

Auto for Sale

92 Honda Accord Auto loaded 145K Good Condition $2200 obo David 253-3297

Employment

Kitchen help wanted. Must be able to work 20hrs/week. Apply at DP Dough Downtown Amherst, MA 01003

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8.00 Hr. 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location NO SALES! Night & wknd; shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening experiments $10/hr English must be your first language email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience nees. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Web programmer with experience with graphics design wanted for work in the Office of ALANA Affairs. Up to $10.00 an hour. Apply at office in room 302 in Student Union or email ofalana@stuaf.umass.edu

Services

Have you been ripped off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Travel

SPRING BREAK FROM $569 BAHAMAS, CANCUN, ACAPULCO, JAMAICA! FREE PARTIES, FREE DRINKS. Sign up early and save. Organize a small group and you travel FREE. Or become a CAMPUS REP and GET PAID COMMISSION on each trip sold. Call today and get started 1-800-GET-SUN-1

ACT NOW – SPRING BREAKERS Book early & Save! Free meals parties by 11/7. Lowest prices. Be a rep & TRAVEL FREE! Get the ultimate hookups with STA TRAVEL 413-256-1261.

Travel

SPRING BREAK – Early Booking Specials – FREE Meals & Drinks - $50 Deposit – 800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

SPRING BREAK – Early Booking Specials – FREE Meals & Drinks - $50 Deposit – 800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

Wanted

Pregnant? Bi-lingual Spanish couple, waiting to adopt. Love nature, music, and animals. Will share these interests with your baby. Happy to share letters, pictures and to stay in touch. Call Brightside 24/7 and ask about Dawn and John. 1-877-777-7774 license #1465107

Submit your comics for publication in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian! Just email collegiancomics@yahoo.com or drop your comic off in the graphics room of the Collegian located in the Campus Center Basement. Ask for our comics editor, Amanda.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 25, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen grab third-place

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Correspondent

On Saturday, the Massachusetts women's cross country team finished third in a mini-meet of six other teams that included the likes of Rhode Island, UConn, and Central Connecticut State University.

The order of finishes for the Maroon and White was: sophomore Christina DeRosa (3rd overall), sophomore Amanda Bodette (13th), junior (14th), junior Erin O'Donnell (15th), junior (21st), sophomore Ashley Davidson (27th), junior Suzanne Simmons (46th), junior Elizabeth Harlow (51st), freshman Lauren Noreen (55th) and junior Jenna Elznic (64th).

The mini-meet, which was run at Stanley Quarter Park in New Britain, Conn., was a 3200-meter race as opposed to the standard 5000 meters of a regular meet. The concept of a mini-meet is aimed at preparing the runners for the Atlantic 10 Championships in Philadelphia, Penn. Oct. 29th.

UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said the 3200 meter distance, which is over a mile shorter than normal meet, "works out quite well" because it allows the ladies to "run fast and hard" and still give their bodies enough time to recover for the 5000 meter race coming up in a week's time. LaFreniere added that the 3200-meter course is more like a sprint for cross-country runners.

Besides DeRosa, who finished 3rd overall with a time of 11:23, which is an average of about 5:41 a mile, LaFreniere paid special homage to the performance of Amber Sayer a recent transfer from Duke University, who suffered a sprained ankle about four weeks ago and produced a time of 12:02.

"[Sayer] has had a real rough time of it lately," Lafreniere said. "One thing after another [has gone wrong for her]".

LaFreniere added that she was also very proud of Amanda Bodette, Cuisle Kierans and Erin O'Donnell, who finished thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth and were almost "joint at the hip" for the whole race. Lafreniere also said that she has been very proud of the way her team has developed throughout the entire season.

Aside from the athletic aspect, the team's comradeship has added to their progress as a group.

"[The team is] very, very close," LaFreniere said of the team which has no official captain. "One-for-all-and-all-for-one, [they are] pretty much all leaders."

The team's goal for the entire season was to hold their own at the Conference Championships, which take place next week. According to LaFreniere, the team has been preparing for this weekend from the strart of the season.

Salle, a powerhouse of women's cross country, is the favorite to take the crown and Richmond, UNC-Charlotte, URI, and Duquesne are expected to make the rest of the top five. LaFreniere said that her squad is aiming for several slots when the day is finished.

"Fighting sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth [place], and that they could place sixth, but we need seven very hard performances [and to] run relaxed and confident," Lafreniere said.

COURTESY OF MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophomore Amanda Bodette and the UMass cross country team placed third overall at Saturday's mini-meet at UConn. Bodette finished 13th overall at the meet behind teammate Christina Derosa.

Taking a look at the top dogs around the A-10

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

One month and one day is all that lies ahead before the start of the Atlantic 10 football playoffs. With November forthcoming, the fate of teams throughout the A-10 lies in the upcoming weeks and regardless of record and rankings, for most teams, a spot is up for grabs. Four games remain for A-10 football players to reflect off of their success, or failure, this season. Although many stars have a highlight reel already in the works, the reel is only about a third complete.

Representing the Top five

The 6-1 New Hampshire Wildcats are one of four A-10 teams that were listed on this week's The Sports Network's Top 25 rankings. UNH just happens to be the only team that is in the Top 5 portion of that list. After recovering from a brutal 42-10 loss against William and Mary, the Wildcats have won two contests in a row, outscoring their opponents by a count of 105-23. Leading the way for UNH, as usual, is the one-two offensive punch of quarterback Ricky Santos and wide receiver David Ball, both of whom are nominated for this years Walter Payton Award. Completing 177-of-240 passes for 2160 yards, 21 touchdowns and seven interceptions in 2005, Santos leads the A-10 in passing yards per game and total offense. His counterpart, Ball, has caught 41 of Santos' passes for 750 yards and nine TDs.

Off the radar

Although it is not in the Top 25 rankings, Richmond does have something to be pleased with. The Spiders have climbed to the top of the A-10 south division with a season record of 4-3 and an A-10 record of 4-1, with their only conference loss com-

See A-10 on page 10

Texas ousts USC in the BSC rankings

By Ralph D. Russo
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Texas passed Southern California by a whisker and moved into first place in the Bowl Championship Series standings Monday, a swap that shouldn't worry the Trojans too much.

USC and the Longhorns are still the odds-on favorites to play for the BCS championship on Jan. 4 at the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, Calif.

Thanks to the computer rankings, Texas slipped into first by the slimmest of margins – actually THE slimmest between Nos. 1 and 2 in the eight-year history of the BCS. Texas' average of .9763, of a possible 1.000, was just ahead of USC with .9756.

"It's a compliment because it's a place we haven't been in a long time and it sets our standard even higher," Texas coach Mack Brown said.

USC is top-ranked in The Associated Press media poll, the USA Today coaches' poll and the Harris Interactive poll. The coaches' poll and the Harris poll make up two-thirds of a team's BCS grade. A compilation of six computer rankings account for the other third, with the highest and lowest ranking for each team dropped. Texas was first in all but one of those rankings.

"I still don't know how the BCS rankings really work, except that computers are involved," USC coach Pete Carroll said. "And I don't know how you get mad at a computer."

Texas is second in all three polls, and gained a few points on USC from voters after a 52-17 victory over previously unbeaten Texas Tech on Saturday. Computer polls, however, weigh heavily on strength of schedule and the win over the Red Raiders gave Texas a boost.

USC's 51-24 victory over Washington (1-6) extended its winning streak to 29 games but did nothing to help the Trojans in the computer rankings. Struggling Arizona State (3-4) – which was ranked when USC won at Tempe on Oct. 1 – is also hurting the Trojans in the strength-of-schedule category.

USC was atop one computer ranking and second in three others. One computer had the Trojans fourth; another fifth.

Virginia Tech is still in third in the standings. Georgia and Alabama were next, while UCLA moved up three places to sixth, putting the nation's six unbeaten teams at the front of the BCS rankings.

Miami, LSU, Penn State and Florida State rounded out the top 10.

See TEXAS on page 10

Texas quarterback Vince Young was able to project his team atop the BSC rankings after a 52-17 win over Texas-Tech on Saturday.

Instant replay not a part of MLB

By Michelle Kaufman
Knight Ridder

Upon further review, most baseball purists continue to resist instant replay.

They would rather debate for weeks, maybe months, whether Angels catcher Josh Paul trapped or caught the pitch that Chicago's A.J. Pierzynski swung at and missed in what could have been the final out of Game 2 of the American League Championship Series.

They analyzed television replays of that pitch from every angle. They dissected umpire Doug Eddings' hand motions and the puff of dirt that emerged from Paul's glove. But don't expect video replay to invade their hallowed, if imperfect, sport. Not as long as Bud Selig is commissioner, anyway, and maybe not after that, either.

"The game's good the way it is, so let's leave it like that," said former Florida Marlins manager Jack McKeon, reached at his North Carolina home.

"Human error has always been part of the game. We make mistakes, the players make mistakes, and the umpires make mistakes. If we start to challenge every call, the game will get too long, and it still won't be perfect, anyway."

Pencils have erasers. Computers have delete keys. And sports, more and more, are welcoming replay as they have embraced technological advances in equipment, facilities and training methods.

The NFL, NBA and NHL use cameras to settle close plays. Through six weeks of this NFL season, 102 plays have been reviewed and 33 overruled. The NBA uses video aid to clarify shots at the buzzer, and NHL coaches and officials can appeal to a replay judge who verifies whether the puck crossed the goal line.

Rugby and cricket use replay. Soccer, tennis and swimming are talking about introducing it.

Even college sports are going high-tech. This year, for the first time, nine of 11 Division I-A conferences are using video replay in football, as are all the bowl games. Thus far, 254 calls have been challenged, and 78 were overturned.

One of the only major-college games that did not use replay this season was Notre Dame-USC last weekend, because Trojans coach Pete Carroll is against it and as visiting coach had the option to turn it down.

Had officials been allowed to see the TV monitors, they might have spotted Matt Leinart's fumble out of bounds at the 2- or 3-yard line instead of the 1. They also might have seen USC running back Reggie Bush nudge Leinart into the end zone for the winning touchdown. Had either play been altered, USC might not be No. 1 in the BCS today.

But even though replay is becoming commonplace elsewhere, baseball is still holding out. Major-league general managers split 15-15 during their last annual meeting on the idea of using it even on a limited basis. And not even a handful of questionable calls in recent weeks has swayed Selig's stance.

"I think the human element in baseball is very important," Selig said last week. "I'm a football fan, too, and I hate instant replay in the NFL. Football games are taking four hours. I don't know how we could use it to improve the job our umpires do."

Even Angels manager Mike Scioscia opposes the idea, despite the controversial Game 2 call.

"I'm not in favor of replay at all," he said. "There might be some replay that can come in on a home run, fair or foul, or fan interference, but as far as plays around the bases, or home plate, I don't think replay is anything we should bring into the game."

Astros manager Phil Garner said: "I can get as upset with the umpires as anybody, but on balance, they do a terrific job. These are our best umpires, and it's not an exact science. I don't know that you can make it an exact science."

Cardinals fans have spent the past 20 years cursing umpire Don Denkinger, whose blown call at first base allowed Kansas City to win Game 6 of the 1985 World Series. Baltimore fans still haven't gotten over Rich Garcia overlooking a 12-year-old fan turning Derek Jeter's fly ball into a home run in the 1996 American League playoffs.

Instant replay could have altered those plays, and the course of sports history, but Major League Baseball has resisted the urge to go technical in this age of instant messaging, iPods and digital cameras.

"I'm a baseball person, and my feeling is that the human element of officiating is one of the beauties of the game," Marlins TV analyst Tommy Hutton said. "There have always been bad calls, and we accepted them. Now, there's more scrutiny because we see the play 15 times on SportsCenter, but that doesn't mean we should change our game. Even in football, I think it's a distraction to see a guy peering into a camera under a black cloth like it's some X-rated movie."

It was nearly 43 years ago, on Dec. 7, 1963, that revolutionary CBS producer Tony Verna changed the way America – and eventually the world – watched sports.

Verna believed there was too much dead time during football game broadcasts. "You could eat

See REPLAY on page 10

PATRICK SCHNEIDER/KNIGHT RIDDER

Instant replay has been a major part of play in the NFL and recently college basketball, but has yet to make its way into other sports such as Major League Baseball and the Olympics.

Sports Mailbag

Do you have a question or comment to contribute to the Sports section's newest feature? Send an E-mail to Sports@DailyCollegian.com and we'll answer it during our weekly sports mailbag.

New England's Largest College Daily · Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Wednesday, October 26, 2005 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXVI Issue 34

Suspects nabbed in Southwest dorm burglary

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

Two men were arrested on the University of Massachusetts campus Monday after breaking into a ground-level dormitory room in the Southwest Residential Area, according to police.

Anthony C. Bellofatto, 18, of 313 Bainbridge St. in Malden was arrested and charged with breaking and entering in the daytime to commit a felony, larceny over $250 and carrying a dangerous weapon on school grounds; Matthew A. Salmeri, 18, of 95 Suffolk St. in Malden was arrested and charged with breaking and entering in the daytime to commit a felony and larceny over $250.

Bellofatto and Salmeri are UMass students.

Police say the two suspects were observed climbing out of a ground-floor dormitory room in the Moore dormitory at 3:08 p.m. Concerned witnesses called police.

According to Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald, police officers were on the scene within five minutes of the call.

Officers caught up with the suspects, later identified as Bellofatto and Salmeri, in the trees near Lot 11.

The suspects were "very evasive in answers to questions," Archbald said.

Police say Salmeri and Bellofatto stole over $500 in electronics from a student's dorm room.

After the suspects were arrested, neither had the money to be released on bail and both were subsequently transferred to the Hampshire County House of Corrections.

While arresting the individuals, officers reportedly found a knife on Bellofatto's person.

"If not for the diligence of the student calling us right away, this may have been an unsolved case," Archbald said.

Monday's burglary is the latest in a string of criminal incidences that have occurred on or near the UMass campus. Before Monday, the most recent incident of notice was an alleged sexual assault that took place Oct. 19 in a parking lot in Southwest. The most notable incident was Oct. 2 when six people, five of whom were UMass students, were stabbed on North Pleasant Street near several fraternities. On Sept. 25, police issued a "crime alert" after an alleged armed robbery, in which a Springfield gang member was found holding a .45 caliber pistol in a campus parking lot.

UMass police have not asked students to take any extra precautions in light of the recent serious crimes. However, Archbald reminds all students to take simple precautions, such as locking doors in light of the recent thefts and not walking alone late a night.

"We're not an island here," Archbald said. "Students become victims just as easily here as they can in a big city."

UMass police has posted safety tips for students on its Web site, www.umass.edu/umpd.

One of those safety tips is using a student escort service, something that Archbald says has not been used very much. Students have only used the service 21 times since the beginning of the fall 2005 semester.

Isenberg School of Management receives praise

By Hannah Leung
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts may be the number nine party school according to the Princeton Review, but the UMass Isenberg School of Management's Master of Business Administration (MBA) program is also redeemably ranked as one of the Best 237 Business Schools in the Princeton Review's annual Best Business Schools publications.

In the 2006 edition of the Best 237 Business Schools, the Isenberg School of Management's MBA program received two top 10 national rankings. First, the full-time residential MBA program was ranked fourth in the nation in the category Best Professors, holding its spot from last year. In the category Best Overall Academic Experience, Isenberg improved its spot from last year, moving up from tenth to sixth.

Rankings for the category of Best Overall Academic Experience included the tabulation of GMAT scores, undergraduate grades of enrolled students, percentage of students accepted and enrolled, student to faculty ratio and student responses to Princeton Review survey questions regarding the overall academic experience.

The Best Professors category was ranked by the students themselves based on faculty effectiveness and faculty accessibility.

Louis Wigdor, Communications director of the school, supports the general consensus of the students in regard to the highly accomplished faculty.

"Part of the Isenberg culture has been an open door faculty culture, where your faculty don't just quit and go home," said Wigdor. "Office hours are very flexible, the professors are very easy to get in touch with."

Additionally, the Isenberg School of Management received an Admissions Selectivity Rating of 95 out of 99, ranking it as highly selective and therefore comparable with prestigious brand name schools, such as Yale, Northwestern, Stanford and Berkeley.

There are 479 students currently enrolled in the Isenberg School of Management, with the average GMAT ranging from 590-720. The average undergraduate GPA is a 3.37.

Since all the students have already had some form of work experience, the average age in the program is 27.

"The MBA program looks for students with work experience, students who have been out and developed some business skills who want to top them with management skills," said Wigdor.

Though financial aid is not included as a category, it is certainly one of the most important factors when looking at schools. Thus, students at Isenberg recognize the affordability of the school with its public-school tuition, assistantships, fellowships and financial aid.

Many full-time students receive fellowships and assistantships. Students work with Isenberg professors on research and consulting projects, and receive compensations such as a paid tuition. Fellowships and scholarships for academic achievement are also awarded to exceptional candidates.

Annual fund received from alumni and friends is also used tactfully. Funds keep software and learning technologies updated, award up to $150,000 in scholarships every year and support many undergraduate programs.

Diversity plays a key role in Isenberg School. Nearly half of the MBA students are women. Eleven percent of the student body are minorities; 21 percent of its students are international, with 15 foreign countries represented.

The exterior of the Isenberg School itself is quite impressive.

In the fall of 2003, the school opened its $16 million, 45,000 square-foot Harold Alfond Management Center. The Alfond Management Center offers four case rooms ranging from 60 to 95 seats, eight break rooms which are alongside the case rooms, separate standing rooms where students can meet, teleconferencing and computing facilities and student service facilities.

If the full time MBA program is too rigorous for the lot, it may be helpful for students to know that the same distinguished faculty also teaches in the part-time program, and 12 countries. This program is available only to working students.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO/MARK SIMONSON

The Isenberg School of Management's Master of Business Administration was ranked as one of the Best 237 Business Schools in the Princeton Review's annual Best Business Schools publication.

UMass' Journalism Department given $24,000

By Emily Moses
Collegian Correspondent

A University of Massachusetts alumnus is giving the school's Journalism Department a gift of $24,000 to start the Lecture Series in Broadcast and the Media.

David Kantor, who graduated with the class of 1979, is hoping to jumpstart a series that will include names in radio and television broadcasting from around the country.

During his semesters at UMass, Kantor says that his most fond memory was starting and running the University Productions and Concerts (UPC Productions), which brought popular acts such as Tom Waits, the Allman Brothers, the Grateful Dead and the Talking Heads to perform at UMass in the late '70s and early '80s.

He hopes that through his donation, the Journalism Program Lecture Series in Broadcast and the Media will also give the opportunity to bring well known speakers to the students at UMass.

While studying at UMass, Kantor also worked at the Fine Arts Center and participated in the student senate.

Kantor is one of the most experienced and respected media executives in the country, currently as the Vice Chairman and CEO of Reach Media. Reach Media is a leading example in media for the African-American community.

Kantor says he and his wife, Teena, made the decision to fund many Programs related to media they felt would give back in ways that are important to them.

"As it relates to UMass specifically, I wanted a program that would excite students and faculty and give UMass recognition for its journalism Program," said Kantor.

There are eight UMass journalism major students in charge of the broadcast Lecture series. They have chosen Buzzy Bissinger as the first lecturer and they also chose New Orleans radio personalities Diane Newman, Monica Pierre and Ernesto Shweikert to speak on the

See GRANT on page 3

Florida recovering from powerful Hurricane

By Curt Anderson
Associated Press

WESTON, Fla. — Floridians lined up for water, gas, ice and generators Tuesday outside the few stores that were open after Hurricane Wilma cut a costly, deadly swath across the peninsula.

The storm slammed across the state in about seven hours Monday, causing billions in insured damage and leaving 5.9 million people, or a little less than 3 million homes and businesses, without electricity. More than 5,000 residents remained in shelters Tuesday as the hurricane's remnants headed toward the North Atlantic. Wilma was blamed for at least five deaths in Florida. Earlier, authorities reported six deaths in the state but on Tuesday they revised the number to five deaths.

Officials of Florida's three most populous areas — Miami-Dade, Broward and Palm Beach counties — prepared to distribute ice, water and other essentials to residents Tuesday, while utilities warned that restoration of services could stretch into weeks.

"It will be days or weeks before we are back to normal," Miami-Dade Mayor Carlos Alvarez said.

Before smashing into Florida, Wilma killed at least six people in Mexico, one person in Jamaica and 12 people in Haiti.

The storm devastated resort towns along Mexico's Caribbean coast, severely flooding the tourist hotspot Cancun, where looters ransacked entire blocks of stores. Thousands of tourists remained stranded along the resort-studded Yucatan coast Tuesday.

In Cuba, the storm flooded Havana's streets and ripped off chunks of the famous Malecon seawall.

In Florida, most stores remained closed because of the widespread power outages, creating long lines at those that were open. More than 500 people queued up outside a Broward County Super Wal-Mart, which was letting in about 20 people at a time.

The first person in line, Joyce Carr, had been waiting several hours in hopes of buying a generator only to learn the store was out. But she still wanted to buy a grill, charcoal and water.

"We've heard different reports that the power will be out for some time so we're worried about supplies for our family," Carr said.

Gov. Jeb Bush thanked emergency workers for their efforts.

"My heart goes out to people that have lost a lot and they can be rest assured that the state government and the federal government will be working to provide support," he added Tuesday in Miami.

At the Sunny Isles Marina, the boat storage structure collapsed under the heavy winds of Hurricane Wilma. Nearly 5,000 residents still remained in shelters Tuesday.

At 11 a.m. EDT Tuesday, Wilma was centered about 570 miles east-northeast of Cape Hatteras, N.C. The system had weakened to a Category 2 storm with 105 mph sustained wind but was moving incredibly fast for a tropical system — 53 mph. It was expected to lose its tropical characteristics over the cooler Atlantic late Tuesday or early Wednesday.

Although it was so far out to sea, it was contributing moisture to a nor'easter that was blowing through the Northeast, causing widespread power outages and hammering New Jersey beaches with 20-foot waves.

On Florida's Turnpike near Miami, dozens of cars waited to get gas at a station that had power. At the Orange Bowl near downtown Miami, cars stretched at least half a mile at a distribution point for ice and water.

"I wasn't prepared for anything. I never thought it would be this bad," said Virginia Davila, 29, as she waited at the stadium.

Ellen Seigel, 56, of Naples, sat on a bench in the neighborhood near downtown Fort Lauderdale where she was staying. The street was littered with broken glass and pieces of foam insulation as people bought carts full of water and milk in a drug store.

See WILMA on page 3

Miss. officials continue search for student

By Martha Irvine
Associated Press

NORMAL, Ill. — The search for a missing college student may have reached a critical point, as officials in Mississippi waited Tuesday for medical and dental records to determine whether a body found in a burnt-out chicken house could be that of 21-year-old Olamide Adeyoye.

Elsewhere, investigators continued to interview several "persons of interest" in a case that gained attention through an Internet campaign launched by Adeyoye's friends.

The popular senior at Illinois State University had been studying laboratory sciences and biology, and was due to graduate in December. She was last seen nearly two weeks ago at a video store near her apartment in Normal, a college town in central Illinois.

A native of Nigeria who moved to suburban Chicago when she was 8, Adeyoye had planned to return to the Chicago area to complete her clinical training at a hospital.

Friends call her "Ola" or "Ollie" and have described her as studious, quick with a smile and hardworking — an alternative rock fan who loved to shop and waitressed on weekends to help with her school expenses.

"I am my own hero, I am my own motivation, and let's not forget the people that are closest to me, my friends are those that get me through life," Adeyoye wrote in her online blog www.myspace.com/olamide1 — which her friends have publicized, hoping the photos posted on it might lead to a break in the case. They're also circulating links to the video for the song "Hello" by local indie band Bottle of Justin, in which Adeyoye makes a brief appearance.

Some have wondered whether Adeyoye's blog, which contains information about her school and where she worked, might have contributed to her disappearance.

"I often speak to students and tell them not to share so much information online. You don't even know who's reading it," Normal Police Lt. Mark Kotte said. But so far, he said, investigators have no indication that the blog is a factor, though they are checking Adeyoye's recent e-mails.

Mississippi authorities notified Normal investigators about an unidentified woman's body Monday in response to a nationwide alert seeking Adeyoye and her car, Kotte said. The car, a green

See STUDENT on page 3

ARTS & LIVING
LEADING A HEALTHIER LIFE
Dr. Andrew Weil comes to Chapin Auditorium to speak and promote his book, "Healthy Aging."
Page 6

EDITORIAL/OPINION
FBI WANTS TO WIRETAP STUDENTS
How wiretapping Internet may add to tuition costs.
Page 4

WEATHER
TODAY Rain, H49°, L33°
TOMORROW Rain, H49°, L33°
FRIDAY Partly Cloudy, H51°, L31°

SPORTS
BREAKING DOWN BUCCANEER
Don Brown dissects one of his most successful defensive plays.
Page 12

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Cameron J. Woods
BUSINESS MANAGER Hirak Shah
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerry O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egavian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Matthew O'Rourke
COPY EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Allison Edles
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
PHOTO EDITOR Kate Sachsenmaier
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
HUMAN RESOURCE Phil Smoller
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Nathan Chomsky
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mackenzie Isler
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Jones
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Daley
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Belliveau
ASSISTANT PHOTO Elizabeth Carisi
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eric Athas
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Kristen LaCasse

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENT, SELF-SUPPORTING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BECAME AN ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS (ACP) FIVE-STAR AWARD WINNER IN 1915 AND THE 1920 COLLEGIAN IN 1924. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED SEVEN ACP/CMA PACEMAKER AWARDS AND NUMEROUS ALL-AMERICAN HONORS.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Allison Edles
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Jen Kennedy
COPY EDITOR
Dan O'Brien
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Matt Fox, Allie Marmone

police

Burglary at Pierpont dormitory in Southwest, student resists arrest

Monday October 24

Lamar J. Henley, 20, of 126 Ballou Ave in Dorchester was arrested at 4:03 p.m. and charged with trespassing, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct; Jeantillorme Berlourde, 20, of 96 Jackson Circle in Cambridge was also arrested and charged with disorderly conduct and resisting arrest. Police responded to a call by an unidentified individual that Henley, a male, was taking a shower in the female bathroom on the 14th floor of Coolidge dormitory in Southwest. Henley allegedly refused to leave and became aggressive, which prompted the individual to call police. By the time officers arrived, Henley had left the bathroom and was in the dorm room of Berlourde, whom he was dating. Henley allegedly began yelling at the police officers when he was confronted.

At this point, officers informed Henley that he was violating a "no trespassing" order that was previously filed against him by the University. Henley allegedly tried to walk away from the cops. Officers then tried to place him under arrest and he resisted. Officers said they struggled with him all the way downstairs to the cruiser, as he put his feet and arms out trying to push the officers away. Berlourde was arrested for interfering with Henley's arrest. She allegedly grabbed onto Henley and screamed at officers.

Sunday October 23

George J. Paglieroni, 22, of 9 Ruby Rd. in Dracut, was arrested at 1:45 a.m. and charged with operating under the influence of liquor, speeding greater than unreasonable or proper and speeding in excess of 10 miles per hour in a parking lot. An officer said he observed Paglieroni speeding in Lot 32E, near the UMass Visitors Center, during inclement weather. Paglieroni reportedly failed a field sobriety test on the scene as well as at the police station.

Police responded to reports of a possible breaking and entering at Pierpont dormitory in Southwest at 3:15 p.m. Residents reported several missing items from their dorm room, including an ATM card, a digital camera, an iPod music player and other items, which totaled over $500. The parties stated that they had a large number of people, some of whom they did not know, in their room the night before.

Saturday October 22

Noel R. Stevenson, 20, of 58 Elose St. in Springfield was arrested at 2:27 a.m. in Lot 21 near Southwest and charged with operating a vehicle without insurance.

Wednesday October 19

Christian B. Rahn, 21, of 318 Mendon Rd. in Northbridge, was arrested at 9:12 a.m. and charged with failing to stop at a stop sign, driving with a suspended license and an outstanding warrant. An officer reportedly observed Rahn failing to stop at a stop sign at the intersection of Fearing Street and University Drive as he was driving his motorcycle. Upon investigation, the officer found Rahn had a suspended license and a warrant for his arrest from Hadley police on a charge of disorderly conduct.

— Compiled by Dan O'Brien

University presidents file suit against FCC ruling

By Yashoda Sampath
Daily Texan (U. Texas)

AUSTIN, Texas — An alliance of university presidents, including University of Texas President Larry Faulkner, filed a lawsuit Monday challenging a federal ruling that would force universities to re-engineer their networks by June 2007 to make wiretapping easier.

The Federal Communications Commission ruled that universities must renovate their broadband networks to allow law-enforcement officials easier access for surveillance. The American Council on Education said that the upgrades are expensive and unnecessary because a procedure already exists to install wiretaps.

"Law enforcement has a need to be able to stay current with new technology, and that applies to all communications carriers," said Paul Bresson, spokesman for the U.S. Department of Justice.

In early October, the FCC granted a petition from the Department of Justice to expand the Communications Assistance for Law Enforcement Act (CALEA) to include Internet communication such as e-mail, instant messaging and voice communications. CALEA was passed in 1994 and required phone companies to re-engineer phone lines to make the conducting of court-ordered wiretaps more efficient.

Implementing a broad re-engineering of networks has raised concerns about funding and the disruption of experimental networks run by U. Texas researchers, said Daniel Updegrove, vice president for information technology.

Bresson said the Department of Justice is reviewing funding concerns and specific requirements will be released in two weeks. Updegrove said that university officials won't know the price tag until then, but it could be very expensive, particularly if the FCC insists upon the 18-month deadline.

The cost depends partly on how many surveillance points the Justice Department would require. Having a single point to monitor traffic in and out of the university would not be too expensive, Updegrove said, but complete coverage would be costly because equipment would have to be installed at every wiring cabinet that ethernet cables run through, which would create security concerns.

"If you create a set of points, you hope that the only one who could listen is law enforcement members with valid credentials," said Updegrove. "But what if the bad guys are listening in too? We would certainly want some clear indication that these doors and windows aren't being left [open] inadvertently and aren't being abused."

Maintaining the re-engineered network presents another financial concern. Updegrove said that even if federal funding is provided for initial installation, upkeep could be very expensive for two reasons: possible federally mandated upgrades every two to three years and tightened security.

Law enforcement officials must get a warrant from a federal judge and then present it to the college or university before they can set up a wiretap. The university's legal counsel would then check liability issues and bring in people to install the required technology.

"Under CALEA, what we would have to do is basically automate it, so basically you could flip a switch to send the information after getting the warrant," said Wendy Wigen, a policy analyst for EDUCAUSE, a non-profit alliance for university provosts. She said that there were probably fewer than 10 Internet-tapping requests per year across the country.

EDUCAUSE is working with the Justice Department to find alternatives to the broad overhaul, Wigen said.

"They do seem open to suggestions, so we're hoping that we can find a halfway point," Wigen said.

EDUCAUSE's proposal would have institutions hire round-the-clock staff contacts who would know the procedure for a wiretap and would be able to handle the legal and technical aspects. Wigen added that hiring new personnel would be much less costly to universities.

Texas University President, Dr. Larry Faulkner, is one of the many university presidents sharing concern over the new FCC regulation.

WHAT'S YOUR NEXT MOVE AFTER GRADUATION?

TODAY!
COME TO THE
GRADUATE & PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL INFORMATION DAY
Wednesday, October 26th
11am-3pm
Student Union Ballroom

Also Today: Creating A Personal Statement Workshops
11:30 am, 1 pm, & 2:30 pm in the Student Union Suffolk Room

phone: 413-545-2224
fax: 413-545-4426
www.umass.edu/careers

CareerServices

Career Services Office
UMass Amherst
511 Goodell Building

a division of Student Affairs & Campus Life

Powerful nor'easter, fed by Wilma, hits New England

By Brooke Donald
Associated Press

BOSTON — Rivers are already near flood stage. The ground is saturated. People are fed up with the miserable, raw, nasty weather that has made this October one of the wettest on record.

But wait, there's more.

A nor'easter settled over New England early Tuesday, bringing high winds, heavy rains, coastal flooding and maybe even snow to parts of southern New England later in the day. The storm was drawing moisture from Hurricane Wilma, which was passing well offshore after pounding Florida a day earlier.

"It's getting some energy from Wilma, but it's its own separate system," said Alan Dunham, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Taunton. It's "going to be a good storm in it's own right."

With many areas still recovering from the month's earlier downpours, exhausted emergency personnel across the state braced for more flooding and possible power outages.

"There's the potential for all sorts of problems all over the state," said Peter Judge, spokesman for the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency.

Already, the storm was blamed for minor coastal flooding and scattered power outages on Cape Cod. But authorities were expecting bigger problems later Tuesday, Judge said.

The National Weather Service issued a high wind warning for the Massachusetts and Connecticut coasts, saying the storm will bring sustained winds of 40 mph, with gusts up to 65. A wind advisory was issued for Rhode Island and central Massachusetts, including Worcester.

Early Tuesday, a 47 mph gust was recorded at the Blue Hills Observatory just south of Boston. The wind apparently blew over a tractor-trailer crossing the Bourne Bridge, forcing the closure of one of the two routes onto Cape Cod.

At Logan International Airport, dozens of flights were canceled and delays of up to 2 1/2 hours were reported.

Forecasters also said the storm could produce 20-foot seas and a 3-foot storm surge, causing more coastal flooding during the Tuesday evening high tide. The good news, Judge said, is that tides are astronomically lower than normal, providing the coast with some "wiggle room" for the expected surge.

Salem Harbormaster Peter Gifford said boats were taking refuge in the relatively protected harbor. "There's really no other place to go, so they're all coming here," he said Monday night.

Two to 4 inches of rain are also expected, with some areas getting up to 5 inches. More than 3 inches could spark renewed flooding concerns in the Merrimack Valley. Portions of Massachusetts and Rhode Island saw severe flooding earlier this month.

The weather service also issued a winter storm watch for the Berkshires beginning Tuesday at noon, with the potential for up to seven inches of snow at elevations above 1,500 feet. The expected wet, heavy snow, could bring down tree limbs and power lines.

After an unusually warm and dry September, October has been anything but. In Providence, R.I., it's already been the wettest month on record, with 13.21 inches of rain beating the 12.74 inches that fell in April 1983, ing. forecasters said.

Waves slam against the sea wall and homes in Scituate as high tide approaches Tuesday afternoon. The region was still in the process of recovering from flooding earlier in the month.

Florida, cleaning up again

WILMA from page 1

"I haven't seen anybody that's in bad humor at all," Seigel said. "Especially after what happened in Katrina, I think people are just thankful that they're safe. I mean, how can anybody complain about this?"

Eqecat Inc., a risk modeling firm, said early estimates projected that Wilma's insured losses would range from $2 billion to $6 billion. AIR Worldwide Corp. estimated that insurance companies will have to pay claims ranging from $6 billion to $9 billion. Risk Management Solutions estimated a range of $6 billion to $10 billion.

Authorities said two people were dead in Collier County, one in Palm Beach County, one in Broward County and one in St. Johns County.

Mississippi officials check woman's body for potential match

STUDENT from page 1

1996 Toyota Corolla with Illinois license LB67927, remains missing.

The body was found Friday morning near Interstate 20 in the central part of the state, Delores Lewis, a Mississippi Department of Public Safety spokeswoman said in a statement. Firefighters put out a blaze in the chicken house four days earlier, and workers found the body as they were cleaning up the site, the statement said.

Since her disappearance on Oct. 13, Adeyoye's family also has been a constant presence in Normal, helping police search for Adeyoye there.

There have been vigils at Illinois State, at Olamide's former high school in suburban Chicago and at a site near her boarded-up apartment and train tracks, where investigators found personal items belonging to her.

Notes and posters also have sprung up on campus and online. "Hope you're safe "because we missed you in class. Chem. 140, Sec. 6," said one handwritten note from students in her chemistry class.

Samantha Troha, one of her best friends, said that Adeyoye had been worried and crying on the phone about that class in the days before her disappearance. She characterized it as the usual stress of a student, which had prompted Adeyoye to study at the library until midnight the night before she disappeared.

"She's just honestly ...," said Troha, a 21-year-old computer programmer who grew up with Adeyoye in the Chicago suburb of Berkeley. "You can't help but fall in love with her when you meet her. We kind of complete one another."

At a vigil on campus, fellow senior Clarence Evans remembered Adeyoye as "a sister who walked this campus strong" together.

"With her friends, there were no deep color lines at all," said Evans. "This is family, Illinois State — we're family," Evans told the crowd.

Kantor introduces the 'Journalism Lecture Series' difficulties and triumphs they faced over the airwaves during Hurricane Katrina and its aftermath.

GRANT from page 1

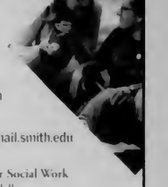
Bissinger, a Pulitzer Prize winning journalist and author of the best-selling book Friday Night Lights will speak at UMass' Fobin Hall on Nov. 3, followed by an informal pizza reception to give students the opportunity to speak with the author. The lecture After Katrina: How Radio Saved the City of New Orleans featuring three radio personalities will be held on Nov. 16 in the W.E.B. Dubois library.

Kantor is satisfied with the lecturers chosen so far, and says as long as they are selected by the students and interest is high, he will continue to be satisfied.

He hopes the series will be extremely successful so he can make an easy decision about continuing to fund lecturers in the future.



"I consider this year a test program. After it's over I will evaluate it and make a decision about funding it and going forward," said Kantor.

Kantor also says the Journalism Program Lecture Series in Broadcast and the Media has been brought to UMass in hopes that students from all majors and interests will "have a better understanding of the realities of the media world and not just be exposed to the glossed over views that we see every day."

Kantor graduated with BDIC in Performing Arts Administration and Management. He was born in Dorchester and grew up in Belmont.

The Journalism Program Lecture Series in Broadcast and the Media will be active all year, beginning in November and running through the spring semester.

Smith College School for Social Work
OPEN HOUSE
for MSW & PhD programs
Saturday, November 5, 2005
Campus Center
Noon–5:00 pm

To register, please call the Office of Admission at 413-585-7988 or email to sswadmis@email.smith.edu

Smith College School for Social Work
Office of Admission, Lilly Hall
Northampton, Massachusetts 01063
Tel: 413-585-7960
E-mail: sswadmis@email.smith.edu
www.smith.edu/ssw

First Fifty UMass Students Wearing a Costume...receive a UMASS Athletic Tee Shirt

A Howling Good Time in the DCs

Join in the Excitement and Savor the Local Flavors of Halloween!

MENU
Live Lobster
New York Strip Steak
Baked Fresh Stuffed Zucchini
Local Red Roasted Garlic Potatoes

Worcester and Berkshire DC: 5 to 9 pm
Franklin and Hampshire DC: 5 to 8 pm

Fall Under The Spell Of
Harry Potter
Wed. October 26th
11:30-2:00pm in all DCs

Enter to win the latest book... "The Half Blood Prince"

LUNCH MENU FEATURING:
Bat Wings chicken wings
Rubeus Hagrid corn on the cob
Dumbledore's Password lemon sorbet
Dobby's Sticky Toffee Pudding
Magic Wands pretzel rods dipped in chocolate with sprinkles

DINING SERVICES
UMass/Amherst

Digiorno Award
GRAND PRIZE WINNER '05

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 26, 2005

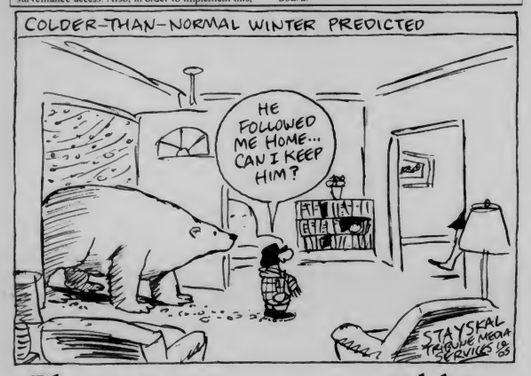
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it."
Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

F.B.I. trying to add to college student expenses

It's difficult enough for universities to get funding, but now the F.B.I. is thinking about adding even more stress to the average college student. The F.B.I. is in the process of deciding whether or not they should enforce a 1994 law, the Communications Assistance for Law Enforcement Act, which requires universities to pay in order to allow the F.B.I. to wiretap the Internet. They also want to enforce this in airports and libraries as well. The government says doing this will help them catch terrorists and other criminals. If this law is allowed to take effect universities will have to pay at least $7 billion collectively.

How does that affect tuition costs one might ask? Even the lowest estimates of compliance costs would, on average, increase annual tuition at most American universities by some $450, at a time when rising education costs are already a sore point with parents and members of Congress, Mr. Terry W. Hartle said. He is a senior vice president of the Lawyers for the American Council on Education which is the nation's largest association of universities and colleges according to the New York Times. He also said on Friday that they are preparing to appeal the order before the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.



This proposal has prompted a very negative reaction. Universities are threatening law suits and are holding protests, but it's possible that neither will help. According to the article, this law requires telephone carriers to engineer their switching systems at their own cost so that federal agents can obtain easy surveillance access. Also, in order to implement this, the government would have to win court orders so universities are not yet raising civil liberties.

The New York Times also stated that Justice Department officials said in their written comments filed with the Federal Communications Commission that the new requirements were necessary to keep the 1994 law "viable in the face of the monumental shift of the telecommunications industry" and to enable law enforcement to "accomplish its mission in the face of rapidly advancing technology."

Thankfully, the order does not require surveillance of networks that permit students and faculty to communicate with each other so some government officials say they don't view compliance as overly costly, according to the article. But what may be "overly costly" to them might be quite costly to the average college student. They also say that the schools would be required to make their networks accessible to law enforcement only at the point where those networks connect to the outside world.

Until the F.B.I. gets the court orders all those opposing surveillance can do is wait. If this order is passed, college students will have to worry about increased tuition, invasion of privacy and just the overall paranoia that comes with being monitored by the government. Wiretapping is, in most cases, necessary in the government's eyes. However, it is not acceptable for the students to have to pay for it and blindly agree/comply with the policy.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

The sports junkie addiction

Nick Belanger

Obsession and addiction are often regarded as something unhealthy or dangerous. We all know someone that has a serious problem with drugs, alcohol or watching "The O.C." Likewise we all know individuals obsessed with professional sports, and perhaps you are one of those athletic addicts yourself.

I have always had a tremendous love for sports. I watch pro-football religiously. I cried when the Sox won the series, and I am constantly watching ESPN for the latest highlights. A lot of people don't necessarily understand the appeal of sports and think they are simply a waste of time, but I beg to differ.

It's common of sports junkies to deny addiction, but I'm here to tell you that it's okay to admit you have a problem. Just go ahead and ask yourself the following questions: Do you find yourself watching the same episode of Sportscenter three times a day? Did you celebrate when you saw that the university cable plan now includes the NFL network? Do you look to Jim Rome for spiritual advice? Is at least one of the happiest moments of your life a Superbowl? Do you play fantasy football, baseball, basketball and NASCAR? Do you consider Jon Madden a modern day Buddha? And finally, have you ever skipped an exam to go to a victory parade for your team? Don't worry if you answered "yes" to any of those questions. You're healthier than you think.

Recently I was fortunate enough to interview a local sports writer for a Journalism 300 class assignment. The writer, who shall remain nameless, provided me with some insight on the culture of sports in America.

Professional sports are a multi-billion dollar business in this country. As a product professional sports appeals to the widest and most diverse of audiences. Sports are truly a culture. The passion that people feel towards their favorite teams or athletes is indescribable. The euphoric feeling of victory and the gut-wrenching feeling of defeat are truly unique to the sports culture. Everyone at one point or another is a sports fan, even if it is just one game a year and you're cheering for the team with the pretty uniforms. At that point you become a fan and the game takes on a deeper meaning.

> As a product professional sports appeal to the widest and most diverse of audiences. Sports are truly a culture, the passion that people feel towards there favorite teams or athletes is indescribable.

Sports give us an identity. We all have our teams that we feel a certain amount of loyalty to. Just look at the recent power of the Red Sox on the nation. It was just one year ago that thousands of Sox fans, so overwhelmed with happiness, took to Southwest in consecutive nights of riotous celebration. What else could drive thousands of liquored up students to riot in such a manner?

How is it that something as simple as a baseball game can give us such a tremendous feeling of joy? Along the same lines, how can a game drive people to tears? The power of the game is undeniable. When the Sox won the World Series, I heard people say that they could die happy. It's truly unbelievable that a game can be such a definitive moment in someone's life.

Despite recent high profile negative sports stories, such as steroids, Kobe Bryant's rape case and Ron Artest's assault on fans, sports usually provide a good amount of positive stories. Reading the news section of a newspaper can get fairly depressing because the media in general focuses on really negative stories. However, sports are one aspect of the media that is almost always positive. Some of the most interesting stories come from sports and some of the most compelling individuals are athletes.

For example, Lance Armstrong came back from testicular cancer to win a record seven Tour de' Frances. You don't have to be a fan of professional cycling to be compelled and drawn to this story. It's something that no matter who you are, you can't deny the incredible appeal of this man and his story. Athletes provide people with role models, real heroes and they are constant sources of inspiration for all of us.

Competition is healthy. We love the drama of a good game and better yet, the experience of what watching that game gives us. Sports bring people together.

Obsession over sports is an extremely interesting phenomenon and for the most part, a harmless passion shared by millions and millions world wide. However, even I can admit with 24 hour network convergence, the Internet, the emergence of fantasy sports and gambling, a healthy love of sports can quickly turn into a dangerous addiction.

Nick Belanger is a Collegian staff member.

Plagiarism is major problem

Andrew Freeman

In seventh grade, I was astonished to learn that my classmates were copying one another's homework, and had no qualms about doing so. I can't remember seeing widespread cheating prior to that. In high school, I learned of a larger menace that stalked the schools and frightened teachers – plagiarism.

Now, scarcely a term goes by without at least one of my professors explaining what plagiarism is, warning us against it and stating his or her policy towards it.

Academic plagiarism is a major problem, though statistics vary as to how widespread it is. The company iParadigms cites a 1998 survey by Who's Who Among American High School Students, which found that 80 percent of respondents cheated. However, there are several problems with this figure.

First, the survey covered students in the top 5 percent of high schools, so it was not representative of high school students as a whole who might be more or less honest. Second, this figure is misleading, because only 13 percent of students admitted to plagiarism in an essay, with most cheating during tests. iParadigms presented the 80 percent figure on their Web site, turnitin.com, without noting that only a fraction of those students plagiarized. Turnitin.com is used by many educators as a resource against plagiarism, so it is in the company's economic interest to let readers assume that 80 percent of students are plagiarizing.

A more significant figure comes from a study conducted by Rutgers University Professor Donald McCabe, who surveyed more than 18,000 students at 23 colleges. Thirty eight percent of students stated they had plagiarized from the Internet at least once that year. If the actual rates of plagiarism are anywhere near this figure, let alone higher, then it constitutes a serious problem.

Plagiarism defeats the true purpose of education, which is to learn processes – how to research, how to write, how to conduct an experiment and broadly, how to think about complex ideas.

The biggest reason plagiarism occurs is that most students are not intellectuals, and neither see nor care about the value of these processes. The goal for most of them is to acquire a degree or get good grades, and they see no other meaning in the work they do. In that vein, they have no respect for the standards that ideas and their origins are held to.

> Plagiarism, and cheating in general, is ultimately a sign of something far worse for society ...The Catholic Church allowed priests to molest children, moved them around and covered it up, not just in one city but across the nation.

Academics, by contrast, make their living on the basis of their ideas and thoughts. Professors write books and articles, develop reputations and achieve acclaim on the strength of the originality of their ideas. If those ideas are found to be unoriginal, then the esteem an academic is held by becomes worthless. Professors who engage in substantial plagiarism probably began to do so as an undergraduate, so it is understandable that universities pursue stringent policies against plagiarizers.

However, imposing heavy penalties for a behavior is unlikely to end it, which is as true for college alcohol abuse as it is for plagiarism. Some professors will shy away from seeking disciplinary action against the offender, and perennial plagiarizers will continue despite the dangers.

Students need to understand why plagiarism is wrong, and not just from the perspective of academics and instructors. A good analogy is identity theft. How would you feel if someone stole your identity and ran up huge credit card bills? Outraged, no doubt. Now, how would you feel if someone took credit for the song you wrote or the act you accomplished?

Ideas, actions, these are what define people, and when you plagiarize, you pass up an opportunity to express yourself.

Plagiarism, and cheating in general, is ultimately a sign of something far worse for society. Journalists like Stephen Glass and Jayson Blair fabricated entire articles for respected publications. The Catholic Church allowed priests to molest children, moved them around and covered it up, not just in one city but across the nation. The nation was defrauded on a massive scale by businessmen, like Kenneth Lay of Enron, who amassed immense wealth while their companies fell. The President let his allies slime a war hero and lied to us repeatedly to promote a war that was never necessary.

All of these scandals start when someone decides that the goal he seeks to accomplish is so important that any method is justified in achieving it. People who do not care about the impact of their actions, from criminals to bishops, make the country a more miserable place. When my cheating classmates mature and enter the working world, I hope that lesson will be clear. If not, if there is no respect for ideas, no concern for the common good, then the scandals of today are but a prelude to the suffering we will face.

Andrew Freeman is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

SUPPORT UMASS TEAMS

In Tuesday's issue of the Collegian there was an unsigned editorial bemoaning the lack of school spirit UMass has, and the image that is created by empty stadiums on campus. I am not writing to argue the lack of enthusiasm the students have for their teams, because there have been plenty of times over my three plus years here when I didn't go to a game simply because I couldn't find anyone that wanted to go. The two points of the editorial I took issue with were the claims that the students did not come out to support their hockey team on Friday night, and that the lack of school spirit gives taxpayers and parents of potential students second thoughts about giving UMass money.

Before I begin talking about Friday night's game, let's get one thing straight. The official capacity of the Mullins Center for a hockey game is 8,389. I haven't the slightest clue where the number of 10,500 came from, but 15 seconds of actual research would have yielded the correct number. That being said, I feel the listed attendance of 4,708 is quite impressive considering Holy Cross came from a vastly inferior league. Opponents can play a huge factor in the number of people that show up, and there is nothing sexy about the prospect of seeing Holy Cross.

Granted they beat us, but that says more about how we played than how good they are (not to take anything away from Holy Cross who played a good game). Combine that with little marketing done, and the Collegian preview for the game being on a day when there are the fewest amount of students on campus (Friday), and you should be pretty pleased with an attendance of nearly 5,000. And let's not forget who the majority of people in the stands were – students. If you want to criticize people, write an editorial in the Hampshire Gazette or Springfield Republican because the paying fans were the ones who decided not to show up that night.

The second point I have an issue with stems from the following quote in reference to prospective students and their parents. "...the feeling they get from seeing a half-empty Mullins Center on opening night is not one that makes them feel good about shelling out money for this school, whether it be through taxes or tuition." A half-empty Mullins Center is what keeps them from sending money to this school? Interesting. I would think the fires and overturned cars during riots would be a reason to question financial support for this school. How about stabbings in front of Frat Row, or students who run over their peers while drinking and driving? Somehow I feel like lack of student support for its athletic teams is pretty far down on the list.

In the end, absence of school spirit is not going to be the downfall of this school. However, this is an issue that needs to be addressed, and a good start would be for everyone to support the football and hockey teams this weekend against their nationally ranked opponents.

Davin Lencz
UMass student

THE STABBING 'INCIDENT'

"Stabbing" frat? How could a headline so far off from the facts be present in our highly respected university's student newspaper? Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life at our beloved UMass feels that the community would be better off without us and many other fraternities, namely because of the recent "incident" on North Pleasant Street. Let me then question you which incident this refers to.

The only "incident" we were involved in on Oct. 2 was one in which we were the victims – two of our brothers got stabbed while on their way to a party, a far cry from the media's descriptions. In fact, there has yet to be an article written with any substantial hint of accuracy up to this point. What is important is that our brothers, alumni and national office, as well as the Amherst Police Department know the facts.

To a degree, we wish more people knew the actual facts. For if that were the case, there would be no such threat of a suspension against us. We are appealing Mr. Gargano's decision, and hope these accusations of making the community a dangerous place are ill-received by the students of UMass, as well as the residents of Amherst as a whole.

While Mr. Gargano states he is confident "that the evidence at this point is overwhelmingly against," we ask, what evidence is he talking about? There is no evidence against us – we did nothing wrong. We were also curious as to which community feels "unsafe" with us around, and why? Surely not because of our numerous events attended in good spirits by members of the university, nor the numerous Amherst organizations with whom we offer our services throughout every semester.

On the issue of student safety, what became of the recent situations in Lot 11 and Southwest? It seems a solution to a legitimate threat to our community would be to increase security in the long-known "sketchy" dark parking lots at this school, as well as the Southwest area. During the school year, UMass has a larger population than many towns in our county, inevitably being host to certain problems.

In our misfortune on North Pleasant Street, as well as in Lot 11 and Southwest, these problems were not caused by students, but by individuals outside of our community. Is the solution to these problems disbanding a brotherhood that stands loyal to the University of Massachusetts and calls it their home? Instead of dispersing a positive addition to our community, let's take measures to fix a legitimate problem.

Let's remember, a good portion of our being in a fraternity at UMass involves helping our community – a community in which we hope and demand to continue to be a part of.

Joe Gratton
Vice President, Acting President
Theta Alpha Chapter, ZBT

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

Send it to editorial@dailycollegian.com

Correctness and liberal guilt

Greg Collins

One of the great social taboos among intellectual circles is discussing whether liberal policies are motivated by guilt rather than by a true desire to address social and economic problems. Liberal leaders often engage in powerful rhetoric in an effort to further equal rights, yet demagoguery displays of flamboyance rarely yield any significant gains. What is more troubling, however, is the role that political correctness plays in the analysis of social and economic issues. Many times liberals are concerned with protecting an intellectually satisfying image of tolerance rather than confronting whether their social and economic bromides work effectively.

Too often these scholars will establish their positions on such controversial topics and then manipulate facts in order to fit their preconceived notions. True intellectuals form their conclusions based on facts and logical arguments that hold no hidden agenda, yet all too often liberals will not tackle issues such as socioeconomic inequality directly because they want facts to fit their predetermined ideas of political correctness.

> The history of Arabs enslaving Arabs, Africans enslaving Africans and Arabs enslaving Europeans is rarely given mention relative to the amount of focus centered on U.S. slavery.

No subject is more prone to this unsound form of scholarship than black America, as liberals' condescending attitude and perpetuation of unsupported myths cloud many black-and-white truths that contradict their intended conclusions. The economic prosperity of post World War II America allowed blacks, at a time when major civil rights legislation was not even mulling in Congress, to achieve phenomenal socioeconomic progress evidenced by high employment, rising per capita incomes and low crime rates.

Monumental civil rights events are cited by intellectuals either to highlight the progress of American society, such as the 1964 Civil Rights Act, or to expose that America "still has a long way to go" in terms of race relations, such as the Rodney King beatings. Yet because they are too concerned with preserving their own image of tolerance, liberal academics refuse to consider periods within various decades that reveal much more progress than these singular events.

The prosperity of blacks post-World War II, as well as the high academic achievement of African-Americans in Washington D.C. high schools at the turn of the 20th century and the growth of the black middle class within the last 30 years, are all better indicators of black progress than civil rights rhetoric or million man marches. One of the most respected liberals of his time, Daniel Patrick Moynihan, correctly predicted that the welfare policies of the Johnson administration's Great Society would encourage the breakup of families and increase out-of-wedlock births among welfare recipients. If the civil rights legislation of the 1960s provided blacks with an environment in which to thrive, then why did blacks have a lower rate of out-of-wedlock births and a higher rate of employment predating this movement? Within a democracy, cultural tendencies have more of an effect on the well-being of a race, ethnicity or socioeconomic group than minority discrimination does.

Even more so, the tendency to change or disregard facts to fit predetermined, politically correct notions is no more prevalent than when discussing American slavery. The issues of whether to provide reparations to the descendants of American slaves, and the amount and the form of reparations, deserve serious thought and debate. Yet many academics refuse to take into account the world history of slavery because it is not politically correct to acknowledge that this practice was not unique to the United States.

The history of Arabs enslaving Arabs, Africans enslaving Africans and Arabs enslaving Europeans is rarely given mention relative to the amount of focus centered on U.S. slavery. Taking into account other global phenomena of involuntary servitude does not lessen the depravity of American slavery, yet it does offer a greater perspective as to how slavery has been a pervading force throughout civilization's history from the time of the Greco-Roman era to nowadays in places like Mauritania and that it has by no means been limited to the actions of Europeans. Stifling the discussion of remedies to reparations for the descendants of only American slaves undermines steps that could be taken to end slavery where it is practiced today.

Liberals often claim to want to speak honestly about race, but many are hostile when considering alternative viewpoints which suggest liberal social welfare policies have impeded, rather than remedied, the progress of black America. University of Washington professor Charles Johnson noted recently in the Wall Street Journal what many guilty academics are afraid of saying publicly, "We have already allowed the talent, resources and genius of two generations of young black men who might have enriched this republic to be squandered by gang violence, by poor academic preparation, by the lack of good parenting and by the celebration of an irresponsible 'thug life' that is ethnically infantile, and predictably, embraced by a notorious values-challenged entertainment industry."

The failure of politically correct liberals to intelligently analyze social and economic problems due to institutionalized guilt contributes as much to the problem of racial and socioeconomic discrimination as intolerant individuals do. The question many liberals should ask themselves is whether political correctness and alleviation of liberal guilt should trump a true moral concern for justice and social progress.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist.

Sleep deprived students

Mike Anmuth

College students are notorious for sleeping. We enjoy sleeping through classes, spending a great deal of weekend time sleeping and creating our schedule around the idea that rising before noon can be downright disastrous to our health. Many studies have been done on college students and the opposite effect, the lack of sleep that ushers us through one day to the next.

This columnist, and many other college students, knows first hand about lacking sleep. Perhaps you are pulling an all-nighter to prepare for a test or a class project, or you've just been out really late partying and attending that 9 a.m. class is rather crucial to your GPA.

Students find themselves in all sorts of situations that do not allow for eight continuous hours of sleep. This sleep debt is common amongst students and the large cups of coffee and bags under one's eyes are generally rather indicative signs that this debt is catching up with us. Not just in students, a study by United Press International found that adults overall are getting a lot less sleep than in previous years. This national sleep debt in 2004 had risen to 107 billion hours a year, the average time of sleeping going from nine hours per night to seven and a half hours per night and dropping.

I have been guilty of staying up way too late on nights that I have class. For instance, this column is being written in the middle of the night when I have class early tomorrow morning, but this is the joy of being a college student and having midterms and papers due and procrastinating. It is much easier to say that you will do something later until later becomes the next day and then suddenly you realize that you don't have any more "later" left and your best option is to cram for your midterm, write two papers and hope that you are coherent enough to understand your lectures the next day.

Comprehending lectures is a small problem compared to driving while tired which is a chronic problem here in the United States. In our country alone, 100,000 accidents a year are caused by drowsy drivers, according to the United Press International study. It is much easier to see when someone is intoxicated and disallow them from driving to their destination than it is to see when someone is tired, especially if we are in this sleep debt and tired on a continual basis.

> Comprehending lectures is a small problem compared to driving while tired which is a chronic problem here in the United States. In our country alone, 100,000 accidents a year are caused by drowsy drivers, according to the United Press International study.

One must ask: what can I do about getting more sleep? Fortunately, the Medical College of Wisconsin has some helpful hints in getting more and more restful sleep. The hints include going to sleep and waking up at a consistent time, avoiding naps, using your bed as a place for sleeping and not other waking activities, not consuming alcohol or caffeine before bed time, making one's bedroom dark and quiet and not trying too hard to fall asleep or preoccupying one's mind.

These hints may seem obvious, but putting these suggestions into place will improve one's sleep considerably. There are obvious roadblocks, such as college students not just using their bed for sleeping and especially in the dorms, one's bed becomes the place for studying, reading, watching TV and other activities as well. Allowing yourself to follow the hints that are possible in your environment will help you rest better, be more prepared for the day and possibly want to attend that 9 a.m. lecture (but I only said possibly, your results may vary).

College students and lack of sleep go hand in hand because of the workload of most students, the freedom allowed in a college environment and because there is much excitement to be had that makes sleeping pale in comparison. Still, I believe that most college students enjoy sleep, and they enjoy sleeping well and for enough hours in the evening to provide decent results the next day. While this column was surely a result of lack of sleep, much like my midterms and papers were of the same variety, catching up on sleep is a good solution for the short term, but for the long term proper time for sleeping is needed.

And hey, is there anyone who really doesn't like sleeping?

Mike Anmuth is a Collegian columnist.

My hump my hump my hump

Sanam Hakim

Do you really want to read this column? With a title like "my hump my hump my hump," I'm surprised that any student in an institute of higher education would sit down and read it. The lyrics to a lot of today's pop songs are filled with either mindless or degrading messages. Unfortunately, they have really catchy beats, which makes it far more likely for 10-year-old Timmy and 7-year-old Sally to sing "Work It" by Missy Elliot, word for word, in the backseat of their mommy's minivan. Imagine that? Little Sally singing, "Call before you come, I need to shave my chocha."

Currently "My Hump" has been rated the number two pop song in the country, according to the Billboard charts. Like most great songs, the Black Eyed Peas saved the most intellectually stimulating quote for the chorus: "Get you love drunk off my hump. My hump my hump my hump my hump my hump my hump, my lovely little lumps." What the hell does that even mean?

Not only are the lyrics of this song insulting to the intelligence of any person over the age of three, but the fact that children are exposed to this is appalling. Furthermore, why is it that women sing this song so freely? The idea behind this song is encouraging women to flaunt their "lumps" and "humps" in order to get men to spend lots of money on them. As a side note, dictionary.com defines a prostitute as "one who solicits and accepts payment for sex acts."

What is strange about this particular band is that the song that made them popular was "Where is the love," in which they say, "Wrong information always shown by the media/ Negative images is the main criteria/Infecting the young minds faster than bacteria/Kids wanna act like what they see in the cinema." Isn't the image of women getting men to buy them "ice" and new jeans in exchange for a few peeks of her "lumps" a negative one? I certainly think so.

It's actually pretty disturbing to sit back and listen to the messages our music is teaching today's children. Lil' Kim has a song called "The Jump Off," which has a really hot beat, but in the song she's bragging about her oral sex skills. I actually saw a young girl mouthing the words, "I make a Sprite can disappear in my mouth," and start a discussion with her friends about how she thinks she can probably do it.

> I actually saw a young girl mouthing the words,"I make a Sprite can disappear in my mouth," and start a discussion with her friends about how she thinks she can probably do it.

Luda cris, the man who named a song "Move Bitch," casually mentions in this song that he's always driving drunk and that if anyone is driving at the speed limit when he rolls by, they should get the hell out of his way. What is this teaching society? Blast Ludacris on your sweet car stereo after finishing a handle of Bacardi and do 100 on the high way. If anyone gets in your way, that is not your fault, because let's face it, they should have moved. How many people have died from drunk driving? How many people get in their cars drunk every single day, thinking it's OK to do so and that they are fine? If our media supports it and continues to produce lyrics like this, the problem will only increase.

Trina actually does a duet with Ludacris in another one of his inspiring songs, which she starts off with, "I want my ass smacked," which sadly is the least vulgar description used in the song. It's a very dirty song and I feel embarrassed even listening to it. Or how about that new song by the Ying Yang Twins, "Wait?" In the past, a man and a woman couldn't even sleep in the same bed together on television, and now vulgar descriptions of sexual experiences or a creepy whispering pervert accompanied by a heavy bass are actually called "music" and sold as records.

There is a very fine line when it comes to censorship, and it is something that we have crossed years ago, but will continue to fade until it doesn't really exist any more. If song lyrics, as well as all forms of media don't start delivering positive messages to our children, human relationships will continue to become more sexual than emotional and the definitions of right and wrong will slowly fade into nothing. If a song has a good beat, people will still like it. Instead of "Move bitch, get out the way," why not "Hell no, too drunk to drive?" It's just not "cool" enough I guess. But in the meantime, let's keeping talking about my hump, my hump, my hump, my hump, my humpy hump because, let's face it, that's what sells.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian columnist.

Pimpin' it metro style

Colin Jones

You see us everyday. Moving with swagger and confidence, holding our heads high. Carefully costumed, our presence is unquestioned. We are stylish straight men, and we are a force to be reckoned with.

We are witnesses to a cultural backlash decades in the making. One in which the concept of masculinity, as it has been traditionally defined, is being challenged, leaving it in a state of flux. The seeds of this transformation were planted before any members of our generation were born. In a way, ironically enough, this transformation began following a number of great strides in the women's movement. Following "flower power" and "free love," the 1970s suddenly provided women with a host of newfound economic opportunities and sexual freedoms. With the advent of the birth control pill, the ground-breaking decision of Roe vs. Wade and increasingly large numbers of women pursuing higher education, an unprecedented movement towards gender equality took place.

> Take Playboy magazine for example, a staple of any man's contemporary upbringing, from stealing copies stored in a friend's father's basement to getting a subscription (yes, I read the articles). A large portion of every issue is, and always has been, devoted to men's fashions. Doesn't everyone want to have clear skin, nice hair and white teeth?

Where did this leave us guys? Our traditional cultural role as breadwinner was challenged, leaving in its wake a gap that needed to be closed. And so what would step forward to fill this void? Among other things, an increased focus on appearance that is unquestionably massive in its scope.

As a little kid, like so many others, I looked up to film heroes like Stallone and Schwarzenegger, figures who exerted their influence largely as a direct result of their physicality. So, in an effort to emulate these icons, many of us have turned to activities such as weight-lifting, something which only 30 years ago was generally unheard of. I hopped on this wave just as it was beginning to rise; it hasn't even come close to breaking, and kids like my youngest brother and his friends are struggling with the decision of whether to buy the new X-Box game or a six week supply of the latest protein/creatine supplement.

But the buck doesn't stop there. It's cool to have a "buff bod," but you've got to dress it up in the right way. Enter the "metrosexual" movement. As far as I'm concerned, the whole pretense behind this new cultural phenomenon is ridiculous. Maybe it's partly due to the fact that my father worked for a men's fashion company for most of my life, but hasn't it always been cool to have style?

Take Playboy magazine for example, a staple of any man's contemporary upbringing, from stealing copies stored in a friend's father's basement to getting a subscription (yes, I read the articles). A large portion of every issue is, and always has been, devoted to men's fashions. Doesn't everyone want to have clear skin, nice hair and white teeth? The attempt to define the desire for such things in terms of gender is based on unrealistic and antiquated notions of masculinity that never should have existed anyway.

Even the most hard-assed dudes out there recognize this fact. Case in point: a year ago, over a round (or sixth?) of beers, my uncle and I had an interesting conversation. This guy is a former marine and boxer, so there is no question he's about as tough as they come. We got into a talk over why Clint Eastwood is way cooler than John Wayne. Eventually we came to a realization as to why. John Wayne never showed any weakness, any emotion, any sign that he was, in fact, a real human being. Eastwood, on the other hand, frequently got his ass kicked halfway through the movie.

The fact is that man or woman, black or white, all of us collectively experience the same emotions and have the same wants. The only question is to which degree and what balance these things juxtapose themselves, which is the product of individual decision. So if you've got a problem because I dress like a pimp, I won't even notice. I'll be too busy looking good.

Colin Jones is a Collegian columnist.

Ed/Op Poll

What do you think about the F.B.I. proposing to wiretap the Internet?

A) I think it's a good idea.
B) I'm going to protest.
C) I'm going to sue.
D) Thank goodness because I'm so naughty.

Go to www.dailycollegian.com to vote!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 26, 2005

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dr. Andrew Weil speaks on 'Healthy Aging'

Dr. Andrew Weil
"Healthy Aging"
Chapin Auditorium
South Hadley
Oct. 28
7:30 p.m.
$50, $25, $20-$10

BY NINA FOROUTAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Dr. Andrew Weil, author of four New York Times #1 best sellers and founder of University of Arizona's Health Sciences Program in Integrative Medicine, will be gracing the Chapin Auditorium at Mt. Holyoke College in South Hadley on Friday.

Weil started the integrative medicine movement (defined as an approach to medicine that recognizes the body's self-healing ability, power of holistic medicine and concept of wellness in mind, body and spirit) mainly to promote the acceptance of aging in a wholesome manner and to abolish the stigma usually associated with it. In other words, be prepared to hear not only about traditional methods of healthy living, but a vast variety of interesting non-traditional methods, as well. Weil's popularity has been spreading all across the nation, and he has recently appeared on "Oprah," "the Today Show," "20/20," "Primetime News," "60 Minutes" and "Larry King Live."

The New York Times Magazine stated that Weil has "arguably become America's best-known doctor, promoting self-help and alternative medicine across the country." Weil was also on the cover of TIME Magazine on Oct. 17. The magazine featured an exclusive excerpt of his new book, "Healthy Aging," which he will be discussing when he visits on Oct. 28.

The book discusses ways to change aspects of your life in order to experience healthy aging. The purpose of "healthy aging" in Weil's perspective isn't to help you live longer or grow younger; rather, the goal is ultimately to help people enjoy the benefits of old age.

Weil provides recommendations for what we can do as an aging population to achieve this goal. First off, he stresses the dangers of smoking and the importance of watching your weight. Weil states that "tobacco is the single greatest cause of preventable illness," a fact that the majority of us are aware of but seem to ignore. Morbid obesity is also an area of concern according to Weil, because it "increases the risk of a number of age-related diseases, Type 2 diabetes and osteoarthritis." However, while being morbidly obese increases the risk of health problems as we age, it is actually better to be somewhat overweight compared to those who are too lean and unfit.

The staple of Weil's book and message is outlined in his "Wellness Diet." The Dr. Andrew Weil wellness diet, or the "Anti-Inflammatory Diet," as he would like to call it, is based on increasing the consumption of fresh fruits and vegetables and cutting out processed and fast food. Weil hesitates to call it a "diet" because it isn't intended to help you lose weight; rather, it is a nutritional component of a healthy lifestyle.

He encourages getting 40 to 50 percent of your daily calories from carbohydrates, 30 percent from fat and 20 to 30 percent from protein. The types of food eaten within each of these categories are the most crucial in promoting a healthy lifestyle. The carbohydrates should be made of more whole grain and less of wheat flour, which is found in most packaged foods. Fat should be consumed through avocados and nuts, especially walnuts, cashews and almonds. Weil strongly suggests avoiding margarine, vegetable oil and all products listing them as ingredients, as much as possible.

In order to consume your 20 to 30 percent protein intake you should eat more vegetable protein, especially from beans in general. Also, if you experience liver or kidney problems, have allergies or an autoimmune disease, you should eat less protein than suggested. Weil also lists fiber, vitamins, minerals and water among the key areas of nutrition we should all increase in our daily lives. In reference to the "Anti-Inflammatory Diet," Weil believes that the food choices we make can determine whether or not we will have abnormal inflammation, which can lead to a wide range of diseases, such as Type 1 diabetes.

Dr. Weil's appearance on Friday will be hosted by WFCR (88.5 FM,) a public radio station in western Massachusetts, and is made possible by Mount Holyoke College, The Valley Advocate and Baystate Health. In addition to the interview session, there will be a book signing at the event made possible by the Odyssey Bookshop in South Hadley. Weil will be taking questions from the audience as well as being interviewed by Tom Vannah, editor of The Valley Advocate, and Dr. James Kirchhoffer, director of the cardiology program at Baystate Health.

Mark Auerbach, the special projects coordinator for WFCR, spoke enthusiastically about this event, "Dr. Weil has been on so many shows and has been written about in so many magazines that we expect there to be a huge turnout. This event will be especially fascinating because he is not simply reading from his book, he is answering questions from the audience. His book couldn't have come out at a better time because everyone wants to age well, it is becoming a national concern, so to have a book that can help ease the panic associated with aging is definitely worth the read."

General admission tickets are $50 for premium seating and a pre-event reception, $25 for orchestra and $20-$10 for balcony seating. You can have a copy of his book, "Healthy Aging" on hold waiting at the event for an extra $25. Tickets are available at the UMass Fine Arts Center Box Office.

'Birth of a nASIAN' presents offbeat take on racial stereotypes

"Birth of a nASIAN"
New World Theatre
Curry Hicks
Amherst
Tonight
8 p.m.
$15,$8,$5

BY JEROME YUAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

If you think the title is a misprint of "Birth of a Nation," the early 1900's pro-Ku Klux Klan film, think again. Comedian/actress and self-proclaimed "cultural terrorist" Kate Rigg has made a comedic and acting career out of flipping stereotypes on their heads and shoving ignorance back into the faces of the ignorant.

In this case, her show (co-written by collaborator Leah Ryan) "Birth of a nASIAN" is just that: a performance that questions the issues of race and ignorance that are present in today's society. Tonight, "Birth of a nASIAN" comes to the New World Theater at the University of Massachusetts, giving people in the area the chance to see Rigg's comedic take on the complex mess we call race relations.

Born of Indonesian and Australian parents and raised in Canada, Rigg is a graduate of the Julliard School in New York City, where she is currently based. Her work is diverse, to say the least, and she has garnered praise and awards from all over, including TIME Magazine and the Los Angeles Times. Her Web site, katerigg.com, is filled with all the bits of info on her life imaginable, with her own added humor mixed in for good effect, as well as links to all the shows and types of performances she does.

Aside from just the "Birth of a nASIAN" show, she is co-writer and lead performer in various acts, with many stemming from a tongue-in-cheek critique of pop-culture and stereotypes of Asians and people of color. Her other projects, with names such as "Slanty Eyed Mama" (a trip-hop/spoken word show) and "Kate's Chink-O-Rama" (a mixed Asian performance tackling images of Asians found in pop culture), are examples of her style and willingness to confront racial conflict head on, and are all done with an unapologetic, yet comedic, in your face style.

She's not just limited to theatre, either. Rigg has done television spots on popular shows such as "Law and Order" and "OZ," as well as voice work in major animated shows like "King of the Hill" and "Family Guy." For those wanting to know, she was the voice of the maid, Esperanza, in the recent episode, "Model Misbehavior."

Her show tonight is not her first trip to the Five College area, as she was here last month at Mt. Holyoke performing her stand up routine for local audiences. "Birth of a nASIAN" is, as described on her Web site, a "super edgy super freaky comedy ... with an Asian slant." Originally presented as a workshop in New York, it is a collection of monologues and songs written by Rigg and collaborator Leah Ryan.

Performing along with Rigg is Lyris Hung, a classically trained violinist and Julliard graduate, who has taken her violin work into the electronic trip-hop/rock realm, giving the show part of its purported "edge." The show itself will display Rigg in multiple roles, exploring issues facing the Asian-American community, such as a token Asian newscaster with a non-ethnic sounding name having a breakdown. Three of the songs in the show have also been excerpted for a new PBS series this year called "Race is the Place."

So, tonight, students and residents alike of the Five College Area can come to see what a stereotype looks like when it's flipped on its head and given a "super freaky" Asian slant.

Self-proclaimed "cultural terrorist" Kate Rigg comes to UMass to perform her brand of "super edgy freaky comedy with an Asian slant" and take on racial issues in her show, "Birth of a nASIAN."

Veteran jam band the Slip brings multi-instrumental style to NoHo

The Slip
Pearl Street
Northampton
Oct. 28
$14 advance, $17 at door

BY ALEX BUTLER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Jam bands. Big deal. In Amherst, they are about as easy to come by as rain during a random week in October. Or, let's face it, as easy as finding a slightly intoxicated 20-something in the bowels of Southwest on a Friday night. Guitar, singer, drummer and maybe a bassist. Some "out there" ones may even have a harmonica. Same old story. No talent required. Just come with a passion for music, and you'll get by.

Not the Slip. No. They are a horse of a different color. This Boston trio, after eight years of constant touring, has refined their music down to the T. They are known to have spent countless hours in their studio, and this year is no exception. Roughly half a year has been spent in there, and what has resulted is an absolute gift to the music world: a magical and brilliant romp through guitar wailing, bass knocking and drum sputtering. They named their gift "Surprise Me Mr. Davis." In collaboration with the Slip, singer and songwriter Nathan Moore, along with Aimee Curl, Jim and Bill Palmer and Daniel Moore all joined the festivities over the winter to help guide this album along.

The Slip consists of Marc Friedman and Andrew and Brad Barr. And, to tell you the truth, they all play so many instruments I couldn't tell you who plays what, or when. What I can tell you is that they hold much talent, as far as music goes.

Thus far, I feel I have not done the Slip sufficient respect when it comes to their style and music. However, it is rather difficult when the band constantly alternates between instruments such as synthesizers, cuica, dulcimer, 6-string bass, tape recorders, shakers, tube xylophones, steel drums, Wurlitzer, Ford break drums, Boomerang, foam brush, ball bearings, cymbals, etc. And of course you have the standard bass, two to three guitars and voice power. Bob Gulla captured the sound pretty nicely with his words, "a mix of hippie jug band, jazz fusion and ambient pop ... rarely finding themselves labeled as cliché."

Let's see. Upbeat. Steel drums. Free flowing bass lines that pull you in. There is really no way to describe this music in any comprehensive sentences for a whole article. The music is constantly changing, and as "jam band" depicts, there is much interpretation to expect.

Yes, the brothers Barr and Marc Friedman are all about music when it comes down to it, but that is not solely it. No, the band does not simply jam for themselves for three hours and call it a night. They've hit something that I'm not sure anyone can quite explain besides themselves. They have been labeled, "the biggest local heroes," stemming right out of Berklee College of Music. Needless to say, they all dropped out, but they did, in fact, attend. However, the trio is no stranger to crowds. For roughly eight years, they have all been at it, veterans of the touring aspect. And when they played at the Bonnaroo Festival in Tennessee for roughly 75,000 fans, there was not much surprise that they held their own.

The band now sets their sights on Amherst. On Oct. 28, Pearl Street shall host the trio and house a crowd eager to hear the highly anticipated group. The group Tarantula A.D. will open the show.

Yes, life is good when two up-and-coming bands bless an eager college town with a show during the weekend before Halloween. It is both a great omen for things to come, and something to look forward to.

The Slip, touring veterans and talented multi-instrumentalists who appeared at this year's Bonnaroo Festival, will bring their complex and often improvisational jam band style to Pearl Street on Friday.

Often in relationships, when wine goes in, truth comes out

Lovers Only
Hannah Drake

Alcohol: The biggest complication for college relationships — and quite often involved in the reasons for the breakups.

Everyone understands less-than-smart acts, and everyone gives a certain amount of leeway to drunken actions, because we're all guilty to some extent. Even so, there's an old Chinese proverb that says when the wine goes in, the truth comes out.

Alcohol is a great facilitator of truth, but sometimes the truth is ugly, and then the guilty blame the alcohol. True, the things we do while inebriated might never happen sober, but those actions can also be incredibly revealing.

For girls, and possibly guys, if we're thinking about ending a relationship, we'll tend to act more single when we go out. Guys take heed: huge warning sign. Something is wrong, and I suggest you find out what it is. In general, even without alcohol, guys tend to act a little meaner when they're thinking about ending it —playing the devil's advocate, being harder to talk to and generally making everything just a little bit more difficult than usual.

The reason is that guys act out their emotions before they're ready to speak them. They'd rather do this than openly hurt a girl, at least until they're absolutely sure they want to end the relationship.

Girls: if you're suspicious of your man's behavior, brace yourself, because the end is most likely near, and it's rare at this age that a guy will really discuss relationship doubts with you before he gives you the ax (so if he does, give him credit). In his mind, if you have to talk about it, something's wrong. According to "Cosmopolitan," it's a guy's slightly dysfunctional way of protecting the relationship.

If your sweetie changes a lot when he or she drinks, it's a hint of an underlying problem you may not yet know about. Do you get along fantastically sober, but fight every time you drink? Usually that signifies that the relationship is on the rocks, whether or not this has become apparent when the two of you are sober. And that's understandable; it takes guts to be vulnerable and speak what you truly feel. We'd much rather not rock the boat and keep things comfortable. But that's not genuine.

The number one complaint girls have about their guys when they drink is that the girl feels ignored. From a guy's point of view, this is stupid; he's just having a good time with his friends, it doesn't mean anything. Guys: until the relationship's stability status is in great condition, you cannot act single when with a girl you like, or are dating, and out with your friends. Even then, you could shake things up. We realize we're sacrificing time with our girls to chill with you and your guys, even if we bring a friend with us, so we'll hold that against you, even if we don't admit it, if you don't pay enough attention to us. We're there because of you.

Rule of thumb: if you bring a girl somewhere she wouldn't otherwise be, you had better pay attention to her. Guys have difficulties comprehending this because if a girl were to bring a guy out, he sees it as just another opportunity to drink and socialize. Boys: don't try to figure out why this is, go with what I'm saying and you'll have a better relationship.

Some guys already know that they can't or don't want to give up their single behavior, and that they disappoint the girls they like. So girls, if a guy tells you he doesn't want a relationship, at this age not wanting to give up single drinking behavior may be the main reason — not that he wouldn't be with you in different circumstances.

Lastly, if a girl is involved with a guy, and a guy does something including another girl while drunk, whether flirting excessively or more, saying "I'm a guy, what do you expect" is never an excuse, even if the girl was coming on to him. As I like to say, just because you have one, doesn't mean you get to be one.

BIG SHOE SALE
Wednesday, October 26th through Saturday, October 29th
$20 off all footwear by puma. dansko. born. earth. Look for other instore shoe specials.
Buy 1 unlimited pairs! Includes sale items and special orders where available
Amherst store only
2 DAYS LEFT!

Newman Center Cafe
Located behind SOM building
GRAND REOPENING!
*Breakfast All Day
*Subs
*Pizza
*Sandwiches
*Freshly Made Salads
*Fried Clams
*Shrimp
*Chicken Fingers
*Daily Lunch Specials
*Ice Cream
*Appetizers
*Rao's Coffee
Open:
Daily 7am-8pm
Weekends 8am-2pm
Come in for Breakfast, Lunch, Dinner, or just a quick snack!
413-549-0401

The Empress Josephine
UPCOMING EVENTS
The Empress Josephine Weekend
Saturday, October 29th
10am- 4pm
Symposium
Queens, Queens, Queens & Empresses
Pruyne Lecture Hall, Fayermeather Hall
Amherst College. FREE
Sunday, October 30th
2pm
Concert
Music from the Salon of the Empress Josephine
Soprano, flute, harp, and fortepiano
Rotherwas Gallery, Mead Art Museum
By reservation only, call 542-2335. FREE
George Moutard Woodward and Ceptain Williams (detail) The Progress of Josephine (Josephine's Triumph) 1814 Hand-colored. Metcalf University, Rare books and Special Collections, Folio NC 011
Film Series begins Thursday, October 20th!
Call 542-2335 for more information or visit us on the web www.amherst.edu/mead
Art & Royal Identity
MEAD ART MUSEUM AMHERST COLLEGE
ON VIEW THROUGH DECEMBER 18TH

DO YOU LIKE MONEY???
$$$$$$$$
DO YOU HAVE A CAR?
CAN YOU DELIVER PAPERS AT 7AM?
$$$$$$$$
NORTHAMPTON DRIVER WANTED
CALL 413.545.3500, ASK FOR TOM

Free Rides on Halloween Weekend 10pm to 3am
Oct 28/29—Fri/Sat Call 548-9474 Sponsored by MERCYhouse know mercy.org

Despite a long career, Percy Sledge is defined by 'that' song

By Walker Tuns
Collegian Reporter

One of the few problems in defining a soul standard such as "When a Man Loves a Woman" is convincing a devout public that you've recorded other hits.

So it goes for Percy Sledge.

In a singing career that has encompassed nearly four decades, there have been several exemplary slices of R&B balladry the criminally underrated 1966 tune gone "Warm and Tender Love," the 1968 single "Cover Me," overlooked recordings for the Atlantic and Capricorn labels and even a 2004 album called "Singing Through the Rain." All provided often an upbeat counterpoint to the effortlessly dramatic vocal voice that has long been a Sledge trademark.

None of that, of course, compares to the hit, the churchy and almost operatic soul confession-in-a-bar of "When a Man Loves a Woman." The 1966 romantic anthem, which largely introduced Sledge to the world, remains a soul music milestone.

"I didn't know anything about music at that time," Sledge said. "I was green. But one day in the studio I was having fun putting this melody together, and the music just came out. The producer started ramping up and down hollering, 'Man, this is it! This is it!' To be honest with you, I didn't know what was wrong with him. I thought he was losing his mind. But he said, 'Percy, man, you have just cut a monster.'"

Curiously, Sledge had no serious aspirations to be a singer. But everyone around him saw stardom for the Alabama-born vocalist.

"I started singing when I was in school," he said. "I was about 14, 15 years old. All the kids predicted me to be a professional. Then, when I graduated from high school in 1958, I started working in a hospital about 8 miles from where I was born. I would sing for the patients all the time.

"There were so many people — the doctors, my teachers, the patients and my classmates — that believed I could be a singer. But I never did. You see, I didn't have a style. I was mostly singing everybody else's songs. I knew I had a voice. But a professional singer? No."

But the encouragement pushed him along.

"So many people talked to me about being a singer that I started striving to be one," Sledge said. "Then it just so happened one night I thought up this song called 'Why Did You Leave Me, Baby?' Later, I changed the lyrics to 'When a Man Loves a Woman.' And there I was on my way."

With the song a breakthrough hit, Sledge's reputation as a soul balladeer was cast. Granted, the singer had diverse interests in music. But the slow, soulful vocal turns of his early Atlantic recordings defined his career.

"People told me after I did 'When a Man Loves a Woman' that I was a ballad artist," Sledge said. "I wanted to be more like James Brown or Wilson Pickett. But after 'Cover Me' and (1966's) 'It Tears Me Up,' I had five gold records in a row. I was traveling all around the world, seeing how people would respond to Percy Sledge singing these ballads. And I knew then, that sound was me."

The crowning touch to a sterling career came last winter when Sledge was inducted by Rod Stewart into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

"The award for the Hall of Fame ... man, you can't describe it. My career has involved such hard work, good work, happy work and sad work. And you can see all of that when you look at that statue they give you.

"But everything, for me, comes back to my fans. You really do what you do for them. When you make a record for them, that's when you feel you're a success."

Despite his numerous accomplishments and induction by Rod Stewart into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, Percy Sledge is often remembered only for his 1966 hit, "When a Man Loves a Woman."

Greg Behrendt proves that his comedy has universal appeal

By Jessica Yadegaran
Collegian Reporter

SAN FRANCISCO — How can you tell if you've arrived?

Autograph requests, usually, or scoring the best table at the Sushi Bar in the Week in Los Angeles.

Comedian-mega-author Greg Behrendt has got all that — and his own ring tones.

Legions of the relationship guru's mostly female fans have downloaded his encouraging words to their cellies as they weather the post-breakup storm. Instead of a traditional chirp or a John Mayer song, the heartbroken women say "Hello" to this.

"Hey, Super Fox, drop that pint of ice cream and stop your sobbing. It's time to move on."

It's yet another place you can find Behrendt these days. The Marin, Calif., native is permeating every avenue of show biz, from writing and TV to stand-up and film.

For starters, he just released "It's Called a Breakup Because it's Broken," the follow-up to last year's best-seller "He's Just Not That Into You," which sold 2 million copies. If the first one taught you to drop the dud, the new book helps you get over him — and move on.

"Figuring out relationships is fun for us," says Behrendt, who wrote the book with his wife, Amiira. "You know, like doing math problems."

Last year, following the popularity of "He's Just Not That Into You," Behrendt's Web site, www.gregbehrendt.com, was flooded with e-mails from lonely devotees asking, "Well, now what?" The couple answered with a smart girl's guide to breakups.

"We thought if we could chronicle the breakup, we could reframe it as a turning point in their lives," says Amiira, lounging at San Francisco's Four Seasons Hotel with her husband. "In other words, the breakup is the best thing that ever happened to them."

Meanwhile, everything is going right for Behrendt. He just completed the screenplay for "He's Just Not That Into You," which is in the hands of New Line Cinema and set to star Drew Barrymore (you heard it here first).

And if that's not enough, he's in talks with several networks to host a talk show or a reality dating show.

It's success all right, but an entirely different kind than this once-aspiring rocker ever expected.

Comedy fans know Behrendt's goal isn't to conquer Dr. Phil's world, or even the literary one. Behrendt, 42, is best known for his self-reflective "everyday dude" stand-up routines, where he dissects the idiosyncrasies of the evolving male psyche, from succumbing to the man bag to preserving coolness into the 40s — and beyond. His new DVD, "Uncool," will be released by Warner Bros. on Nov. 8.

Chilling with Amiira over cappuccinos, Behrendt appears to be the very picture of cool: Spiky blond hair, hoop earrings, tattoos. Converse. But the father of two says it's all a facade.

"I went to see Weezer the other night, and the security guard says, 'I'm going to have to take your chain wallet.' So I say, 'Why, because of the recent terrorism and upgrades in security?' 'No,' the guy says, 'Because you're 42.'"

His comedy centers around the idea that despite leaving the rock-er lifestyle and settling down in the suburbs of Los Angeles, he's still got more in common with the neighbor's kid than he does with the neighbor.

"I go over there and he wants to talk about power drills," Behrendt says. "And I'm like, 'I was just coming over to see if your kid wants to carpool to Coachella.'"

In 2001, Behrendt made Variety's "10 Comics to Watch," and since, his phone hasn't stopped ringing. He makes frequent appearances on "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno" and "Late Night with Conan O'Brien."

It sounds pretty darn cool from here. But "Uncool," Behrendt's latest material, brings to the surface all the fears that no-longer-relevant Gen-Xers grapple with: Why does having a family mean you have to be a different person? Am I that creepy old guy at rock concerts? When do I take out the earrings?

"I can tell you one thing, the hoops are getting smaller," says Behrendt, pointing to his small but shiny silver earrings. "But I don't want to think about the day I take them out."

He may not have made it in rock, but music is still very much a part of Behrendt's life. "Bring the Rock," his monthly gig in Los Angeles, is like a VH1 "Storytellers" plus comedians. And he's planning an album of children's songs set to metal, under the band name Black Rattle. His 3-year-old, True, is a big fan of "Where is Thumbkin," crashing guitars and all.

"Babies do not enjoy Black Sabbath jams," Behrendt notes. "But 'Thumbkin,' it's their 'Free Bird,' man."

Appealing to toddlers, heartbroken women and Gen-X dads? Now that's arrival.

www.umasslug.org IBM

Thursday October 27th, 2005
4:00-5:00 lecture by Paul Coates
5:00-5:45 demonstration

UMass W.E.B. DeBois Library Learning Commons, South Corridor

Open Standards, Open Source And Web Application Development

What does it mean to be "open" in today's IT environment? What are the challenges and benefits of using "open" or "closed" technology?

The talk will briefly introduce an open source research and teaching initiative at UMass and current and future collaboration between IBM and UMass. There will be a demonstration of the open source Eclipse 3.0 Integrated Development Environment, Apache Tomcat, and development with an open source relational database package (Derby/Cloudscape).

Friday October 28th, 2005
9:00am - 1:00pm

UMass W.E.B. DeBois Library Learning Commons, South Corridor

LinuxFest

LinuxFest is an opportunity to participate in a hands-on workshop where you get to learn and "testdrive" Linux at three different levels. The workshop modules include installation and configuration of Fedora Core 4 (http://www.redhat.com/fedora), basic Linux usage fundamentals, or Linux intermediate administration tasks such as the installation and configuration of SAMBA or installing various open source tools such as the Eclipse IDE. There will be free gifts available and we will raffle off an iPod Nano!

Session requirements include a laptop running Windows XP or a Red Hat Linux distribution with at least 6-8GB of available disk space. Participants are encouraged to download and install a 30 day trial version of VMWARE Workstation 5.0 at http://www.vmware.com on their laptop PRIOR to attending the LinuxFest workshop.

For people without machines, there will be about 40 laptop machines available for participants who do not have their own equipment.

Seating is limited for the LinuxFest. To make a reservation, please register at http://www.umasslug.org/ibm/ibmfest.php.

These events are co-sponsored by IBM, Court Square Data Group, and The University of Massachusetts Open Source Lab, Information Technology Program, Linux User Group, College of Social and Behavior Sciences, the Research Liaison And Development Office, and the W.E.B. Du Bois Library and new Learning Commons.

cafe talésai
let's break rice together®

Grand Opening Celebration

Join us
October 27, 2005
from 11:00 -3:00 pm

Come and meet
Vilai and Prakas Yenbamroong
And enter to win
a travel voucher of $250

YCMP
RESIDENTIAL

TALESAI, THE ELEGANT THAI RESTAURANT ON THE SUNSET STRIP, HOLLYWOOD CA

Breaking down 'Buccaneer'

DEFENSE from page 12

Sloan was in the shotgun formation with the halfback lined up on his right. A tight end was lined up on the left side (TE1) and the other on the right side (TE2). Two wide receivers (WR1 and WR2) were lined up right. WR1 was wide right, and WR2 was lined up in the right slot.

THE DEFENSIVE ASSIGNMENTS

Costello, James and Belton are in an all-out man-to-man coverage. Costello sticks with WR1, James stays on WR2 and Belton guards TE1.

Powell's responsibility is to rush to his right, trying to hit the hole between the center and right guard. By doing this, Brown is positive the offensive line will move into a slide protection, meaning the line will block left. Schweighardt rushes between the center and left guard, and Williams must try beating the left tackle.

Hatchell moves close to the line, and when blitzing, he must set the edge of the offensive line, keeping everyone, particularly the right tackle, inside of him.

Tikum's man is the halfback, but if he notices the halfback is staying home to protect the quarterback and is not running a pass pattern, he blitzes.

Walker blitzes around the weak side of the offensive line.

Ihedigbo and Smith are the two main pieces of this equation. Before the snap, Ihedigbo is to show zone coverage on the strong side, but when Evans drops back to pass, Ihedigbo blitzes between Hatchell and Powell.

Smith has a similar responsibility to Tikum, except he is in charge of playing man-defense on TE2 if he enters the secondary, unless TE2 stays home to protect the quarterback, meaning Smith also blitzes.

Brown says if TE2 releases into a passing route, the quarterback is dead because the halfback is in charge of stopping two players, likely Hatchell and Ihedigbo.

If TE2 stays home, he and the halfback have the responsibility of stopping Hatchell, Ihedigbo and Smith, and since Smith is the third defender coming, he will likely be free to lay a hit on the quarterback.

UMass defensive lineman John Hatchell (55) and cornerback Tracy Belton (26) have had plenty to celebrate about this season. The Minutemen have the top-ranked defense in the country.

THIRD-AND-SEVEN

Colgate has no answer for Buccaneer on this play, as the Raiders are baited into falling for just about every single trick Brown threw at them.

Powell rushed right, baiting the Colgate offensive line to slide protect the way Brown anticipated.

TE1 released into a post pattern but was tightly covered by Belton, and Williams took up both the left tackle and left guard, meaning Walker cleanly made his way into the backfield and forced Sloan to move to his right.

WR1 ran a five-yard hitch but couldn't stray from Costello, and James kept WR2, who ran a corner route, at bay. The halfback and TE2 both stayed at home to protect, meaning Tikum and Smith could get in on the blitz-fest, too.

Hatchell was able to neutralize TE2, and the right tackle was out of position after sliding left, leaving Ihedigbo one-on-one with the halfback, who never stood a chance.

Ihedigbo easily made his way to Sloan, sacked him for an 11-yard loss and forced the Raiders to go three-and-out on their first offensive possession.

Buccaneer was called and executed successfully.

KEEP 'EM HONEST

Brown has other variations of Buccaneer, involving man and zone coverages with base rushes in order to keep offensive coordinators and their quarterbacks from seeing what is coming.

He featured one of them on Saturday against Maine. With the Black Bears driving late in the fourth quarter and trailing 28-14, they were just eight yards shy of their endzone and appeared to be close to cutting the deficit in half with just over three minutes left to play in the game.

Everyone dropped back into coverage except Hatchell, who beat the right tackle and hit quarterback Ron Whitcomb as he was throwing the ball. The hit was hard enough to alter the pass, and the ball ended up in the hands of linebacker Cesar Rosario, who made his way 89 yards down the field for his first career touchdown, sealing the UMass victory in the process.

Goalie has front office hopes

LETOURNEAU from page 12

teammates Rachel Mervine, from Frontier Regional High School in Conway, Mass. and Nicole Phelan of North Andover. Both players are sophomores this year at UMass.

The team traveled to California to represent the New England area in the National Field Hockey Festival. They defeated every team in their division and won the gold medal with Letourneau in net.

It was in California that Letourneau began to attract college recruiters. Representatives from Siena College in Loudonville, N.Y., UMass Lowell and UMass Amherst were attending the tournament, including current UMass assistant coach Steve Simpson.

Simpson and UMass head coach Patty Shea saw potential in Letourneau that they wanted to see more of on Garber Field.

"It is one of the more position-specific recruiting processes," Shea said. "[Letourneau] has great athleticism, and good foot speed, as well as leadership qualities and her skills can still improve."

Letourneau decided to join Shea at UMass, and she received an athletic scholarship, which helped her to decide to remain close to home. That decision has allowed both of her families to continue to support her every step of the way.

"I picked [UMass] mostly because of field hockey, but it's close to home. It's 20 minutes down the road," she said of the Amherst campus. "My family is here for every game, and they travel [to away games] with me, too."

The familiar surroundings of western Massachusetts have made Letourneau feel right at home on the UMass campus.

"It's just that I know that my family is always around because I'm really close with them, plus I have a lot of friends from school that go here," she said.

Letourneau also saw familiar faces on the playing field, joining the Maroon and White with Cape Ann teammates Mervine and Phelan, which has helped her fit right in with her fellow Minutewomen.

"I really like the team, the coaches, and just the overall atmosphere," she said, and continued, saying of Shea, "She's really cool. I like her a lot."

However, Letourneau knows there is more to her life than field hockey, and though she aspires to become involved in professional sports after graduating, she sees herself in the front office, not the playing field.

"I've always wanted to keep playing because there's not really any professional field hockey," she said. "So I know I only have so many years that I can keep playing."

In the meantime, Letourneau is working toward a degree in sport management in the School of Management program.

"After college, I really want to start my career," she said. "I'm majoring in sport management, and I want to work in Major League Baseball."

Before that happens, Letourneau has two more years at UMass to enjoy her friends, college life, the sport that she loves and both the Letourneaus and Putnams cheering her on at Garber Field.

Owner of 75 years was last of his kind

DEATH from page 10

ing a team that starred Lawrence Taylor and Phil Simms and stout defenses. The 1990 team featured one of the best coaching staffs assembled: future head coaches Coughlin, Bill Belichick, Al Groh, Charlie Weis, Romeo Crennel and Ray Handley.

Parcells left after that season and the Giants slipped into the middle of the pack.

They made the Super Bowl again after the 2000 season, losing to the Baltimore Ravens, owned by Art Modell, Mara's close friend and longtime partner in league matters. Mara never openly criticized Modell's move from Cleveland and they celebrated getting to the Super Bowl together.

In 1991, Tim Mara and his family sold their share of the team to Robert Tisch. Tisch and Wellington Mara were officially co-owners and Tisch ran much of the business affairs. But it was always clear this was Wellington's team.

Still, he was never an authoritarian. He would greet players after every game — win or lose — flashing a shy smile at stars and scrubs alike.

"My wife said it best when we talked about Mr. Mara," said Phil Simms, the quarterback on the Giants Super Bowl teams and now a television analyst. "She said, 'There are so few icons left.' That's what Mr. Mara was. He was from an era where there were certain men who handled themselves differently than everybody else. I don't know if you can be that person anymore in this day and age. I don't know if society would let you be like him."

Mara is survived by wife Ann, 11 children and 40 grandchildren. The funeral Mass will be Friday morning at St. Patricks Cathedral in New York.

THE ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW!

Special Halloween Shows!!
Saturday Oct 29th
•
On 2 Screens !
•
Featuring our live cast
The Come Again Players
Prizes and giveaways
Wear your craziest Rocky or Halloween outfits

Reservations Recomended
For more info.
call (413) 533-FILM

On one screen will be our regular show with live cast.
•
On the other screen will be a special time warp version. Take a trip back to the 80's ! Join Frank and Rocky for the dinner scene, dance the floor show. Don't just watch, be part of the show!

South Hadley's Finest Theatres
The Village Commons
In South Hadley MA.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
- a grade dispute?
- teacher, roomate or job concerns?
- billing problems?
- harassment?
- ...or any other University related problem?

THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course!)

students, faculty, and staff are all welcome

823 Campus Center
Office hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
telephone: 413-545-0867
fax: 413-545-9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Put your life in drive.

Register at www.fordcollegehq.com for a chance to win a new 2006 Ford Fusion, and other cool prizes instantly.

NO PURCHASE NECESSARY. A PURCHASE WILL NOT INCREASE YOUR CHANCES OF WINNING. LEGAL RESIDENTS OF THE 50 UNITED STATES (D.C. + 18 YEARS AND OLDER, AGE 19 IN ALABAMA AND ANSE PROHIBITED. Promotion ends 12/31/2005. For Official Rules, prize descriptions and odds disclosure, visit www.fordcollegehq.com. Sponsor: Ford Motor Company, One American Road, Dearborn, MI 48126.

FORD LINCOLN MERCURY

05 college student purchase program
www.fordcollegehq.com

Results you can feel...
without the side effects!

Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Participating provider for HMO's student insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, car insurance & most others.

www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com

Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
224 Triangle Street • Amherst 549-1500

McNabb's injury causes concern

EAGLES from page 12

service by having the team break the huddle so late – but, especially, a quarterback desperately trying to find his comfort zone again.

But McNabb has issues, too. The problem is that his past mindset – that is, that almost any play can be salvaged by his physicality – does not compute in the present. He has to somehow find a way to quell the instinct to try to be a hero on every play – because his body won't let him be a hero on every play, not this year, not with this sports hernia.

You see it several times a game. On Sunday, you saw him take a terrible sack that cost the Eagles a first-half field-goal try, all because he was desperately trying to keep the play alive. But if you don't run as well as you once did, and you can't throw back across your body when rolling that hard in one direction, what's the point?

Later, you saw him throw that ball underneath to tight end T.J. Smith at the end of the first half, which resulted in time expiring and no points rather than a field goal at the minimum, and it was a product of the same mind-set. That ball needed to be thrown into the end zone or into the first row of the stands, and that's it, but McNabb never wants to let a play go.

Philadelphia Eagles quarterback Donovan McNabb has been playing with a sports hernia throughout most of the 2005 NFL season.

Discretion being the better part of valor applies here, even if it means compromising your attacking vision. You just can't leave points on the field if you're not close to 100 percent healthy.

That is on the quarterback, not the coach – yet the coach took the blame after the game. That is what Reid does – cover for McNabb. And that is what McNabb does in his way, too, never complaining about how much running the Eagles aren't doing, saying it will get more balanced in the future but also saying, "When we do get into a rhythm, it's very exciting."

But here is the history lesson. In 2003, McNabb got off to that godawful start, and the team went 0-2, and then he hurt his thumb and continued to struggle, and then Rush Limbaugh dropped into his life. It was, uh, memorable.

Reid's response? In the first two games, he ran the ball only 25 percent of the time. In the next game, it was 52 percent. The next game, 48 percent. The next, 53 percent. In the seven games following the 0-2 start, with the quarterback gradually getting himself healthy again, Reid ran the ball 49.5 percent of the time.

It was the essence of what makes this truly special relationship between coach and quarterback work. It was a recognition of reality, and working to turn that reality into a winning formula, and it needs to happen again.

McNabb and Eagles coach Andy Reid may need to talk about the team's plans this season, as McNabb's injury has held him back a bit.

NFL legacy dies at 89

By Dave Goldberg
Associated Press

NEW YORK – Every NFL fan owes a huge debt to Wellington Mara, who died Tuesday at 89.

So does every owner, executive and player.

Mara, who joined the New York Giants as a ballboy the day his father purchased the team 80 years ago and became co-owner as a teenager, was the face of the franchise for more than a half century.

But he also was the patriarch of the NFL, a man who was willing for more than 40 years to split the millions in television revenues he could have made in the nation's largest market with the Green Bays and Pittsburghs of the league.

It put the NFL at the top of America's sports hierarchy.

"He shaped nearly every rule and philosophy we have in our league today," said Ernie Accorsi, the Giants general manager. "Most of all, he was the moral conscience of the National Football League. He now joins the pantheon of incredible men who made this league what it has become."

Said commissioner Paul Tagliabue: "Wellington Mara represented the heart and soul of the National Football League. He was a man of deep conviction who stood as a beacon of integrity. When Well Mara stood to speak at a league meeting, the room would become silent with anticipation because all of us knew we were going to hear profound insights born of eight decades of league experience."

The last of the NFL's founding generation, Mara, elected to the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1997, died of cancer at his home in Rye, the team said.

One of Mara's greatest contributions came in the early 1960s when he and brother Jack agreed to share television revenue on a league wide basis soon after Pete Rozelle became commissioner. That deal allowed the NFL to thrive and remains in place today.

"Wellington Mara was a true pioneer who understood what it took to make the National Football League great," said Gene Upshaw, executive director of the NFL Players Association. "History will show that his vision, integrity and willingness to share with small market clubs paved the way for economic success."

In 1989, Mara and a group of older owners wanted Rozelle's successor to be Jim Finks, then the New Orleans general manager, rather than Tagliabue, then a league lawyer. Mara thought the league should be run by a football man.

But Mara and several other "old-guard" owners finally agreed to break a stalemate of four months by throwing their votes to Tagliabue. Mara became one of the new commissioner's staunchest supporters, a man Tagliabue often leaned on for advice.

Mara became a Giants' ballboy when he was nine on Oct. 18, 1925, after his father, Timothy J. Mara, bought the team. He stayed fully involved in New York's operation for almost 80 years, except for the three years he served in the Navy during World War II. Until he became ill last spring, he attended most practices and every game.

In 1930, at 14, his father made him co-owner with older brother Jack.

He ran the club until several years ago, when his son John took over day-to-day operations. But from 1979 on, while the team was run by general managers George Young and Ernie Accorsi, Mara had final say on football decisions. He was the one who decided to fire Jim Fassel after the 2003 season and replace him with Tom Coughlin.

Coughlin remembered Mara as an owner who stayed away from the coaches – except when he was needed.

"I'll never forget when I was here as an assistant in 1988," he said. "We lost the last game of the year to the New York Jets and didn't go into the playoffs. The next day he was in the coaches' meeting room, and he went from coach to coach, shaking everybody's hand. In 1989, we were in the playoffs and the next year we won the Super Bowl. We never saw him at that time. He didn't have to be there. He was there when he was needed. He always said and did the right thing."

Before last Sunday's game against Denver, Coughlin told his players of Mara's condition. The Giants won on a touchdown pass from Eli Manning to Amani Toomer with five seconds left. In the locker room after the game, the players chanted "Duke, Duke, Duke," Mara's nickname.

Manning later said he had been told by one of Mara's grandsons that the owner awakened in time to see the winning play, then smiled and went back to sleep.

Two other Giants stars, Tiki Barber and Jeremy Shockey, went to Mara's home on Monday. "We were able to say a prayer and say goodbye, and that meant a lot to me," Barber said.

Mara always repaid his players – once a Giant, you were a Giant for life.

When former players became ill, Mara would find them doctors, pay their medical expenses and arrange help for their families. Many old-timers were on the payroll as scouts or advisers. Even in this era of sophisticated scouting, it wasn't unusual for Young or Accorsi to get a call from a former player recommending the Giants look at some prospect.

The team was almost always well aware of the prospect, but Mara never dropped any of those old "scouts" from the payroll.

Mara always considered himself a football man first, running the on-field operations through the 1950s until 1979 while Jack and then Jack's son Tim ran the business end. The team was successful during the '50s and early '60s with such stars as Frank Gifford, Y.A. Tittle, Sam Huff and Roosevelt Brown and a coaching staff that included Tom Landry and Vince Lombardi as assistants.

But after losing to Chicago in the 1963 NFL championship game, the Giants began a long slide, failing to make the playoffs again until 1981 as Wellington and Tim, by then the co-owner, feuded.

In 1979, on the commissioner's recommendation, the Maras agreed to hire Young as general manager and the team again became a power.

It won Super Bowls in 1986 and 1990 with Bill Parcells coach-

See DEATH on page 9

Watroba's Liquors
79 Sunderland Road North Amherst (liquor store 11:00 AM - 11:00 PM)
Just before the Harp!
Watroba's Market
Red Bull 4 - Pack $7.29 plus deposit
• Corona and Corona Light Loose Case Bottles $20.99 + dep
• Jim Beam Kentucky Whiskey $19.99 1.75 ml Btl
• SKYY Vodka $14.49 750 ml Btl
• Svedka Vodka $17.99 1.75 ml Btl
• Mirassou Assorted Wines $7.99 750 ml Btl
• Pabst Blue Ribbon 30 Pack $13.99 + dep
• Genny Light 30 Pack $12.99 + dep
• Vast array of HUGE Deli Sandwiches
• Coke 12 Pack Cans and Coke products 2 for $6.00 + dep
Jagermeister $20.99 750 ml. Btl. With FREE T-shirt or FREE shot glass
KEG SPECIALS
Bud & Bud Light $63.99+
Michelob Lager & Ultra $63.99+
"Natty" Light & Ice $59.99+
Miller Lite $59.99+
Pabst Blue Ribbon $44.99+
Try our selection of European and Micro Brew Beers

RAIN
Three Clubs / DJs Under One Roof! Party Till 2 a.m!
HOT BODY CONTEST
Every Thursday Night
18+ College Night
• Weekly $100.00 for Top Male/$100.00 for Top Female
• GRAND PRIZE: $500.00 cash & loads of Prizes for Top Male and Top Female
• Cover Charge: 18+ with College ID $10.00 / 21+ $5.00
21+ COLLEGE KARAOKE BATTLE
Friday Nights @ TGIFridays
Show flyer and receive free admission before 11pm
$100 weekly prize
GRAND PRIZE - $500
$1 Draft Beer
Sign up at 9pm
Now Hiring: Bartenders, Waitstaff, Promotions and Security Staff
10 Stearns Square - Springfield, MA 01103 - (413) 827-9000 - www.RainSpringfield.com

UMass Amherst Center for Student Development
UP TO THE MINUTE

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 28
Something Every Friday
War of the Worlds
With Tom Cruise and Tim Robbins
Student Union, Cape Cod Lounge, 9 pm FREE

Men's Hockey vs. New Hampshire
Mullins Center, 7pm Free to UMass Amherst students.

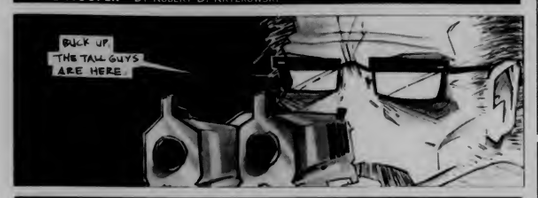
Women's Ice Hockey vs. UPenn
Mullins Center, 10pm Free to UMass Amherst students

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29
Football vs. New Hampshire
McGuirk Stadium, 12pm
$12 Reserved, $10 General Admission, $5 Children under 18

Men's Hockey vs. Maine
Mullins Center, 7pm Free to UMass Amherst students

Choral Spectrum
Annual choral showcase featuring the UMass Amherst Chamber Choir, Choral & Women's Choir
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, 7:30pm

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 30
Sunday Night Movie
War of the Worlds
With Tom Cruise and Tim Robbins
Student Union, Cape Cod Lounge, 8pm FREE



Student businesses are open! Located in the Student Union: the Bike Coop, Campus Design & Copy (CDC), Earthfoods Cafe, People's Market, Tix Unlimited. Located in the residence halls: Greenough Sub Shop, Sweets 'N More (Field), & Sylvan Snack Bar (McNamara).

Brought to you by Student Affairs and Campus Life
UMass Amherst Calender of Events: www.umass.edu/umhome/events

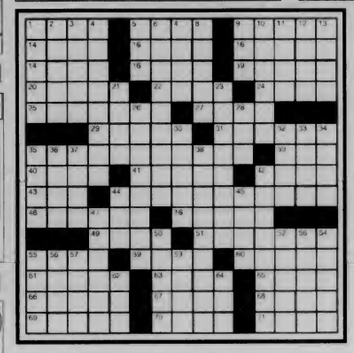
FRANCO THE CLARINETTING NAVY BEAN By Rainy Stanford

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Kryzkowski

RANDOM CHATTER By Chris Sala

NAILED By T.J. Pederson

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe



QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Men are not prisoners of fate, but only prisoners of their own minds."
—Franklin D. Roosevelt

ACROSS
1 Cradle call
5 Vandals
9 Farm seed
14 Woe is me!
15 Kind of kick
16 Rescued
17 Candied lubers
18 Stupefy
19 Prevailing tide
20 Very short
22 ___ do well
24 Bohemian
25 Green beryl
27 Feet
29 Shock or lock
31 Ice falls
35 Jacks of all trades
39 Also
40 Very dry
41 Corporate critic Ralph
42 Type of collar or jacket
43 Malleable metal
44 Contemporary container for the future
46 Mariner
48 Wading bird
49 Ova
51 Disinclination to act
56 Closing passage
58 Song for one
60 Hammers' Hank
61 Face the day
63 Prohibits
65 Arrer-Eur alliance
66 Recreats
67 List-ending abbr
68 Happy
69 Corel component
70 Descend
71 Relaxation
DOWN
1 Perhaps
2 Kind of clock
3 Ike's lady
4 Claimed
5 Announcer Hall
6 Bases loaded homer
7 Seep
8 Drive too fast
9 Fast airplane, briefly
10 March
11 Concluded
12 Tenant's payment
13 Countercurrent
21 "M*A*S*H" co-star Jamie
23 Check
26 Inclinations
28 Chicago transp.
30 Facets
32 Caesar's accusation
33 Shop item
34 Loudness unit
35 Hoods' guns
36 One of HOMES
37 Santa Maria's sister?
38 Type of sofa
42 Alienate
44 Playground game
45 Guilty or not guilty
47 Trifling
50 On the wagon
52 Musical syllables
53 Jots
54 Battery terminal
55 Outdoors quarters
56 Two-toned treat
57 Pushbutton forerunner
59 Better than never?
62 6th sense
64 Cunning
Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP
NEW!! Wireless Internet
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
OCTOBER SPECIAL!
$1.50 PBR Bottles; Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 a pitcher
Tonight. • Cold duck complex
Thur. • D.J. Oliguist
Fri. • Irish Seisiun
Sat. Halloween party w/ savoy shuffle
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
just north of the apartments

Submit your comic!
e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Today is a great day to play football in the rain.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You definitely need a huggie wuggie today.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Go get a tattoo this week. Just not one too big.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
If tequila makes your clothes fall off, drink beer instead.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Stop biting on the end of your pen. It grosses everyone out.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't go outside in flip flops today, your toes will freeze.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You need to clean off your desk before you spill soda all over your keyboard.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
All that extra credit will save your grade in the end.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Stay away from stables. Horses are dangerous.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You are in desperate need of some new hoodies.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
All of your CDs will be stolen tomorrow night.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Donate either money or blood to the Red Cross this week.

★ Submit your comic ★
e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$600 Group Fundraiser Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising programs Equals $1,000-$3,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for up to $600 in bonuses when you schedule your fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact Campus Fundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments. Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

AUTO FOR SALE

92 Honda Accord Auto loaded 145K Good Condition $2200 obo David 253-3297

EMPLOYMENT

Kitchen help wanted. Must be able to work 20hrs/week. Apply at DP Dough Downtown Amherst, MA 01003

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8.00 Hr. 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location – NO SALES! Night & wknd. shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

EMPLOYMENT

Work Study – Admin Asst Must have computer skills and know Acceess and Excel. 10 hours per week max. $8.19-9.48 hr. Application on line at www.lsse.org Email application to: bilzb@amherstma.org

Web programmer with experience with graphics design wanted for work in the Office of ALANA Affairs. Up to $10.00 an hour. Apply at office in room 302 in Student Union or email ofalana@stuaf.umass.edu

"Bartending" $300/day potential No experience nees Training provided 1-800-965-6520 x162

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening experiments $10/hr English must be your first language email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

Wanted: Babysitter occasional nights and weekends for 3 and 5 year old. Experience preferred with own transportation. Non-smoking home. If interested please call 413-297-2146.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Wish your friend a happy birthday in the classifieds! Cheap and easy: call 545-3500 or visit us in the Campus Center Basement 9-3.

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons for both males & females in Northampton www.westernmassboxing.com

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

SERVICES

Thinking about advertising in the Collegian? Having trouble designing an ad? Let us help. Call 545-3500 today.

TRAVEL

ACT NOW – SPRING BREAKERS Book early & Save! Free meals/parties by 11/7. Lowest prices. Be a rep & TRAVEL FREE! Get the ultimate hookups with STA TRAVEL 413-256-1261.

SPRING BREAK – Early Booking Specials – FREE Meals & Drinks - $50 Deposit – 800-234-7007 www.endless-summertours.com

TRAVEL

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

WANTED

RSO's: Advertise for your upcoming events in the Collegian classifieds! Discounted rates for students mean cheap advertising for you! Get your name out there! Recruit new members! Invite people to your events! The sky is the limit. Visit us or call 545-3500.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 26, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dissecting UMass' defense

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

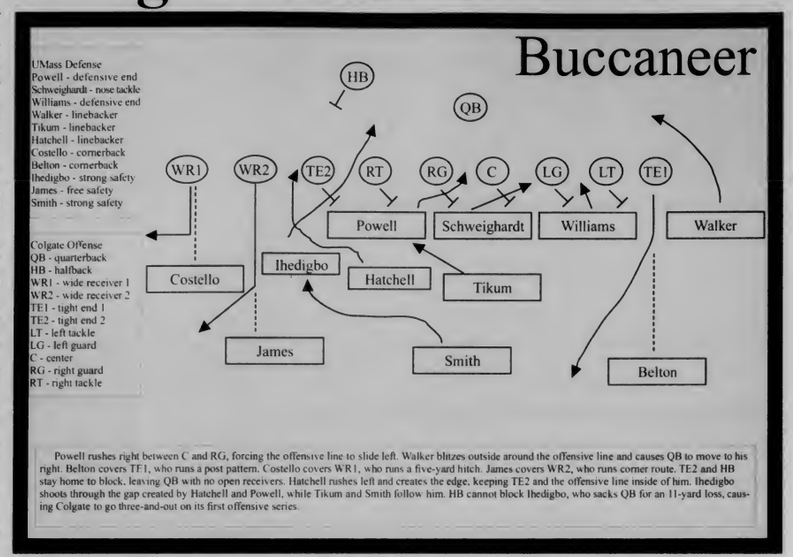
It doesn't take a genius to watch the Massachusetts football team go out on the field everyday and determine that the Minutemen have one of the most unstoppable defensive units in all of Division I-AA football.

It does, however, take somewhat of a genius to devise UMass' defensive game plan and implement it with the entire group in practice so it is run exactly to the level it is supposed to for the Minutemen to have success week-in and week-out.

It takes the same level of genius to understand UMass coach Don Brown's systematic philosophy in order to carry out his demands. Each player must know his positioning on the field before the play, where they should be when the ball is snapped and how to react depending on what everyone on the offensive side of the ball is doing.

After just one season with the Minutemen, one of the most respected defensive football minds in the country has gotten his players to completely buy into his system, and UMass is tops in the land in points allowed per game (7.1) and yards allowed per game (197.1).

But of the 50 points that have been scored on the Minutemen in seven games, 21 of those were the direct result of an offensive turnover Until Saturday's 35-14 win over Maine, UMass' defense had pitched two shutouts and given up one offensive touchdown.



In order to put up these ungodly numbers, the defensive looks Brown throws at his opposition have to be – well – genius.

Yesterday, Brown took the time to sit down in his office and completely diagram one of his more successful schemes, "Buccaneer."

Buccaneer is called when the opposing offense sends its "12" personnel group into the huddle, which means there is one halfback and two tight ends.

Buccaneer's purpose is simple: Get in the quarterback's face by sending a heavy blitz on the strong side of the play, try to sack him but at least force him to make an errant throw.

"There is no way, in terms of [offensive] protection, that we aren't going to get a hit on the quarterback, and that is what we're trying to get done," Brown said.

Powell rushes right between C and RG, forcing the offensive line to slide left. Walker blitzes outside around the offensive line and causes QB to move to his right. Belton covers TE1, who runs a post pattern. Costello covers WR1, who runs a five-yard hitch. James covers WR2, who runs corner route. TE2 and HB stay home to block, leaving QB with no open receivers. Hatchell rushes left and creates the edge, keeping TE2 and the offensive line inside of him. Ihedigbo shoots through the gap created by Hatchell and Powell, while Tikum and Smith follow him. HB cannot block Ihedigbo, who sacks QB for an 11-yard loss, causing Colgate to go three-and-out on its first offensive series.

THE DEFENSIVE PACKAGE

The actual players can change, but the play that will eventually be examined involved the following personnel: Left defensive end Patrick Powell, nose tackle Justin Schweighardt, right defensive end Keron Williams, strong side linebacker Jason Hatchell, middle linebacker Serge Tikum, weak side linebacker Charles Walker, left cornerback Steve Costello, right cornerback Tracy Belton, free safety Shannon James and strong safeties James Ihedigbo and Brandon Smith. In this case, the offense's right side is the strong side.

SETTING IT UP

Brown detailed a successful Buccaneer call from the Sept. 10 game against Colgate. The Raiders were facing a third-and-seven from their own 21-yard line during the game's opening drive.

To keep things as simple as possible, UMass' players will be referred to by their names while Colgate's will be referred to by position, with the exception of quarterback Lee Sloan. Make sure to refer to the adjacent diagram to follow the play.

See DEFENSE on page 9

Letourneau's living out dream

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

On a windy day at Garber Field, the Massachusetts field hockey team is closing out a victory over conference rival West Chester. As the final seconds tick down, sophomore goalie Becky Letourneau runs as best she can in all those pads – to two of her teammates. The trio jumps up and down, celebrating their third straight Atlantic 10 win, but they are also celebrating another feat.

The Minutewomen won the game 4-0, but the team could have scored one goal or 20 goals, and they would have been celebrating the same way. The zero on the board for West Chester is why they are so excited, as Letourneau recorded her first career shutout. In a game which she faced 10 shots and six penalty corners, Letourneau was perfect, helping her team gain ground in the A-10 standings.

Many college athletes are, in a sense, born into the sport they play. When a parent plays a sport in college, and her child learns to play the same sport, it starts to become a family pedigree. However, few student-athletes have had the privilege of two families teaching, supporting, pushing and cheering them on from the time they first pick up a ball, stick, puck or skate.

Letourneau has had just such an experience. In the seventh grade, she played field hockey for the first time in Greenfield, Mass., which thrilled her mother, who played field hockey at Greenfield High. Little did she know, though, that eight years later she would find herself leading the Minutewomen toward a shot at the Atlantic 10 championship, with her best friend – a member of a family close to Becky's own – leading the nation's freshmen in scoring.

In her first year as a starter, Letourneau has 99 saves for a .733 save percentage, but that only begins to describe her performance this season. In one span, she held the opposing team to two goals or less in eight straight games.

Her success at UMass is a direct result of her development as an athlete and student during her years in the Greenfield school system.

It was there that Letourneau joined the middle school field hockey team with friend Jill Putnam, currently a freshman forward-midfielder for Northwestern.

When Letourneau started out, she had to choose a position, but as she says, she did not so much choose the position as the position chose her.

UMass field hockey goalie Becky Letourneau has been playing the same position since her middle school days in Greenfield, Mass. She recorded her first career shutout against West Chester earlier this season.

"At first I wasn't very good at stick skills," Letourneau said of her early days in the sport. "We didn't have a goalie, and I was like, 'Hey, why not? [I'll] try it out.'"

The decision turned out to be a wise one. As she progressed through middle school and high school, she played both field hockey and softball, eventually making both varsity squads. When she wasn't playing for her high school, Letourneau could always be found practicing with whom she called her "second family."

"I played with Jill through middle school and high school," she said. "Since I was one of the only goalies in Greenfield, [Putnam's father] would put together teams and would always ask me to play keeper."

In her junior year, the Greenfield High Green Wave made it all the way to the state championship game, a feat Letourneau considers one of her best achievements in field hockey. The same year, she made the All Western Mass. Team as a goalkeeper.As a senior, Letourneau led her team back to tournament play, but fell short in the Western Mass semifinals. However, Letourneau's high school athletics did not end there.

After the season, she followed Putnam to Cape Ann, where they joined the Cape Ann Coalition, a regional field hockey club team. She joined her future UMass

See LETOURNEAU on page 9

McNabb and Reid must figure it out

By Rich Hofmann
Knight Ridder

PHILADELPHIA — The histories and fates of Andy Reid and Donovan McNabb are tied tighter than in most coach-player relationships. They started together and built together, succeeded together and suffered together. They feed off each other sometimes and they cover for each other at other times. It is a relationship obviously based upon trust.

But neither is serving the other right now. Neither is holding up his end of the relationship because neither is being honest about the current realities.

That is, while both talk about McNabb's sports hernia, neither so far really has been willing to alter his approach in order to account for an injury that is going to be here all season. This has to be talked about, even on the day after a 20-17 victory over the San Diego Chargers fell from the heavens and into their laps.

It is clear that neither Reid nor McNabb wants to compromise, to pare down the offensive vision that both of them share. It is clear, too, that neither of them got to be the successes that they have been by compromising very often. Their history – again, grounded in trust – is to plan extensively and then to stick to the plan, to trust in the plan, to believe in their demonstrated ability.

But this is different now, and it is becoming more obvious every week. The Eagles have scored one offensive touchdown in 128 minutes and 57 seconds, and McNabb's injury seems to come and go in maddening, unpredictable ways. He can't throw it down the field sometimes. He seems entirely uninterested in running the ball most times.

For at least some stretches in every game now, he doesn't look like himself, and it is time for both of them to recognize it.

For Reid to take some heat off the quarterback.

For McNabb to remember that he is, indeed, injured.

For Reid to call more running plays.

For McNabb to stop trying to be Superman.

We witnessed the first concession Monday, when Reid said he would seek to put more balance into his pass-happy attack. At his Monday press conference, without prompting, he said, "You need to balance it up."

Of course, he might have been fuming. At one point, Reid acknowledged that his change of heart was just a way of trying to head off the inquisition at the pass, with the ink on another ridiculous set of stats just finished drying. Was he kidding? Don't know.

But they do need to run it more – and if that means going out and buying a big, one-dimensional lummox of a blocking tight end, so be it. (Or bringing back Chad Lewis; even better.) This isn't even a question anymore. If they're not getting it blocked, then fix it.

And, while they're at it, they need to get the plays in faster from the sidelines. Three burned timeouts in the first half are a sin. The coaches do everybody a dis-

See EAGLES on page 10

Sports Mailbag

Do you have a question or comment to contribute to the Sports section's newest feature? Send an E-mail to Sports@DailyCollegian.com and we'll answer it during our weekly sports mailbag.

New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Thursday, October 27, 2005 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXVI Issue 35

Author Kozol blasts public education in talk

By John Fenuccio
Collegian Staff

SOUTH HADLEY — Award-winning educator and author Jonathan Kozol spoke to a packed Chapin auditorium room promoting his new book "Shame of the Nation: The Restoration of Apartheid Schooling in America" at Mount Holyoke College Tuesday night.

Kozol, a Massachusetts native, is currently on an 80-day book tour, marking the tour's halfway point by speaking before an intrigued audience at Mount Holyoke College. His new book deals with the segregation seen in the education system of the poorest areas of the country.

Kozol spent the last five years visiting nearly sixty schools in eleven states gathering information to support his claim that children in the public school system of inner cities have not been as racially isolated since the landmark Supreme Court ruling of Brown v. Board of Education in 1954 that effectively ended segregated schools.

In his new book Kozol writes, "No matter how complex the reasons that have brought us to the point at which we stand, we have, it seems, been traveling a long way to a place of ultimate surrender that does not look very different from the place where some of us began." Speaking of the racial divide that plagued our nation over half a century ago, he adds, "If we have agreed to give up on the dream for which so many gave their lives, perhaps at least we ought to have the honesty to say so."

Kozol spoke to the fact that in his new book, he delves into why our poorest schools are in the conditions they're in and uses statistics to support his criticism, a common complaint among his critics. While gathering information on a school in the Bronx, N.Y., he found that the poorest schools receive $11,000 in public education assistance, while a suburb located ten minutes away receives $19,000. Just by living ten minutes away, children attending these schools get double the financial assistance in their education, assuring, at the very least, a better opportunity for success.

Kozol carried some extra emotion throughout the lecture specifically because of the death of Rosa Parks, an icon to Kozol. This sparked a point of outrage that the poorest and most ill-equipped schools of our nation are often named after such prominent American civil-rights pioneers. These are the types of schools in which Kozol gathered his research. He often found many to be so poorly operated and underfunded that the schools often do not have full-time teachers and some students start lunchtime before 10 a.m.

Jonathan Kozol, an internationally acclaimed author, spoke at Mt. Holyoke College last night about inequality in public education, the topic of his new book "The Shame of the Nation."

"It's hypocritical of a nation to expect a child to get high standardized test scores when Congress denies them pre-education," Kozol said, speaking with emotional conviction.

Kozol mentioned that while many cannot afford pre-education programs, which he says are proven to be vital to a child's ability to score well on standardized tests, wealthy people in states such as New York are sending their children to private, $22,000-a-year institutions.

While visiting schools in Alabama, Kozol found one could take a picture of the school's children from the 1940s, compare it to a present day picture, and see no apparent difference. Since he was fired from his first job working as a fourth-grade teacher in Roxbury, for reading a Langston Hughes poem, Jonathan Kozol has dedicated the rest of his life to raising the red flag to such injustices and speaking out for those who do not have the opportunity to do so.

Kozol also spoke of his close friendship with Fred Rogers, also known as "Mr. Rogers" to children across America, before he passed away. On a day Mr. Rogers accompanied Kozol to a classroom in a poor school in New York, one girl told Mr. Rogers something that single-handedly put the public education problem into perspective. "Mr. Rogers, welcome to my neighborhood."

3rd arrest made in Frat Row stabbing case

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

A third person has been arrested in connection with six stabbings that took place on the "Frat Row" section of North Pleasant St.

Cuong Ly, 18, of 277 Riverglade Drive, Apartment 8 in Amherst was arrested at his home at 12:30 p.m. on Tuesday and charged with assault with a dangerous weapon (a metal pole) and two counts of assault and battery, police said.

As of press time, police would not disclose what exact role Ly had in the melee of assaults that occurred outside Pi Delta Psi fraternity, 389 North Pleasant St., in the early morning hours of Sunday, Oct. 2.

Amherst police responded to a report of a large fight outside Pi Delta Psi at 12:33 a.m. on Oct. 2 to find two men stabbed. Chris Canton, 21, the president of the Zeta Beta Tau fraternity, was found stabbed in the head. Joseph Gratton, 21, a member of Zeta Beta Tau, was found stabbed in the bicep.

About 45 minutes later, police responded again to the area of Pi Delta Psi on another report of a large fight to find three additional men stabbed. Stephen Fiore, 20, of Somerville was found stabbed several times in the back. Alp Akliner, 18, of Woodcliff N.J. was found stabbed in the side. Sean Fitzgibbons of North Attleboro was found stabbed in the forearm. Since the incident, Fitzgibbons told the Daily Collegian that he was not actually stabbed. However, police have refused comment regarding Fitzgibbons.

At 2:25 a.m., police were called to 17 Southpoint Drive on a report of a man who had been stabbed. Police found Thi Ly, 23, of 266 East Hadley Rd. stabbed in the hand. Police said he received the stab wound from the earlier fights on Frat Row.

Cuong Ly, the suspect arrested Tuesday, is the brother of Thi Ly, the stabbing victim.

Police arrested a 15-year-old male from Amherst on Oct. 12 and a 15-year-old male from Sunderland on Oct. 13 in connection with the stabbings. Both males were charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon (shod foot). The males were believed to be involved in assaulting some of the stabbing victims, but police have not said whether they are

See ARREST on page 2

Students helped in grad school process

By Ryan Richardson
Collegian Staff

The graduate school application process can certainly be daunting. It can be hard to keep track of all of the programs out there, and the litany of test acronyms can be dazzling.

To help students through the process, the University of Massachusetts's Career Services program brought in representatives from more than 120 graduate and professional school programs to offer students a bit of guidance as part of its Graduate and Professional Schools Information Day yesterday.

"What we've done here is create an opportunity for students to meet with representatives ... to find out what they need to do to be ready for applying," said Tommie Joyner, Jr., Assistant Director for Career Planning at Career Services.

Joyner says that the Graduate and Professional Schools Information Day is a chance for students to find out what exams they need to take, what courses they should be looking at, and what kinds of extracurricular activities they should participate in to help demonstrate their passion for their concentration.

While most agreed that items like a candidate's grade point average, exam scores and experience were important for getting into graduate school, the experts said the personal essay was where a student really should demonstrate why they should be in grad school.

"We're looking for interesting people," said Stephen Brown, Assistant Dean for Admissions at the Fordham University School of Law. He emphasized that the personal statement was the best way to demonstrate the drive and passion that institutions like Fordham are looking for. "It frames the rest of the application," Brown said.

Just as many programs were looking for interesting students, there were many interesting programs on hand for students to take a look at. Many programs came from outside of the northeast U.S., and some from outside of the country, like the University of Edinburgh.

"We're an international school. Twenty percent of our student body is from overseas," said Tom McGlew, a professor at the University of Edinburgh.

See GRAD SCHOOL on page 2

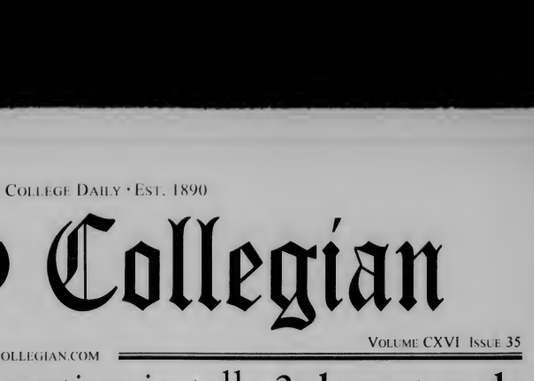
SGA approves funds for Ski 'N' Board Club

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association of the University of Massachusetts voted unanimously to allocate $3,400 from the Finance Committee Reserves to the Ski 'N' Board Club of UMass at last night's meeting.

The Senate's allocation acts in correlation with President Pavel Payano's call for an increase of funding this year for Registered Student Organizations (RSOs).

The SGA currently holds a surplus of over $600,000 to allocate to different RSOs around UMass, a surplus that is being monitored closely by the student body as well as the administration.



Last year, the SGA's Way and Means Committee cut many RSO budgets for 2005 by substantial amounts.

The Ski 'N' Board Club, in existence since 1969, was one of these groups which saw a considerable budget cut, a $3,965 decrease from their 2004 budget.

The cutbacks had strongly affected the Ski 'N' Board Club's efforts to host their annual Ski Sale, the biggest source of funding for the club and for the ski trips it organizes in the UMass community.

The Ski Sale would normally cost $9,000 to organize and run, bringing in nearly $5,000 in profit each year.

"The group has been one of the most active and successful RSOs on the UMass campus, one whose membership exceeds over 200 active members," said Mike Nelson, presiding officer for the Ski 'N' Board Club.

SGA Speaker Sean Bliss addresses the Senate at last night's meeting. The SGA unanimously approved funds for the UMass Ski 'N' Board Club, whose funds were cut last year.

The SGA is also in the planning stages of creating a program that would provide students charged with housing violations with legal council, given by students who are well-versed in the punishments and procedures of the Dean of Students Office.

SGA Attorney General Shaquille Onikoro is working on creating a judicial advisors program that would train students to act as a form of legal council for students charged with conduct violations by the Dean of Student's Office.

"If you live in a dorm, you have a Resident Director and Resident Assistants. If you put a towel over the fire alarm, that a violation. You're written up [by] your RA and it's sent to the RD. Those types of things stay within the building."

See SGA on page 2

Holyoke school taken over by state

SHREWSBURY (AP) — A Holyoke middle school became the third in Massachusetts to be taken over by the state after the Board of Education voted to classify the school as "chronically underperforming."

With the 5-3 vote on Tuesday, Peck Middle School joins two Fall River middle schools already under state control.

During its meeting in Shrewsbury, the board also voted to keep Springfield's Putnam Vocational High School classified as underperforming, rather than downgrading it to chronically underperforming, which would have triggered the state takeover.

Districts are labeled underperforming based on their scores on the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment tests. If test results remain low for two years at a given school, that school may then be declared chronically underperforming, which gives the state board the power to replace the principal and take any other action deemed necessary.

Holyoke Superintendent Eduardo Carballo criticized the decision, saying the label will only make it harder for Peck to attract good teachers and administrators.

"It has not been easy and we are doing everything they asked us to do," Carballo told The Republican newspaper of Springfield.

Springfield Mayor Charles Ryan said he was pleased with the decision to spare Putnam from a state takeover.

Superintendent Joe Burke said he was prepared to defend Putnam against a possible downgrade of the school's status.

Associated Press

UM researchers fight fraud with software

By Hayden Marx
Collegian Staff

Researchers in the Knowledge Discovery Laboratory (KDL) at the University of Massachusetts have teamed up with the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD) to create revolutionary fraud detection software to promote honesty among securities traders.

Unlike current software, which is useful in predicting fraud among brokers by looking at past behavior but cannot take into account the human aspects of fraud, KDL's program looks at both a broker's history and the history of the brokers they come in contact with.

When results were compared with NASD's High-Risk Brokers List, KDL's program identified many of the brokers on the list, as well as some new ones.

"That it performs as well as live examiners is fascinating," said John Komoroske, vice president of the NASD. "With tweaking and time, models such as these could be a real help."

NASD is the world's largest private-sector securities regulator. The group provides licenses for individuals, admits firms into the industry, and writes the rules that govern their behavior. They oversee the activities of more than 5,155 brokerage firms, 104,790 branch offices and 659,560 registered securities representatives.

This large amount of data makes the job of identifying potential fraud among brokers difficult. Current software, which looks at each broker's record as autonomous, misses the connections between them.

David Jensen, an associate professor in computer science at UMass and the director of KDL, likened predicting fraud to predicting the spread of an infectious disease: to predict the likelihood a person would contact a disease, you would look not just at their medical history, but at whom they have been in contact with as well. This is the philosophy behind the new program's focus on both a broker's individual history and the history of brokers they interact with.

The program works by using relational probability trees (RPTs) to compile information. RPTs consider the attributes of related objects, and then construct a model illustrating their speculated relationships. In trying to predict fraud among securities traders, they entered in data about securities traders from past years supplied by NASD. The program then made predictions based on the organizational relationships of the securities world: it linked brokers to firms, customer complaints to brokers, and branches to their parent firm.

When results were compared to NASD's Higher-Risk Broker List, a list generated by NASD using a set of rules created from their knowledge of the field, KDL's results matched many of the brokers on the higher-risk list, and pinpointed some new cases as well. Brokers who appeared on both lists were found to be much more likely to commit violations than ones that appeared on only one, thus allowing NASD examiners the ability to use it to focus on those most likely to commit fraud.

ARTS & LIVING
'THE LOWRIDERS'
Artist Meridel Rubenstein shows cars as an art form in his series of photographs at Smith College.
PAGE 7

EDITORIAL/OPINION
HALLOWEEN IN OUR SIGHTS
One columnist explores the college Halloween experience and the morning after.
PAGE 6

WEATHER
TODAY Partly Cloudy, H47°
TONIGHT Partly Cloudy L27
TOMORROW Partly Cloudy, H47°, L25°

SPORTS
FIGHT FOR THE TOP
UMass football will face off with UNH for the best A-10 record.
PAGE 14

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Cameron J. Woods
BUSINESS MANAGER Hirak Shah
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerry O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egassian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Matthew O'Rourke
COMICS EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Allison Edles
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
PHOTO EDITOR Kate Sachsenmaier
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Hoar
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
HUMAN RESOURCE Phil Smoller
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Nathan Chomsky
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mackenzie Isler
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Jones
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Daley
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Bellivau
ASSISTANT PHOTO Elizabeth Carsin
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eric Athas
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Kristen LaCasse

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS SUMMER SESSION. THE COLLEGIAN IS AN INDEPENDENT, STUDENT-OPERATED, ADVERTISING-SUPPORTED, FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALPHA TAU, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCIMITAR IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED SPOT JAN. 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, SEE MEDIAWORKS, 9:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Jamie Lau
COPY EDITOR
Katie Huston
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Belanger
PRODUCTION STAFF
Chris Martin, Kristen LaCasse

Kerry wants troops home soon

By Andrew Miga
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Sen. John Kerry says President Bush should bring home 20,000 troops from Iraq over the Christmas holidays if the December parliamentary elections there are successful Defeated by Bush last year and a potential candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination in 2008, Kerry called for a "reasonable time frame" for pulling back troops rather than a full-scale withdrawal advocated by some Democrats. He said it could be completed in 12 to 15 months.

"It will be hard for this administration, but it is essential to acknowledge that the insurgency will not be defeated unless our troop levels are drawn down ... starting immediately after successful elections in December," Kerry said in a speech Wednesday at Georgetown University.

The presence of 159,000 U.S. troops in Iraq is deterring peace efforts, said Kerry, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

"To undermine the insurgency, we must instead simultaneously pursue both a political settlement and the withdrawal of American combat forces linked to specific, responsible benchmarks," he said. "At the first benchmark, the completion of December elections, we can start the process of reducing our forces by 20,000 troops over the course of the holidays."

Kerry, who voted to authorize the use of force in Iraq, has been a strong critic of Bush's handling of the war, accusing the president of misleading the public into going to war.

The Republican National Committee, meanwhile, charged that Kerry's plan to pull back troops would make American forces remaining in Iraq more vulnerable to insurgent strikes.

"From the man who gave us 'I voted for it before I voted against it' we now have a declaration that the removal of 20,000 troops in Iraq will defeat the insurgency," said RNC spokeswoman Tracey Schmitt.

"John Kerry is either willing to endanger American forces on the ground, or he really believes that ignoring the presence of terrorists is the best policy for the safety of America," she said.

The White House did not immediately return a call for comment on Kerry's remarks.

Missing surfer now presumed dead

PLYMOUTH (AP) — The Coast Guard called off the search Wednesday for a 23-year-old man who went body surfing at night during a nor'easter.

Friends told authorities that Tony Gigliotti, of Plymouth, had been drinking heavily and insisted on going into the water off Whitehorse Beach around 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, despite pleas from his friends that he turn back.

He was wearing only a T-shirt, shorts and sandals when he went in, Plymouth Deputy Fire Chief Martin Enos said.

At the time, a storm was battering the Massachusetts coast, with sustained winds of 35 mph kicking up 20-foot waves in the area.

His friends briefly waded in after him before calling for help, Enos said Wednesday.

"Fortunately, (Gigliotti's friends) exited the water," he said. "I mean, last night the undertow was horrendous."

A Coast Guard helicopter searched for Gigliotti on Tuesday night and Wednesday morning, but to no avail, Coast Guard spokeswoman Kelly Newlin said.

The water was around 52 degrees and it's unlikely Gigliotti could have survived more than a few hours, she said.

Associated Press

Information Day helps grad students

GRAD SCHOOL from page 1

"Visiting places like UMass is a valuable aspect of our international commitment."

McGlew added that many European programs don't require the GRE exams, but instead emphasize references and GPA.

"There are two types of people that apply to our program: those who have a call to ministry, and people who want to study their own spirituality," said Michael Huddy, Director of Admissions at Bangor Theological Seminary in Maine. The seminary doesn't require GREs, but looks instead at transcripts and references. It also interviews all of its applicants in order to get a complete picture of who they really are.

In addition to the many schools represented, several companies were on hand to talk with students about their exams and about finding ways to pay for school. Kaplan and The Princeton Review both offer services that they claim help to improve readiness for various graduate exams.

"The more education, the better the position paywise," said Tiana Onermaa of careerbuilder.com. Careerbuilder.com offers users the ability to find jobs and post resumes on their Web site. The company also runs another site, findutition.com, to help students find scholarships and grants.

New legal services for students proposed by SGA members said Onikoro. "But the more severe violations go through the Dean of Students Office, like being caught drinking underage, or being caught with narcotics."

SGA from page 1

This program will create a group of student advisors for students who find themselves in trouble with the Dean of Students Office.

"Generally, students that are filed with violations freak out. They don't know what to do or where to go. When they finally go to the hearing board, they end up implicating themselves," said Onikoro.

Students involved with the Dean of Students Office can see punishments of probation or suspension.

"These advisors will provide students with enough knowledge so that they can better defend themselves in their hearings, advising them of their options and the possible penalties of their accused violation," said Onikoro.

"We also follow them to the Hearing Board as a counselor and can even speak on behalf of the student," said Onikoro. "The advisors are going to be well trained and well versed within the code of student conduct. This would be a great opportunity for Pre-Law students to get some hands on experience in the field."

Students that are interested in becoming involved in the program can apply in the SGA office in the Student Union building or obtain an application in the Whitmore building.

Members of the Senate speak during the SGA meeting last night.

Stabbing arrest made

ARREST from page 1

accused of stabbing anyone.

Cuong Ly and the two juveniles were all students of Amherst Regional High School's alternative Annex.

Ly pleaded innocent Tuesday during his arraignment at Eastern Hampshire District Court in Hadley. Judge Nancy Dusek-Gonzlez reportedly set bail at $1,000 and continued the case to Wednesday, Nov. 2.

Both fraternities involved in the stabbings, Zeta Beta Tau and Pi Delta Psi, have received temporary suspensions from the University of Massachusetts.

Members from the fraternities have denied starting the fights or participating in any altercations between the two frats.

"It's good to see that the process is moving along," Joseph Gratton, a stabbing victim and Zeta Beta Tau member said of the arrests.

"We have no affiliation with any persons who have been arrested in the case, so therefore will not comment on it," said Pi Delta Psi president Long Tran in an e-mail. "We will be ready to defend ourselves and prove to administration that there is no reason for our suspension."

I AM
UP TO HERE WITH ALL YOUR BUDDIES
I AM INSTANT MESSAGING WITH UP TO 500 BUDDIES
I AM AIM
im email text voice video
AIM.COM/YOU

DO YOU HAVE A Favorite Academic Advisor?
nominate them for the
Outstanding Academic Advisor Award
The Selection Committee for the 2005-2006 Outstanding Academic Advisor Award invites all students, faculty and staff to nominate undergraduate academic advisors whose practices distinguish them from other advisors. The Characteristics of an outstanding advisor include but are not limited to:
- Building strong relationships with students
- Monitoring students' progress towards academic and career goals
- Making appropriate referrals
- Knowing and understanding institutional regulations, policies and procedures

Nominations of faculty and staff who advise undergraduate students should be submitted to:
Outstanding Academic Advisor Award Committee
Office of the Provost
362 Whitmore Building
Nominations (in writing, by phone, or by email to getinde@provost.umass.edu) should be recieved by Friday 11/18/05.
For further information, call the Provost Office at 545 2554.

Nor'easter causes some damage; New England fairs storm well

A boat sits along Quincy Shore Road in Quincy on Tuesday after the nor'easter came ashore.

By Theo Emery
Associated Press

MAYNARD — Ted Bower doesn't rely on meteorologists to tell him if there will be enough rain to flood the basement of the downtown Maynard liquor store where he works.

The crack on the concrete support on the bridge spanning the Assabet River near the store works just fine, thank you very much.

"We just go out and take a peek at it, and see where the level is, if you see it coming up, because it does come up quick," said Bower, 50, after checking for the third or fourth time on Tuesday.

Residents all over New England kept a close eye on their local rivers as an early nor'easter fueled by Hurricane Wilma churned up 20-foot seas, knocked out power to tens of thousands and further drenched a region still cleaning up from flooding earlier in the month.

Even though authorities were keeping a close eye on tributaries of the Merrimack River, no major flooding was expected even as rivers continue to rise over the next 24 to 36 hours, Peter Judge, a spokesman for the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency, said Tuesday evening.

Wilma stayed well offshore, but the nor'easter drew strength from the hurricane a day after it slammed Florida. Winds topped 60 mph, and with the ground already saturated, trees and limbs came crashing down, knocking out power to more than 70,000 homes and businesses across Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut. By 6 a.m. on Wednesday, that was down to about 350 as winds and rain eased.

Wet, slushy snow started to fall in the Berkshires at about 8 p.m. Tuesday, with a couple of inches accumulating in area towns at higher elevations, including Florida, Savoy and Cheshire. Some snow also fell in northwestern Connecticut.

Many commercial fishermen stayed in port, mindful of the October 1991 "Perfect Storm," which inspired the book and movie of the same name about a Gloucester swordfishing boat that disappeared at sea. In that instance, a nor'easter collided with Hurricane Grace in the north Atlantic.

"I wouldn't want to be out there today — too dangerous," said fisherman Matt Farrara, who was making repairs to his boat at the state fishing pier in Gloucester.

The Coast Guard called off the search Wednesday for a 23-year-old Plymouth man who went body surfing on Tuesday night. Authorities

See STORM on page 4

Rosa Parks, civil rights pioneer, dies at 92-years-old

By Amanda Turner
Oklahoma Daily (U. Oklahoma)

NORMAN, Okla. — Though civil rights pioneer Rosa Parks died Monday, members of the University of Oklahoma's black community said Parks's legacy is still alive.

Shanel Norwood, president of the Black Student Association and an elementary education senior, said cell phone text messages were flying Tuesday morning with a reminder to commuters, "Sit at the front of the bus today!"

Parks's refusal to give up her seat to a white man on a bus nearly 50 years ago helped to spark the civil rights movement. Parks, a 42-year-old seamstress in Montgomery, Ala., refused to move to the back of the bus Dec. 1, 1955. She died Monday in Detroit at age 92.

Kimberly Rutland, coordinator of African-American Student Life and assistant director of Student Life, said Parks's single act of courage changed the course of history.

"We are light years ahead of where we would have been had she decided to give up her seat," Rutland said. "Without her, our world would be completely different."

On Dec. 5, 1955, Parks was convicted of disorderly conduct and fined $10. That same day, a young preacher named Martin Luther King, Jr. held a meeting to rally support for a city-wide bus boycott. The boycott economically crippled the city bus system, and Parks and 89 others were indicted in February 1956 for boycotting the bus. That November, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled bus segregation in Montgomery to be unconstitutional. The Montgomery bus boycott ended after 381 days, when the city finally integrated the buses Dec. 21, 1956.

Parks's actions helped make the civil rights movement a national one, said Marcus Bivines, president of the Black Law Student Association.

"Many people were active in civil rights, but Rosa Parks's action was something people were able to latch onto and say, 'This means something,'" said Bivines, a law student.

Bivines said Parks showed everyone that the issue was not just occurring in Alabama.

"(Parks) created a national precedent," she said. "Desegregation is one of the places we can mark in history and be thankful that someone started the process."

The national civil rights movement grew in the 1950s and 1960s with sit-ins, rallies and marches, and was sometimes met with a violent backlash.

However, the movement pressed forward. The Civil Rights Bill of 1964 made all segregation in public places illegal and required employees to provide equal opportunities in employment.

"Rosa changed the view of what we as black people would not tolerate," said Lauren Mace, an economics senior.

Mace is president of the OU chapter of Alpha Kappa Alpha, of which Parks was an honorary member.

Brittany Norwood, an education senior, said Parks's actions empowered other minority groups.

"She was a monumental figure in African-American and American history," Norwood said. "She was a catalyst for the civil rights movement, but also a catalyst for all movements and minority groups."

Kerri-Ann Mitchell, a communication senior, said she hopes Parks's death will encourage students to take time to reflect on the contributions she made.

"It's sad to know that she's passed away with all the things that she's done," Mitchell said. "What she has done will always triumph and go on and pave the way for African-American students to take a stand against inequality and discrimination. It's a moment to reflect on what she's done and to continue her legacy."

KKT

Civil rights pioneer Rosa Parks waves to the crowd after being honored in the U.S. Capitol with the Congressional Gold Metal in June 1999.

Cape Cod sailor found alive

PROVINCETOWN (AP) — The Coast Guard rescued a 74-year-old sailor off Cape Cod Wednesday after he disappeared in the midst of a powerful nor'easter.

Vincent Gillings, an American with extensive sailing experience, left Liverpool, Nova Scotia on Friday in his 33-foot sailboat, the Sara Gamp, bound for Gloucester.

After hearing Sunday from his would-be girlfriend, U.S. and Canadian authorities launched an air and water search of a 230-mile swath stretching from Yarmouth, Nova Scotia to Gloucester.

The surface search was suspended because conditions became too dangerous during Tuesday's storm, which pounded the New England coast with high winds and 20-foot surf. But the air search continued and a Coast Guard jet crew spotted Gillings's boat around 8 a.m. Wednesday about 22 miles northeast of Provincetown.

A helicopter was dispatched and lowered a rescue swimmer onto the boat, Coast Guard spokesman Scott Garr said. Gillings was in stable condition, but suffering from hypothermia. He was flown to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

The Coast Guard said the boat was equipped with flares, life jackets, a life raft and a VHF radio. The boat's home port is in Virginia.

Associated Press

Missing Ill. student found dead

NORMAL, Ill. (AP) — A body found in a burned-out chicken coop in Mississippi has been identified as that of an Illinois college student who disappeared two weeks ago, authorities said Wednesday.

Police did not disclose the cause of death.

Dental records were used to identify the remains of 21-year-old Illinois State University senior Olamide Adeyooye, authorities said.

A native of Nigeria who moved to suburban Chicago when she was 8, Adeyooye was last seen Oct. 13 at a video store near her off-campus apartment in Normal.

Normal Police Lt. Mark Kotte said authorities were still investigating how Adeyooye ended up in Mississippi. But he added: "It is not an incident of somebody going around preying on college students."

The body was found Friday as workers cleaned up a chicken coop in Lake, Miss., where firefighters had put out a blaze four days earlier. The coop is about 60 miles from Interstate 55, a highway that passes through Normal.

Nearly 40 investigators, including FBI agents, took part in the search. Her family and friends posted fliers and sent out messages through Web sites and blogs.

Associated Press

Taste of Home
RECIPE CONTEST
Miss home cookin'? Miss the family?
Share your favorite recipe from home and receive a chance to win a getaway for your parent(s) or guardian to join you on campus.
GRAND PRIZE
They'll stay at the Campus Center hotel, dine at the University Club, assist our executive chef in preparing the winning recipe and even catch a UMass sports game. The UMass student Grand Prize winner will receive a monthly "Gift from Home" compliments of UMass Dining Services from November through May 2006 and a $100 gift certificate for the University Store. Travel expenses will be paid.
Second and third prizes also awarded.
Enter between October 17 and 28, 2005
at any UMass Dining Common (Look for our entry display) or online at www.umass.edu/diningservices.
Just submit your favorite entrée
(meat or vegetarian recipe) from home. Recipes will be judged on originality, authenticity, taste, ease of preparation, and appearance.
The winners will be announced on Monday, November 4, 2005
The winning recipes will be featured at all DC's during dinner, Thursday, November 10th.
DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
GRAND PRIZE WINNER '05
Be A Local Hero
You must be 18 years old or older and on a meal plan to enter

Wilma delivers major blow to Florida and Mexico

Death toll in Florida rises from 5 to 10

By Allen Breed
Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Authorities raised Florida's death toll from Hurricane Wilma from five to 10 Wednesday and urged the storm's survivors to have patience as they endured long waits for food, water and other necessities.

Gov. Jeb Bush took responsibility Wednesday for frustrating delays at centers distributing supplies to storm victims, but he also said people who have waited in line for hours seeking relief should have done more to prepare for the storm.

"People had ample time to prepare. It isn't that hard to get 72 hours worth of food and water," said Bush, repeating the advice that officials had given days before Wilma blasted across southern Florida early Monday.

The 21st storm in the busiest Atlantic hurricane season on record, Wilma killed at least 12 people in Haiti, four in Mexico and one in Jamaica before hitting Florida. State emergency management director Craig Fugate said Wednesday that Florida's death toll was 10, up from the five deaths previously reported.

Bush spoke at a joint news conference with Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff, who oversees the Federal Emergency Management Agency. FEMA, roundly criticized for its response to Hurricane Katrina, was again a focus of frustration Wednesday as Floridians faced long waits for supplies that the mayor of Miami-Dade County warned were running out.

On Tuesday, trucks carrying the first wave of relief either arrived much later than local officials expected or didn't show up at all.

The destruction from Hurricane Wilma is clear in this picture, taken in Playa del Carmen, Mexico.

"I understand there are frustrations here," Chertoff said. "As the governor has acknowledged, we can't always get to people what we hope to get and as quickly as we hope to do it."

Bush accepted responsibility for not having distribution centers running smoothly within 24 hours, and promised to try to speed up distribution. His brother President Bush planned a Thursday visit.

At least one distribution site in Miami-Dade was out of supplies, and the other 10 were running low with material from FEMA, Miami-Dade Mayor Carlos Alvarez said.

Alvarez said it could be Wednesday night before the stocks are resupplied. "I cannot give you a timetable because, ladies and gentlemen, quite frankly, we don't control those assets."

Alvarez called the relief process "flawed," called for more control and oversight and said he was "frustrated, disappointed, angered" with the delivery of supplies.

Items Americans usually take for granted — a bag of ice, a fast-food burger, a gallon of gas — have taken hours of patience to get since Hurricane Wilma made its destructive sweep.

Nine hours after she got in line Tuesday at one designated relief-supply location, Fame Artisil, 23, of North Miami wearily left for home with 28 pounds of ice and six liters of bottled water.

"All that time," Artisil said. "This is all we got."

Police watched over the few gas stations that were open as a precaution in case motorists' tempers flared while they waited for up to five hours to buy fuel.

"I need gas for my generator so I can go to work and make some money," said Hector Vasquez, 36, who repairs windows. "This shouldn't be this difficult."

Florida Power & Light, the state's biggest utility, said Wilma affected more of its 4.3 million customers than any other natural disaster in the company's history. By Wednesday, service was restored to about 20 percent of the 3.2 million customers who lost service.

In Mexico, thousands of haggard tourists hurried for airline and bus seats out of the country's hurricane-battered Caribbean resorts, but thousands more remained stranded Wednesday. Officials said about 22,000 foreign tourists remained in the area Tuesday, down from a peak of almost 40,000.

Many tourists were being bused 10 hours or more across hurricane-damaged roads to the airport in Merida, on the other side of the Yucatan Peninsula. Flights and hotels were booked there as well, but most found it an improvement over Cancun; one hotel owner said some guests started to cry because they had finally found a clean place with running water.

There were signs of progress Wednesday in Florida: More streets were cleared of debris, a few restaurants opened and domestic flights resumed at Miami International Airport. Even trash removal returned to some areas.

Thousands of tourists remain in Cancun

By Will Weissert
Associated Press

CANCUN, Mexico — By bus and charter flights, thousands of tourists streamed out of this Caribbean resort city that was pounded by Hurricane Wilma, but thousands more remained stranded Wednesday.

Clyde Wiseman, a petrochemical supervisor from Godfrey, Ill., said he didn't know when he would be able to leave, but "I'm happy to be among the living."

"But to the travel agents, the airlines, I want to say, 'I don't want to be among the forgotten.'"

Tourism officials estimated that about 6,000 people flew out of Cancun airport Tuesday, five days after Wilma roared through, while thousands more were bused to planes in Merida, a 170-mile trip over partly flooded roads with heavy traffic.

"I nough's enough," Paul Bracey, 45, of Wales, said at a hotel serving as a shelter in downtown Cancun as he waited for a bus to Merida late Tuesday night. "We're still stranded, and have been told six days of lies."

Officials said about 22,200 foreign tourists remained in the area Tuesday afternoon, down from almost 40,000 during the storm that lashed the coast Friday and Saturday, wiping out the heart of Mexico's $11 billion foreign tourism industry. There was still no solid monetary estimate of the damage caused by Wilma.

Eric and Michelle Joseph, honeymooners form San Jose, Calif., said a river of human waste had run through hallways at the hotel where 1,200 tourists were sheltered during the storm.

"Our whole family is calling senators, congressman and Gov. Schwarzenegger," said Eric Joseph, 26. "My Cingular (cellular phone) bill is probably going to be $3,000."

The couple had scheduled flights out every day this week, but wasn't hopeful of getting home until Saturday.

Aurelio Fernandez 35, of Asturias, Spain, said he planned to fly back on a charter flight from Merida on Wednesday, leaving behind a suitcase at a Cancun airport locker.

"I'm leaving, but my bag isn't," Fernandez, said at a hotel, where he had just had his first shower in five days. "It was the most refreshing of my life," he said.

Col. Robert Martin, defense attache for the British embassy, said 8,000 British tourists were still in Cancun.

"There are 200 hotels and 150 shelters here," Martin said. "It takes time to reach them all."

Confusion reigned.

Soldiers turned back a mile-long line of taxis, vans and buses before they could reach the badly damaged Cancun airport, allowing in only organized tour groups who were ferried directly to their planes.

Individual travelers were told to try back later, for fear they would overcrowd the airport.

"There's no information. Nobody knows anything. And what they know changes every minute," said Steve Toth, 41, of Crown Point, Ind., who was stranded along the highway to the airport with his wife and 2-year-old daughter.

Nor'easter pounds coastline

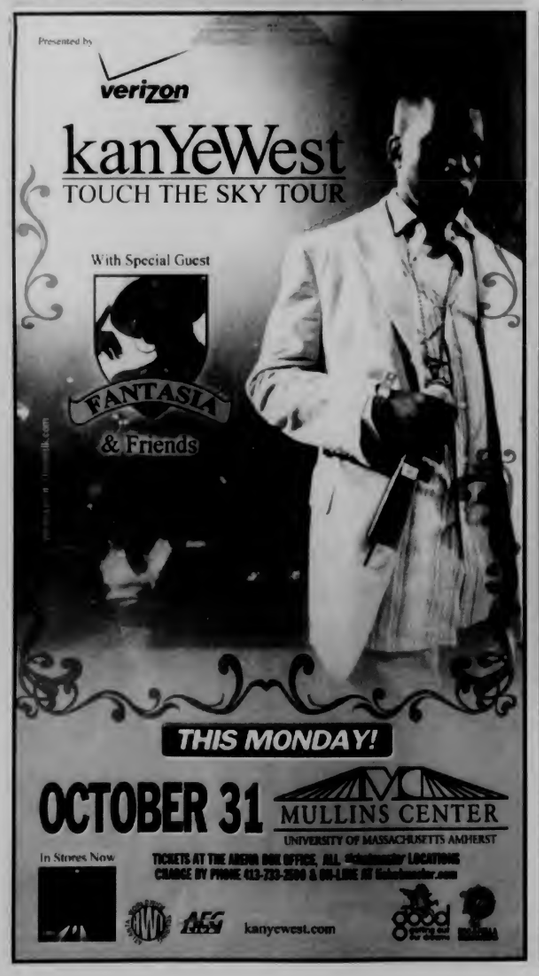
STORM from page 3

said Tony Gigliotti had been drinking heavily before going into the storm-tossed waters off Whitehorse Beach.

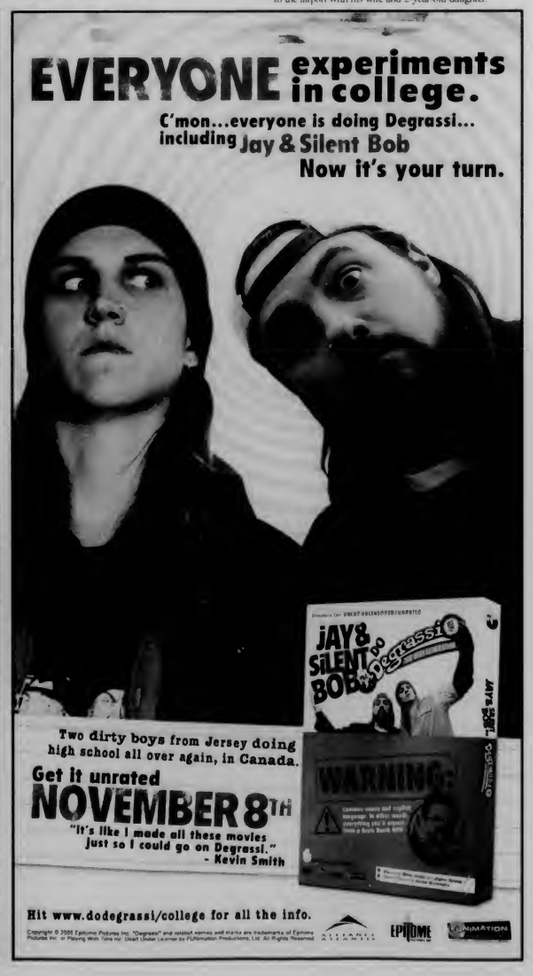
There was minor morning flooding on Cape Cod, and on coastal roads in the greater Boston area in the evening. Ocean Avenue, the causeway that connects Marblehead to Marblehead Neck, was closed when water started lapping over the road, police said. Some streets in Scituate were also closed, police said.

Jodi Cunningham, manager of Captain Bill and Sons Whale Watch in Gloucester, canceled trips for most of the week.

"It's been a tough October," she said. "We already had one stint of about eight days of really windy weather and then we got out for a couple days, and now this."



All ferries between the Cape, Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket were canceled.



At Logan International Airport in Boston, dozens of flights were canceled Tuesday and others were delayed by up to 2 1/2 hours. Delays were also reported at T.F. Green Airport in Rhode Island.

It's been the wettest month on record in Providence, R.I., with 15.07 inches of rain. Worcester also topped its October record with 15.52 inches so far this month. Boston's total rainfall as of just after midnight Wednesday was 8.96 inches, short of its October record of 10.66 inches.

The statue of a soldier at Minuteman National Historic Park in Concord had become an island as water spilled over the banks of the Concord River, a Merrimack tributary, and ducks splashed around its base.

That didn't keep away Spencer McConkie, 24, who was visiting the historic site from his home in Salt Lake City. "It's not what I'm used to," he said of the weather. "I just learned what a nor'easter was yesterday."

American death toll in Iraq reaches 2,001

By Thomas Wagner
Associated Press

BAGHDAD — The American death toll reached 2,001 on Wednesday with the announcement that a soldier died in an accident the night before. Three mostly Sunni Arab parties said they have formed a coalition to compete in upcoming parliamentary elections as the minority moves to consolidate its power in the political arena.

The soldier, whose identity was withheld pending notification of relatives, died in a vehicle accident Tuesday evening near Camp Bucca, a U.S. detention center in southern Iraq, the military said. The statement raised by one the number of U.S. service members killed in the war a day after the somber milestone of 2,000 was reached.

A roadside bomb also destroyed a Humvee in a U.S. convoy on Wednesday, but no American casualties were reported in that attack.

A U.S. warplane also struck a suspected insurgent safe house near the Syrian border Wednesday and may have killed a senior al-Qaida in Iraq figure identified only as Abu Dua who it said assisted in smuggling Syrian and Saudi fighters into Iraq, the U.S. military said.

A military statement said intelligence sources indicated that Abu Dua — who allegedly was part of an al-Qaida network along the Syrian border — was in the house at the time of the attack but his body has not been recovered. The statement also accused him of kidnapping and executing people after trying them in makeshift religious courts.

At least 10 Iraqis were killed in attacks and an Internet statement claiming that the country's most feared terror group has abducted two Moroccan embassy employees.

The U.S. Senate on Tuesday observed a moment of silence in honor of the fallen Americans.

"We owe them a deep debt of gratitude for their courage, for their valor, for their strength, for their commitment to our country," said Republican Majority Leader Bill Frist.

The milestone came amid growing doubts among the U.S. public about the Iraq conflict, launched in March 2003 to destroy Saddam Hussein's alleged weapons of mass destruction. No such arms were ever found.

In Iraq, many people heard of the 2,000 figure on Arab satellite TV channels such as Al-Jazeera and Al-Arabiya.

Some Iraqis complained that the attention was misguided because far more Iraqis have died in the conflict than Americans. No one knows an exact number of Iraqi deaths, but there is some consensus that an independent count of roughly 30,000 is a relatively credible tally of Iraqi civilian deaths.

An Associated Press count of war-related Iraqi deaths from the time Iraq's elected government took office on April 28 through Tuesday found at least 3,870 Iraqi deaths in that period alone. More than two-thirds were civilians while the rest were Iraqi security personnel.

"I hope the number of Americans who die goes even higher," said Omar Ahmed, 36, the Sunni Arab owner of an electricity shop in Dora, one of the most violent parts of Baghdad.

Nearby, Ali al-Obeidi, a 28-year-old Sunni Arab, said he hoped the U.S. losses would prompt the United States to leave Iraq.

Iraqi men bury a deceased relative on Friday in Fallujah after a U.S. strike killed the man. The U.S. death toll in Iraq reached 2,001 on Wednesday.

Gov. blasts loopholes in drunk driving bill

By Glen Johnson
Associated Press

BOSTON — Gov. Mitt Romney offered three amendments to a drunken driving bill on Wednesday, saying the version sent to him by the Legislature had loopholes. "So large you could fly a 747 through" them.

While the legislation that came to my desk last week contains several good provisions, it does not go far enough," Romney said. "I believe we can do better."

He asked lawmakers to restore language that would let prosecutors use certified court records as proof of prior convictions when sentencing alleged repeat drunken drivers, instead of having to rely on the testimony of eyewitnesses or the arresting officer as proof of those convictions. That can be a daunting challenge if the original arrest took place years earlier.

Romney also said he wants to suspend the driver's licenses of repeat offenders who refuse to submit to a breath test for at least one year — instead of the current six months — and to increase the mandatory jail sentence for anyone found guilty of motor vehicle manslaughter from two and a half to five years.

The legislation has come to be known as "Melanie's Bill," after Melanie Powell, a 13-year-old killed by a repeat offender. Flanked by her family at a Statehouse news conference, the Republican governor said he wished he could also be joined by the estimated 200 people who will be killed by drunken drivers over the next year.

"If we saw those faces," he said, "if we recognized that there is a real human being, living and breathing, loving, a family member, that that person is going to die because of a drunk driver, we wouldn't be having this debate going on."

The House and Senate both initially approved the use of court records to establish prior convictions, but that provision was stricken by a legislative conference committee made up largely of lawyers that had represented drunken drivers.

Some lawmakers have challenged the provision as unconstitutional. House Speaker Salvatore DiMasi, D-Boston, offered to accept Romney's amendment provided he sought an expedited review of the measure by the Supreme Judicial Court, according to DiMasi's staff.

But Romney said he did not favor judicial intervention before the law was enacted. Attorney General Tom Reilly, who would have to defend the law before the SJC, said the same thing earlier this week.

"If a court deems down the road that something is unconstitutional, so be it," Romney said. "I find it unusual to go the SJC before a law is passed."

Chertoff defends decision on FEMA

By Lara Jakes Jordan
Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff on Wednesday defended FEMA's decision to extend former director Michael Brown's post-resignation employment by an additional 30 days.

"It's important to allow the new people who have the responsibility ... to have access to the information we need to do better," Chertoff told The Associated Press as he flew to view Hurricane Wilma's damage in Florida.

"We don't want to sacrifice the real ability to get a full picture of Mike's experiences; we don't want to sacrifice that ability simply in order to make an image point," Chertoff said.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency is part of Chertoff's department.

Brown resigned under fire as director on Sept. 12, three days after he was relieved by Chertoff of his onsite command of FEMA's response to Hurricane Katrina. That storm killed more than 1,200 people along the Gulf Coast, flooded New Orleans and forced the evacuation of hundreds of thousands. R. David Paulison was named acting director.

Brown, heavily criticized for the federal government's slow response to Katrina, initially was permitted to stay on the FEMA payroll for 30 days at his $148,000 annual salary. The agency recently agreed to extend his contract for another 30 days.

Russ Knocke, the Homeland Security spokesman, has said in the past that Brown was staying on to advise the department on his experience with Katrina. He said Brown has no decision-making or management responsibilities.

Rep. Gene Taylor, D-Miss., whose coastal district was among the hardest hit by Katrina, said the contract extension is an insult to taxpayers, particularly those Gulf Coast residents "whose lives were in danger in the aftermath of that storm because of Mike Brown's incompetence."

"I've got tens of thousands of people living in two-man igloo tents tonight, and less than a quarter of the people who have asked for FEMA travel trailers have gotten them," Taylor said. "And at the same time they can find $140,000 a year to pay this incompetent son of a gun; that's ridiculous."

Brown declined comment on Taylor's remarks. He said FEMA extended his employment so he could finish reviewing Freedom of Information requests about the Katrina response. He also said he is participating in agency reviews of the response to "see what needs to be done to make it work better."

Asked if he expects to complete that work by the end of the 30-day extension, Brown replied, "Absolutely. I'm motivated to wrap it up. I'm ready to move on."

Palestinian bomber kills 5 in Israel

HADERA, Israel (AP) — A Palestinian suicide bomber standing in line at a crowded falafel stand blew himself up Wednesday in this central Israeli town, killing five people, wounding 21 and eroding hopes that Israel's Gaza pullout would revive peace talks.

Islamic Jihad claimed responsibility for the deadliest attack in Israel in more than three months, with the Iranian-backed group saying it was in retaliation for the killing of a top militant leader by Israeli troops earlier this week.

Wednesday also marked the 10th anniversary of the assassination of Islamic Jihad chief Fathi Shekaki outside a Malta hotel in a mission widely attributed to Israel.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Mark Regev reacted to the bombing by citing statements from hard-line Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad that Israel should be "wiped off the map" and from Hamas leader Mahmoud Zahar in Gaza reiterating that group's commitment to violent struggle.

"It appears the problem with these extremists is that they followed through on their violent declarations with violent actions," Regev told The Associated Press.

Ambulances rushed to the scene after the explosion at the falafel stand, which was in an open air market next to the central bus station. Rescuers treated the wounded in a nearby field.

Associated Press

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2005

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The horrific Halloween hangover

Matt Brochu

Attention professors: if you teach a Tuesday-Thursday class before noon, do not — I repeat — do not expect anyone to show up on Tuesday, Nov. 1. If you're lucky enough to teach a class after this designated timeslot, attendance may be expected, but attention, and more importantly participation, should be considered extra credit. In other words, your students will be zombies — not really alive, not quite dead, each smelling like a dumpster behind an Indian restaurant and completely incapable of speaking in coherent sentences. Lectures will work, but rhetorical questions posed to your audience will undoubtedly result in the "I think I just pooped a little" face seen most often in toddlers.

If you've scheduled an exam or assigned a paper for that date, well, let's just say you rank somewhere in between Kevin Bacon's character in "Sleepers" and the warden of Shawshank Prison on my karma-based list of people who should be reincarnated as a conjoined twin, with the other half being Bob from Bob's Discount Furniture. And if you think you'll be able to make it through a sexual encounter without him yelling, "How do you like this five piece bedroom set ... for only $799?" well, you're absolutely kidding yourself.

> Much like those enormous fake Chanel sunglasses that girls put on instead of wearing make-up, the typical day-after hangover is worn like an accessory — more of a nuisance than anything else.

Why should you take it easy on your students come Nov. 1? That's easy. It's the day after Halloween, one of the craziest first-semester nights at the Zoo. Much like those enormous fake Chanel sunglasses that girls put on instead of wearing make-up, the typical day-after hangover is worn like an accessory — more of a nuisance than anything else. On the contrary, the post-Halloween hangover is a miserable, debilitating experience that makes a person feel like Rocky after the Ivan Drago fight. So if standing up isn't an option, then class certainly isn't an option.

For those who aren't familiar with the All Hallows Eve tradition in Amherst, well allow me to explain: Playboy models look for every possible excuse to get naked. Guys that buy clothes from "Express for Men" look for every possible excuse to go tanning. Half of the UMass student body looks for every possible excuse to protest in front of the Student Union. The other half? Well, they look for every possible excuse to get obliterated. And let's just say they are pretty damn vigilant.

If you think about it, drinking nights at this school have two major things in common with women and dating:

1) The more important the occasion, the longer they take to get ready. If she showers early, he's a stud. If she showers late, he's got a car. If she doesn't shower, he's gay. Likewise, you can gauge the importance of a UMass party night by how early everyone begins drinking. On most nights, casual beer pong games start up around 9 p.m. after everyone's showered and ready to go. Halloween Monday, on the other hand, will have more of a "Power Hour now, shower later" mentality.

2) Clothing is everything. You can tell how crazy a girl will get after a date by taking note of how she covers up those dumps-like-a-trucks A conservative underwear sighting means that you have a proverbial school teacher on your hands (but not in a Miss Davis from "Varsity Blues" kind of way). On the flip side, if there's a thong, there's hope

To figure out how crazy UMass will get on a given night, just use the same test. In the clothing category, Oct. 31 is off the charts. Halloween is the only night of the year that you can walk into a bar with a priest, a rabbi and Atreyu from "The NeverEnding Story" without being part of some cheesy joke told by old men.

In the end, it's all about dressing up, having a good time and staring blatantly at cleavage. Costumes for college girls are not meant to be horrifying. They're meant to be whore-ify-ing. For all of you clueless freshmen ladies out there, here's a brief how-to guide to make sure you do it right.

1) Go to Deb and buy the first shirt you see. Chances are it will be tight, low-cut and absolutely hideous. Trust me. The better the chances of a boob popping out, the better you'll fit in. 2) Buy a headband outfitted with animal ears, a halo or devil horns. 3) Slip into a skirt or a pair of tight, black pants that would make Uncle Jesse say, "Have mercy." And bam, for less than 20 bucks, you've become the slutty (insert noun here) of your choice.

Now for the dudes. In my five years at UMass, the only slut-ified costumes I haven't seen are the "Slutty Grandma" and the "Slutty Richard Simmons," so it's safe to say that guys have more room to be creative. Seeing as how the Burger King mask and the "Nip/Tuck" Carver costume are going for $95-a-piece on eBay, here are three cheap alternatives.

1) The Collar Fairy — With the aid of a tiara, a magic wand, pink tights and a bodyguard, prance around Uptown and un-pop every erect collar you see. 2) Landscaper — Decked out in a flannel shirt and work boots, go to a party and park your truck in the middle of the damn road. As long as you throw a little orange cone by the back bumper, it's 100 percent street legal. 3) Mitch Leary (Dawson's dad) from "Dawson's Creek" — Hang a steering wheel from your neck, carry around an empty ice-cream cone, and walk around singing "I Don't Want to Wait" by Paula Cole.

So consider this a collective sick note explaining the potential absence of the entire student body next Tuesday. They apologize for the inconvenience, and they promise it will never happen again. Until next year.

Matt Brochu is a UMass graduate student.

Coping with the bad weather

Bonnie Solomon

If you haven't noticed, it's been raining. A lot. I mean, so much that I feel my clothes aren't drying. And the clouds seem to never go away. We get a week of rain, a lovely, precious day of sun, two days of clouds and then the cycle happens all over again.

And it's cold. Did we ever even have fall? Why haven't we had those days where it's crisp out and you can just walk around in a long-sleeve shirt and jump in piles of leaves? Why, you ask, am I wasting a precious 700 words on the weather?

The weather affects our emotions and our motivations so much more than we think it does. When it is raining out, don't you just want to curl up with slippers on your feet and a good book? When it's sunny and there's a light breeze, all you want to do is run around outside and pretend you're a kid again. Don't you feel more like crying when it's raining? When it's cloudy and gloomy, sleeping in a warm bed is heaven.

> [Weather] can kill human beings and completely destroy entire geographical areas. With all this drastic weather, we really need to start considering and preparing for the future.

These are basic feelings that most people get when the weather changes. As our daylight is dwindling and it starts getting darker so early, getting depressed and feeling very tired are quite common emotions. However, for some people, it can be a lot more serious than just feeling a little bit tired when it's cloudy or more motivated to go outside when it's sunny. There is an actual medical condition called Seasonal Affective Disorder, which many people do not know much about. It has only been recently studied and named in the early 1980s.

This is a mood disorder where our emotions and moods are very much influenced by sunlight. "Melatonin, a sleep-related hormone secreted by the pineal gland in the brain, has been linked to SAD. This hormone, which may cause symptoms of depression, is produced at increased levels in the dark. Therefore, when the days are shorter and darker the production of this hormone increases," according to the National Mental Health Association.

I'm writing this as a warning just so that when anyone starts getting really depressed or overly tired this winter, you have a good excuse, and you're not alone in feeling this way. I have Seasonal Affective Disorder, and it's very difficult, because winter is when we have the most work and the most stress and there is no time to be tired and sluggish.

Some symptoms of this disorder are: regularly occurring symptoms of depression (excessive eating and sleeping, weight gain) during the fall or winter months, full remission from depression occurring in the spring and summer months, seasonal episodes substantially outnumbering non-seasonal depression episodes, and craving for sugary and/or starchy foods, according to the National Mental Health Association's Web site. If you feel that you have this, the best way to feel better is to soak up sunlight when there is sun, and have lots of lighting or use the light bulbs that have the same effects that the sun does.

The weather has more than just an internal influence. Most recently there has been the tsunami in the Indian Ocean area, Hurricane Rita in New Orleans, the earthquake in Pakistan, and now Hurricane Wilma. It can kill human beings and completely destroy entire geographical areas. With all this drastic weather, we really need to start considering and preparing for the future. If we continue treating the environment the way we do, in 10 years we will see the worst weather in the history of modern civilization. The warnings in the movie "The Day After Tomorrow" have real connotations now.

So maybe walk or take the bus rather than drive. When choosing a car, choose an electric or hybrid car rather than an SUV. Recycle, recycle, recycle. The endless rainy days that we've been having can be associated with the decline of our environment. If we don't start really taking care of our environment now, future generations are going to have to deal with the repercussions of our poor conduct. So do something about it.

Bonnie Solomon is a Collegian columnist.

The private vs. public battle

Asif Khan

This column is part one of a two part series.

The age-old question of private vs. public plays into a lot of different fields, and education is an important one. It's especially significant today, and more so for students, as they are directly affected by this increasingly important distinction. I attend a public university, a great one at that, one that has taught me a lot these past few years that I have been studying here. On my two exchanges, I also coincidentally attended public schools in California and Turkey. However, the Pioneer Valley public school is surrounded by private schools. Massachusetts, known for its "good schools" worldwide, has a large number of small private colleges, including the four which are part of our five-college consortium.

As UMass students, we can take classes at four small, private schools nearby. I happened to take three classes at Smith College two years ago and it was a very interesting experience, both inside and outside the classroom. At the time I was taking classes dealing with feminism at both Smith and UMass. The way women at the two schools felt about feminism, and about other issues pertaining to them and society, was very different in a lot of ways and very interesting to hear about and take part in.

However, I am part of a small minority of UMass students who take classes at the four colleges. A lot of people are not even aware that they can do so, and even if they are, they do not want to "make the trek" to another school or are "all set" with the paper work.

I am a strong advocate of taking classes at the other schools. This is not because they are "better" or because the classes are smaller (as a matter of fact, my Amherst class right now is much bigger than my classes at UMass). A big reason why I take classes at these other colleges is simply because I can. I am fortunate that UMass is an affordable school and I get a great education without spending an exorbitant sum of money. And if I can pay state school fees and take advantage of specialized classes in comfortable rooms in a private school, then why should I not? Plus, classes at other consortium schools count for four credits here at UMass, which also helps.

> I am fortunate that UMass is an affordable school and I get a great education without spending an exorbitant sum of money. And if I can pay state school fees and take advantage of specialized classes in comfortable rooms in a private school then why should I not?

What prompted me to write this column was a recent petition going around Amherst College, which calls for Amherst to withdraw from the five-college consortium because "students from academically less-prestigious schools are polluting the academic environment at Amherst College." Now, it does not take a scientist to figure out which "less prestigious school" they are talking about. And why are we less prestigious? Because we have less money in our endowment? Or is it because of those frequent riots we all love to take part in?

Whatever stereotypes people want to associate with UMass, I can honestly say that this is a university with hard-working, dedicated students balancing one or two part-time jobs with their classes, involved in student clubs, enjoying an active social life, and helping the towns of Amherst and Northampton run day to day (whether that means driving the PVTA buses or serving in restaurants). I would love to know what percentage of private school kids could honestly say they do all that in their "prestigious" colleges.

We study in a very secluded and liberal part of this country. Living here, one tends to get shut off from the rest of the country. This happens more so if one is at a school with fewer than 1,500 students. However, being at UMass is a perfect combination of a small liberal town with a big, diverse school where people face real issues and meet real people, and are ready to face the world after graduating.

I am aware this one petition does not speak for the whole school. Many students (I hope) will not sign the petition and maybe it will not even make it to the administration. But this, for me, is an excellent indicator of class, socio-economic status and educational status and what that means in this and other countries.

Part two of this column will be in the Wednesday, Nov. 2 issue of The Daily Collegian.

Asif Khan is a Collegian columnist.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

EDUCATION BEFORE ATHLETICS

The day that the outcomes of UMass sporting events affect the reputation of the school is the day that I'll be hurriedly filling out my transfer application. I feel quite fortunate to attend a school where the success of its academics do not hinge on the success of its athletics. Students at NCAA powerhouse schools, such as Florida State University, rely heavily on athletics as a means of both funding and publicity. Such a condition is a double-edged sword for these institutions — the perennial success of their teams brings in truckloads of cash and attention, but were their teams to falter for an extended period of time, serious doubt would be cast on the reputations of such schools.

There's a fitting analogy that can be put to use here in order to put things into perspective. Oftentimes I'll walk into a lecture hall for class, and take immediate notice of the fact that attendance seems to be rather sparse. A similar scene can be assumed for certain UMass athletic events, such as the football and hockey openers, as described in a previous editorial. Then, all of a sudden, when exam times come around, it's as though enrollment in the class has tripled (though mysteriously, the add/drop period has long since gone by).

Could it be that many college students are apathetic by nature, and therefore find it difficult to commit to doing anything on a regular basis? I don't know. But I do know which of these aforementioned scenarios concerns me more — I find it infinitely more disturbing to see attendance lacking in classes. And I find it personally offensive to find that my school's normally well-written and informative newspaper is mandating that I attend hockey and football games, because, well, that's what I must absolutely do, and if I don't, I've got no school spirit and I've got no soul.

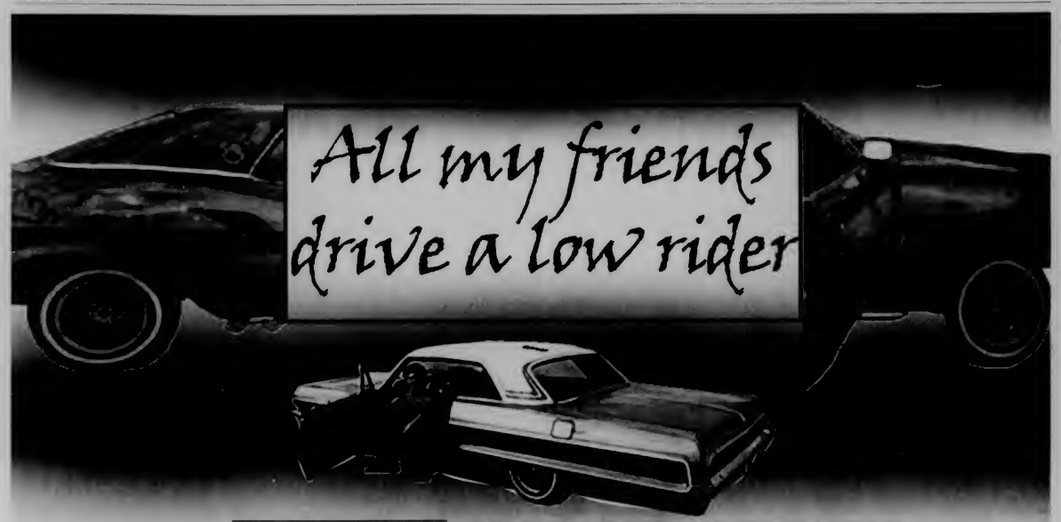
Where's the outrage when a student's recital at Bezanson isn't attracting a packed house of rambunctious college kids to cheer them on? Where's the anger when busloads of students aren't following the rugby team to their road games to provide support? How about the horror of walking into a lecture hall and seeing it half-empty?

I admire student athletes for their commitments to their teams, and I enjoy watching sports just as much as anyone else. But I think it's an affront to UMass and its students to insinuate that the student body is one of "apathy and disinterest" just because attending the hockey game isn't the #1 priority on most people's lists. So, you can blow off your five-page midterm paper and not go to class all week — but as long as you attend the hockey game on Friday, you're an active and engaged member of the student body?

And furthermore, I'm not so sure that many parents are "shelling out money for this school" so their child can attend every home football game on the schedule. Personally, my parents are "shelling out money for this school" so I can get an undergraduate degree in communications, not so I can be one of the first 500 students to receive a free T-shirt. We're all here for an education, whether we like it or not. UMass ain't no Florida State University, and fortunately, it's not going to be anytime soon.

Michael Dennis
UMass student

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION



Write for Ed/op, submit letters to the editor via email editorial@dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2005

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Meridel Rubenstein
"The Lowriders"
Smith College Museum of Art
Northampton
Thru Dec. 4

By Michael Hardman
Collegian Correspondent

A car is not always just a car. Sometimes a car is an art form. Sometimes it is a way of life, a religion or even a myth. The car realm that began its descent in the early 1970s is almost a lost world at present day with the ever-advancing technology in cars.

However, there are still some that cling to the days of muscle cars, hot rods and custom rides. In some ways, they hold our culture intact by not getting lost in the esoteric computers of today's cars. In the Hispanic communities of New Mexico, customizing classic cars into lowriding temples has become a vital subculture.

In 1980, when the story was the same as it is today, Meridel Rubenstein realized this and put together a portfolio of these machines. "The Lowriders: Portraits from New Mexico," currently on display at the Smith College Museum of Art, depicts those cars and their owners — in a primal state through a series of twelve photographs, encased in a red velvet box.

Each portrait shows a different scene in this subculture, from young gearheads to Los Unidos, a car club. Many have even transformed their vehicles into "cathedrals on wheels." The symbolism of religion is prominent in many of the photos, with mangers and the crucifixion appearing in the background.

The owners of these cars customize them with pristine paint schemes, airbrushed images, auroral chrome and velvet interiors. Many of the cars shown are Chevrolets, but they have been built in such a way that they are completely different from each other.

A few of the standout photos are the one of a 1960 Ford LTD, a 1962 candy apple red Ford Fairlane, a 1969 Chevy Impala and a black 1957 Chevy hidden in a barren garage – a mouth-watering image for any gearhead.

The 1960 Ford LTD was the most staggering of all the cars. It seemed as if every color known to man was put into the paint scheme, yet it came out as a beautiful, dream-like coloration. It is fitting, then, that the car is nicknamed "Dave's Dream." A mother and her child are sitting with it, which implies that Dave was the father, who is no longer there, and they finished his dream for him. It is a car that brings a family together.

The '62 Fairlane depicts a slightly different image. The people pictured are in what appear to be projects. The man in the photo is wearing a bandana, shades and many tattoos. Through his beard, a scowl is present. Then his wife or girlfriend is in the driver's seat, smiling brightly with a little dog. Even though the subculture says that being heavy is the way to carry yourself, this group is truly happy. The candy apple red paint job brightens the photo greatly, too.

The '69 Impala is the most religious-feeling image of the 12 in the portfolio. The car, many different shades of green, has "Bad Company" airbrushed into the paint. The car is not in bad company, however. There is a family spread out around the car, with a clear and prominent shot of the crucifixion right behind it. Coupled with the dark scenery and the green car, the ivory body of Christ comes to the forefront. The symbolism of cars being a religion is ever-present.

This special exhibit will be at the Smith College Museum of Arts through December 4th. The Museum is open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and from 12 to 4 p.m. on Sunday. Admission is $5 for adults, $4 for seniors, $3 for non-five college area students, $2 for youths ages 6-12, and free for five college area students.

Midwestern rockers New Amsterdams make their way to NoHo

By Allie Roth
Collegian Correspondent

If the Midwest could have a sound, it would be that of the New Amsterdams. Banjos, tambourines, harmonicas and acoustic guitars are just some of the instruments used by lead singer Matt Pryor. Close family, being loyal, feelings of jadedness and missing home are just some of the themes in his songs. All of these devices paint the picture of open roads and the down-to-earth attitude that is representative of the Midwestern experience.

Matt Pryor started the New Amsterdams because he yearned to capture a mature view of the Midwestern experience while he was in The Get Up Kids. He wanted to write songs that had a greater emphasis on themes that had become important to him, like family, home and the feelings associated with each of those ideals. With the breakup of The Get Up Kids in July 2005, his folk-inspired rock side project became his main musical outlet.

In 2000, the first New Amsterdams CD, called "Never You Mind," was released by Vagrant Records. It maintained a rock-and-roll edge that was similar to that of The Get Up Kids. With the release of "Para Toda Vida" on Vagrant, the New Amsterdams really came into their own sound. The CD opens with a harmonica-driven song called "My Old Man Had a Pistol." The lyrics describe a relationship between what one is and what one wishes to be. This theme resonates throughout the entire album. He says, "I pray, take me far away from everything that I am." Another theme is of longing for the past. The song "Picture in the Paper" says, "Do you remember 'All Shook Down?' At one time, it was your favorite record now it's broken, not around." All Pryor wants is to remember the past and let it lead him into the future. He wants a place to call home and to be surrounded by people who care about him. This is what we all really want, and Pryor writes the music to describe those feelings.

New Amsterdams
Iron Horse
Northampton
Oct 29, 10p.m.
$10/$13

"Worse for the Wear" was released in 2004 and retained many of the same qualities the previous albums had contained. This album, however, centers on cynicism and drinking one's jadedness away. The song "Spoils of the Spoiled" admits that life is "All in fun and sin until someone calls us in." "Poison in the Ink" shows vulnerability with being in a relationship and how easy it is to get hurt. In "All Our Vice," the line, "Somehow everyone functions with a barely visible scar," shows that people are not perfect, but that is okay, because such is life. Each songs speaks to the listener more than the previous one.

Most reeently, the New Amsterdams released an unfinished five-song EP called "Killed or Cure," exclusively for free download at their website, newams.net. These songs have a much more bitter tone than any of the full-length release songs, but are written beautifully. Most notable on this EP is the song "Watch the World Cave In," which is a simple tune with implications that reach further than just hearts and relationships. "This is their passion/their chance to be free/but they're beaten into submission" shows Pryor's discontent with how people want do something, but will not take the steps to make it happen.

An image of a campfire with people sitting in a circle around a guitarist and mountains in the background comes to mind when I hear the New Amsterdams' music. In a live setting, Pryor puts himself forward as a normal guy with a normal guitar singing songs about normal life. He has been known to cover popular hits such as "Hey Ya!" by Outkast and "Cry Me a River" by Justin Timberlake.

The New Amsterdams will be playing at the Iron Horse in Northampton on Saturday, Oct. 29th at 10 p.m. Tickets are $10 in advance and $13 at the door.

The New Amsterdams, fronted by former Get Up Kids member Matt Pryor, bring their folk-inspired Midwestern style of rock to Iron Horse on Saturday.

'Nothing's Sacred' for Lewis Black

By Jacqueline Ronan
Collegian Staff

When one thinks of comedian Lewis Black, the words "massive coronary" tend to come to mind. I'm surprised the American Heart Association hasn't personally approached the guy with help by now.

For almost ten years, Black has been a popular force on the comedy circuit. His harsh and bitter rants rip authority and pop culture a new one. He sells out crowds at almost every show in both the blue and the red states.

But he has never been very candid about his personal life — until now. The autobiography "Nothing's Sacred" recounts his early life growing up in the suburbs of Washington, D.C. The book is a mixture of life lessons and essays. Starting in elementary school, Black chronicles his way through adventures in small-time theater right up to his comedy career before it went mainstream. And it's not nearly as angry as you would think.

"Nothing's Sacred"
By Lewis Black
B+

"Nothing's Sacred" is a highly entertaining read. Black's loud and brash onstage persona gives way to reveal a deeply personal view into his life. He often says in interviews that he hasn't changed his way of thinking since he was a kid, and this book is proof. Only the counterculture of the '60s could have produced a man like Black. It makes perfect sense. His diehard "screw authority" attitude came from being at the epicenter of the Kennedy assassination, Vietnam, civil rights and Watergate — Washington, Jop it off with the many, many encounters with drugs and it just all makes sense.

Many other comedians often go into the field as a result of deep psychological problems. Many have had horrible childhoods living in poverty with abusive parents. Stand-up becomes a form of ranting therapy. Lewis Black is not one of those comedians. He grew up in a suburban nuclear family with two loving and sober parents.

It's truly sincere the way he praises his family, rather then ripping on all of their flaws like so many others tend to do. Of course he had a typical Jewish mother, but that wasn't her defining characteristic. He gives her much credit for her unorthodox approach to teaching math at a segregated black school and her sharp wit when dealing with the war zone that is the substitute classroom. He says he got much of his humor from Mrs. Black.

His father had been a weapons designer since World War II, but retired in his fifties out of disgust for Vietnam. Black found this an amazingly profound move on his father's part. "He decided to retire at the age of 55 ... It was truly an extraordinary event for a man with a family to give up an income in order to live with his conscience." He also instilled in him a love for the theater, which blossomed into a career in playwriting.

See BLACK on page 9

Lewis Black, known for his angry, political style of comedy, lightens up and speaks candidly about his life growing up in his book, "Nothing's Sacred."

Mindless TV not always bad

By Laura Kennedy
The Diamondback (U. Maryland)

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Midterms wreak havoc on our lives. Our caffeine intake goes up, sleeping patterns cease to exist, and time spent on facebook.com somehow skyrockets, but what I miss the most during midterms has nothing to do with precious minutes of shut-eye or even social activity.

I miss casual television.

Casual television is that stuff you look for when you turn on the TV just for kicks. When midterms roll around, I find there's no time to divert from the normal TV-watching schedule (although, it's easy to justify that half-hour of "The Office" by calling it a "study break").

Obviously, casual television is unrelated to any other TV activities. It's not to be confused with channel-surfing — a ritual that involves flipping through every variation of NBC and animal-related programming on the air.

Casual TV viewing is more sophisticated than that. It has some structure. We don't peruse every channel, just our top five — those numbers you immediately punch in on autopilot. I guarantee my default channels will never include Animal Planet or the Discovery Channel. The top five-worthy stations make themselves pretty clear.

TBS and its blocks of programming are easy targets. For example, Wednesday evenings are blessed by an hour of sanitized "Sex and the City," followed by an hour of "Friends." Then the daily two-hour dose of "Dawson's Creek" lets us relive the good ol' days when Katie Holmes wasn't brainwashed. Who doesn't like reruns of their once-and-future favorite shows? Pair that sitcom schedule with a good movie on one of TBS's three-day weekends, and there's no contest.

All-ages-friendly TLC used to hold TBS's spot in my rotation, until they started ripping off their own successes (I'm talking to you, "Trading Spaces" wannabe "While You Were Out") and then canning their best ambassadors altogether (Paige Davis, a nation turns its lonely eyes to you). But a gem shines in the rough with "What Not to Wear." The joy of tracking down one of the inexplicable transformations in "A Makeover Story" also keeps TLC on deck.

In recent years, VH1 has pulled into the lead for famous-people programming. The "I Love the 70s/80s/90s" series are hilarious and lend themselves well to casual viewing. There's next to no chance you saw each year's episode on its first airing, and by last count, at least 5th of them were in circulation, with another 10 premiering this week on "I Love the 80s: 3-D." So the odds are good that you'll turn on something you've never seen before.

It's only logical to follow one snarky show with another: "Best Week Ever" rarely qualifies as appointment television for the average viewer, but in terms of casual viewing, stumbling on an episode of "BWE" is akin to finding $5 in your pocket. VH1 is also no stranger to countdown shows, and they're among the best kind of casual TV. Their glorious irrelevance hooks you and doesn't let you go till they hit No. 1.

In the end, the Food Network is always a winning pick for me, and even MTV can be good for a "Real World/Road Rules Challenge" marathon every once in awhile.

Of course, there's no question that casual television can lead to true TV love. Take a three-hour marathon of season one of "Laguna Beach," for example — if that much yelling at the TV doesn't hook you for life, I'm not sure what will.

'Jubilat' shows beauty of normal

By Charlotte-Rose Vieira
Collegian Correspondent

On a twilight-painted evening beneath the canvas of a café umbrella, the streetlights illuminate the road one by one, and one begins to read, with a cappuccino in hand, while casually taking in the atmosphere of a warm Parisian night. Such is the setting in which the book "Jubilat Ten" should be found.

"Jubilat" is an anthology of poems and random works that can best be described as a coffee house art read. Filled with fragmented, nondescript poems, artist interviews, scientific theories and traveler's accounts, this book is anything but ordinary. The very abstractness of the works included is what might entice some to read further. As jubilat.org says, "Jubilat Ten" is "based on the premise that, to poetry, everything is relevant ... (and) delivers the best in contemporary poetry with art, interviews and prose." Thus, the stage is inevitably set for a plethora of mismatched and obscure pairings.

Beautifully effortless poems are caustically matched with primitive diagrams of animal organs and lists of nonsensical numbers indicating variations in the colors available for neon lighting. It seems that only the configuration of modern poetry keeps this work afloat.

At one point, roughly four pages are given up to the useless endeavor of alphabetically listing off professional wrestling moves from a far-fetched Web base containing accounts of WWE tournaments. The entire list is preceded by the cliché notion that "these moves should never ever be attempted at home. Let the professionals do it." How this list is relevant remains a mystery — it is one of the many perplexing entries that make up "Jubilat Ten."

One of the most rewarding entries in the book might be the excerpt from "Italian Journey" by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe. Taken from logs of a trip to Italy during the years 1786 and 1787, Goethe records his experience studying Mt. Vesuvius and Pompeii and traveling his way through the countryside. Not only is the historical significance of the journal fascinating, but the language in which it is written is beautiful. When describing Vesuvius, Goethe states that "the Neapolitan would certainly be a different creature if he did not feel himself wedged between God and the Devil." The amazing imagery and captive voice of these entries brings a lyrical quality to the everyday art of journal writing and brings "Jubilat Ten" a concrete piece of art.

With the concept of understanding poetry in mind, the contributions to this book are not quite as far-fetched as they might seem at first. Every part seems to possess a poetic air, leaving the reader with a sense that everything can be included in art. Art is the general basis behind all things, and when approaching the everyday with a mindful conscience, it can be easy to see where beauty can lie in the mundane. "Jubilat" just gives the reader a stepping stone in searching for the inspiration to look at life through a new set of eyes.

The actual poems in the book are everything that the term "contemporary poetry" might conjure up in the mind of the reader. Fragmented, abstract and insightful, they all reveal the simplicity of structure and suggestive imagery that characterizes modern art. Each and every poem included is beautifully written, and they all seem to have a natural standpoint based on the average sphere of emotions, time and the presence of beauty. And yet, each poem is separately unique in bringing to life what it means to create art, drawing from the outside world to capture a magnetic notion left unperceived by the untrained eye.

"Jubilat" is a book of poetry that puts what poetry is and what can be classified as art into perspective. The idea that art can take any shape and be taken from any source is the main theme present throughout the work. While such entries as listing wrestling moves and the sex of frogs leave much to be desired for some, they serve a purpose in the idea behind "Jubilat" and all that the message of this book is trying to convey. This quick read can be enjoyed at one's own pace, and in doing so the concentration can be put on the poetry, which is the highlight of the piece. For anyone with an appreciation for contemporary art, this book is for you.

"Jubilat Ten" offers various examples of modern poetry that portray the excitement that can be found in everyday things.

So, what do you want to do with you life?

EXPLORE YOUR OPTIONS...

DISCOVER THE OPEN ROAD....

START YOUR JOURNEY...

Stop by
THE ROAD TRIP NATION BUS!

Tomorrow!
October 28, 2005
10 am-3 pm
Outside the Student Union

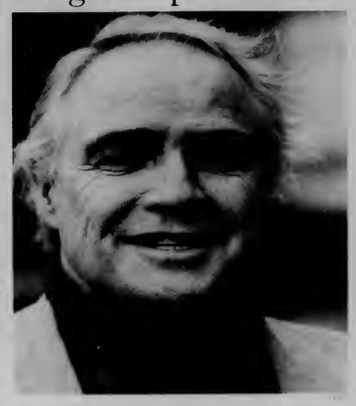
phone: 413-545-2224
fax: 413-545-4426
www.umass.edu/careers
CareerServices
Career Services Office
UMass Amherst
511 Goodell Building
a division of Student Affairs & Campus Life

BIG SHOE SALE
Wednesday, October 26th through Saturday, October 29th you can take $20 off all footwear by puma. dansko. born. earth. Look for other instore shoe specials.
Buy unlimited pairs! Includes sale items and special orders where available
Amherst store only
2 DAYS LEFT!

Brando's 'Fan-Tan' lacks surprises despite great potential

By Greer Gilchrist
Collegian Correspondent

In a time when movie stars are eagerly crossing into the pathways of authors, designers, singers and numerous other things to keep their name in the public eye, it comes as no surprise to see Marlon Brando co-authoring a novel with Donald Cammell. Moving fastidiously forward from the 1950s on as a movie star and a renowned icon, Brando has had his share of successes. Not only can he securely be described as an exceptional actor, a talented singer and a heartthrob to all decades, but he can now add writer to his impressive and extensive resume. Sure, Brando captivated audiences on and off the big screen with his more famous talents, but could he be as captivating through his own literary creativity in a novel?



Cleverly titled "Fan-Tan" after a high-stakes gambling game, Brando's novel desperately attempts to distinguish itself as a high-seas adventure tale. The cover generically depicts a beautiful woman, exposing her assets though rich silk fabric, with a striking, mysterious man following her with his gaze. This clichéd combination of sex appeal and mystery on the cover don't do much to bring any deeper meaning to the novel. It all seems a little too "Hollywood" and a little too unoriginal.

"Fan-Tan" takes place in China. Adventures are always more interesting when they are foreign, and Brando has a very good grasp on the foreign affairs of pirates in China at this time. The novel opens with the main character, a pirate named Annie (a man), sitting in jail contemplating his place as a prisoner and discussing the abundance of cockroaches in his cell. Throughout the novel, Brando spares no expense when it comes to these gory details, such as the cockroaches that like to nibble on Annie's feet when he sleeps, the scene where a man is forced to eat his own toe, or even the cult-like action of a group of men cutting themselves for blood. These gruesome side stories certainly add character to the novel, and they are enough to make the reader grimace in disgust when reading. However, the cockroaches are a recurring theme throughout the entire novel, and they add quite an interesting emphasis on the way bored men in jail tend to act.

The story slowly progresses, almost painstakingly and very uninterestingly. It is not until more than half the novel is over that we get to the actual adventure. Brando takes too long initiating each new event. He overdraws the details, focusing too much on appearances, the cockiness of the characters and dull details. The entire thing is a bit too reminiscent of an old Hollywood movie, and a poor one, at that. Annie, described as handsome, charming, intelligent, cocky, and always ready for an adventure, seems just the type of character that Brando himself would be very comfortable playing. The plot, the characters, the settings — they are all a bit too familiar and wholly unexciting.

Brando does incorporate culture into "Fan-Tan." Whether they can be believed or not, the perceptions of Eastern China in this novel are very interesting, with side notes for further information. Also, alongside Annie is a female main character, Madame Lai. As a leading lady, she is a very powerful and corrupt businesswoman. She draws Annie into a plan of thievery and greed, and together they set sail to accomplish their crooked plans. This is the foundation of the adventure "Fan-Tan" is based on. Madame Lai is very intelligent, and her commanding character is dulled a little when she gives into Annie and sleeps with him. There are two sex scenes in this novel, and they are both fairly detailed and a little unnecessary. As with the rest of the novel, Brando makes no exception and goes overboard on the unnecessary details. It's all just a little too cheesy and too easy to anticipate what will happen next.

When the novel finally does conclude, it seems as if it has gone nowhere and it is almost better that it has finally simply ended. This drawn-out story is fairly unappetizing, and while it should not be condemned altogether, there are not many complimentary things to say regarding it. It is creative, but not creatively written. "Fan-Tan" certainly has grounds for a good novel, but not the body for it. Brando may have many talents, but co-authoring a novel is certainly not one of them.

Multitalented actor Marlon Brando's book, "Fan-Tan," shows that co-authoring a novel was not one of the things he was able to do well.

Sometimes boycotts have opposite effect

By Jacqueline Ronan
Collegian Staff

On the 23rd of September, the movie "Flightplan" opened across the country. In it, Jodie Foster plays an aircraft designer whose daughter mysteriously disappears on the virgin trans-Atlantic flight of her design. Despite the thriller's relatively low critical praise (an average of 37 percent fresh on rottentomatoes.com), it enjoyed two top box office weekends and has grossed over $70 million.

The movie also features a group of nasty flight attendants who give little care to the passengers and frequently complain about them behind their backs. They seriously doubt Foster's character's story, and claim to have never seen or even had a record of the child on the flight. One of them even knows something that Foster's character doesn't.

Upon seeing the movie, several outraged flight attendants complained to Touchstone and Buena Vista Pictures (both owned by the Walt Disney Co.) that they were portrayed in a poor and offensive light. Since then, 85,000 members of the Association of Professional Flight Attendants have vowed to boycott the film out of protest.

In an interview with MSNBC, President Tommie Hutto-Blake claims, "Should there be another 9/11, it would be critical for the cabin crew to have the support of their passengers, not the distrust that this movie may engender ... Our fellow crew members who perished in the line of duty deserve more respect."

First of all, if another tragedy like 9/11 were to happen, it could be almost guaranteed that more than half the people on the flight probably didn't see the movie, and that those who did aren't going to risk their lives in a gripping decision on whether to help or remain loyal to the slated view of flight attendants they once saw in a Jodie Foster movie. Secondly, how dare they use their deceased colleagues to further their argument? 9/11 has become so jaded in our society that it is a last-ditch argument point.

Of course, they absolutely have the right to complain. After all, for many years, flight attendants epitomized the very meaning of sexual harassment. Forced to wear miniskirts, high heels and every item in the Mary Kay catalogue, stewardesses were merely objects that brought you drinks and were great for squeezing. But by the '80s, flight attendants had gained the respect they desired. They are professionals, not the party favors of the airline.

And is it so bad to think that they might not be as perky behind the scenes? They have to deal with minuscule problems all day. After all, it's their fault if a baby is crying uncontrollably, the pre-manufactured food sucks or somebody's ears pop due to cabin pressure.

Look, this movie was released in late September and stars Jodie Foster. It was going to open, make a few bucks, close and never be heard from again. There was nothing special or revolutionary about this movie. Sure, maybe you'll rent it at Blockbuster a few months later or came across it on TBS one lazy Sunday afternoon, but that's pretty much it. By giving it publicity outside of the junket or press kit (especially negative), the movie gains more attention. Simply complaining would have been enough.

This boycott tactic can backfire horribly. Take, for instance, upper-middleclass housewife Terry Rakolta. After viewing one episode of the fledgling FOX network's crude comedy "Married ... with Children," Rakolta started a writing campaign to the show's sponsors to drop it in hopes of having it canceled. Many did, but in the process the show was thrust into the spotlight. The series had a dramatic spike out of curiosity and went on for 11 seasons. The show was on the brink of cancellation, and if it had not been for the boycott, we would never have heard of the Bundy family.

The movie "Waiting" portrays waiters as uncaring and irritable people who mess with your food behind the scenes. They haven't complained. And those who worked at Windows on the World on 9/11 died too. Is "Waiting" disrespecting their deaths? No.

Why? Because waiters realize that it's not a documentary. This is about a woman who loses her daughter on a plane — not a street corner, not a crowded mall, but a plane. Reality wasn't something the screenwriters were really worried about. It's certainly understandable to be upset, but giving more attention to a minor problem in the view of our society can be worse.

Black recounts his life

BLACK from page 8

There is also a very touching account of his brother, Ron. They were total opposites and best friends. Ron Black died in 1997 of cancer with his wife and his brother at his side. Showing that he is, in fact, a human with real emotions, Lewis Black writes, "The fact that he isn't here to read this pains me more than anyone will ever know."

"Nothing's Sacred" couldn't have come out at a more perfect time. Black parallels his adolescence to the current times. He had the incredibly pointless and routine "duck and cover" method of escaping nuclear annihilation, while we have duct tape to shield us from chemical attacks. He had the Grassy Knoll while we had 9/11. He had Vietnam while we have Iraq. He had communism and we have terror.

"Nothing's Sacred" features many hilarious photos of the young Mr. Black. They range from his nerdy middle school yearbook photo to his radical bellbottom and raging afro stage in college. One features Black, no older than two, wagging his fingers about, much like his trademark finger jabs he uses to emphasize points in his act.

There are a few downsides to the book. Black has a tendency to reuse old material. If you are a huge fan, then you probably own "The White Album," "The End of the Universe" and/or "Rules of Enragement." Be prepared to read a word for word retelling of some his acts. True, such classics like "Candy Corn," "Syquil" and "How could Clinton not know what the word 'is' is" are funny, just not in print.

And although you have to expect a comedian's use of exaggeration for the sake of humor, sometimes it's hard to tell where the line is. At times you find yourself thinking, "Really, Lewis? That many drugs?"

But all and all, it's definitely worth reading. Although it is told in chronological order, you can skip around with out being lost. You can finish it in a weekend, but are still left satisfied. Even if you're not a fan, "Nothing's Sacred" is a great read.

Want to write for Collegian Arts?? Email arts at.... DailyCollegian.com visit the Folks...

Los Angeles R/T air From $198*
Las Vegas R/T air From $196*
Miami R/T air From $188*
or send a postcard?
London R/T air From $179*
Australia R/T air From $999*
*Prices subject to change and availability. Some blackout dates may occur. Taxes and applicable fees not included. All flights are out of Boston except Australia which is out of Los Angeles and good starting 5/1. London prices is good till 11/14 and valid for travel 11/1-12/15. CST #1017580-40
U of M Campus Center, Rm. 224
(413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND

GOLD'S GYM AMHERST
10 UNIVERSITY DRIVE
NEW MARKET CENTER PLAZA
413-549-6565
YOGA ~ PILATES ~ SPINNING
Largest Fully Equipped Yoga Studio in The Valley
Over 50 Weekly Scheduled Classes Including:
Body Sculpting, Bootcamp, Cardio Kickboxing
Circuit Training, Women on Weights,
Core Strength, Kickbox, Love It & Lose It,
Nia, Pump It Up!, Senior Wellness,
Sports Conditioning, Stability Ball, Step
Strip Aerobics, Ultimate Kickbox, and More!
20% OFF A PRO SHOP PURCHASE With This Ad

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
333 Russell St., Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174
Sale date: 10/27/05 - 11/2/05
not responsible for typographical errors.
Beer
Becks
Kaltenberg Lager
Sierra Nevada Pale Ale 8 pk bt $9.99*
Bass Ale 16oz 8 pk can $9.99*
Rolling Rock
Milwaukee's Best
Red Stripe 6 pk bt $7.99
Harp Irish Lager 6 pk bt $9.99
Bass Ale & Blue Moon Light
Busch & Busch Light 4 pk cn 12 pk cn $5.99
Stella Artois 6 pk bt $9.99*
Rheingold Lager 6 pk bt $6.99
Liquor
Grand Marnier 750 ml $29.99
Navan Vanilla Cognac 750 ml $29.99
10 Cane Rum from Trinidad 750 ml $29.99
Ciroc Vodka 750 ml $24.99
Jim Beam 1.75 liter $22.99
Jose Cuervo Traditional Tequila 750 ml $22.99
Bota Irish Vodka 1.75 lt $19.99
Godiva Liqueurs 750 ml $16.99
Seagram's 7 Whiskey 1.75 liter $16.99
Gilbey's Gin 1.75 liter $13.99
UV Flavored Vodka 1 liter $10.99
Pinnacle Vodka 750 ml $10.99
Wine
Black Box 3.0 lt $16.99
Cabernet, Chardonnay, Merlot
Chandon California Sparkling Wines 750 ml $14.99
Solaris Wines 750 ml $10.99
Chardonnay, Merlot, Cabernet, P Noir
Clos du Bois Chardonnay 750 ml $9.99
Fetzer Chardonnay 750 ml $9.99
Guenoc 750 ml $9.99
Cabernet, V Blanc, Chardonnay
Principato Pinot Grigio 1.5 lt $8.99
Earls Ruin 4.0 liter $8.99
Gala Rouge Pinot Noir 750 ml $7.99
Terrazas Chardonnay 750 ml $7.99
Barefoot Vineyards 750 ml 2 for $10.00
Bannock Station 750 ml 2 for $10.00
Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot, Shiraz
Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm, Sunday 12pm - 11pm

T Shirts
with this coupon get across the street from Walmart
YOUR DESIGN OR LOGO!
6 each PRINTED!
24 HR MIN. 1 STANDARD COLOR, 1 SIDE EXP. 11.31.05
Sunraise
322 Russell Street • Hadley, MA 01035
E-mail. print@sunraiseinc.com
www.sunraiseinc.com
586-7133

STELLASTARR* 'HAUNTS' PARADISE WITH 'HARMONIES'

By Matt O'Rourke
Collegian Staff

On an overcast night earlier this October, when the streets of Boston are filled with fans just emptying Fenway (the Red Sox had just been swept by the Chicago White Sox), Stellastarr* followers begin to line up outside the Paradise Rock Club for what seemingly promises to be a great escape. Drummer Arthur Kremer walks past the crowd, going almost unnoticed, but if Stellastarr*'s sophomore release, "Harmonies for the Haunted," begins to take off, this will not certainly be the case for long.

The album has received mixed praise from both the press and from fans, some of whom wrote on the group's message board that "Harmonies" is terrible. However, national media outlets have praised Stellastarr*'s latest effort, as Rolling Stone gave the album three and a half stars. Stellastarr* recently played on Nic Harcourt's KCRW show, "Morning Becomes Eclectic," one of the most popular shows in the states that has launched such artists as David Gray and Coldplay to stardom. However, even Kremer can see the divide between fans at different shows.

"The Philadelphia gig was terrible because the crowd was not into our music," Kremer said as he sat down in the rain on the street across from a T station near the Paradise. "On the other hand, Orlando was by far one of our best shows. We played well."

Stellastarr* may not have made it big yet, but they have played as an opener for acts such as the Red Hot Chili Peppers, Jane's Addiction, and Europe's power-rock band Placebo. In fact, some fans have literally crossed the pond just to see Stellastarr* play their final tour date of their current tour — a few men wearing Placebo tour shirts with a hint of a British accent in their voices who congregate and tell tales of their first time seeing Stellastarr*.

Stellastarr
"Harmonies for the Haunted"
8.5/10

"Harmonies for the Haunted" — both when played live and when listened to — can be quite hit-or-miss. There are a number of incredibly strong ballads that might make one wonder while listening why the songs are not Billboard chart toppers. The opening track, "Lost in Time," is a brilliantly orchestrated rock piece, with a piano introduction that leads to an attack of sound very reminiscent of The Cure. In fact, when listening, one may think they've heard the track before, but there is something distinctly fresh about the tune. When lead singer Shawn Christensen takes the stage, he and guitarist Michael Jurin demand the audience's attention while playing this opening track.

However, perhaps it's Stellastarr*'s unfortunate ability to lose the audience's attention at times that hurts them most. Or maybe it's because their audience comes to hear only a few popular tracks, and not the rest of the album. It seems as though Christensen is speaking the words in syncopated short bursts, instead of singing them, and at times like this bassist/vocalist Amanda Tennen looks bored.

One such moment was remedied when the band played their latest single, "Sweet Troubled Soul," a mix of Joy Division-era rock with the dancehall feeling of today's music.

"It's been one of my favorite tracks to play as of late," Kremer said of "Sweet Troubled Soul." His drumming style isn't influenced by drummers alone, but also by art and philosophy.

Kremer graduated from Pratt Institute of Art in Brooklyn, N.Y. After meeting up with the other members of the band, whose diverse backgrounds cover everything from painting to film production, Kremer soon began to rehearse and Stellastarr* was born. They began with a small following, eventually spanning out to a larger audience of listeners across the five boroughs. The band remains interactive with the fans to this day.

"Sean does a lot with the MySpace account," Kremer said. "I tend to reply to a lot of emails."

Regardless of Kremer's other influences, one can easily tell by both his sound and showmanship onstage that Jimmy Chamberlin (of Smashing Pumpkins fame) must fit into the mix. As Stellastarr* burst into "Loving and Longing," perhaps the best track for its catchiness, the crowd was reinvigorated. Christensen's voice soars into a near falsetto as he sings, "so why won't you stay/I'm drowning in the rain/darlin' say the words and I will stay." The track features some of the most complex melodies and rhythms of the album, while fitting into a harmony that is simply dramatic.

Here is the true beauty of Stellastarr* — nearly every track plays off of the ideas that "haunt" people: whether a loved one will return (after the relationship has failed), redemption for one's actions, and the ability to grow and move on. Perhaps these themes aren't anything new to music, but the approach certainly is, and if Stellastarr* can be consistently successful in imparting this through some energy in their live show, Kremer won't be able to walk the streets of Boston without a mass of fans behind him.

COURTESY THE KNOTT

UMass Fine Arts Center
Center Series 2005-2006
30th Anniversary Season

30 Years of WOWS and CHEERS!

The Wu-Tang is Out!!! The Fine Arts Center is turning 30 and is looking forward to a birthday bash that lasts all year long. For this special season, we will bring back some popular favorites, as well as, introduce a few new ones to our stages. Don't miss the party! Look for the stars that indicate that it's a great event for families. As always, the Fine Arts Center offers substantial discounts for youth 17 and under and seniors.

★ Appropriate for youth kindergarten and older ☆ Appropriate for youth 12 and older

CHI ★
Wednesday, November 9
Back by popular demand! This show sold-out two seasons ago and had the audience on the edge of their seats and their jaws on the floor. These phenomenal gymnasts, dancers, tumblers, and jugglers use their own "chi" to focus their bodies and minds to work in perfect harmony.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by Easthampton Savings Bank, Coca Cola, 93.9 The River and the Daily Hampshire Gazette

Arlo Guthrie's Alice's Restaurant ☆
40th Anniversary Massacree Tour
Thursday, November 17
At this 40th anniversary celebration of Arlo Guthrie's famous ballad, Abe Guthrie, Gordon Titcomb and the Mammals join in. Don't miss this performance that will also include old favorites such as Ring-Around-A-Rosy Rag, the Motorcycle Song, Coming Into Los Angeles and many more!
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by Peoples Bank, 93.9 The River, The Valley Advocate and Berkshire Brewing Company

Tickets are only $7, $10, and $15 for five College Students!
UMASS

TICKETS ARE ON SALE NOW!
Call and ask about our "Take 3" subscription offer or to request a fully illustrated brochure.
CALL 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
Check us out online at www.fineartscenter.com where you can safely purchase tickets and find press releases, artist features, a visitor's guide and more.

THE FINE ARTS CENTER
The Fine Arts Center's venues are fully accessible and ADA compliant

www.umasslug.org IBM

Thursday October 27th, 2005
4:00-5:00 lecture by Paul Coates
5:00-5:45 demonstration

UMass W.E.B. DeBois Library Learning Commons, South Corridor

Open Standards, Open Source And Web Application Development

What does it mean to be "open" in today's IT environment? What are the challenges and benefits of using "open" or "closed" technology?

The talk will briefly introduce an open source research and teaching initiative at UMass and current and future collaboration between IBM and UMass. There will be a demonstration of the open source Eclipse 3.0 Integrated Development Environment, Apache Tomcat, and development with an open source relational database package (Derby/Cloudscape).

Friday October 28th, 2005
9:00am - 1:00pm

UMass W.E.B. DeBois Library Learning Commons, South Corridor

LinuxFest

LinuxFest is an opportunity to participate in a hands on workshop where you get to learn and "testdrive" Linux at three different levels. The workshop modules include installation and configuration of Fedora Core 4 (http://www.redhat.com fedora), basic Linux usage fundamentals, or Linux intermediate administration tasks such as the installation and configuration of SAMBA or installing various open source tools such as the Eclipse IDE. There will be free gifts available and we will raffle off an iPod Nano!

Session requirements include a laptop running Windows XP or a Red Hat Linux distribution with at least 6-8GB of available disk space. Participants are encouraged to download and install a 30 day trial version of VMWARE Workstation 5.0 at http://www.vmware.com on their laptop PRIOR to attending the LinuxFest workshop.

For people without machines, there will be about 40 laptop machines available for participants who do not have their own equipment.

Seating is limited for the LinuxFest.
To make a reservation, please register at http://www.umasslug.org/ibm/ibmfest.php.

These events are co-sponsored by IBM, Court Square Data Group, and The University of Massachusetts Open Source Lab, Information Technology Program, Linux User Group, College of Social and Behavior Sciences, the Research Liaison And Development Office, and the W.E.B. Du Bois Library and new Learning Commons.

Bruschi could play against Bills

BRUSCHI from page 14

Teddy Bruschi, who suffered a mild stroke in Feb., recently returned to the New England Patriots and is still waiting to see if he will play this Sunday against the Bills. Bruschi amassed 504 tackles, 25 sacks and 11 interceptions during his 10 NFL seasons.

"It felt like a first day of training camp for me before I really get my first hit in training camp," he said. "So, of course, the first play they run at me is a fullback lead. So after that play, I think I was all right."

Bruschi was hospitalized Feb. 16 after the stroke, then had surgery to close a hole in his heart in March. He has been working out and attending team meetings since training camp began last July. He said in September he wouldn't play this season, then changed his mind after consulting several doctors.

He remains on the physically unable to perform list but wasn't among the 14 players listed on the Patriots' injury report Wednesday.

"I feel I'm being evaluated by Coach Belichick, by my defensive coaches," Bruschi said.

Belichick said Wednesday that Bruschi hasn't suffered any setbacks since resuming practice, but didn't know how ready he is for a game. He also said Bruschi is behind his teammates because he missed so many practices; can make up for that with his experience; and "did what everybody else did" at the practices.

The Patriots are 3-3, more losses than they had in each of the past two seasons when they won Super Bowls. Bruschi has said he can't turn around the defense by himself.

But in his 10th season with the Patriots, he has an excellent grasp of their defense. He said Wednesday, "I believe my body's physically ready" for a game.

New England has 21 days from Bruschi's first practice, until Nov. 9, to activate him or place him on injured reserve, ending his season. If he misses the Nov. 7 home game against Indianapolis he still could be activated for the Nov. 13 game at Miami.

Bruschi has said he has no doubt he'll play in a game this season.

His teammates say he's already made a difference in practice.

"You hear him every time, every snap," defensive lineman Jarvis Green said. "It's just good to see him back out there after what he's been through."

Chad Brown, who moved from outside to inside linebacker this season, said watching Bruschi practice has helped his transition.

"His instincts are still there and that's what separates him from other linebackers," Brown said. "He's just got a great feel for what everyone on the defense is doing, how the offense is trying to attack him. And couple that with his great instincts and that's why he makes plays."

Bruschi said he's not setting any expectations and continues to judge his progress one day at a time.

"You can't come to any judgments after one day of hitting," he said before Wednesday's workout, where he stretched and did agility drills during the 20 minutes the media were allowed to watch.

"I just look at it as a process," he said. "Emotions are emotions and I felt them all, but really, it's just about what I'm going to do today, how well did I do yesterday ...and just focus on playing football."

PROJECTED STARTERS

Offense
QB 12 - Liam Coen, Freshman
RB 5 - Steve Baylark, Junior
FB 40 - Frank McDonald, Junior
WR 81 - Brandon London, Juniors
TE 44 - Mike Douglas, Senior
LT 67 - Brent Caldwell, Senior
LG 68 - Matt Austin, Sophomore
C 62 - Alex Miller, Junior
RG 73 - David Thompson, Junior
RT 63 - Sean Calicchio, Freshman
WR 9 - Dominique Stewart, Senior

Defense
LE 95 - Keron Williams, Senior
DT 57 - Justin Schweighardt, Senior
NT 55 - John Hatchell, Junior
RE 48 - David Burns, Sophomore
WLB 29 - Brad Anderson, Senior
MLB 51 - Serge Tikum, Senior
SLB 29 - Jason Hatchell, Sophomore
CB 26 - Tracy Belton, Junior
FS 6 - Shannon James, Senior
SS 7 - James Ihedigbo, Junior
CB 2 - Steve Costello, Senior

Offense
QB 3 - Ricky Santos, Sophomore
RB 34 - John McCoy, Senior
RB 32 - Chris Ward, Sophomore
WR 3 - David Ball, Senior
LT 75 - David Sundberg, Senior
LG 68 - Tucker Peterson, Junior
C 64 - Nick Courturier, Sophomore
RG 72 - Tim Schwab, Junior
RT 74 - Will Yarborough, Junior
TE 84 - Jonathan Williams, Senior
WR 86 - Aaron Brown, Junior

Defense
LE 27 - Keith Sawyer, Senior
DT 91 - Derek Stank, Senior
DT 62 - Dan Wanger, Junior
RE 49 - Brent Barbalo, Senior
OLB 14 - Mark Rutberg, Senior
ILB 46 - Matt Parent, Freshman
OLB 52 - E.J. DeWitt, Senior LCB 8 - Corey Graham, Junior
SS 33 - Baron Flenory, Senior
FS 31 - Jeff Pammer, Sophomore
RCB 24 - Etienne Boulay, Senior

Special Teams
K 31 Armando Cuko, Freshman
P 13 - Christian Koegel, Junior
KR 3 - R.J. Cobbs, Senior
PR 2 - Steve Costello, Senior

Special Teams
K 99 - Connor McCormick, Senior
P 82 - Matt Henry, Junior
KR 8 - Corey Graham, Junior
PR 83 - Michael Boyle, Freshman

Talks stop for Epstein, Red Sox

BOSTON (AP) — Negotiations over a new contract with Red Sox general manager Theo Epstein, who built the team that ended the franchise's 86-year title drought, have stalled in the final days of the deal.

The three-year contract Epstein signed when Boston made him the youngest general manager in league history expires on Monday. That deal paid Epstein, now 31, about $350,000 a year. Media reports in recent days quote unnamed sources saying he's seeking much more than his current deal.

Epstein turned down an offer on Tuesday that would have paid him $1.2 million a year for at least three years, according to The Boston Globe, citing a major league executive who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Neither Epstein nor the team's owners immediately responded to requests for comment on Wednesday.

Negotiations heated up after the Red Sox were swept by the Chicago White Sox in the first round of the AL playoffs earlier this month. Before hiring Epstein in November 2002, five weeks before his 29th birthday, Boston offered Oakland Athletics GM Billy Beane a five-year deal worth about $2.5 million a year. Beane chose to stay in California.

The New York Yankees have offered GM Brian Cashman a three-year contract worth more than $5 million, according to a high-ranking baseball official who spoke on condition of anonymity Tuesday because negotiations are ongoing.

Associated Press

Hokies, Eagles get ready for clash

By Hank Kurz Jr.
Associated Press

BLACKSBURG, Va. — The behemoths are coming to Blacksburg.

That's about the way the Virginia Tech Hokies size up Thursday night's game against No. 13 Boston College. The Eagles are huge, and they can run.

Of course, the third-ranked Hokies are big and fast, too — and they plan to run right at BC.

"We're taking the whole thing their line and that defense as a challenge," right guard Jason Murphy said. "We're going to do what Virginia Tech does. We're going to pound the ball at them. If it breaks, it breaks."

The Hokies (7-0, 4-0 Atlantic Coast Conference) have won 10 consecutive Thursday night games, their only Thursday night loss coming against the Eagles in 1995.

That was the year their program took a major step forward in prominence, going to the Sugar Bowl and beating Texas, so they know Boston College can be formidable.

The Eagles (6-1, 3-1) will arrive having won 13 of 16 on the road. Five of those victories came against ranked teams, including the No. 12 Hokies in 2003.

But this Virginia Tech team is different from that one, Hokies senior defensive tackle Jonathan Lewis said, having learned from three straight season-ending swoons.

"In the beginning, we had tremendous successes in all types of things," Lewis said. "Rushing averages, how many rushing yards given up, how many touchdowns given up. And then we kind of fell. I think we learned that lesson about getting our heads too big."

Last year, that lesson allowed Virginia Tech to surprise the league in its debut season, winning the conference title after being picked sixth.

This year, it's all about keeping the momentum going.

"Whatever they come at us with, we're going to take care of it," Murphy said.

To Eagles coach Tom O'Brien, very familiar with the Hokies from eight years in the Big East together and 16 before that as an assistant at Virginia, the Hokies' formula for success hasn't changed much in 19 seasons under coach Frank Beamer.

Boston College's formula, meantime, includes either ignoring the venue or using the passion of opposing fans to get just as juiced by noise as the home team.

"I think they just like to play football," O'Brien said of the Eagles, whose road victories this season came at BYU and Clemson. "We get great crowds on the road. They're enthusiastic, they're loud from start to finish.

"I think our players respond a lot to the enthusiasm a great crowd brings. When you go into a Clemson, you go into a Blacksburg, it's hard not to be excited to play."

It helps to show up with an offensive line that averages 6-foot-6 and almost 316 pounds, or a defense that limited No. 10 Florida State to 13 rushing yards.

No problem, Hokies tailback Cedric Humes said. Humes will return to the lineup only 19 days after breaking a bone in his arm in a victory against Marshall.

"We're up for any team," he said. "We have a lot of speed on our team now. Our line's been blocking great, so I don't think their size will be too much of a problem."

It will help that the Hokies will be back home, surrounded by more than 67,000 fired up fans who have made Lane Stadium an imposing place for visitors.

The Hokies have won 15 of 17 at home in the last three seasons, and this year have outscored visitors by a combined 137-21.

"Their energy has always been a big key for us," tight end Jeff King said.

More than the environment, though, O'Brien is impressed by Marcus Vick, who threw three interceptions last Thursday night in a 28-9 victory at Maryland, but also ran for a career-best 133 yards and is still sixth in the nation in passing efficiency.

"He's very athletic, has tremendous speed, great quickness," O'Brien said. "He has a terrific arm and can throw any pass you want thrown on the football field."

Vick has tossed 10 touchdown passes and five interceptions.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repairs & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.northamherstmotors.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

Results you can feel...
without the side effects!
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Participating provider for HMO's student insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, car insurance & most others.
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
549-1500

comedy CONNECTION HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
THIS SATURDAY! 7PM Only!
From the movies "Deuce Bigalow: European Gigolo" and "Undercover Brother"
EDDIE GRIFFIN
NOV. 5TH
Host of Comedy Central's "Insomniac"
DAVE ATTELL
NOV. 12TH
Also known as "Dr. Dirty"
JOHN VALBY

Free Rides on Halloween Weekend 10pm to 3am
Oct 28/29—Fri/Sat Call 548-9474 Sponsored by MERCYhouse know mercy.org

UMass awaits the Cats

FOOTBALL from page 14

in sacks with 7.5 and racking up 11 tackles for a loss. Along with Ihedigbo in the defensive backfield is standout free safety Shannon James, who holds the UMass career interception record with 19, has three picks this season and has amassed 31 total tackles.

James is one of 17 seniors on the Minuteman roster that will play at home for the final time during the regular season on Saturday. Despite the possible sentimental value that may emerge from the last regular season home game, the attention is still on the game itself.

"I'd love for a nice perfect ending to [the senior's] last home game, but we can't really look at it in that aspect," freshman quarterback Liam Coen said. "I don't think any of the seniors are thinking about it that much, they're just thinking about getting a 'W.' You know, hopefully we'll have another home game this year."

Coen will be running the offense under center on Saturday, with junior tailback Steve Baylark and junior receiver Brandon London as his two key weapons. During the win against Maine on Saturday, the offense was able to drive the ball on the Black Bears, accumulating 440 yards, which was spearheaded by Baylark's 198 yards rushing and 64 yards receiving.

In 2005, the Coen-to-London combination has been the cornerstone of the passing attack for UMass. Coen has hooked-up on 83-of-134 passes for 1039 yards and seven touchdowns, while London has grabbed 32 catches for 463 yards and a 14.5 average. Although the UNH defense is not nearly as praised as the offense, Coen understands not to take them softly.

"[UNH has] a lot of veterans on their defense," Coen said. "They've got a good corner in [Corey Graham], they've got a good linebacking corps that runs well, defensive line — all veterans."

Graham, a junior defensive back, has picked off two passes this season and has made 38 stops for the Wildcats. Alongside his defensive efforts, Graham is a contributor for UNH's special teams, averaging 27.2 yards per ki ck-off return with one touchdown.

Last season's game at New Hampshire resulted in a 38-21 upset by UMass, in which Baylark exploded, rushing for 193 yards on 43 carries. With the contest now in Amherst, and the stakes at a peak, players are eager for the first whistle to blow.

"I think this is the biggest regular season game played at McGuirk in a while," Coen said. "So I think a lot of people are going to be excited about it. Hopefully we'll get a good turnout Saturday. We're psyched though; we're ready to go, so hopefully it will be a great game."

With four games remaining on the Maroon and White's schedule, Saturday's clash is the final regular season game to be played at McGuirk for the Minutemen, with the season concluding at Delaware, Army and Hofstra.

Keron Williams, a member of the UMass football team, will look to slow down UNH, which has the top offense in the A-10. Williams, a senior d-linemen, is third on the team in tackles this season with 36.

An extensive streak

STREAK from page 14

up 401:08 on the game clock, or just under seven hours.

If you felt like spending 401 minutes another way, you could take a nonstop flight from Boston to Los Angeles and have about 20 minutes to spare.

If flying isn't your thing, you could drive an average of 65 miles per hour, a typical highway speed limit, and end up 434.5 miles away from home. Leaving from Amherst, you would find yourself well north of Orono, Maine — that is, if the rumors are true and there is land north of Orono.

If you felt like driving somewhere a bit warmer, you could head 434.5 miles south and wind up somewhere between Washington, D.C. and Richmond, Va.

And speaking of Richmond, that's where UMass's defense last allowed a touchdown of any kind, which came on a run of one whole yard by quarterback Stacy Tutt.

Over a stretch of 51 days, the Massachusetts defense had allowed a grand total of zero touchdowns. The UMass offense, however, was responsible for three of its opposition's touchdowns, two coming on interception returns and the other on a fumble that was run back to pay dirt.

In contrast to the three touchdowns the Minutemen have allowed in their seven games, the other 11 Atlantic 10 teams have given up 242 touchdowns this season, 115 of those in the air and 127 on the ground.

So if you were in fact on hand at Saturday's game, you just witnessed something extremely rare — maybe not as rare as a win for the Houston Astros in the World Series, but you get the picture.

Jeff Howe is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at JeffHowe@DailyCollegian.com

The x-factors could become the difference

X-FACTORS from page 14

And those figures are also an A-10 high.

But as much as the spotlight is shined upon these two nationally-recognized groups, do not, for one instant, forget about the rest of the factors in this contest.

If you look past the stat sheets, rankings and headlines, as crazy as it might seem, UMass does have an offense and UNH does certainly have a defense. Although those two groups may have somewhat of a dimmed spotlight on them before the game, the fate of either team may lay upon the two overlooked entities.

The players know this — most notably UMass quarterback Liam Coen.

"Everyone's talking about their offense and our defense, respectively, but hopefully we can be the X factor," Coen said. "Maybe it will come down to our offense and their defense — it just hasn't been talked about."

If the UMass defense is the best, and the UNH offense is the best, then something has got to give. A football game wouldn't be exciting if it didn't have a few unexpected plot twists within the storyline.

On Saturday, those plot twists could come from the UMass offense or the UNH defense, or even the special teams of either squad. They are the X factors, the sleepers, or whatever you want to call them.

When the UMass offense approaches the line of scrimmage for the first time on Saturday and stares into the eyes of the UNH defense, a whirlwind of thoughts and emotions will be spinning through all of their heads.

But if you ask any of those players what is on their minds, I highly doubt any language remotely associated with statistics, numbers or rankings will come out of their mouth.

—Eric Athas is a Collegian columnist.

Playoffs a possibility for UM

F. HOCKEY from page 14

leave a lone blemish on the Spiders' perfect A-10 record.

If UMass wins on Saturday, they will earn the final playoff spot. If St. Joe's is defeated by Temple, the Minutewomen will slide into the third seed with one more conference win than the Hawks. If both teams win, St. Joe's will be the third seed and UMass fourth, with equal conference records and St. Joe's holding the tie breaker with a head-to-head victory.

However, if the Minutewomen fail to capitalize on a golden opportunity Saturday, URI will move ahead of them in the standings with another head-to-head tiebreaker, and will look for St. Louis to fall to Richmond on Sunday to earn the final spot. If St. Louis wins following a UMass loss, they will sneak into the tournament.

UMass coach Patty Shea understands the significance of this weekend's game, and is preparing her team for the mental and physical challenges.

"Mentally I think every game is a big game in the conference. We found that out [against St. Joe's and Temple last weekend]," Shea said. "I think the biggest preparation is the difference in the surface we're playing on."

The Minutewomen will be playing their first game on a natural grass field this season in Kingston, R.I. The closest the team has come to natural grass this season was when they played one game on an artificial grass surface in St. Louis — a new technology popularized by the National Football League. Nonetheless, Shea is confident that her team will be able to adjust.

"It is what you make of it. It doesn't matter, it's just a game. You play [the ball] a little bit differently, tactically, but it's really not that different," Shea said. "Rhode Island has a pretty nice field, so I think we'll be ok."

The odds are playing in favor of the Maroon and White, who are 29-2 all-time against the Rams, including a 2-1 double-overtime victory last year on the very same natural grass field. However, this time, URI has plenty to play for. The same day that the Rams can fight their way to the A-10 tournament is also senior day in Rhode Island, and what better way to send off the team's seniors players than with a defeat of arch-rival Massachusetts, knocking them out of the playoff contention in the process?

With all this in mind, Shea has respect for Rhode Island's potential.

"URI is young. They have the advantage," Shea said. "It's their home field. It will be their last day, it's their senior day, and they are used to playing on grass."

With so much riding on one game, Shea is prepared for one of the most emotional games this year.

"[The Rams] have given themselves a glimmer of hope and something to play for," She said. "It's about us controlling their emotions and stifling those emotions from the very beginning. But it's also about us keeping our emotions in check and channeling them in the right direction towards the game."

When asked about who she would prefer to see in the first round on the A-10 tournament if the team wins Saturday, Shea had little to say.

"No, don't care. It doesn't matter. Your goal is to get into the tournament and then take care of things from there," Shea said.

Tough terrain in Championships

CROSS COUNTRY from page 14

As for the Minutewomen, UMass coach Julie Lafreniere hopes to "have everybody perform to their best ability," but expects a typical dominant performance from sophomore Christina DeRosa, who finished first among the Minutewomen and third overall during Saturday's Mini-Meet at UConn. Lafreniere, too, mentioned the difficulties of Parachute Hill.

"Usually cross-country runners take the first mile out pretty hard and they're running very fast, but [Parachute Hill] comes at a bad point in the race and it's quite steep," Lafreniere said. "We've gone up longer hills than Parachute Hill, but it's very steep."

The challenge is not so much the hill's distance, but rather its dimensions. The descent of the hill is also very physically taxing, taking a toll on a runner's back, hips, and knees. "It's just as steep going down as it is going up," Lafreniere said.

The high accumulation of rainfall has also caused some problems, making for a tough time for the runners. Since the wet ground may cause the runners to loose traction, Lafreniere understands that her athletes will be very tired, but will have to be "very aware of the loose footing and the loose rocks [that the rainfall will have caused]."

The rugged territory has not fazed Lafreniere's confidence in her group of girls, however.

"I do feel that they are ready both physically and psychologically to take on the Conference meet, the Conference Championship and to perform well," Lafreniere said.

The ladies will be aiming for sixth or seventh place after powerhouses like La Salle, Richmond, UNC-Charlotte, URI and Duquesne, and Lafreniere expects them "to be very competitive [and to] put everything on the line for their team."

DO YOU LIKE MONEY???
$$$$$$$$
DO YOU HAVE A CAR?
CAN YOU DELIVER PAPERS AT 7AM?
$$$$$$$$
NORTHAMPTON DRIVER WANTED
CALL 413.545.3500, ASK FOR TOM

LONG RADIO
Quality Sales, Service, and Installation
Audio
Video
Satellite Radio
NAV
Remote Starter
Alarms
Radar Detectors
Lazer Detectors
Performace Parts
30 Russell Street Hadley, Ma 01035 413-584-3259

Want to write for Sports? Call us: 545-0719

Monday-Friday 7:30-6
Thursday 7:30-8
Saturday 7:30-4
Saturn of Hadley
40 Russell St, Route 9
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 584-6066
SATURN
Our service center repairs all kinds of cars...not just Saturns.
Oil & Filter Change Only $19.99
Includes topping off all fluids, adjusting tire pressures, Check antifreeze for winter protection
FREE wash & vacuum. FREE 27 point inspection
• Mass State Inspection Station
• Free shuttle service to & from UMASS
• Located directly on bike path & PVTA stop.
No Appointment Needed
10% off mechanical repairs
Late hours on Thursdays

Do you desire the BEST haircolor services in the valley?
SHEAR BLISS
HOLISTIC FULL SERVICE SALON & SPA
All nutrient full spectrum color
Microsteam processing. Why wait 30-45 min? How about 5 min safely!
All upscale techniques
Color expert for over 10 years
Clip out ad for a FREE Brow Sugaring OR Aveda Makeup Session with cut and color appointment only
Time & Cost of cut and color given ONLY during free consultation
(413) 253-2322
460 WEST ST.
AMHERST
We carry Aveda & Keyano Alterna

MAKE MONEY
start an internet business
be in college
$$ make money $$
www.more-spending-money.com

FRANCO THE CLARINETTING NAVY BEAN By Rainy Stanford

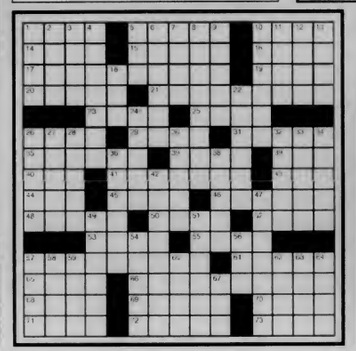
LABRAT By Richard Martelly

RANDOM CHATTER By Chris Sala

FUNCTIONAL DYSTOPIA By Zeid Rusan

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner

QUOTE OF THE DAY



"Halloween is the one night a year when girls can dress like a total slut."

—Mean Girls

ACROSS
1 Asian desert
5 Penned
10 1970 Kinks hit
14 Reidman or Landi
15 Nostrils
16 Actor Baldwin
17 People of property
19 Nutrition plan
20 Priscilla's dear John
21 Bullring VIPs
23 Proboscis
25 Archer or Blanchett
26 Petty quarrel
29 Type of school
31 Get a grip on
35 Last pitcher
37 Rodent pests
39 Understand
40 Thole insert
41 Of a creative nature
43 ... been had!
44 Blast letters
45 Freshwater duck
46 Infuriate
48 Fixed gaze
50 Use a keyboard
52 Hankerings
53 Into the sunset
55 Bank deal
57 One Presley
61 Spoke angrily
65 Bath's river
66 Inquisitive and pushy
68 Canasta display
69 Missouri leader
70 The work week is over!
71 On the Atlantic
72 Pub item
73 Alphabetize

DOWN
1 ... monster
2 Track layout
3 Wedding token
4 Paragraph indications
5 Wind dir.
6 Hysterical one
7 Cookie snack
8 Maryland prayer
9 City on the Ruhr
10 Set of steps
11 Potpourri
12 Lounge lizard's look
13 Plays a part
18 Lennon's Yoko
22 Cartwright of "Lost in Space"
24 Spending binge
26 Stirling citizens
27 Factory
28 Major artery
30 Pool of etiquette
32 Whispered word
33 Number of samurai
34 Parts of hammers
36 Value
38 Small part
42 Dreamer's surface
47 Hereditary rulers
49 Kigali's country
51 Word of honor
54 Pacific island group
56 Exist
57 Himalayan monk
58 Curtner and Fiat fish
60 McKinley and Lupino
62 Energetic dancer
63 Qatari leader
64 Adroit
67 Permit to

Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

The Moan and Dove
please do not come to the moan and dove friday night.
go see the dead lovers at the flywheel in easthampton they're so rock n roll
themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

ROUTE 63 ROADHOUSE LIVE MUSIC
3rd Annual! Halloween Bash
Saturday Oct. 29th
Live Music with Turn it Loose 9:30-1:00am
Costume Contest
must register by 11pm to enter
Cash Prizes
Free Appetizers
THE GREAT PUMPKIN PATCH PUMPKIN CARVING
Sat. 29th at 3pm the on lawn of the Rt. 63 Roadhouse, or bring your own prizes given. Jack O'Lanterns in on Saturday night 29th
Bring this coupon in for no cover charge
$5 pitchers of Bud and Bud Light

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Your favorite jeans will develop a new hole this weekend.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Power bars taste gross. Stop eating them.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Your cousin will send you an e-card today for no apparent reason.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Maybe you should wait a few more years before considering Botox.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
You will get your foot stuck in the mud and lose your shoe.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Don't leave the cucumbers in the fridge for too long. They'll get slimy.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You will lose your keys at the movie theater.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Your hair is approaching an unmanagable length. Go get it cut.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Your halloween costume looks stunning on you.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
All your folders will get soaked when you are walking to class next time it rains.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
That concert will definitely be worth the $40 you spent on the ticket.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Spell check is your friend. Use it every time.

New in Town?
AMHERST HAIRSTYLISTS
Caren's Place
You can trust us with your hair.
40 Main St,
Downtown Amherst
(Next to Newbury Comics)
413 253 1200
Mon-Fri 10-6
Sat 10-4
Visa/MC/S
This Ad Will Run Mon & Thurs
•Haircuts & Styling
•Hair Coloring (Free Highlighting Consultation)
•Multi-Color Highlighting
•Body & Facial Waxing
•For Both Men & Women
•Walk Ins Welcome!
Get it done right the first time!
Fall Semester Coupon Specials!
1/2 price facial waxing on Wed through December.
$1 off any service with this ad until 12/05
Only with this coupon.
www.carensplace.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$600 Group Fundraiser Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising programs Equals $1,000-$3,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for up to $600 in bonuses when you schedule your fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments. Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

EMPLOYMENT

Work Study – Admin Asst Must have computer skills and know Access and Excel. 10 hours per week max. $8.19-9.48/hr. Application on line at www.lsse.org Email application to: bilzb@amherstma.org

Kitchen help wanted. Must be able to work 20hrs/week. Apply at DP Dough Downtown Amherst, MA 01003

Web programmer with experience with graphics design wanted for work in the Office of ALANA Affairs. Up to $10.00 an hour. Apply at office in room 302 in Student Union or email ofalana@stuaf.umass.edu

EMPLOYMENT

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8.00 Hr. 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location NO SALES! Night & wknd; shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

Rent us your ears! Listening experiments $10/hr English must be your first langnage email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

FOR SALE

Three Chickadees ribbon watches, keychains, belts and totes! Shop today at www.three-chickadees.com Use discount code "college" to get free shipping through December.

FURNITURE

Sealy Mattress Set KING $575.00 QUEEN $465.00 FULL $365.00 TWIN $195 Save 50% or more off store prices. For more details call 215-431-9584

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

If you see Molly Eggleston today, make sure to wish her a HAPPY 21ST BIRTHDAY!!! (And many more) Love you, Mollinator! your team

ROOM FOR RENT

Nice room in Echo Hill. Busline. Everything included internet $350.00 413-687-0430

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

ACT NOW SPRING BREAKERS Book early & Save! Free meals parties by 11/7. Lowest prices. Be a rep & TRAVEL FREE! Get the ultimate hookups with STA TRAVEL. 413-256-1261.

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

SPRING BREAK Early Booking Specials – FREE Meals & Drinks - $50 Deposit 800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK FROM $569 BAHAMAS, CANCUN, ACAPULCO, JAMAICA! FREE PARTIES, FREE DRINKS. Sign up early and save. Organize a small group and you travel FREE. Or become a CAMPUS REP and GET PAID COMMISSION on each trip sold. Call today and get started 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Collegian Advertising
Reach over 14,000 readers daily! Call 545-3500 to speak with one of our experienced ad reps about your advertising needs. Special local rates. Call or visit between 8:30-3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A fight to the top

Minutemen will take on Wildcats for best record in the Atlantic 10

By Eric Athas
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When the 2005 schedule was released for the Massachusetts football team, it was almost inevitable that the contest against New Hampshire on Oct. 29 would have significance to it. As it turns out, the No. 7 Minutemen (6-1 5-0 Atlantic 10) and the No. 4 Wildcats (6-1 4-1 A-10) will be fighting for the top position in the A-10 at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium on Saturday at 12 p.m.

This encounter features not only a battle for a spot on the A-10 pedestal, but also one of the most valued match-ups in the game of football — the top offense in the conference in UNH and the top I-AA defense in the nation in UMass.

The Minuteman defense, anchored by UMass junior strong safety James Ihedigbo, shined during the team's 35-14 win over Maine on Saturday in Orono, setting up the much-important meeting against New Hampshire.

"I think this is the kind of game you dream of since you're a kid," Ihedigbo said. "It's the biggest game in UMass history since winning the National Championship in 1998."

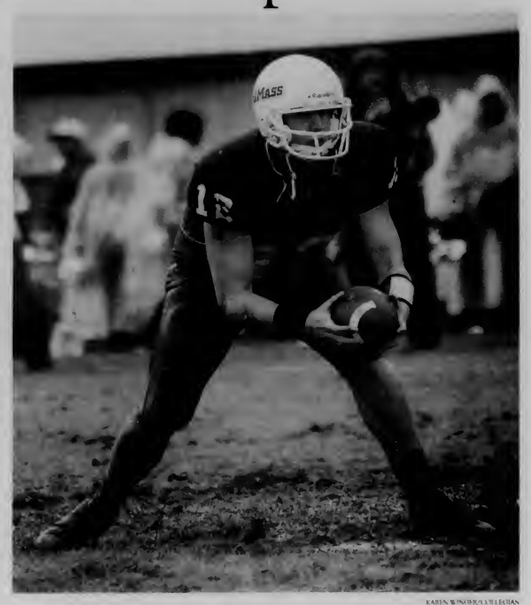
The build-up surrounding Saturday's clash is focused on UMass's defense and UNH's offense because of the numbers put up by both squads.

The Wildcats, who enter Saturday's contest coming off of a decisive 52-21 victory over Northeastern, will walk into McGuirk Stadium boasting the top-ranked offense in the A-10 and a boatload of hype surrounding quarterback Ricky Santos and receiver David Ball. In seven games, Santos has completed 177-of-240 passes for 2,160 yards, 21 touchdowns and seven interceptions. He is at the top of the list in the A-10 for total offense (2,160) and average passing yards per game (308.6) and is third in the A-10 in pass efficiency (a 172.4 rating).

Ball, Santos's favorite target, is third in the conference in receptions per game with 5.86 and has compiled 750 yards off of 41 receptions while visiting the end zone nine times.

On the other end of the elite spectrum, the Minuteman defense has not had a hard time shutting down opposing offenses. The defensive group has allowed just 197.14 total yards per game, an accomplishment that cannot be matched by any other I-AA team in the nation.

Ihedigbo has been one of the driving forces behind those numbers, leading the A-10



See FOOTBALL on page 12

GAME DAY CENTRAL

No. 7 UMass	No. 4 New Hampshire
(6-1 Overall 5-0 Atlantic 10)	(6-1 Overall 3-1 Atlantic 10)
Last Week: Beat Maine 35-14	Last Week: Beat Northeastern 52-21

Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium - Amherst, Massachusetts
(17,000)
Kickoff: 12 p.m.

Television: CN8
Radio: UMass Sports Network - WRNX 100.9 FM Holyoke, flagship (Bob Behler: play-by-play, Matt Goldstein: color commentary, Mike Marzelli: sidelines)
UMass Student Radio - WMUA 91.1 FM Amherst (Marc Bertrand: play-by-play, Zach Claudio: color commentary)
Series: UMass leads it 39-24-3

KAREN WINGERSON/COLLEGIAN

Liam Coen and the No.7 UMass football team will take on the No. 4 Wildcats on Saturday for the final regular-season home game. UNH comes to Amherst with the best rated offense in the Atlantic 10.

Rare occurrence for UM defense

Jeff Howe

If you were paying attention to Saturday's game between the Massachusetts football team and the Maine Black Bears, you may have noticed something strange — something very strange, actually.

And if that something — which happened twice, I might add — caused you to scurry around for a game program, for your cell phone to make an inquiry to your UMass football friend, or for anything else that would have given you a little more insight as to what just happened, I don't blame you.

Because, well, I was confused, too.

There are certain things that just don't happen in this day and age. For instance, your cell phone company will never treat you fairly, you'll never walk by the UMass library without the fear of a large, steel beam falling and crushing you, and you'll probably never think of UMass hoops this year without Travis Ford crossing your mind.

But the world of sports has thrown a few curveballs at us lately. Houston Astros closer Brad Lidge has lost his swagger, the New England Patriots haven't put together two consecutive wins this season and — even scarier — the UMass defense allowed a touchdown.

Scratch that. Two touchdowns! And they were through the air no less! Is this a sign of the apocalypse? Well, it's possible, but those good ol' Boston Red Sox fizzled in September again, so it appears that things may not be too far out of whack.

Think about this. The defense hadn't allowed a passing touchdown since the second quarter of last year's season finale against Hofstra, a span that lasted 24 quarters. That streak took

See STREAK on page 12

The forgotten ones

Eric Athas

Of course Saturday's football game between Massachusetts and New Hampshire has everyone talking about the long-awaited matchup of UNH's offense and UMass's defense. That makes sense, there's no doubting that. This bout will feature the big bad Minuteman defense in one corner and the high-flyin' Wildcat offense in the other corner.

Statistically, it is the best against the best. And if these well-documented numbers have not been run by you yet, then here they are: The Minuteman defense has allowed three touchdowns this season, let up an average of 7.1 points per game, and gave up a total of 197.1 yards of offense per game. And yes, those numbers rank UMass with the best defense in all of I-AA football.

The Wildcat offense has scored 39 touchdowns this season, produced an average of 41.1 points per game and has totaled 467.1 yards per game.

See X-FACTORS on page 12

THE AMHERST (U.) MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Although most of the talk has been focused on the top-rated defense of UMass, the Minuteman offense has been able to generate success this season as well.

UMass preps for championships

By Domenic Poli
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

On Saturday, the Massachusetts men's and women's cross country teams head down to Philadelphia, Penn. for the annual Atlantic-10 Championships. All 14 members of the A-10 Conference will be participating is the meet, with the men's portion starting at 10 a.m., the women's at 10:45 a.m.

UMass coach Ken O'Brien said that he is expecting another strong performance from sophomore Nils Fischer, who has been their "number one runner the majority of the season." He also commented that several of his runners consistently cross the finish-line about 30-45 seconds behind Nils, and that he expects to see "the same type of performance the Atlantic-10 weekend."

"Our chances for success increase as we get as many people as we can get as close to our front runner [as possible]," O'Brien added.

He also mentioned that during the year, the Minutemen have been able to match up with the number three to eight runners of other schools, but have shown weakness up front. O'Brien's goal, therefore, is to have "as many of our top five [as possible] come in about the same time as the other teams' number three runner."

During this practice week, the team has been physically preparing for the meet's difficult 5000-meter course, which includes the infamous Parachute Hill — a lengthy uphill run on tough terrain. To prep for the rough terrain, the team has spent time running 700 yards from the bottom of the Orchard Hill area to the astronomy observatory, a route that O'Brien feels comes closest to simulating the treacherous nature of Parachute Hill.

O'Brien commented that the Maroon and White will be fighting for fifth or sixth place, claiming that defending champion La Salle is favored to win and that Duquesne, UNC-Charlotte, and St. Joe's are likely to be battling for second, third and fourth place.

See CROSS COUNTRY on page 12

Do or die time for Minutewomen

Jeremy Rice
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It is officially do or die time for the Massachusetts field hockey team. After starting off 3-1 in the Atlantic 10, the Minutewomen (6-12 3-3 Atlantic 10) dropped consecutive games in conference last weekend to Temple (4-3) and Saint Joseph's (2-1 OT).

They are not out yet, but the Maroon and White have created a win-and-you're-in situation for themselves this Saturday, as they square off against Rhode Island. The team cannot earn a berth in the A-10 tournament if they lose Saturday, but they are the only team remaining that controls its own destiny.

As of Wednesday, three teams have guaranteed themselves spots in the tournament. Richmond (11-5 6-0 A-10) has clinched the A-10 regular season championship and the top seed in the A-10 tournament. The No. 2 seed will be Temple (10-9 5-1 A-10), who defeated UMass in an overtime heartbreaker Sunday. The third team with a guaranteed spot is St. Joseph's, though it is not yet determined whether they will be the third or fourth seed. After that, UMass, St. Louis (7-10 3-3 A-10) and URI (7-9 2-4 A-10) form a three-woman race for the final playoff berth.

The remaining schedule for the A-10 contenders is as follows: On Saturday, La Salle will visit West Chester in a battle to stay out of last place. Temple will host St. Joe's in a game that will decide little more than positioning within the A-10 tournament.

The biggest game Saturday, and perhaps for the entire regular season, will be Massachusetts at Rhode Island. The only game involving two teams fighting for one playoff spot, UMass has the inside track on the fourth and final spot, while URI will need outside help to get in.

The following day, St. Louis will host top seed Richmond, trying to

See F. HOCKEY on page 12

Sophomore Racheal Mervine has been productive for the UMass field hockey team this season, totalling six points.

Bruschi awaits Belichick's word

By Howard Ulman
ASSOCIATED PRESS

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. — Tedy Bruschi handled the hits his teammates dished out in practice. Whether he'll get a chance for more contact in Sunday night's game remains uncertain.

The energetic catalyst of the New England Patriots' defense who had a mild stroke 8 1/2 months ago must await coach Bill Belichick's decision whether he'll play against the Buffalo Bills.

"I'd like to get out there and see," Bruschi said before Wednesday's practice, his second with contact. "But it's out of my control now. I'm back. I'm a player. I'm a member of the team. So I've trusted my coaches ever since I was in high school."

After a bye week, the Patriots are home Sunday night for their first division game of the season. There's still time for his excitement to build and Bruschi expects that to happen soon.

"It's Wednesday," he said. "I think I'll start to feel excited come the weekend."

Bruschi returned to practice Oct. 19 after receiving medical clearance, but there was no contact until Monday's session. After an initial anxiety, he said he felt fine during that practice.

See BRUSCHI on page 11

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 28, 2005 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM VOLUME CXVI ISSUE 36

Los Angeles duo introduces thai cuisine to UMass

There have been several noticeable changes around the University of Massachusetts campus this semester. Prakas and Vilai Yenbamroong visited the university yesterday to celebrate one of the changes.

The mother and son duo are the faces in the picture that stands in the new Café Talesai, a new Thai eatery inside the Marketplace Café at the Campus Center. The two created Talesai 23 years ago in Los Angeles. Since then, they have established three restaurants there.

The Yenbamroongs' new establishment at UMass is their first on-campus eatery. Prakas explained that he and his mother came to UMass last year to present their idea for a new eatery during a convention held by Dining Services to attract new business.

Yenbamroong says he's excited for the new business and plans to make some changes to the current Marketplace Café. One of those changes is to make the eatery "more colorful" and replace some of the historical pictures hanging on the walls.

"We hope to attract more diverse cultures," Yenbamroong said.

The Yenbamroongs flew into Massachusetts this week from Los Angeles to be part of the celebration of their new business. Yesterday, the mother and son gave away samples of free food and started a raffle to give away Taiwanese prizes. Some of the prizes include Thai souvenirs, such as a sacred elephant, which Yenbamroong calls "good to put in your dorm room," a hand woven bag and a $250 travel voucher given out by Dining Services.

Yenbamroong emphasizes his eatery as a place where people can come together.

"This is why our saying is 'Let's break rice together,' because we should all break rice together more often," he said.

Turnout for yesterday's event was good, with a few hundred students stopping by throughout the day.

The Yenbamroongs will be back at UMass on Nov. 14 for "Thai Night" to be held at the Hampshire Dining Commons in the Southwest Residential Area.

"We're committed [to this business] for the long haul," Yenbamroong said.

Dan O'Brien

Prakas and Vilai Yenbamroong stand in front of a mural of themselves in the new thai eatery, Café Talesai.

'Choices' helps families take step towards health

By Hannah Drake and Eva Piccozzi
COLLEGIAN STAFF

American obesity is a hot topic in health news. From Atkins to South Beach, fad diets are sweeping the nation, creating new food products that scream low-carb. This food obsession of most Americans results from poor food selection and not enough exercise, creating malnutrition and obesity.

The problem in low-income families is due in part to a limited income, and government food stamp allotment of just under $3 a day per household member. Nutrition experts believe lack of nutrition education and poor food shopping habits lead to unhealthy eating habits, which is why the government helps fund programs like Choices: Steps Toward Health, executed by the University of Massachusetts's Extension Nutrition Program.

"The Expanded Food and Nutrition Education Program (EFNEP) started as the federal war against poverty. People realized there was hunger and malnutrition in the U.S. EFNEP targets homemakers with young children to teach them about nutrition and help them use the money that they had for food more wisely, to help them make better choices and stretch their food dollars," said Lisa Sullivan-Werner, the family nutrition program leader for UMass Amherst's Outreach Nutrition program since 1998.

The latest EFNEP curriculum, Choices, includes seven core classes based on adult education pedagogy. The different classes have dance-themed titles, including "Moving to the Mambo," "Whole Grain Twist," "Low-Fat Limbo" and "Kitchen Calypso," which are all based on the New Dietary Guidelines of the myriad food pyramid.

EFNEP, which started over 30 years ago, now has several programs, one of which is the Family Nutrition and Education Program (FNEP).

"Family Nutrition started in '96 or '97. The premise of that program is to provide education to people who receive food stamps so that they'll use them wisely and eat according to the food guidelines and pyramid according to USDA," said Sullivan-Werner.

Massachusetts, the state that first implemented the programs, has field offices all over the state. Participants in the EFNEP program must complete seven workshops. At the end of the program, participants receive a certificate from the USDA.

EFNEP works mainly through agencies that have adult participants, such as homeless shelters, recovery programs and job training programs.

"We work with pregnant teen programs and shelters, rehab, recovery shelters, schools, community agency shelters, domestic violence, employment programs, GED programs, ESL programs, correctional facilities, [and] Hamden County's Sheriff's Department," said program supervisor Pat Harmsen.

Other nutrition education programs housed under the UMass Extension program aren't as strict, such as the food stamp nutrition education program.

"With the food stamp nutrition education program, we mainly work with schools and youth. A large percent — well over half of the food stamp participants — are children under 18. [The program] varies across the state according to what collaborators need and what will work locally. Sometimes we'll go in and do four lessons with 2nd graders, sometimes with kindergartners through grade six. Sometimes we work with principals, and the principals talk to teachers, and teachers call and ask us to come to their classroom," Sullivan-Werner said.

The amount of food stamps allocated in Massachusetts depends on a person's household size, income and expenses. The Department of Transitional Assistance (DTA) in charge of the food stamp program in Massachusetts deposits monthly food stamp benefits in an electronics benefit (EBT) account. Based on the Massachusetts community resource overview from 2004, the average monthly food stamps benefit nation-wide was $85 per person, or $200 per household.

In other terms, a daily food allowance of $2.85 per person.

"Food stamps are based on the Thrifty Program from the USDA," explained Sullivan-Werner. "The Thrifty Food Program (TFP) serves as a national standard for nutritious diet at what is believed to be the lowest possible cost.

According to Community based Food Security Project at Boston Medical Center, "The TFP assumes that all food is prepared at home and requires many hours of cooking, which is not realistic for working families."

EFNEP employs bilingual workers to make education easier. The program also knows that different cultures have different foods and different cooking styles, many of which aren't healthy.

"Our educators are hired to fit in with the participants, from similar backgrounds. They don't have college degrees, I don't want to give the wrong impression, but then it's someone who really understands," said Sullivan-Werner.

Relating to the participants becomes important when participants want to know how to enjoy high-fat treats such as flan that are served at special meals. Educators and participants share memories, while educators tell participants that one small piece is best, favorite foods don't have to be entirely given up.

"We try to work with people's cultures, rather than change them, but tweak their foods a little or make them a little healthier," Sullivan-Werner says.

EFNEP stays away from lecture-style teaching.

"We try to make it really fun, we personalize the information. When they first come in, we do a 24 hour recall, and ask them to keep track of what they've eaten," she said.

Participants are also asked to fill out various forms detailing what kinds of foods they eat, and how often.

"Lessons have self-assessment, we use an approach called learning through dialogue. It's very non-lecture,

See HEALTHY EATING on page 2

Bush abandons Miers Supreme Court nomination

By Terence Hunt
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Under withering attack from conservatives, President Bush abandoned his push to put loyalist Harriet Miers on the Supreme Court and promised a quick replacement Thursday. Democrats accused him of bowing to the "radical right wing of the Republican Party."

The White House said Miers had withdrawn because of senators' demands to see internal documents related to her role as counsel to the president. But politics played a larger role: Bush's conservative backers had doubts about her ideological purity, and Democrats had little incentive to help the nominee or the embattled GOP president.

"Let's move on," said Republican Sen. Trent Lott of Mississippi. "In a month, who will remember the name Harriet Miers?"

The withdrawal stunned Washington on a day when the capital was awaiting potential bad news for the administration on another front — the possible indictments of senior White House aides in the CIA leak case. Earlier in the week, the U.S. military death toll in Iraq hit 2,000, while consumer confidence in the economy took another plunge, reflecting Bush's mounting political woes.

Democrats and Republicans braced for Bush's next Supreme Court pick, which will be his third try since July 19. With Chief Justice John Roberts in place, the president had two pools of candidates from which to choose: conservative jurists who received serious consideration last time or somebody outside what Bush calls the "judicial monastery," perhaps a current or former senator who would be welcomed by the GOP-controlled Senate.

Bush promised a new nominee "in a timely manner." Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist said he expected a replacement within days and wants to hold hearings by Christmas. Equally likely was that retiring Justice Sandra Day O'Connor would remain on the court until early next year while her replacement is sought, a prospect that concerns many conservatives.

Miers will remain White House counsel.

White House Counsel Harriet Miers arrives on Capitol Hill for a private meeting with Sen. Tom Colburn, R-Okla., to discuss her nomination to the Supreme Court on Tuesday. Miers withdrew her nomination.

Democrats urged Bush to nominate a relative moderate in the mold of O'Connor, who frequently cast the swing vote on abortion and other hot-button issues coming before the court this year. "He must listen to all Americans, not just the far right," said Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts.

Bush blamed the Senate for her demise.

"It is clear that senators would not be satisfied until they gained access to internal documents concerning advice provided during her tenure at the White House — disclosures that would undermine a president's ability to receive candid counsel," the president said shortly before leaving for Florida to assess hurricane damage.

There were few regrets on Capitol Hill, from either

See MIERS on page 2

The Gas Gauge

For the first time in three weeks, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian's weekly column, "The Gas Gauge," has found a gas station with a lower price that that of the Hess station on West Street in Amherst.

The Sunoco station on Route 9 in Hadley shared the lowest price of $2.44 with the Exxon station in the Stop & Shop strip on Route 9 in Hadley.

The Hess station on Route 116 in South Amherst and the Gulf station on Route 9 held the second lowest prices with $2.46 a gallon for regular.

The Mobil station on the Stop & Shop strip was recorded selling regular gas for $2.49 a gallon, and the Mobil station on North Pleasant Street in Amherst Center was priced at $2.53 per gallon of regular.

The Shell station on the Stop & Shop strip on Route 9 in Hadley held the highest price for one gallon of regular with the price of $2.59.

$2.44	Sunoco Route 9, Hadley
$2.44	Exxon, Stop & Shop strip, Route 9, Hadley
$2.46	Hess, Route 116, South Amherst
$2.46	Gulf, Route 9, Amherst
$2.49	Mobil, Stop & Shop strip, Route 9, Hadley
$2.53	Mobil, North Pleasant Street, Amherst Center
$2.59	Shell, Stop & Shop strip, Route 9, Hadley

—Dan O'Brien

The Hess station on Route 116 in South Amherst held the second lowest price in the Amherst area.

Pancake Perfection

UMass sophomore, Anne Marple, decided to make a pancake costume in hopes of expanding the customer base at Greenso Sub Shop in the Greenough building. She plans to continue standing outside the shop until the end of the week.

ARTS & LIVING
HALLOWEEN WEEKEND IS HERE
Celebrate it with our top five movies and things to do.
PAGE 5

EDITORIAL/OPINION
UMASS STUDENTS TOO OPINIONATED
Backlash from students intimidates opposing opinions.
PAGE 4

WEATHER
TODAY Cloudy, H50°, L31°
TOMORROW Rainy, H48°, L35°
SUNDAY Sunny, H59°, L39°

SPORTS
HOCKEY BEASTS
UMass welcomes the brass of Hockey East this weekend.
PAGE 10

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Cameron J. Woods
BUSINESS MANAGER Hirak Shah
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherd Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerrs O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egasian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Matthew O'Rourke
COMICS EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Allison Edles
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
PHOTO EDITOR Kate Sachsenmaier
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
HUMAN RESOURCE Phil Smoller
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Nathan Chomsky
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mackenzie Isler
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Jones
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Dales
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Belliveau
ASSISTANT PHOTO Elizabeth Caristi
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eric Athas
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Kristen LaCasse

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FINANCED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1946. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, SEE ADVERTISING SECTION. $30 PER YEAR.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Allison Edles
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Kate Sachsenmaier
COPY EDITOR
Ian Jones
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Ginny Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Sean Duram, Sarah Belanger

Campus Perspectives

What are your plans for Halloween?

freshman
Pre-nursing major

Celebrating Samhain, the pagan new year.

Katie Conever

senior
Film major

Partying with nothing but a smile.

Ilan Persing

junior
Math major

I'm getting lucky, baby.

Justin Reischutz

sophomore
Exercise Science major

I'm going to a costume party.

Caitlin Brody

EFP program finds healthy results

HEALTHY EATING from page 1

lots of hands on activity. We use a lot of food demonstrations and food preparations, where they can watch or participate and prepare the food, and they all get to try it," Sullivan-Werner said.

Sullivan-Werner also explained that since many of the participants are low-income, there's also a high illiteracy rate, so the hands-on, discussion-based style works well.

"[Participants] may not have the best experiences with formal learning situations, so we try to make it fun.

"Our success isn't that when people finished the program that they're eating perfectly, our success is that when they finish the program they've tried some things, set goals for themselves and they feel good that they can do that. One thing builds on another," says Sullivan-Werner.

But does the program work?

According to EFP, at the end of the Choices program last year, of the participants who graduated 52 percent used "Nutritional Facts" food labels more often, 32 percent prepared less foods with salt and 41 percent more participants used a list for grocery shopping. At the end of the youth program, a behavioral impact study reported that 94 percent of 18 children from one group increased their ability to select low-cost, nutritious foods.

"Through our surveys, we find by the end of the program, participants are following dietary guidelines more closely. Some people actually lost some weight by following those guidelines. They're using a healthier type of fat, olive oil and canola oil, and they're not using as much oil, not deep frying and doing more baking," said Harmsen.

Miers withdraws court nomination party. Republicans control 55 of the Senate's 100 seats, but several GOP lawmakers were wavering on Miers amid intense lobbying from conservative interest groups.

MIERS from page 1

Republicans and Democrats alike questioned her qualifications — Miers had never served as a judge — and Bush faced charges of cronyism for tapping his former personal lawyer for the highest court in the land.

Frist spoke with White House Chief of Staff Andy Card Wednesday night and offered a "frank assessment of the situation," Frist spokesman Bob Stevenson said. Coincidentally or not, Miers told Bush of her plans the same night.

"Somebody probably pulled her aside and said, 'Harriet, it's going to be a terrible experience and why go through with it, because they've already made up their minds,'" said Sen. George Voinovich, R-Ohio, who blasted conservative groups for undermining the nominee. Other lawmakers welcomed the move.

Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., a potential 2008 presidential nominee who is courting conservative activists, said he had been "feeling less comfortable all along" about the nomination.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., one of 14 women in the Senate, had challenged Miers' nomination yet criticized Republicans for derailing it: "I don't believe they would have attacked a man the way she was attacked."

"The radical right wing of the Republican Party killed the Harriet Miers nomination," said Senate Democratic leader Harry Reid of Nevada, who had recommended Miers to the president. "They want a nominee with a proven record of supporting their skewed goals."

Whomever Bush picks, a united GOP caucus holds the upper hand. Democrats would have to use their 44 votes (there is one independent) to try to block the nomination procedurally, a move loaded with political and logistical hurdles.

Republican consultants predicted that Bush would satisfy the conservatives who helped him to two election victories and now want their due. "The conservative movement has made it fairly clear from their standpoint that they would like someone that many people have been fighting for, or involved in these battles over 30 years," said consultant Greg Mueller, who was deeply involved in the Miers nomination fight.

Before the president chose Miers on Oct. 3, speculation had focused on her and two other Bush loyalists: Attorney General Alberto Gonzales, Bush's longtime friend, who would be the first Hispanic on the court; and corporate lawyer Larry Thompson, who was the government's highest-ranking black law enforcement official as deputy attorney general during Bush's first term.

A senior administration official said Gonzales and Thompson would probably run into similar criticism as Miers. They are Bush confidants with sparse records.

Other candidates mentioned frequently include conservative federal appeals court judges Samuel Alito, J. Michael Luttig, Priscilla Owen, Karen Williams and Alice Batchelder; Michigan Supreme Court justice Maura Corrigan; and Maureen Mahoney, a frequent litigator before the high court. Alito was narrowly passed over for Miers, the official said.

A second senior administration official said it had become increasingly clear that Miers' nomination was facing a collision on Capitol Hill that needed to be prevented. Miers called the president in his private residence at 8:30 p.m. EDT Wednesday to tell him of her decision. Twelve hours later, she walked into the Oval Office to hand him her letter of withdrawal.

Senator John Cornyn, R-Tex., talks to reporters on the withdrawal of the nominee for the U.S. Supreme Court, Harriet Miers, in the U.S. Capitol Buliding.

www.umasslug.org

IBM

Thursday October 27th, 2005
4:00-5:00 lecture by Paul Coates
5:00-5:45 demonstration

UMass W.E.B. DeBois Library Learning Commons, South Corridor

Open Standards, Open Source And Web Application Development

What does it mean to be "open" in today's IT environment? What are the challenges and benefits of using "open" or "closed" technology?

The talk will briefly introduce an open source research and teaching initiative at UMass and current and future collaboration between IBM and UMass. There will be a demonstration of the open source Eclipse 3.0 Integrated Development Environment, Apache Tomcat, and development with an open source relational database package (Derby/Cloudscape).

Friday October 28th, 2005
9:00am - 1:00pm

UMass W.E.B. DeBois Library Learning Commons, South Corridor

LinuxFest

LinuxFest is an opportunity to participate in a hands-on workshop where you get to learn and "testdrive" Linux at three different levels. The workshop modules include installation and configuration of Fedora Core 4 (http://www.redhat.com/fedora), basic Linux usage fundamentals, or Linux intermediate administration tasks such as the installation and configuration of SAMBA or installing various open source tools such as the Eclipse IDE. There will be free gifts available and we will raffle off an iPod Nano!

Session requirements include a laptop running Windows XP or a Red Hat Linux distribution with at least 6-8GB of available disk space. Participants are encouraged to download and install a 30 day trial version of VMWARE Workstation 5.0 at http://www.vmware.com on their laptop PRIOR to attending the LinuxFest workshop.

For people without machines, there will be about 40 laptop machines available for participants who do not have their own equipment.

Seating is limited for the LinuxFest. To make a reservation, please register at http://www.umasslug.org/ibm/ibmfest.php.

These events are co-sponsored by IBM, Court Square Data Group, and The University of Massachusetts Open Source Lab, Information Technology Program, Linux User Group, College of Social and Behavior Sciences, the Research Liaison And Development Office, and the W.E.B. Du Bois Library and new Learning Commons.

The Empress Josephine

George Moutard Woodward and Captain Williams (detail) The Progress of Josephine published 20 April 1808, etching hand colored. McGill University, Rare books and Special Collections. (Acc. No. 01)

UPCOMING EVENTS

The Empress Josephine Weekend

Saturday, October 29th
10am- 4pm
Symposium
Queens, Queens, Queens & Empresses
Pruyne Lecture Hall, Fayermeather Hall
Amherst College. FREE

Sunday, October 30th
2pm
Concert
Music from the Salon of the Empress Josephine
Soprano, flute, harp, and fortepiano
Rotherwas Gallery, Mead Art Museum
By reservation only, call 542-2335. FREE

Film Series begins Thursday, October 20th!

Art & Royal Identity

Call 542-2335 for more information or visit us on the web www.amherst.edu/mead

MEAD ART MUSEUM AMHERST COLLEGE
ON VIEW THROUGH DECEMBER 18TH

Romney gets tough on drunk driving bill

By STEVE LEBLANC
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — House Democratic lawmakers on Thursday yielded to several key changes to a drunken driving bill recommended by Republican Gov. Mitt Romney designed to toughen the legislation.

One key provision restored to the bill would let prosecutors use certified court records as proof of prior convictions when seeking punishment against alleged repeat drunken drivers on trial.

The provision had been removed from the version of the bill approved by the House and Senate last week. Lawmakers said they wanted to ask the Supreme Judicial Court if use of the court records was constitutional before adding it to the bill.

But House Speaker Salvatore DiMasi, D-Boston, said lawmakers should approve the amendment despite those constitutional concerns. Romney had clarified the language of the amendment to make it clear that the evidence of prior convictions could only be raised to decide punishment, not to convict.

"I'm not making any judgment on constitutionality: that will be decided by the Supreme Judicial Court sooner or later," he said.

The House also agreed to one additional Romney amendment, which would increase the mandatory jail sentence for anyone found guilty of motor vehicle manslaughter from two-and-a-half to five years.

A third Romney amendment sought to increase license suspensions for those who had previously been convicted of drunken driving who refuse a breathalyzer test even if they are not ultimately charged or convicted.

DiMasi said that went too far.

"We're still in the United States of America and if you're not charged and not found guilty why should you be punished?" he said.

The House had come under criticism from backers of the bill, including Romney, who charged they "watered down" the legislation by removing the section allowing the use of certified court records as proof of prior convictions.

Mass. Governor Mitt Romney, worked together with the House leaders to strengthen drunken driving punishments.

Key White House aides await fate in 'leak' probe

By PETE YOST
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Special Counsel Patrick Fitzgerald huddled with his legal team Thursday as two key White House aides awaited their fate in the CIA leak probe.

A spokesman for the prosecutor said there would be no public announcements Thursday. The term of the grand jury that could bring indictments expires Friday.

The White House braced for the possibility that Vice President Dick Cheney's chief of staff, I. Lewis "Scooter" Libby, could become a criminal defendant by week's end. Bush's top political adviser, Karl Rove, remained in jeopardy of being charged with false statements.

Libby and Rove arrived for work at the White House Thursday as usual. Rove attended the daily meeting of the senior staff, but Libby did not and was said to be in a security briefing. Libby misses senior staff about half the time because of intelligence briefings and other issues on Cheney's schedule, an official said.

Separately, Randall Samborn, a spokesman for Special Counsel Patrick Fitzgerald, said there would be no announcements in the probe on Thursday.

Rove's legal team made contingency plans, consulting with former Justice Department official Mark Corallo about what defenses could be mounted in court and in public.

Fitzgerald met with Rove attorney Robert Luskin at a private law firm office Tuesday, heightening White House fears for Rove's future.

In 2003, eight days after former U.S. Ambassador Joseph Wilson accused the Bush administration of twisting prewar intelligence to exaggerate the Iraqi threat, columnist Robert Novak disclosed the identity of Wilson's wife, covert CIA officer Valerie Plame.

After checking with Rove and Libby, the White House categorically denied that either aide was involved in leaking Plame's identity. Fitzgerald was appointed nearly two years ago to determine whether any presidential aides violated a federal law that prohibits the intentional unmasking of an undercover CIA officer.

The prosecutor also has discussed other charges with defense lawyers in recent weeks, including false statements, obstruction of justice and mishandling of classified information.

Special Counsel Patrick Fitzgerald arrives at the Prettyman Court Building in Washington D.C. The results from the grand jury that Fitzgerald used to investigate the leak of a CIA agent's identity is expected Friday.

The grand jury's term expires on Friday, and the panel met with Fitzgerald's team for about three hours Wednesday before adjourning for the day.

The administrative assistant to Thomas Hogan, chief judge of U.S. District Court in the nation's capital, disclosed that Hogan met with Fitzgerald. The assistant, Sheldon Snook, declined to say what was discussed.

Prosecutors wrapping up a criminal investigation can meet with the chief judge to request that a new grand jury be impaneled or simply to inform of impending indictments. Grand juries also can be extended, although the one investigating the Plame leak is two years old.

Beyond Libby and Rove, Fitzgerald also has interviewed officials at the State Department and CIA about their conversations with the White House and their access to information about Plame and a trip her husband took for the CIA to check on pre-Iraq war intelligence.

The public appeared divided about the controversy. A CNN-USA Today-Gallup Poll taken over the weekend found 39 percent of Americans believe the leak of Plame's name was illegal, another 39 percent believed it was unethical but not illegal and the remainder saw nothing wrong or were not sure.

During the investigation, prosecutors forced testimony from journalists about confidential sources. They assembled evidence that Rove talked about Wilson's wife with columnist Robert Novak and TIME Magazine reporter Matt Cooper before both reporters wrote stories outing Plame. And the prosecutors gathered evidence that Libby gave information about Wilson's wife to Cooper and on three occasions to New York Times reporter Judith Miller.

MIT fires professor, alleging falsified research

By MICHAEL KUNZELMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — A biology professor accused of falsifying research data has been fired by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the school announced Thursday.

Luk Van Parijs, an associate professor in MIT's Center for Cancer Research, was placed on leave and denied access to his laboratory and office after a group of colleagues reported the allegations of "research misconduct" to MIT administrators in August 2004.

The school claims Van Parijs, 35, later admitted to fabricating and falsifying data in a paper, several manuscripts and grant applications.

An MIT investigation found no evidence that his co-authors or other members of his research group were involved in the alleged misconduct, said Alice Gast, the school's associate provost and vice president for research.

"Integrity in research and scholarship is a bedrock principle of MIT," Gast said in a statement. "Research misconduct violates this principle and MIT takes any allegations of research misconduct very seriously."

Van Parijs' firing took effect on Wednesday, according to MIT spokeswoman Denise Brehm.

Van Parijs did not immediately return a telephone message left at a residential listing, and did not respond to an e-mail message to his MIT address on Thursday.

Among Van Parijs' work was a 2003 study published in the journal Nature Genetics that explained how to use RNA interference to turn genes off in cells, a potential step toward silencing genes involved in disease.

Brehm said Van Parijs was conducting "basic scientific research" on the defects in immune cells during disease development.

"This area of research at MIT is still strong and healthy," Brehm added. "Researchers here continue to make legitimate and important advances in this area."

Because Van Parijs received federal funding for some of his work, MIT said it consulted with the Office of Research Integrity, part of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, as the school investigated the allegations.

MIT plans to give the Office of Research Integrity a report on its investigation in about a month, but those findings will not be made public until federal officials complete their own investigation, according to Brehm.

"The investigatory process is very confidential and is not yet complete," she added.

Van Parijs, who earned a doctorate in immunology from Harvard in 1997, was a postdoctoral student at the California Institute of Technology from 1998 to 2000. He worked with Cal Tech President David Baltimore "on problems in immunology," said school spokeswoman Jill Perry.

Perry said Cal Tech has launched its own investigation into the work Van Parijs performed there before he left for MIT, including work that was published in the journal Immunity.

Van Parijs' profile on Community of Science, an online database of information about scientists, describes his area of expertise as "regulation of cell proliferation and death in the function and diseases of the immune system."

His work has been published in several magazines and journals, including Science, according to his online profile. A spokeswoman for Science said the magazine was not aware of MIT's investigation.

Taste of Home
RECIPE CONTEST

Miss home cookin'? Miss the family?

Share your favorite recipe from home and receive a chance to win a getaway for your parent(s) or guardian to join you on campus.

GRAND PRIZE

They'll stay at the Campus Center hotel, dine at the University Club, assist our executive chef in preparing the winning recipe and even catch a UMass sports game. The UMass student Grand Prize winner will receive a monthly "Gift from Home" compliments of UMass Dining Services from November through May 2006 and a $100 gift certificate for the University Store. Travel expenses will be paid.

Second and third prizes also awarded.

Enter between October 17 and 28, 2005
at any UMass Dining Common (Look for our entry display) or online at www.umass.edu/diningservices.

Just submit your favorite entrée
(meat or vegetarian recipe) from home. Recipes will be judged on originality, authenticity, taste, ease of preparation, and appearance.

The winners will be announced on Monday, November 4, 2005
The winning recipes will be featured at all DC's during dinner, Thursday, November 10th.

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst

GRAND PRIZE WINNER '05

Be A Local Hero
Buy Locally Grown

You must be 18 years old or older and on a meal plan to enter

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 28, 2005

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it"
-Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The political lynch mob

Gillon D.Marchetti

Two semesters ago, I was sitting in a Dean's Book class discussing the Barbara Kingsolver book, "Small Wonder." This was at the height of the presidential election debates. Somehow the topic of the book was relevant to politics and the class began discussing Bush's handling of the war in Iraq.

As usual for UMass, the predominant opinion of the class was that most resembling liberal ideology. Typically, I keep my mouth shut in these situations. For one thing, being an Army veteran, my personal opinions do not tend to be representative of the majority of UMass students. Secondly, I am not always as knowledgeable as my fellow students (or as knowledgeable as they think they are), so I use the opportunity to learn from them.

However, on this particular subject, I felt inclined to state my opinion. As the class went round, many expressed their disgust of President Bush and the war. I raised my hand and bashfully stated my opinion. "Well, I was not for the war initially, but I have to say that one thing I like about Bush is the fact that he is steadfast. In my experience, that is one quality that is necessary in a leader." To that, the murmurs in the class rose, heads nodded in disbelief and one girl raised her voice to say, "That's what happened in Vietnam."

For one thing, being an army veteran, my personal opinions do not tend to be representative of the majority of UMass students. Secondly, I am not always as knowledgeable as my fellow students (or as knowledgeable as they think they are), so I use the opportunity to learn from them.

I dub this unfortunate reaction the "political lynch mob." There is little question this university is largely liberal and outspoken. One of the best parts about attending UMass, or any university, is its tradition of activism and debate. Too often though, opposing opinions are intimidated due to the backlash from fellow students. Students are literally afraid of being intellectually "lynched" because they have differing opinions.

It is also important to point out that the blame is not on liberals only. Liberals will jibe conservatives as much as conservatives will incite and inflame liberals to do this against them. I have witnessed certain Republicans make outrageous statements primarily to irritate members of the opposing party. It is when there is structured conversation within a classroom among student organizations, or editorial opinions such as this one, that deliberate ridicule should be subsided in order to allow for peaceful, mature discussion.

The problem is not with having debate. Further, the problem is not feeling passionately about that which is being debated. Democracy relies upon it. The problem is to believe that our ideals are the only absolute truth and that any opposing position is just wrong. Michael Hannahan, a political science professor and director of a civic initiative bringing foreign professors to the university to learn about American politics, teaches in his classes what he calls, "Mike's Maxims." These are a few simple phrases to remember that allow for more equitable debate.

The first of these is that it is not pragmatic to think that your opponent is stupid. A common belief among people in debate is that if the other side knew what the heck they were talking about, they would see it "the right" way. The second maxim is that your opposition is not evil. While historically there have been exceptions, for the most part, it can be assumed that most people are relatively humane and possess the ability to sympathize.

This enormous university is filled with a diversity of opinions. Every citizen of our academic community brings a colorful array of experiences from which these opinions are derived. One of the many benefits to a higher education is the opportunity to learn from our neighbors. This will help us to grow and to refine our own outlook on the world. However, allowing our passions to overcome us intimidates our neighbors. It shuts our minds to the possibility of learning something new. It stunts our growth as well, leaving the potential for ignorance.

If that girl from my Dean's Book class had not reacted the way she did, she may have discovered where I really stand politically. She may have even discovered that my opinions are not that far from hers, or maybe that we are nothing alike. But now, neither of us will ever know. Worse than that, she closed off the possibility to learn from someone, to teach someone or even befriend someone.

The ideas expressed in this column are not intended to be partisan views. They are intended to promote recognition of a problem. That problem being that we all must tolerate each other, be it Democrat, Republican, white, black or any of the other endless differences among us. Let a man far wiser than I will ever be close this editorial. It was Mohandas Gandhi who said, "Anger and intolerance are the enemies of good understanding."

Gillon D. Marchetti is a UMass student.

What not to wear for Halloween

Katelyn Harding

Looking back, I had pretty awesome Halloween costumes growing up. One of my favorites was when I literally looked like a three-foot booger. But I was obviously a dinosaur; you just couldn't see my tail in all the pictures. Even if I was a booger, I looked pretty happy to be one.

My point is, when you are young, costumes are all premade and put together. It was also nice to have your parents sew you an original from scratch. But now that we are mature adults, it has come to my realization that our Halloween costumes are no longer up to par. As we have grown older, I would like to think that our costumes have followed suit. No pun intended. Sadly, they haven't, and I am willing to give you guys a little advice on how to change this. I cannot tell you what to be for Halloween, but for the sake of everyone, I can tell you what not to be.

Daisy Duke. Yes, I know this movie was rated "The best movie of the summer," (isn't that what all the ads say about summer movies?) but let's face it. How many of you actually went to go see this movie and actually liked it? Yeah, that's what I thought. Sure, Jessica Simpson miraculously got hotter so that she could fill out her role as Daisy, congratulations to her, she's truly an inspiration. But look at what you would have to be wearing.

First of all, it's October, and if you haven't noticed, a bit chilly already. Wearing almost nonexistent denim shorts is not my idea of a fun time. Cowboy boots are okay, I guess they'd give you some warmth on your legs and I'm pretty sure flannel shirts went out of style with the punk-rock phase. Girls, if this is the best you can do for a costume, I'd like for you to sit down and really think about it. I'm serious. I am sure that you will be able to come up with many ideas that are more suitable for you and for the weather outside.

Casts of television shows. This has to be one of the dumbest ideas I've ever heard for a Halloween costume. Yeah, you might want to include a bunch of friends with one theme, but this is not the way to do it. It may seem like an awesome idea, but basically you are trying to dress up, as well, just like an ordinary person.

A pimp. Guys, seriously, if this is what you have to resort to for Halloween, I feel bad for you. Why do you think people throw a "pimps 'n' Hos" party throughout the year? To get you to stop dressing like this on Halloween, obviously.

Take the cast of "Friends." Okay, so you have three ordinary girls, and three guys that are just your average "Joes." Seriously, what guy would want to be Ross? If you're going to dress up as a boring cast, why don't you just wear everyday clothes and tell people that hey, you are just being yourself? That's probably a better idea in the long run. If you are going to do a cast of a television show, the only substantial ones are probably cartoons. That way you can at least be creative and paint your face. I'd rather dress like Spongebob Squarepants than Eva Longoria of "Desperate Housewives" any day.

A pimp. Guys, seriously, if this is what you have to resort to for Halloween, I feel bad for you. Why do you think people throw a "Pimps 'n' Hos" party throughout the year? To get you to stop dressing like this on Halloween, obviously. This has to be the most overdone costume for a guy, and it's not very funny anymore either. I'd rather see four groups of guys dress up like Harry and Lloyd from "Dumb & Dumber." At least there would be variations to that costume. Not all four groups would have to be the same Harry and Lloyd, but there would be very similar pimps roaming around campus, and I don't like that idea one bit.

Naturally, you do not need to listen to my advice or take me seriously at all. I am just telling you, if you wear any of the aforementioned costumes, you will not be winning any Halloween costume prizes, unless you actually are Jessica Simpson, the real cast of "Friends" or a real-life pimp. Halloween is a time for having fun and dressing up, so be creative with your costumes. Even if you have to be a booger, I can guarantee you would be the only one.

Katelyn Harding is a Collegian columnist.

Arizona border jumpers

John Gruenenfelder

When I moved across the country to Amherst there were a number of life's elements I quite expected to be without. No more bountiful Mexican food (an eatery named Tamales that serves no tamales? Really now). No more dirt, rocks or cacti. No more javalina (wild pigs with a taste for jack-o-lanterns) and definitely no more Minutemen.

No, not those Minutemen. These are borderline vigilantes who seem to have followed me from Arizona. The Minutemen is an organization whose stated purpose is to guard the United States borders from illegal immigrants because the federal government won't do the job.

Imagine my surprise when I opened the Boston Globe a few weeks ago and saw that they had arrived and were dutifully guarding that stretch of lawless wasteland that is the Vermont-Canadian border. According to the article, and as you might naturally conclude, they spotted nobody. Nobody, that is, but the protesters who came to visit them.

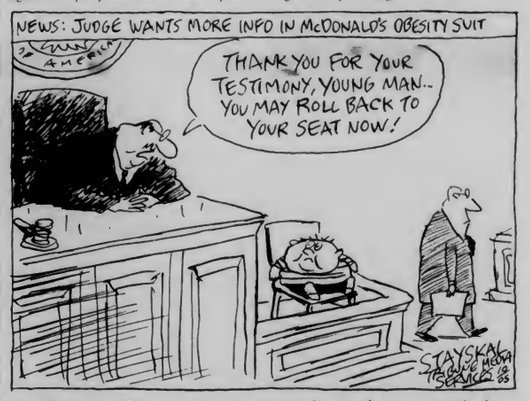
The Minutemen are addressing a very real problem, but various aspects of their organization keep them from doing any measurable good. For the Arizona Minutemen, who not surprisingly held their first meeting in the old vigilante town of Tombstone, their effectiveness varies dramatically, depending on what information you trust, from laughable to ineffective. The other big obstacle to legitimacy is that they seem to attract people who hate the government, hate immigrants, hate non-white people or some combination thereof. Not all, and probably not most, but enough to make for a bad image.

Most people in Massachusetts likely don't know much about border issues, which is understandable. Why care about an issue if the best attention getter is some vigilante group? Maybe the problem isn't that big. Unfortunately, it's very, very big. In 2004, the Border Patrol in the Tucson sector apprehended 439,000 illegal border crossers, and the Tucson sector isn't as busy as those in California or Texas. That's nearly as big as Tucson itself, and while the numbers are down from a year earlier, it is obvious that something drastic needs to happen.

A citizen task force like the Minutemen is certainly not the answer. Nor are ever higher border walls, more agents patrolling the border or the idea/threat of militarizing the border. These solutions just throw more people and money at the border in a vain hope that future crossers will find it too difficult and give up. I think nearly 500,000 arrests along the Arizona border is evidence enough that the amount of manpower necessary to actually seal the border would be astronomical.

...In Tucson ... nearly every restaurant seems to have a kitchen staff that is almost entirely Hispanic, even at the Middle Eastern restaurant. I'm sure many of these people are citizens, but I'd find it hard to believe that most are.

Like so many of life's problems, it is hard to find a solution when you don't understand the cause. That the immigrants want jobs is obvious, as is the fact that they seem to be having little trouble getting these jobs. There aren't many Hispanic people in western Massachusetts, so having all the restaurant kitchens full of illegal immigrants would surely stick out. Not so in Tucson, where nearly every restaurant seems to have a kitchen staff that is almost entirely Hispanic, even at the Middle Eastern restaurant. I'm sure many of these people are citizens, but I'd find it hard to believe that most are.



Politicians are quick to condemn this sort of practice, but most give it quiet support. The reasoning isn't hard to guess. With so many illegal immigrants employed in this country, if the government really does decide to get tough it will almost certainly have a strongly negative effect on the economy, and a bad economy is no way to get re-elected.

The best solution to this growing problem is to offer an unprecedented amount of help to Mexico as well as Central and South America (except Venezuela where they really hate us). In the end, this helps everybody. We don't have to harm our economy by kicking out millions of people, plus we can help our neighbors, and a strong Mexican economy would do wonders for our own. Of course, simply throwing money at the problem won't help. There needs to be a concerted effort by both government and business.

American business will need to step up to the plate much more than they currently are. If you've ever driven along Interstate Highway 8 towards San Diego, you'll pass very close to the border where you can see many maquiladoras (border factories) churning out goods for us, but located just inside Mexico where they can pollute much more. These jobs pay more than being unemployed, but not nearly enough (nor in very good conditions) to justify staying in Mexico.

Such a solution will be neither easy nor quick, but it will be far better for both the citizens of the United States as well as those who seek to enter. In the meantime, we can still watch in awe as the Minutemen protect us from Canada.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist.

Confessions of a 'mook'

Gil Jenkins

I'm what you call a "mook." You know, a guy who wears my cap tilted slightly to the left, my pants below the equator and my collar popped. I'm the guy who adorns his wrists with multiple rubber bracelets, because I'm extra philanthropic. I tend to make a lot of racist and sexist jokes, either my own or directly quoted from the latest frat pack movie. Mine aren't as funny. If you ever find me reading, it's the sports page, Dan Brown or Donald Trump. Some people think I'm loud and obnoxious, but they're just "playa hating."

But wait, there's more to confess. I'm also the guy who cheats in my classes and/or answers questions, "Um, I dunno." When I'm chillin' with my bros, I like to tell them all the different ways I sex women, and bash them for being homos.

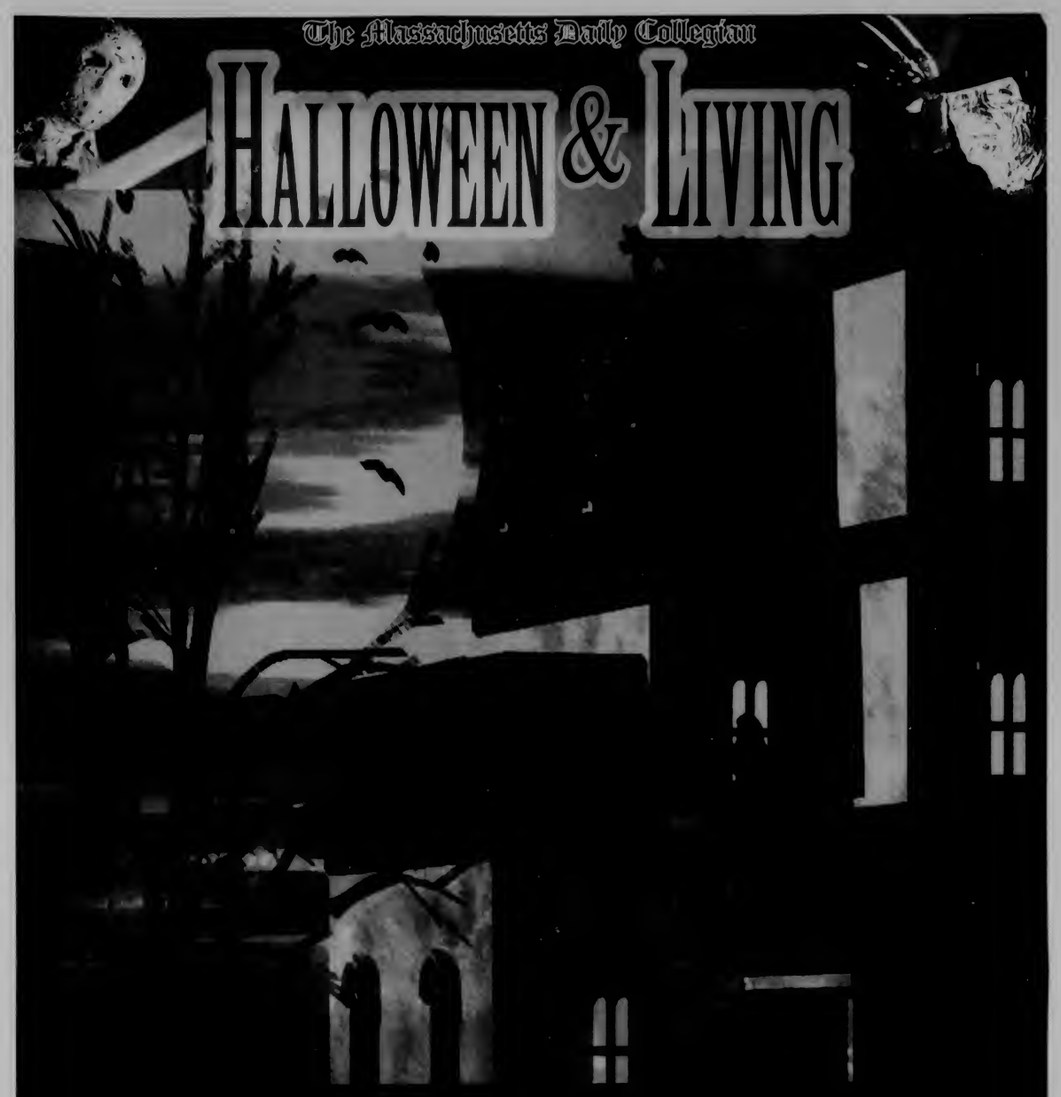
When problems arise I throw a blow and a swift kick to the ribs. Last year you might have seen me rioting for the Sox. You might have seen me around town, too; I drive the big SUV with the pit bull in the front seat.

Maybe you know me through my girl, instead. She's what you'd call a midriff. She wears short pleated skirts and shirts that say "M.I.L.F. in training," "Hottie" or "They're real."

Maybe you know me through my girl, instead. She's what you'd call a midriff. She wears short pleated skirts and shirts that say "M.I.L.F. in Training," "Hottie" or "They're real." She's the girl with a butterfly tattooed on her back and when she wears those big, baggy Jackie O sunglasses, it kills me. Haven't you seen us at the bars together? Haven't you seen her dancing bar top to the "Pussycat Dolls" song when I go to the pisser? Maybe you've seen her shopping with her catty friends at the mall. She's usually the one on the cell, calling or texting me when making a purchase.

Now I'm pretty sure I love my midriff, but more importantly, I love that she lacks ambition, which should make her a very supportive housewife. We're planning on getting married after school and then moving to a pre-fabricated house on Wisteria Lane. I plan on being a successful sports agent or Wall Street broker like my idols, but I might just become a reality TV star instead.

Being a "mook" is all I've ever known. Aside from every other detailed characteristic, I am very simply a narcissistic boob. And the truth is, I'm not really very happy. I wish I knew how to be, but this seems like the only way. My parents are jerks too, so what do you expect? And they're successful. I know my girlfriend doesn't love me, but at least she's hot, right?



I'm sure money will solve all my problems. I don't have to worry about getting money because I've always had it. Why worry about the world? The people that do don't seem any happier than me. You can't change the way things are. [Insert expletive] hand me a Jell-O shot.

Gil Jenkins is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION E-Mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

HALLOWEEN & LIVING

Five horror films you haven't seen, but should

By Stephen Gladwin
Collegian Correspondent

"Twitch of the Death Nerve"

Greed and intersecting desires over the fate of a patch of bay real estate initiates a series of gruesome murders among its residents and potential owners, beginning with the murder of its current owner, the aged Countess Federica Donati. Chief among the devious plotters are husband and wife Albert and Renata, who are willing to annihilate anyone preventing the transfer of the countess' inheritance to their household.

A key title in the maturation of both Italian horror cinema and popular cinema in general, Mario Bava's "Twitch of the Death Nerve," with its chain of outlandishly violent murders (a few of them involving obnoxious, oversexed teenagers), predated the American "slasher" film cycle by nearly a decade. Most impressively, Bava's film dates better than most recent American slashers, featuring more imagination, brilliant camerawork and atmosphere than a dozen "Friday the 13th" clones. It remains a shiny silver dollar among the grubby loose change of slasher cinema. Check out Bava's signature misanthropy, which filters through the comically zig-zagey plot, courtesy of some delicious gallows humor.

"Suspiria"

In order to sharpen her ballet skills, sixteen-year-old Suzy Banyon travels to a renowned dance academy in Friedberg, Germany. Trouble is, the academy is a nest of murderous witches' anxious to mortally defile Young Banyon when she threatens to uncover their diabolical secrets.

I forget the plot. It's a typically awkward concoction of Italy's foremost terror auteur, Dario Argento. Eye as instead on the world-class technical wizardry and camerawork, and the incredible gel lighting, which makes the exhilaratingly vicious murders look like they were filmed through a bloody kaleidoscope. Never before has murder looked so beautiful. And don't forget about the score, one of the most galvanizing and forceful in the history of horror cinema. It all adds up to a three-course dessert of terror.

"I Drink Your Blood"

How's this for a concept: A group of satanic hippies stumble into a small town, planning to sponge off the goodwill of its simple-living folk. However, their bizarre lifestyle clashes with the locals when an irate local doctor (Richard Bowler) interrupts one of their satanic hoedowns. Horace Bones, the group leader, fends off this nuisance by giving the good doctor a hit of LSD, which sends the elderly physician into a horrific bad trip. Incensed by the hippies' treatment of his grandfather, young Pete draws blood from a rabid dog and injects it into his mother's meat pies, which she feeds the scrappy hippie clan. Soon the hippies are foaming at the mouth, and infect a group of nearby construction workers, causing a bloody standoff between the infected citizens and the frightened family.

Remarkably, this drive-in favorite lives up to its cracked premise and then some. Director David Durston goes pleasingly over-the-top in his scare scenes, and the conclusion is a veritable flash-flood of gore and rabid foam. Memorable images abound in this one, although my favorite is still a member of the rabid masses carrying a severed head around like a tacky game show consolation prize.

"Videodrome"

James Woods plays Max Wrenn, an oily late-night cable TV channel owner. His channel offers its viewers an eclectic sampling of sex and violence, but Wrenn isn't pleased with the programming. Insatiable

See MOVIE on page 6

Top five Halloween festivities that the Valley offers

By Mackenzie Issler
Collegian Staff

The Pioneer Valley is the perfect place to be for Halloween and the fall season. The Valley offers an abundance of places and attractions where you can celebrate Halloween and fall. Take advantage of what this area has to offer. Without traveling more than 20 minutes, you can have a weekend packed full of pumpkins, hayrides, mazes, fun costumes, cider doughnuts and warm apple cider.

Be prepared, Mike's Maze will take a little brainpower. This year's maze will test your knowledge of physics and science, as this year is the International Year of Physics and the 100th Anniversary of Einstein's "Miracle Year." Therefore, Mike's Amazing Maze has decided to make their maze this year in the shape of Albert Einstein. After finding your way out of the elaborate maze, the Corn Cafe has hot and cold snacks, such as cider, soft drinks, coffee and hot chocolate. Mike's cornfield will feature some physics demonstrations, like a cutting edge giant potato battery. The viewing platform allows maze-goers to see the completed maze they just made their way through.

If physics is not your idea of fun, there are plenty of other things for you to do to make this the best Halloween weekend ever. Hadley is the home for "the area's favorite haunted hayride." Crazy Al's Haunted Hayrides at Long Hollow Bison Farm will leave you scared and grabbing the person next to you. Long Hollow Bison Farm is located on Route 9 in Hadley. It is open every Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Continuous hayrides start at 7 p.m. and admission is $10 per person.

What would Halloween be without pumpkin carving? The Pioneer Valley is home for many pumpkin patches. Everywhere you look, there are farm stands with pumpkins. So, take a quick stop and a few dollars, and buy a pumpkin to celebrate Halloween. For those who want to show your artistic skills, make your pumpkin into a masterpiece. Check out www.pumpkinmasters.com. It has free patterns you can download to make the jack-o-lantern of your choice.

You are never too old to dress up. Be sure to check out the local stores, such as Wal-Mart and Target, to assemble the perfect costume. All college students are on a budget, so don't be afraid to get creative. Make your own costume. Take 10 minutes and look around your dorm or apartment. The local thrift shops are also great places to go to save money. Feeling uninspired? Check out this Web site, www.costumeideazone.com. It has hundreds of ideas and suggestions for creative, original, fun, easy and, most importantly, cheap costumes. UMass allows you to wear your costume around campus. Just remember, there are a few rules: no masks and no face paint. Otherwise, sport your best costumes and remember what it was like to be a little kid, and Trick or Treat your night away. Try getting your friends together to do dorm-to-dorm Trick or Treating.

Weekends are definitely a time for relaxing, especially when you are a student at UMass. You can celebrate Halloween and fall from the confines of your apartment or dorm. Atkins Farm, "where the apple is just the beginning," has the necessities for a weekend curled up on your couch. Take a short car ride to Atkins, which is located at the corner of Route 116 and Bay Road. Buy yourself a dozen cider doughnuts and a half-gallon of fresh apple cider, stop by your local movie store to rent your favorite Halloween movies and return again to your couch to enjoy your treats.

Get lost this weekend, scare yourself to death, dress up, Trick or Treat and indulge in delicious treats and frightening movies. Remember, Halloween only comes around once a year.

Palestinian grassroots organization performs at UMass

By Jana Katz
Collegian Staff

Twenty Palestinian youth dancers from the West Bank refugee camp in Dheisheh will begin a national tour tonight at the University of Massachusetts at 7:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The Palestinian folkloric dance troupe, Ibdaa, asks for a suggested donation of $5 to $10 to benefit the Ibdaa Cultural Center in Dheisheh, though no one will be turned away for lack of funds. A reception with the performers will follow the performance.

For the past 10 years, the Ibdaa Dance Troupe has been touring extensively throughout Europe and the Middle East. Since 1994, they have become Palestine's youth ambassadors. Ibdaa, which means "to create something out of nothing," is a grassroots organization that provides educational and cultural programs for the children, youth and women of the Dheisheh refugee camp. Some of the programs the center offers are a series of computer classes, a radio center and a secular kindergarten. Ibdaa serves over 1,500 children, youth and women each year in creating one of the most successful community organizations in the Palestinian territories.

Megan Shields-Stromsness, an Amherst resident and one of the event organizers sees this as an opportunity to "get behind the idea that children have the right to express themselves and combat the negative stereotypes that are really out there about Arab people and the Palestinian people."

One of the most distinctive features of the dance troupe is the gradual progression of dancer to teacher. The older dancers pass on their knowledge of traditional folkloric dance, debka and theatrical choreography that are the basis of the troupe's repertoire. The current group of dancers is the fourth generation, made up of 10 boys and 10 girls between the ages of 10 and 13. They tell four stories, sharing the tales of Palestinian refugees, farmers and prisoners through graceful and sometimes poignant dance, music and song. Friday's performance includes "Al Khaima" (The Tent), "Al Muftah" (The Key), "Mu'takhal" (Political Prisoners) and "Al Wasiya" (The Will).

This performance is sponsored by the Arab Students Club at UMass and co-sponsored by several local organizations. The American Friends Service Committee, Buddhist Peace Fellowship of the Pioneer Valley, Media Education Foundation, Middle East Children's Alliance, Middle East Peace Coalition, Palestinian Action Coalition of UMass, SAGE and Western Massachusetts Interfaith Coalition for Peace and Justice joined together to bring Ibdaa to the Pioneer Valley. In addition to this support, this performance was made possible through grants from the Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund at UMass, UMass Arts Council and the Hamilton Fund and Religion Department at Amherst College.

"It was a lot of work to bring the Ibdaa dancers to UMass. It required hospitality for the youth kids and food and transportation and funding of course. The Arab student club worked hard on getting grants from Arts council and SACEF, they were nice enough to help us out. There is always a lot of paper work to fill out and tremendous dedication to getting things done and organized. We have worked on this since the summer when actually I was contacted by them wanting our help to make this happen. And luckily, with a big team and people from all around Amherst and the five college area, we were able to make it happen," said Lina Haddad, president of the Arab Students Club.

Shown above are children from the Dheisheh refugee camp. The camp is one of 59 refugee camps created after the formation of Israel in 1948. This site has a history of struggle and Ibdaa seeks to alleviate their troubles.

Masters of metal, Opeth, take the Palladium this weekend

By Patrick Rennick
Collegian Staff

Few bands have fused brutality and beauty with such ease or success as Sweden's Opeth. "Ghost Reveries," the band's eighth full-length album continues this experiment of balance. Keeping in line with their constant hunger for progression, "Ghost Reveries" is one of Opeth's most challenging works to date.

In support of their new album, Opeth will be headlining a North American tour which will be stopping at the Worcester Palladium on Oct. 30. Shows have already sold out in several locations, including San Francisco, Seattle, Los Angeles and Toronto. Joining Opeth on the tour will be neo-thrash masters, Nevermore and Fireball Ministry.

Those bold enough to immerse themselves in Opeth's newest release will most likely find themselves developing a split-personality between the contrasts of mastermind Mikael Åkerfeldt's guttural and clean vocals. The addition of Per Wiberg (also of Spiritual Beggars) as a permanent keyboardist for the band has also added a more definitive atmosphere and progressive sound. "Ghost Reveries" is a conceptual album based around the occult. Due to their constant experimentation, Opeth has won over an equal number of die-hard fans and deep-rooted naysayers throughout their career.

In the live setting, Opeth transforms the average metal concert into a life-changing musical experience. From the first struck chord to the final goodbyes, few bands command such attention from an audience. These musicians exhibit a level of mastery that is becoming increasingly rare in the music of today.

Opeth however, is so much more than a technically proficient band. Åkerfeldt and company possess more than enough ability to breeze through the most complicated of solos. Yet, Opeth's most prominent strength lies within their songwriting. Recordings cannot do justice to the works of Opeth; they truly need to be experienced. The typical set for the band flows seamlessly through aural landscapes of striking contrast. Dark, atmospheric passages create a bleak landscape that is complemented with clean movements of overflowing emotion. Always challenging and ever transforming, Opeth's sonic soundscapes convey emotion with a frightening clarity.

Perhaps the perfect band to accompany Opeth on their latest tour is Nevermore, who have also just released a new album, "This Godless Endeavor." Hailing from Seattle, Wash., Nevermore continues to push the envelope for metal.

"This Godless Endeavor," Nevermore's sixth full-length release, builds off of their previous effort, "Enemies of Reality," pushing them ever deeper into the realms of musical genius. Fan's who missed Nevermore's shorter set on Dave Mustaine's "Gigantour" will now have the opportunity to experience them in an intimate club setting.

Fronted by the powerful vocal force of Warrel Dane and propelled forward by the furious shredding of Jeff Loomis, Nevermore's live set is a riveting display of pure technical fury. The addition of ex-Testament member Steve Smyth as a full-time guitarist has only increased this intensity.

In the vein of thrash legends Megadeth, Nevermore delivers rapid-fire riffs and intricate soloing. Set to the cynical lyrics of Dane, Nevermore's technical yet melodic songs are sure to elicit the metal staples of head banging and mosh pit mayhem.

This Sunday is a rare opportunity indeed to witness two of metal's most talented and visionary artists. Several metal styles will be on display. Opeth brings their blend of Swedish death and progressive metal. Nevermore will perform masterful neo-thrash. Also, Los Angeles' Fireball Ministry will open the evening with a serving of stoner-doom metal. Celebrate the Halloween season with a dark offering to the metal gods. Tickets are $18 in advance and $20 at the door.

Must-see movies to make your weekend

MOVIE from page 5

in his quest for provocative content, he happens upon a pirate broadcast of an obsure, supposedly authentic snuff program called "Videodrome." His compulsive viewing of the show produces a tumor in his brain which gives him horrifying hallucinations, and soon Wrenn is entangled in a government conspiracy enacted to cleanse the perverts from society.

Canadian director David Cronenberg's masterpiece, "Videodrome" simultaneously fascinates and repels with unforgettable imagery (Wrenn gorily inserting a videocassette into an opening in his chest, a man messily ripping open and dissolving) and eerily plausible (and, arguably, prophetic) theories about humanity's increasingly technological nature. It is also an ingenious commentary on the repressive moral watch dogging of the Reagan era.

"Cannibal Holocaust"

A team of four young documentary filmmakers — Fay Daniels, Jack Anders, Mark Tomaso and director Alan Yates — travel to the jungles of South America to film the shocking lifestyles of the Yanomamo, a primitive tribe of cannibals. The tyrannical Yates pushes his crew to the absolute limit in the name of art, and his subjects, the Yanomamos, even further. Yates's fanatical approach spreads to the other members of the crew, whose catalog of atrocities include the rape of tribal women, the senseless slaughter of the tribe's livestock and the razing of their village. Such violence incurs the dormant wrath of the tribe, who avenge these injustices by brutally slaughtering the crew, all of which is inadvertently caught on their camera. Months later, New York University Professor Harold Monroe retrieves their footage, and brings it to a New York City studio to shock a panel of prospective buyers.

One of the most brutally honest, harrowing films ever made. Decades before the lily-livered "Blair Witch Project" toyed with the "found footage" concept, Italian Director Ruggero Deodato perfected it in his masterpiece. One of the most controversial and banned films of all time, "Cannibal Holocaust" is one of the few films that can truly be termed horrific. Its portrayal of the blackest recesses of humanity is absolutely relentless. There are no laughs to soften the scenes of bowel-liquefying horror, and the film is too technically polished to indulge in unintentional hilarity.

Simply put, "Cannibal Holocaust" is an extreme film for extreme people who have an insatiable, fearless appetite for knowing the whole truth — the good and the bad — about humanity. It will bring you to truth as it brings you to your knees. Twenty-five years later, "Cannibal Holocaust" remains as deeply disturbing — and important — as ever. Tread carefully.

Despite these five films' relative obscurity, they can be easily obtained through most mainstream sources such as Newbury Comics and Best Buy. Newbury Comics stocks a wide range of cult horror films and you should be able to find the deluxe two-disc DVD special edition of "Cannibal Holocaust" there, as well as "I Drink Blood." Check Best Buy for the other three titles, or online

BRAND NAME WAREHOUSE'S

CLOTHING SALE

Jeans	from	$16.99
Tanks		$5.99
Tops	from	$7.99
Shorts	from	$7.99
Pants	from	$12.99
Sweaters	from	$12.99
Outerwear	from	$24.99
Accessories	from	$0.99

OCT. 30 - TO NOV. 3
SUNDAY: 5PM - 9PM
MON - THURS: 10AM TO 9PM
LINCOLN CAMPUS CENTER AUDITORIUM

Write for ARTS!
Call us at 545-1361 and ask for Matt, Mackenzie or Ian

Power play a key this weekend

SPECIAL TEAMS from page 10

According to Cahoon, clearing the puck is the area of the penalty kill where the Minutemen are much improved. In order to have a truly successful penalty kill, it is important that you keep the puck out of your zone. The obvious thing with that is, if you keep the puck out of your zone, it cuts down on the opposing team's shots and therefore takes pressure off the goalie and defense.

"We've really worked hard on clearing the puck because that was our single biggest weakness last year," Cahoon noted. "You can't do a good job killing a penalty and then give them the puck back in the same sequence and give them a second chance."

The Maroon and White will have to keep up their early success on the penalty kill this weekend against the Wildcats and the Black Bears. Both UNH and Maine are in the top five in power play goals and power play percentage in Hockey East.

So far in 2005, UNH has scored seven power play goals in just four games, good for a second place tie in the conference. That number gives them a .179 power play percentage which ranks them fourth in Hockey East.

Saturday night's opponent, the Black Bears, who just so happen to be the hottest team in the nation, rank first in power play goals and second in power play percentage. Maine has scored nine power play goals this season in 40 opportunities, good for a .225 power play percentage.

"Every Hockey East game is critical," Cahoon said. "It's exciting opening up Hockey East and having the first games at the Mullins Center. That puts a lot of energy in the building. People will want to come out and see [UNH and Maine] as much as they'll want to see where we're at."

Senior forward Jaime Solon and the Minutemen have converted just three of 20 power play opportunities through three games this season, ranking them fifth in Hockey East. They haven't scored in their last six power play chances.

Two wins and in for Minutewomen

WOMEN'S SOCCER from page 10

our calculators out figuring out how we get in," senior captain Lindsey Bellini said. "If we win both games, we're definitely in. We have to be positive and work together. If we remain positive and stay together, we have a good shot."

By the way, Charlotte is on a roll. It hasn't lost since dropping a 2-1 decision to Duquesne on Oct. 2. The Niners are led by midfielder Lindsey Beam, a likely All-A-10 first-teamer, who has twice been named to the Soccer Buzz Elite Team of the Week. She leads the Niners with four goals and 17 assists for 25 points.

Stopping her and other dynamic players is a huge task. UMass coach Jim Rudy says he hasn't gotten a consistent scouting report this week.

"I'm not sure [how to stop them] until I get there," Rudy said. "I've been told [they run a] 4-3-3, 4-4-2 ... they say they're a very solid team, and they've run the same lineup all year long right down to the substitutions and the times that they go in."

The Niners also happen to be big in the air. The Minutewomen will try to counteract that with a big player of their own in 5-foot-9-inch freshman Vanessa Patry. She has become a very nice set-up woman for speedy forward Britt Canfield, and has helped UMass win more headers this season.

Sunday, the Minutewomen will travel to Richmond, Va., where they will be facing off against a Richmond team that hasn't had a favorable season but would love nothing more than to eliminate someone else's hopes.

With a 2-4-1 record in the A-10, the Spiders have to hope for the worst and play like they've never played before to be considered for the A-10 Tourney, hence, the heightened importance of Sunday. The Spiders boast a tough final weekend in facing top-seeded Rhode Island before hosting UMass in its final home game of the year.

Richmond has never been a team to blow teams away with goals. That was put on display last season when there was a five-way tie with three goals each for the team's leading scorer. The Spiders still made the A-10 Tournament as the fourth seed. This year, the low leading scorer honor belongs to freshman Jessie Wolfe, who has four goals and two assists for 10 points.

Sophomore Kaelyn Caldwell and the Minutewomen will clinch an Atlantic 10 Tournament berth with a pair of wins over conference opponents Charlotte and Richmond this weekend.

Sox and Epstein have 'made progress'

BOSTON (AP) — Boston Red Sox general manager Theo Epstein, whose contract expires Monday, and President Larry Lucchino reported progress after they met yesterday.

They issued a brief joint statement one day after the Boston Globe reported that Epstein had turned down an offer on Tuesday of at least three years at $1.2 million per year.

"We had a meeting over lunch today to continue our discussions and to conduct other business as well," the joint statement said. "We made progress, but we anticipate no further statement until there is something to announce. We are hopeful that these discussions will work out for the best. In the meantime, we continue 'business as usual.'"

They said the statement was issued in response to many media inquiries.

Lucchino, Epstein and team owner John Henry did not respond to e-mails from The Associated Press.

The Globe report cited a major league executive who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Five weeks before his 29th birthday, Epstein became the youngest general manager in baseball history under a three-year contract that paid about $350,000 a year.

The offer he reportedly rejected this week is much higher than that but less than the offer the Red Sox made in 2002 to Oakland general manager Billy Beane five years at about $2.5 million a year before he decided to stay with the Athletics, and the Red Sox turned to Epstein.

For the first time in their history, the Red Sox reached the playoffs in each of Epstein's three seasons and, last year, won their first World Series championship since 1918. In 2003, they lost in the seventh game of the Al championship series to the New York Yankees in seven games and, this year, were swept by the Chicago White Sox in three games in the Al division series.

Negotiations on a new contract intensified after the Red Sox were eliminated.

Epstein, a lifelong Red Sox fan who grew up near Fenway Park, worked previously for two teams where Lucchino was president and CEO, beginning as an intern with the Baltimore Orioles in 1992. Lucchino moved on to San Diego in 1995 and Epstein went there as part of the team's baseball staff in 1997. He was director of baseball operations for the Padres before joining the Red Sox as an assistant general manager after a group headed by Henry took over ownership on Feb. 27, 2002.

-Associated Press

Homecoming of sorts for UM's Narus

SWIMMING from page 10

For one woman in particular, Christa Narus, Stony Brook's arrival at UMass' pool will be a homecoming away from home.

Aside from winning the 200-meter individual medley, the 5-foot-6-inch butterfly/freestyler was raised in Stony Brook, N.Y. She attended Ward Melville High School, where she was a four-time All-New York and an All-American her senior year.

When asked about the special degree a meet like this holds, Narus was precise.

"Yeah, I'd say," Narus said. "I know a lot of people that swim on the team. I know the coach. My parents are coming up."

"It's a little awkward, knowing the Stony Brook coach wanted her there," Newcomb said. "Being a Long Island person, it is a homecoming away from home. It may be a little awkward also being in maroon and white instead of [red, blue and white]."

But that's the only element, it seems, that will be awkward. Newcomb is pleased with her quick adjustment in the water from high school to collegiate level.

"She has improved her breast stroke, which was really her weakness in the [individual medley]," Newcomb said. "We've got her in a great place right now for this early in the season as far as what we're trying to do to change her stroke. I was real pleased to see the way she started out, as far as her first swim, really."

Sloan and Narus were the only UMass swimmers to take first in any event at U-Conn.

For the divers, both men and women, Stony Brook will be their first test in the waters. Leading the divers again this season should be Reuben Rappe, who last season as a freshman finished 16th in the Zone A NCAA Regionals.

"Again, it's not how they compete in October, it's what they're learning and where they're going, and the long term of what they're going to be doing in February," Newcomb said. "I expect them to come in with solid performances, but not with the highest of degree of difficulty that they're going to have later on, but getting on the boards, getting comfortable."

Yale axes tailgating activities for games

By Matt Apuzzo
Associated Press

NEW HAVEN, Conn. Yale University is banning drinking games from this year's football game against Harvard and will shut down all tailgate parties after halftime, the latest rules aimed at preventing binge drinking outside one of college football's oldest rivalry games.

The Nov. 19 contest, known simply as "The Game," dates to 1875 and draws nearly as many fans outside the stadiums as inside. Students and alumni frequently fill U-Haul trucks with beer kegs, grills and hard alcohol and set up elaborate buffet spreads under party tents.

"Tailgating at 'The Game' is huge," said Yale senior Alan Kennedy-Shaffer. "Everyone will go to the tailgate and only some of them will go to the game. Some will stay at the tailgate until they get kicked out."

Some students and alumni said they worry the changes will hurt the character of a game that for many is a day-long family and class reunion. Tailgate parties come in all styles, with some catering to the domestic beer crowd and others offering champagne and shrimp cocktail.

"Unless you have a personal interest in the game – you're a former player or you have a child who's playing – it's as much about the tailgating as it is about the game of football," said Brian Ameche, a 1975 Yale graduate.

Harvard administrators tightened their rules last year, requiring wristbands to prove people were old enough to drink. The school also limits the amount of alcohol brought into the tailgate area.

Yale followed suit this week, releasing eight new rules that take effect Nov. 5 when Yale faces Brown and will remain in place for all home games. All tailgating parties must shut down by the end of halftime, drinking games are banned and each residential college is allowed only one U-Haul, which must have a permit.

"Our major concern is for the health and safety of our students," said Betty Trachtenberg, Yale's dean of student affairs. "Perhaps over the years those concerns had been lost sight of."

Harvard athletic department spokesman Chuck Sullivan said the university wanted to prevent tailgating parties from spilling over into nearby neighborhoods. As the parties have grown, he said, so have concerns about the school's community image.

"The trend lately, people are recognizing this is an event, to see a good football game for bragging rights, but also as an event for students to go and have a good time," he said.

Last year, Boston Police issued a number of citations for underage drinking and threatened to ban student tailgating if the parties could not be controlled. New Haven Police spokeswoman Bonnie Winchester said that while there have been no "remarkable" problems in recent years, the department welcomes Yale's new rules.

For Yale, banning drinking games was an effort to encourage responsible drinking, Trachtenberg said.

"We don't want to send hordes of students to the hospital after each game. Drinking games are meant to get people drunk," she said.

College officials said Yale police will strictly enforce the rules. Drinking game paraphernalia, including the tables used to play the popular game beer pong, are also banned.

For alumni, the biggest change will be the early closing time for tailgate parties, said Patrick Ruwe, a 1983 graduate and the president of the Yale Football Association Board. Ruwe was unaware the university was considering changes.

"I think it will have an effect on the character of the game, independent of alcohol, just for tailgating with families," Ruwe said.

Ameche, a former Bulldog defensive end, said university officials should be encouraging personal responsibility rather than tightening regulations.

"I doubt most people who plan on tailgating the entire day will even know that they'll be thrown out at halftime, so it could be a fairly interesting situation," he said.

If you are interested in writing for SPORTS email: sports@daily collegian.com

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-337-4233
Schedule for Friday 10/28 and Sunday 10/30 thru Thursday 11/3
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Harry Potter Tickets for 11/18 Now On Sale!
Schedule for SATURDAY 10/29 ONLY
The Legend of Zorro (PG) 1:00 4:05 7:20 10:10*
Sneak Preview Zathura (PG) 5:00
Saw 2 (R) 2:00 4:50 7:40 10:10*
The Wallace and Gromit Movie(G) 1:35 3:55 6:45 9:05
The Weatherman (R) 1:15 4:25 7:00 9:35*
Wedding(R) 1:50 7:30
Prime (PG-13) 1:30 4:35 7:15 9:45*
In Her Shoes(PG13) 1:05 4:15 7:10 10:05
North Country (R) 1:20 4:10 7:05 10:00*
A History of Violence(R) 4:35 9:30
Doom (R) 1:10 4:20 7:25 9:50*
Flightplan (PG13) 1:55 7:45
Stay (R) 4:00 9:55*
Elizabethtown (PG13) 1:25 4:30 7:15 10:00
Senior Show 11/3 Legend of Zorro @ 10am
The Fog (PG13) 1:40 4:45 7:35 10:15
Friday Night Rewind 11/4 Batman @ Midnight
• NO PASSES NO SUPER SAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

The Empress Josephine
UPCOMING EVENTS
The Empress Josephine Weekend
Saturday, October 29th
10am- 4pm
Symposium
Queens, Queens, Queens & Empresses
Prayne Lecture Hall, Fayerweather Hall
Amherst College. FREE
Sunday, October 30th
2pm
Concert
Music from the Salon of the Empress Josephine
Soprano, flute, harp, and fortepiano
Rotherwas Gallery, Mead Art Museum
By reservation only, call 542-2335 FREE
Film Series begins Thursday, October 20th!
Call 542-2335 for more information or visit us on the web www.amherst.edu/mead
Art & Royal Identity
MEAD ART MUSEUM AMHERST COLLEGE
ON VIEW THROUGH DECEMBER 18TH

Free Rides on Halloween Weekend 10pm to 3am
Oct 28/29—Fri/Sat Call 548-9474 Sponsored by MERCYhouse know mercy.org

Tough weekend slate for UMass

HOCKEY from page 10

Friday night victory and a 3-3 tie on Saturday. It marked the first time in the 11-year history of the Whittemore Center that UNH failed to win a game during its opening home weekend.

UNH has had a tough time finding its offensive groove through its first four games of the season. Having lost Sean Collins and Preston Callander, who combined for 44 goals and 110 total points last season, the Wildcats are trying to figure out how to find the back of the net without two of the purest scorers in the program's history.

Even still, New Hampshire sports one of the best lines in all of college hockey again this year with the junior threesome of Brett Hemingway, Jacob MacIlraith and Daniel Winnik.

Maine, on the other hand, has been on fire during the first three weekends of the new season.

Showing no ill effects of losing star goalie Jimmy Howard to the Detroit Red Wings' system, the Black Bears have compensated nicely with the net minding tandem of freshman Ben Bishop and sophomore Matt Lundin.

During Maine's current four-game winning streak, Bishop is 3-0, with two of those victories against two-time defending national champion Denver. Not to be outdone, Lundin got his turn in net on Saturday and pitched a shutout in the team's 4-0 victory over Alabama-Huntsville.

"We know it's coming, and we're prepared for it," Cahoon said of the difficult task at hand this weekend. "We know the quality of the teams we are going to play against. Certainly, we're going into [the weekend] knowing if we put our best foot forward and if we're thorough in everything we're trying to execute, we can have success.

"It's just a matter of who plays better. We cannot play poorly this weekend and succeed. We know that. That's a given. We have to play at a higher level than they do, and that is the challenge."

Cahoon's main concern of late has been his team's inability to finish the puck on scoring opportunities.

And after putting a significant amount of pressure on Holy Cross last week, especially in the first period, Cahoon is stressing that his team creates more second and third chances to finish the play instead of taking one shot and losing possession of the puck.

Regardless, the Mass Attack can put its non-conference worries of the past two weeks behind it by opening up its Hockey East schedule with the chance to make a serious statement to the rest of the league.

"Our first objective in our schedule is to have a successful league season to put ourselves in position for the playoffs and hopefully home ice in the playoffs," Cahoon said. "Every one of those games is magnified because of that."

-Associated Press

Sophomore forward P.J. Fenton and the Minutemen square off with UNH, which was eliminated by eventual champion Denver in the second round of the NCAA Tournament at the Mullins Center last year, and Maine during their opening weekend of Hockey East games.

Pats corner hits IR for second time

FOXBOROUGH (AP) – Patriots cornerback Tyrone Poole was placed on injured reserve for the second consecutive season Thursday, leaving a roster vacancy for Sunday night's game against the Buffalo Bills.

The opening could be filled by linebacker Tedy Bruschi, who began practicing last week eight months after suffering a mild stroke. New England must settle on its 53-man roster for Sunday's game by 4 p.m. Saturday.

Before Bruschi practiced Thursday for the third time this week, coach Bill Belichick said he hadn't suffered any setbacks.

"He's done what we've asked him to do. I don't think that he's had any problem with it," Belichick said. A decision on when he will play will be made when "we're sure it's going to be the right decision," Belichick said.

Poole, the fourth Patriots defensive back placed on the season-ending injured reserve list, stretched with his teammates at the start of practice Wednesday but wasn't on the field early in Thursday's session.

He hasn't played since injuring his ankle in the season opener against Oakland. Last season he started four of the first five games at right cornerback but played in only one after that before going on injured reserve Dec. 17.

That followed a strong first season with the Patriots when he started all 19 games, including the playoffs, and tied for the team lead with six interceptions. Poole, 33, played with Carolina, Indianapolis and Denver before signing as an unrestricted free agent March 11, 2003.

Besides Poole, cornerback Chad Scott and safeties Rodney Harrison and Guss Scott are on injured reserve.

-Associated Press

Minutemen still alive in A-10

PELLAND from page 10

Spiders. They could quite possibly move from 12th in the conference to about three or four spots higher with one weekend to play in the regular season.

Granted, the two top teams, St. Louis and Duquesne, are playing great soccer, but after them, the list drops off. Not to mention, the Minutemen hung with Duquesne for much of their 1-0 loss to the Dukes on Oct. 14 in Pittsburgh.

That brings me to my next point. This team does not get blown out all that often. As a matter of fact, the only real blowout on the season was the 5-0 drubbing St. Louis gave them in St. Louis. Let it also be known that game was just two days after the battle with Duquesne. Ask the team how fun a weekend trip to Pittsburgh and St. Louis is.

The number of close games this team plays in is remarkable. All but four of the Minutemen's losses have been by two goals or more. That means five times they have been just one goal shy of changing the face of their season.

This team has the ability to play with just about anybody in the A-10. All they have to do is get it all working at once. However, that hasn't been all that easy for the team this season.

Injuries to senior captains Craig Canavan (who is missing the entire season with a neck injury), and Oral Bullen who missed extended time in the beginning of the season with an ankle injury, senior Ernie Billittier missing time due to an ankle injury and a shoulder injury to preseason starting goalkeeper Nick Billman has really made it hard on UMass this season.

In the absence of these guys, some of the younger ones have really taken it upon themselves to carry this team on its way to the A-10 tournament. Three that really stick out are freshman goalkeeper Zack Simmons and sophomores Matty Lemire and Kenny Cook.

These three guys seem to be right in the middle of the action in every game. They really help to make up a good, young core to this team.

UMass coach Sam Koch has been saying all year that this team can only get better, and he's right. That's not to say that they can't be good now, of course. But with the young guys they have and the leadership of this team getting healthy again, they can really play themselves into the thick of the division standings.

Jon Pelland is a Collegian columnist

Senior Oral Bullen and the Massachusetts Minutemen currently reside in 12th place in the Atlantic 10 men's soccer standings. With a few lucky breaks, UMass could find itself in the middle of the playoff picture.

Milloy returns to N.E.

By John Wawrow
Associated Press

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. – Wearing a Yankees cap and Buffalo Bills shirt, Lawyer Milloy has shed his Beantown past.

All that remains are the questions that come from the media, at times like this, when the Bills prepare for Sunday's game against the New England Patriots, the veteran safety's former team.

It's been two years since Milloy joined the Bills after the Patriots cut him days before the start of the 2003 season. And yet, the 10-year NFL veteran is still dogged by questions, in part because the two-time defending Super Bowl champion Patriots continue winning without him, and the Bills are still struggling.

"The only way I get passed that is by helping this team be successful," Milloy said this week. "My experiences there for seven years are definitely unforgettable for myself and my family. But I'm trying to create memories for myself here in Orchard Park."

To show how much he's trying, Milloy holds out his right hand, the one with the broken thumb that hasn't prevented him from missing a game this season.

"You look at my hand," Milloy said. "I'm a Bill."

Milloy was asked to make the key motivational speech during the weekly team meeting leading up to the New England game. If the Bills (3-4) are going to make something out of this season and snap a five-year playoff drought, it has to start against the division-rival Patriots (3-3).

Like Milloy, Buffalo has its own ghosts to overcome against New England, a team that has won three straight and eight of its last nine meetings against the Bills.

"I'd be sitting here and lying if I said I wasn't pumped up," Milloy said. "It's a place where we haven't been successful in the last couple of years. And I think we have to get through the mystique of the whole situation, the atmosphere, the banners, the fact that they're the world champions.

"We have to put our blinders on," he said.

Milloy, a four-time Pro Bowl selection, has been hampered by injuries in Buffalo.

He missed the first five games of last season with a broken forearm. Upon his return, Buffalo rallied from a 1-4 start to finish 9-7.

This season, Milloy broke his thumb against Tampa Bay in Week 2 but has barely missed a down while leading the team with 67 tackles. Bills free safety Troy Vincent ranks Milloy among the top safeties he's played with, and that includes Philadelphia's Brian Dawkins.

"He's not afraid to let you know his feelings. Just to play with him reminds me so much of Brian Dawkins in terms of the passion he brings to the game," Vincent said. "Watching him from afar before and now having the opportunity to play alongside him has been one of the highlights of my career."

Milloy's strong performance this season hasn't been enough for a defense that's proven porous against the run and missing its top player, linebacker Takeo Spikes, out for the season with a torn Achilles' tendon.

Milloy is unhappy with the defense's performance, especially after it couldn't make a key stop in allowing a season-worst 416 yards in a 38-17 loss at Oakland last week.

"It's definitely not good enough," Milloy said. "I don't know if it's a lack of focus or whatever. ... But as bad as that game was last week, we have an opportunity to accomplish everything we want to going into the break."

The Bills enter their bye after the New England game.

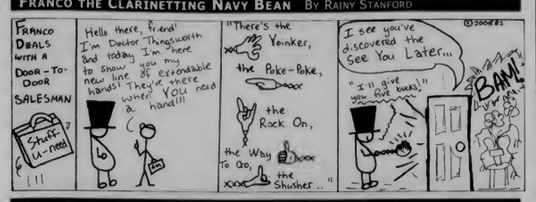
Meanwhile, what stings Milloy the most is how he parted ways with the Patriots, cut because of his hefty contract. It didn't seem to matter to New England that Milloy was one if its leaders, had started 106 consecutive games, enjoyed five seasons with 100 or more tackles and helped the Patriots win the Super Bowl in 2002.

Patriots coach Bill Belichick then questioned Milloy's attitude, referring to him as a "selfish" and "negative leader sometimes," in a book published last year.

"I didn't read the book," Milloy said. "I have the memories. I've moved on."

And yet, he couldn't stop from defending himself by taking a poke at Belichick.

"If I'm a selfish leader, he should've let me go in the offseason instead of the Monday before the opening game," Milloy said.



Former New England safety Lawyer Millow has made a new home in Orchard Park, N.Y., as a Buffalo Bill. He is still bitter at Patriots coach Bill Belichick.

DO YOU LIKE MONEY???
$$$$$$$$
DO YOU HAVE A CAR?
CAN YOU DELIVER PAPERS AT 7AM?
$$$$$$$$
NORTHAMPTON DRIVER WANTED
CALL 413.545.3500, ASK FOR TOM

Comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
From the movies "Deuce Bigalow: European Gigolo" and "Undercover Brother"
EDDIE GRIFFIN
NOV. 5TH
Host of Comedy Central's "Insomniac"
DAVE ATTELL
THIS SATURDAY!
7PM Only!
NOV. 12TH
Also known as "Dr. Dirty"
JOHN VALBY

FRANCO THE CLARINETTING NAVY BEAN By Rainy Stanford

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Kryzkowski

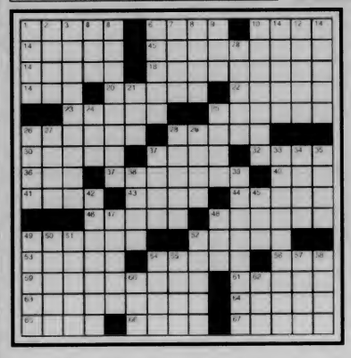
FUNCTIONAL DYSTOPIA By Zeid Rusan

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"The seaweed is always greener in somebody else's lake."



—The Little Mermaid

ACROSS
1 Employed
6 Hot goods
10 Mouth oil
14 Last of a series
15 Jump from a plane
17 Like baby fingers
18 Facial cosmetic
19 PC bailout?
20 Model-building wood
22 Full of spirit
23 Rain lane
25 Not on the level
26 More frisky
28 Solitly in music
30 Phi Beta
31 Sharer's word
32 What a relief
36 Fury
37 Heyerdahl's craft
40 Be in debt
41 Hand out
43 Places
44 Cervical parts
46 Worthless
48 Gunshot
49 Staircase elements
52 Money owed
53 Susan Lucci role
54 Small woods
56 Dancer Calloway
59 Proper fellows
61 Avignon's river
63 Never-ending
64 Opened wide
65 Ranked player
66 Adam's grandson
67 Frets

DOWN
1 Optimistic feeling
2 "___ in the Morning"
3 Royal treatment
4 Faberge item
5 Dawn's first light
6 Magic charm
7 Customs
8 Field of study
9 Neon or chlorine
10 Lacking depth
11 Financial checkup
12 Potbelly, for one
13 Used a Singer
16 Sequence
21 Put on TV
24 Domino spot
25 Assignment
26 Fat-free milk
27 Scale down
28 Glazier's compound
29 Garden bloom
31 Cross to bear
33 Astrological forecast
34 Washstand item
35 Sunset direction
38 Numbered composition
39 North Atlantic hazards
42 Chosen by vote
45 Make a decision
47 Face-to-face exams
48 Clergyman's title: abbr.
49 Philbin of TV
50 Rich or Worth
51 Inasmuch as 52 Things to avoid
54 Fed
55 Nevada city
57 From scratch
58 Four-posters
60 Language suffix
62 Fedora e.g.

Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

INTRODUCING:
TOASTED HOAGIES
GRILLED GRINDERS
PRESSED PO' BOYS
SEARED SUBS
FREE DELIVERY FOR YOU
andiamo
256 • FOOD
www.andiamo.cc

Submit your comic!
e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You will need a lot of paper towels tonight.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You are a kind and giving person who enjoys helping others.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Stop playing bongo drums indoors. All your neighbors hate you.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Don't get a pet fish. You will probably kill it within a matter of days.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
If you sharpen that pencil anymore you won't be able to hold it.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your mom will call really early tomorrow morning and wake you up.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't forget to floss after you eat that poppy seed bagel.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You need to start remembering to wear your gloves.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You will hook up with your crush this weekend.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Your hair dryer will blow a fuse on Saturday.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Skip all your classes today. Start drinking now.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You will have a super fun Halloween weekend.

★ Submit your comic ★
e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$600 Group Fundraiser Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising programs Equals $1,000-$3,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for up to $600 in bonuses when you schedule your fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments, Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

EMPLOYMENT

Bilingual Tutors The Amherst Public Schools has openings for bilingual tutors who are fluent in English and one of the following languages: Arabic, Cape Verde/Portuguese, Nepali, Polish, Swahili, Turkish, Urdu, and Vietnamese. Please contact Muriel Atwell or Dr. Debbie Zacarian at 362-1857 if you are or you know someone who is interested in working as a bilingual tutor during the school day. Bilingual tutors earn $8/hour and usually work between 10-12 hours per week. Volunteers are most welcome to apply. Applicants may also apply for this work by going to the Amherst Public Schools website at www.arps.org, clicking on English Language Learners Program on the left side of the school's homepage, and securing an application in the tutor section of the English Language Learners site.

Work Study – Admin Asst Must have computer skills and know Access and Excel. 10 hours per week max. $8.19-9.48 hr. Application on line at www.lsse.org Email application to: bilzb@amherstma.org

Rent us your ears! Listening experiments $10/hr English must be your first language email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Kitchen help wanted. Must be able to work 20hrs/week. Apply at DP Dough Downtown Amherst, MA 01003

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8.00 Hr. 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location – NO SALES! Night & wknd; shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

EMPLOYMENT

Web programmer with experience with graphics design wanted for work in the Office of ALANA Affairs. Up to $10.00/an hour. Apply at office in room 302 in Student Union or email ofalana@stuaf.umass.edu

FURNITURE

Sealy Mattress Set KING $575.00 QUEEN $465.00 FULL $365.00 TWIN $195 Save 50% or more off store prices. For more details call 215-431-9584

ROOM FOR RENT

Nice room in Echo Hill. Bnsline. Everything included internet $350.00 413-687-0430

SERVICES

Legal Questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

ACT NOW – SPRING BREAKERS Book early & Save! Free meals/parties by 11/7. Lowest prices. Be a rep & TRAVEL FREE! Get the ultimate hookups with STA TRAVEL 413-256-1261.

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Collegian Advertising. Call 545-3500 or come visit us in the campus center basement between 9 & 5

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 28, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

National powers come to Amherst

UM hosts Wildcats and Maine

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

No one on the Massachusetts hockey team (1-2-0) is asking for any sympathy after last Friday's stunning 3-2 defeat to the hands of the Holy Cross Crusaders, not when two of the best teams in the country are coming to town this weekend.

After the Minutemen squandered a 2-1 lead in the final four minutes at the Mullins Center seven days ago, they knew that no team around college hockey would start to feel bad for them, especially not the No. 13 New Hampshire Wildcats (1-2-1), who will be in Amherst tonight or the No. 5 Maine Black Bears (5-1-0), who will arrive in the Pioneer Valley tomorrow night.

UMass could only do one thing: Move on and have a great week of practice to prepare for its first slate of Hockey East games, and UMass coach Don Cahoon was more than pleased with the way his squad has rebounded.

"The week of practice has been very good," Cahoon said. "There has been a lot of effort and a lot of hard work, so I expect that we will play at a high level this weekend. Whether that high level is high enough to beat the two teams this weekend, that remains to be seen, but I know we'll play at a high level."

Last weekend, the Wildcats hosted WCHA power North Dakota for a pair in Durham, and the Fighting Indigenous People escaped Lake Whitt with a 3-2

See HOCKEY on page 8

Sophomore defenseman Mike Kostka and the Massachusetts Minutemen need to regroup after last Friday's 3-2 loss to Holy Cross, as the Maroon and White welcome No. 13 New Hampshire tonight and No. 5 Maine tomorrow night.

Special teams to play key role

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

This is a big weekend for the Massachusetts hockey team (1-2) as it marks the opening of their Hockey East schedule against powerhouses No. 13 New Hampshire (1-2-1) tonight and No. 5 Maine (5-1-0) tomorrow.

So far in the early going, it's been up and down for the Minutemen. They lost their season opener to St. Lawrence but came back the next night to defeat Clarkson. Then last Friday night, the Crusaders of Holy Cross came in and shocked the Minutemen by winning the game with two late third-period goals.

One thing has remained constant for the Maroon and White this season, and that is its penalty kill. Out of a possible 20 chances for their opponents, the Minutemen have only allowed one puck to reach the back of the net. They have come out of shorthanded situations unscathed 95 percent of the time.

Their efforts this season have earned them the fourth best penalty kill in Hockey East and sixth in the nation. UMass coach Don Cahoon says his team's penalty kill success stems from some tinkering he and his coaching staff did in the offseason.

"Number one, we've changed what we do. We're much more aggressive," he said. "Last year, it was more passive aggressive, and I don't think we ever got ourselves under control in that setting."

First year assistant coach Red Gendron, who previously held an assistant coaching position at Maine where he won a national championship in 1993 and was an assistant coach for the New Jersey Devils when they won the Stanley Cup in 1995, 2000 and 2003, was assigned the task of working with the penalty killing unit in an effort to improve upon the Minutemen's mark last season.

"I brought [Gendron] in as a professional teacher, and he's done a terrific job with the make up of that group," Cahoon said. "We did a good job killing penalties last year, but what we didn't do was clear the puck so we spent a lot of time in our zone."

See SPECIAL TEAMS on page 7

Tournament fate is on the line

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

It's do-or-die time for the Massachusetts men's soccer team. In order to keep its A-10 Tournament hopes alive, the Minutemen need to have a big weekend against conference newcomer Charlotte on Friday and Richmond on Sunday.

Going into the weekend, the Maroon and White stand in 12th place in the Atlantic 10, six spots out of a playoff berth.

Coming into the weekend, the Minutemen are coming off a successful weekend where they tied George Washington 2-2 on Friday and came back to finish the job to beat La Salle in a 1-0 back-and-forth battle on Sunday.

UMass led much of the match against the Colonials until it squandered a two goal lead and was forced to play extras. In the game, freshman Costa Tsolirides notched his first goal of his collegiate career.

All it took Sunday was a fine performance from freshman goalkeeper Zack Simmons and senior Ernie Billitier's first goal of the season to put away the Explorers.

Charlotte enters the game at Rudd Field on Friday coming off a scoreless tie with Richmond on Oct. 22 in Virginia. The game was the fifth time the 49ers had gone into overtime this season, including three out of their last four matches. Despite having 20 shots on the day they couldn't get the winning goal in the net to end it.

Today will mark the first ever meeting between the 49ers and the Minutemen.

The same can't be said for the Spiders. UMass and Richmond have played each other five times over the years. The Minutemen hold a 1-1-3 record against Richmond, including a 3-2 loss last year in Virginia.

The Spiders scored two goals in a matter of two minutes to take the lead in the first half. An eventual third goal in the 69th minute stalled the UMass comeback attempt.

This weekend closes out a shaky season at Rudd Field for the Minutemen. In 2005, they have gone 3-3-1 on their home turf.

If UMass is to be successful this weekend, it is going to need all phases of its game to come together. A key player this weekend for UMass is senior captain Oral Bullen.

Bullen has had a quiet season coming off the ankle injury he suffered against Hartford on Sept. 13. Since he returned to action, Bullen has only recorded two assists. Before his injury, it looked like Bullen would have a big season as he had two goals and one assist in three games.

See PELLAND on page 8

Mike DeSantis and the Minutemen have a pair of key conference games on their slate this weekend with Charlotte and Richmond coming to Amherst. UMass has struggled at Rudd Field this season with just a 3-3-1 record. DeSantis has scored one goal this year.

UM soccer still has hopes

Take it upon yourself to look past the record. It doesn't tell the entire story. It doesn't say how the Massachusetts men's soccer team (4-9-1 1-3-1 Atlantic 10) has endured countless injuries and how breaks for the team are few and far between.

Jon Pelland

With its success last weekend against George Washington and La Salle, this team is still in the middle of the playoff hunt in the A-10. This weekend, the Minutemen are taking on Charlotte and Richmond, who are a combined 2-2-6 in the conference.

Don't write the Minutemen off just yet.

As of today, the Maroon and White sit in 12th place in the A-10, six spots out of the playoffs. The conference tournament is attended by the top six teams in the league.

I'll say it here first; this team will be one of the six to be playing well into November.

UMass is one of five teams in the conference that has one or fewer wins. That's five out of 14 teams, just over a third of the conference doesn't have more than one win in league play. I think it's safe to say the A-10 isn't exactly at its strongest right now.

Say the Minutemen sweep their series this weekend with the 49ers and Roughing it in N.C.

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

You might say the Massachusetts women's soccer team will be doing some changing on the fly as it heads into the final weekend of its regular season.

After the Minutewomen (7-8-1 4-3-0 Atlantic 10) touched down at Charlotte Douglas International Airport in Charlotte, N.C., yesterday afternoon, they received a bit of a surprise when they checked into their hotel.

Yes, they're still playing the Charlotte 49ers (9-7-0 5-2-0 A-10) today and Richmond Spiders (4-9-3 2-4-1 A-10) on Sunday — two games that will decide UMass' postseason fate — but not everyone will have the luxury of two beds in each room. They'll be bringing in cots and pull-out sofas, something they're not accustomed to.

Whether or not that provides some inspiration is moot, really. To lock up the sixth and final spot in the 2005 A-10 tournament, it would be wise for the Maroon and White to come away victorious in both of these affairs.

As it stands now, three teams are in contention for the final spot. UMass is the leader of the three at 4-3 in conference play, ahead of St. Joe's (3-2-0) and Xavier (4-3-2). St. Joe's just happens to have received a blessing from the soccer Gods, finishing its regular season against A-10 cellar-mates Fordham and Temple. Xavier's match this weekend against Eastern Kentucky means nothing to the seeding, having already completed A-10 play, so the Musketeers will sit back with their fingers crossed.

So basically, UMass needs to get at least one win to stay in this thing. The other match ought to be a tie at least to put them in the driver's seat. And who better to fight for every last inch against teams that are playing for something just as important?

With Rhode Island and Saint Louis having already clinched the top two spots for the A-10 tourney, the 49ers are next in line to clinch third. That would make them the home team in the tourney, and perhaps some home field advantage will follow.

Charlotte wants the home field. UMass wants to get into the field. It's an interesting situation.

"I don't think we want it to be like last year, with

See WOMEN'S SOCCER on page 7

UMass ready to dive into action

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts swimmers got off to a good start two weekends ago, making some impressive strides — especially with the youth — at the Connecticut Invitational.

It usually takes a meet or two to get used to competitive swimming again, but no scores were kept at that UConn invite. This weekend at UMass' home-opener against Stony Brook, a team they saw at UConn, the races — and points — will count.

"Obviously, when the scoreboard's working, there's going to be a little more pressure, little more excitement, little more effort," UMass men's coach Russ Yarworth said. "Certainly, no coach wants to lose, so I want to win, too.

"But that is not always the objective in a sport like swimming. I'm not going to win the battle, but lose the war. Winning the little battles along the way is nice, but we want to be prepared for the [Atlantic 10] championships."

Hence, the two-way street predicament for UMass. The Minutemen want to keep their prestige as an A-10 powerhouse intact, but at the same time don't want to show up poorly in their home pool.

For the men, they have the rigor of what has so far been a stellar freshman class. In his first collegiate meet two weekends ago at the UConn Invitational, freshman Brad Sloan won the 500-meter freestyle event with a time of 4:56.94, his best lap being his first at 27.91 seconds, to lead the Minutemen on the day. He was the only one of the men to win an event that day.

"I'm really, really enthused with where we're at, at this point after six weeks," Yarworth said of his freshmen. "I think there's been a great learning curve. I think the fitness level and the conditioning level has really improved. Now what we're going to work on is teaching them how to race – how to do smart things when they race."

For the women, the premise is the same: Keep your eye on the prize, but don't lose your footing in the process.

"We've got them at a point where they're very physically broken down. They're working hard every day they come in, really committing to the long-term success of what we're doing," UMass women's coach Bob Newcomb said. "We are looking at February."

See SWIMMING on page 7

New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Monday, October 31, 2005 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXVI Issue 37

Town residents circulate new privacy petition

By John Fenuccio
Collegian Staff

Bookstores and libraries in Amherst are opposing the renewal of a section of the U.S. Patriot Act that allows authorities to search Internet and reading records without notice.

Section 215 of the Patriot Act, enacted as a response to the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001 is set to expire at the end of this calendar year. Section 215 specifically allows searches of library, financial, phone, medical, video-rental and church records without prior notice.

The government argues that section 215 allows necessary access to private documents in aiding the identification of possible terrorists and terrorist activity. However, many Amherst citizens believe that the broad nature of section 215 gives the government too much power and infringes on their civil rights.

"We need to limit the excessive power of section 215 of the Patriot Act, which violates the civil rights of library users by letting the government acquire information about what they read and search on the Internet," said Marjorie Hess, a librarian at Amherst Public Library.

Hess says libraries are greatly affected by this particular part of the Patriot Act because fear of investigation can cause some people to stop using the library resources.

Food for Thought Books, a local Amherst bookstore has taken a step to prevent the section's renewal by starting a petition against it.

Erica Arthur an employee of Food For Thought said, "I

See PRIVACY on page 3

Sorority members learn about fire safety

By Nicole Leete
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Panhellenic Council hosted a fire safety workshop for University sorority chapters yesterday at the Iota Gamma Upsilon house.

The workshop was organized in response to recent incidents involving chapter facility fires and fire safety violations, which have caused some fraternity houses to close down.

The council's president, senior Morgan Marconi, worked in conjunction with UMass Fire Safety Officer Mike Swain and the Student Volunteer Force of the Amherst Fire Department Engine 3 to pilot this new program.

"We hope to improve fire safety at the university through these programs," said Marconi. "We want to create a safe atmosphere for the Greek community."

Two representatives from the seven sororities attended the meeting, as did the Panhellenic Council Executive Board.

Environmental Health and Safety Officer Ed Mentka and Swain outlined general fire safety tips and information. They told attendees that the most common causes of fires among college students are candles and cigarettes, despite the fact that both are banned from indoor use. Electrical wiring in the old Greek houses students that live in can also cause fires.

A table was set up to show objects that had been burned in fires on campus so that students could get an idea of how destructive the fire could be. There were burnt stereos, lamps, and an outlet strip that once had juice spilled on it.

The officers also stressed that, in the case of a fire, it is important to know where the nearest exits are and to have a meeting place away from the house where everyone can check in.

Swain pointed out misconceptions, or "TV fallacies," people hold, such as the amount of time people actually have to escape a building before the fire and smoke spread.

"There could be just a two minute window where you could be able to get out," said Swain, "Not like you see on TV."

Mike Bellino, a fire safety officer, led a demonstration on extinguisher safety. Many people do not read the label before they use the extinguisher, he said, and they are unable to work the device.

A common mistake, according to Bellino is failure to take out the pin, which is essential for making the extinguisher work. Sorority members were each able to put out an actual fire with a water extinguisher.

"I didn't even know where the fire extinguisher was in our house before this," said senior Marisa Donovan, a member of Alpha Chi Omega.

The next demonstration was a "smoke out." The fire department set up a simulated smoke machine, which pumped out a smoke-like, water-based mist. The girls crawled on the floor from one end of the pitch-black, smoky corridor to the other, with only the wall to guide them as they blindly moved forward.

"The key to finding your way is communication," said Swain. "Our officers are constantly talking when they're caught in the smoke, telling each other what to look out for."

In the future, the Panhellenic Council and the Fire Department hope to present this fire safety workshop to fraternities.

Sisters of the University of Massachusetts sororities gathered at the Iota Gamma Epsilon house to learn about fire safety in a free event sponsored by the Panhellenic Council.

Professor gives theory of 'Incompetent Design'

By Caleb Evan Lyons
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts geology professor may be creating a political battleground with his radical, anti-creationism campaign launched last week at the Geological Society of America's annual meeting.

Titling the campaign "Operation: Incompetent," Professor Donald Wise has taken up arms against the theory of "Intelligent Design," using a combination of scientific objectivity, logic, a discerning eye and a dose of humor.

Intelligent Design is a semi-scientific concept stating that there are certain aspects of anatomy, nature and evolution that are far too complex to have evolved to their current state and that someone or something had to have created them.

Creationism, which relies on the theory of Intelligent Design, is the idea that mankind, the universe and everything in it were all created by a higher power. Creationism is also currently being pushed by conservatives as an acceptable basis for education in public schools.

"The scientific community has been reasonably effective in arguments with the creationists on more sophisticated debate levels, but we have failed miserably in dealing with 'Joe Six Pack' and 'Betsy Biblestudy,' Wise said.

Wise is concerned about how widely accepted the Intelligent Design theory is in the scientific community, and how it will affect the educational and scientific world in the coming years. One worry is that people will not realize that Intelligent Design is essentially creationism disguised as scientific theory, Wise says.

To combat the Intelligent Design idea, Wise has come up with his own theory: "Incompetent Design." This theory challenges the idea of Intelligent Design with the argument that if the human body were designed, the designer did a terrible job in doing so.

Though it may seem to those who believe in creationism that Wise is calling "the creator" an incompetent architect who should be ashamed of his work, he was quick to explain the origins of such a manner of thinking and how it stemmed from an argument initially brought up by creationists themselves.

"Science, after 350 years has been sucked into an area they can't win; they keep being drawn into the religious philosophical debate, which is not where our strengths are," Wise said. "The intelligent designers then say in front of the supreme court, 'Oh no, we're not religion; we're just looking scientifically for the evidence of Intelligent Design.' Wise said that some examples of such incompetence are what he considers the three most prevalent examples of Incompetent Design.

"Picking on three examples of where evolution is very obvious, [the] pelvis slopes forward for convenient knuckle dragging like all the Great Apes, but only because of an extreme bend in our vertebrae do we walk upright. It's the kind of mistake no first year engineering student would make. So it's either evolution or bad design" Wise said.

Wise also explained that the human mouth also has far too many teeth, with wisdom teeth becoming impacted and needing removal. Wise also criticized the design of the sinus cavity, crammed between our expanded braincase and shortened muzzle, which is so easily clogged, that a plumber would be ashamed of it.

Wise is far from being the only opposition the educational community has put together against "Intelligent Design." Both the dean of the Stanford University School of Medicine and the interim president of Cornell University have recently spoken out against Intelligent Design arguing about the mixing of ideological values with scientific values, and the threat posed when such a theory is widely accepted by American scientists though it has no actual proof to back it up.

Wise also uses humor to get his point about Intelligent Design across. For example, in the "Operation: Incompetent" campaign, a potent metaphor is included, which symbolizes creationism as cow manure left on an open highway, and the theory of Intelligent Design as a highway

See INCOMPETENT on page 3

University of Massachusetts geology professor, Donald Wise, came up with the theory of "Incompetent Design".

Teacher of ESL given grant in honor of efforts

By Christina Baron
Collegian Staff

In recognition of her attempts to redesign the English as a Second Language program at the University of Massachusetts, Professor Ingrid Holm was recently awarded a grant from the Center for Teaching Faculty.

Holm, a faculty member of UMass for 22 years, and the Acting Director of the ESL program on campus, has spent the last year remodeling the ESL curriculum to emphasize "intercultural learning" and to stimulate her students to think globally in their pursuit of academic excellence, she said.

Despite the relatively small sum of the grant, ranging from $1,000 to $1,500, Holm said it was "the idea of support and recognition from the administration" that would be most valued by her department.

She said she plans to use the grant money to implement her new curriculum, purchase books to use as resources in the classroom, and to publish and distribute an annual journal designed and written by ESL students.

Holm believes that having the journal published will be rewarding for her students because it will give them a sense of value. The publication will also act as a representative of the multicultural, multilingual community of UMass, she said.

Kaitlin Barry, Holm's administrative assistant, said the ESL students are great assets to the university

See GRANT on page 3

Reid says Rove should resign, Bush should apologize for leak

By Nedra Pickler
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate Democratic leader said Sunday that presidential adviser Karl Rove should resign because of his role in the exposing of a CIA officer's identity, and a veteran Republican senator said President Bush needs "new blood" in his White House.

Rove has not been charged, but the investigation continues in the case that brought the indictment and resignation Friday of I. Lewis "Scooter" Libby, the top aide to Vice President Dick Cheney.

Senate Democratic leader Harry Reid said Sunday he was disappointed that Bush and Cheney responded to the indictment by lauding Libby. He suggested they should apologize for the leak that revealed the identity of covert CIA officer Valerie Plame, whose husband, former ambassador Joseph Wilson, has been critical of the Bush administration.

"First of all, the vice president issues this very terse statement praising Libby for all the great things he's done," Reid said. "Then we have the president come on camera a few minutes later calling him Scooter and what a great patriot he is."

"There has not been an apology to the American people for this obvious problem in the White House," Reid, D-Nev., told ABC's "This Week."

Sen. Chris Dodd, D-Conn., said on "Fox News Sunday" that Cheney should "come clean" about his involvement and why he discussed Plame with Libby before Libby spoke to reporters about her.

"What did the vice president know? What were his intentions?" Dodd said. "Now, there's no suggestion the vice president is guilty of any crime here whatsoever. But if our standard is just criminality, then we're never going to get to the bottom of this."

Democrats appearing on Sunday talk shows portrayed Libby's indictment as one of many serious problems surrounding the White House and one of several allegations raising questions about Republican ethics.

Republicans repeatedly said the charges have been made against only one individual and that Libby should be presumed innocent until proven guilty.

When it comes to public opinion, 46 percent of people surveyed for an ABC News-Washington Post poll said the level of ethics and honesty in the federal government had fallen with Bush as president — three times the number who said ethics and honesty had risen during that time.

Republican Sen. Trent Lott of Mississippi said Sunday that Bush should be on the lookout for "new blood, new energy, qualified staff, new people in administration." He said poor advice may have contributed to the failed nomination of Harriet Miers to the Supreme Court.

Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., said there "absolutely" should be an internal White House investigation. But he said allegations of illegal activity appeared to be focused only on Libby.

"I think the likelihood of Karl Rove being indicted in the future is virtually zero," Graham said on CBS' "Face the Nation."

A grand jury charged Libby on Friday with five felonies alleging obstruction of justice, perjury to a grand jury and making false statements to FBI agents. If convicted, he could face a maximum of 30 years in prison and $1.25 million in fines.

New bill would audit colleges for consistent tuition raises

By Doug Carlucci and James Riley Thompson, III
The Maneater (U. Missouri)

COLUMBIA, Mo. — An amendment to the Higher Education Act being considered this session would penalize colleges for consistent, large tuition increases.

U.S. Rep. Howard "Buck" McKeon of California proposed the amendment, which would set penalties for universities that consistently raise tuition at a rate higher than the "College Affordability Index" established by the law.

The amendment defines the index at twice the rate of inflation based on the Consumer Price Index, or CPI, which measures the cost of consumer goods in major urban areas.

Under the bill, "an institution that increases its tuition and fees more than two times the CPI for an interval of three years would have to provide an explanation of the factors contributing to the increase and a management and action plan on how to reduce increases in its costs and tuition fees," according to a news release by McKeon's office. McKeon's spokesman did not return a phone call Thursday afternoon.

According to the U.S. House of Representative's bill status and summary Web site, two House committees are still considering McKeon's bill.

If the university failed to comply with its plan to lower costs, it could be audited by the U.S. Department of Education, according to a summary of the bill by the House Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Between 2002 and 2004, the University of Missouri system raised its fees at a rate several times the rate of inflation.

UM system spokesman Joe Moore said the system has not taken a position on the bill.

Associated Students of the University of Missouri chairman Craig Kleine said though the bill could help make administrators accountable for tuition increases, it would restrict the university's abilities ability to raise funds and possibility burden it with the cost of the audit.

ASUM is the student lobbying group for the UM system.

"I feel that this bill would help keep university administrators accountable, but it would be at an unreasonable cost, and the focus of accountability about the rising cost of tuition should be on the state legislature to ensure that the higher education system is adequately funded," Kleine said.

Kleine said ASUM has not taken a position on the bill and would discuss it at its next board meeting on Nov. 12.

UM system tuition rates have fluctuated greatly in the past several years, from an increase that was the largest in decades to those only slightly greater than inflation.

Last year, the UM system Board of Curators approved a 3.5 percent tuition increase. At the time, UM system spokesman Joe Moore said the increase was about equal to inflation based on the Higher Education Price Index, which tracks the costs of goods and services used by universities. Inflation at the time was about 2.9 percent, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

But in the three previous years, board members approved tuition increases many times above the rate of inflation. Because of this, the system would have faced sanctions

ARTS & LIVING
SUNNY FOR 'THE WEATHERMAN'
Nicholas Cage is in his top form in his latest film.
PAGE 5

EDITORIAL/OPINION
STUDENTS DEAL WITH MID-LIFE CRISIS
How do we survive without huge bank accounts?
PAGE 4

WEATHER
TODAY Sunny, H66°, L42°
TONIGHT Clear, H42°, L28°
TOMORROW Partly Cloudy, H65°, L42°

SPORTS
UNH PLAYS 'BALL'
UMass football was not able to control the New Hampshire offense.
PAGE 10

Mark Stolze:
Early Riser
Rookie Surfer
Professional Rocker*
Is Welcome Here

Your life. You can bring it with you. Learn more about Mark and tell us more about you visit pwc.com/bringit

*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2005 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP and, as the context requires, other member firms of PricewaterhouseCoopers International Limited, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. PwC is an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer

Food for Thought Books circulates petition for privacy can say that for Food For Thought, our goal is probably much broader and expansive than just that campaign and that petition."

PRIVACY from page 1

According to the petition, "Investigators are no longer required to limit searches to individuals suspected of involvement in terrorism; instead, they simply need to state to a FISA court judge that the records requested are in connection with a terrorist investigation."

The book community opposes this because there is no provision in section 215 that safeguards readers' records. Since the passing of the Patriot Act, Arthur believes people are more aware of the governments' expansive power.

"I definitely know that people are a little more aware that the government has a lot more power now than they ever had before," she said.

The renewal of section 215 has students voicing their opposition as well.

"I don't think it should be renewed because it sounds too easy for records to be searched, especially without ever being notified about it," said Jacob DeVarennes, a senior exercise science major. "It sounds like we're giving up too many of our rights and privileges."

"I don't think it should be passed because it's a total invasion of privacy," said Anna Zamarro, a junior hospitality and tourism management and human nutrition major. "People shouldn't be able to get that kind of information about a person unless they get permission."

The expansive power authorities now have worries some residents who feel that authorities may abusing that power. This concern is addressed on the petition, which reads, "In 2002, FISA tried to reject seventy-five subpoena requests because the FBI allegedly misled the court on the purpose and nature of investigations."

Another issue that some have with section 215 is the fact people may never know whether or not their files could be under investigation. However, libraries and other institutions have found ways around such a problem. These institutions place a sign in their windows stating, "The FBI has not been here today." On days when the FBI has investigated files the sign is taken out of the window, thus letting patrons know that their records could have been read.

The American Booksellers Association created the campaign for "Reader Privacy". The association is acting in cooperation with bookstores and other affiliations across the country to raise awareness of section 215 and to educate the public on what exactly the section allows.

In attempts to reinstate protections for reader privacy that have been taken away by section 215 of the Patriot Act, 200,000 Americans signed petitions last year to voice their disapproval.

Grant to be used to further ESL program

GRANT from page 1

because they bring a "diversity that is rich and valuable."

Barry believes that this campus could benefit from sharing the experiences of ESL students since they bring new values and global perspectives which are characteristic of our globalized world.

The ESL students have come from over 100 different countries, including South Korea, India, China, Afghanistan, and Vietnam, said Holm. "In a class size of 15, you can often find 12 different cultures represented," she said

Holm said she is hoping to end the negative stigma often associated with the ESL Program. "The problem is people don't understand what other people have been through," she said. Many people see ESL students as inferior because they do not know English, though they do often know several other languages.

The ESL program is structured to help students achieve what Holm calls an "expert level" of language proficiency to aid them in their academic and professional careers. According to Holm, these students are first accepted to the university before they are considered for the LSI Program and are often the most talented in their fields.

Holm said her students usually graduate and find success in the workplace because "companies want diversity and these students have the critical skills needed for today's global society."

However, Holm's program has faced many obstacles in the past few years because of retiring faculty and major cutbacks. After three professors retired last year, Holm is the only full-time teacher of ESL. Additionally, the intermediate language level and communication classes have been eliminated due to budget constraints, Holm said.

"We are hoping to build the program up again," Holm said. The grant, she believes, will be the first step in doing that.

Hundreds gather at church for memorial to Rosa Parks

By Samira Jafari
Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Rosa Parks was remembered Sunday by thousands of mourners in the nation's capital and in Montgomery for her defiant act on a city bus that inspired the civil rights movement and helped pave the way for other blacks, including Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice.

Cascades of roses surrounded Parks' casket in a chapel bearing her name at St. Paul A.M.E. Church in Montgomery, where she was once a member. A separate wing was opened for the overflow crowd and hundreds more stood outside.

"I was here when Rosa Parks started and I just wanted to be here when she departed," said the Rev. Joseph Lowery, who co-founded the Southern Christian Leadership Conference with the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.

The body of the 92-year-old Parks, who died Monday at her home in Detroit, had been lying in honor at the church since Saturday, when hundreds filed slowly past her casket.

From Montgomery, Parks' body was flown to Baltimore-Washington International Thurgood Marshall Airport in Maryland. A motorcade escorted Parks' body, and her delegation, to the Capitol, where Parks will lie in honor in the Capitol Rotunda, the first woman granted that honor.

President Bush issued a proclamation Sunday ordering the U.S. flag to be flown at half-staff over all public buildings on Wednesday, the day of Parks' funeral and burial in Detroit.

At the memorial service in Montgomery, Rice said she and others who grew up in Alabama during the height of Parks' activism might not have realized her impact on their lives at the time, "but I can honestly say that without Mrs. Parks, I probably would not be standing here today as secretary of state."

Alabama Gov. Bob Riley credited Parks with inspiring protests against social injustice around the world.

"I firmly believe God puts different people in different parts of history so great things can happen," Riley said. "I think Rosa Parks is one of those people."

Parks was arrested in 1955 for refusing to give up her bus seat to a white man. Among those who supported her was King, who led the 381-day boycott of the city's bus system that helped initiate the modern civil rights movement.

"She was a gentle giant," his son, Martin Luther King III, said at the memorial.

"I think she had a defining stand in the civil rights movement," said Estella Jernigan, 20, a student at Troy University, before the service started.

The Rev. Al Sharpton, who was a year old at the time of Parks' arrest, said when he arrived in Montgomery for the memorial, he thought about "how if she had just moved her seat, how history might of changed."

Theory designed to argue Creationism

INCOMPETENT from page 1

divider painted over it. Wise's hopes are that by adding a dash of humor to what many take as an extremely serious debate, he'll be able to lighten people's hearts and allow them to consider the possibility of his theory's validation. Everything from public discussions, to theme songs, to bumper stickers that take stabs at Intelligent Design are being used to promote the Incompetent Design theory.

"Basically the scientific community is getting its act together," Wise said. "We've had two main meetings on how to deal with the creationists, all kinds of presentations on how to handle the challenge. [the creationists] have more or less captured all three arms of the federal government, so I think science is finally beginning to wake up."

Wise said a "Lord battle" ahead, which involves alerting the scientific community to the reality of a world where science is given the backseat in favor of religious ideals, but he remains optimistic. "There are those who want the Grand Canyon to have been created by Noah's flood, but you could just as easily say that it was dug by 10,000 angels using silver shovels, and who's to prove it? There are those who want to use this issue [of Intelligent Design] as a wedge issue into including the supernatural in science. This would throw us back into the Middle Ages. If we further hamper our science it's giving the rest of the world a leg up, which is both stupid and hateful. We're already worried about India or China eating our breakfast in another 15 years, this is just giving them a leg up."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael Busack
Managing Editor Cameron J. Woods
Business Manager Hirak Shah
Production Manager Nicholas Belanger
Night Supervisor Sheryl Wolzik
Advertising Manager Kerry O'Grady
Advertising Production Lauren Egavian
Editorial Production Amanda Allen
Arts & Living Editor Matthew O'Rourke
Comics Editor Amanda Allen
Editorial Editor Allison Edles
News Editor Dan O'Brien
Photo Editor Kate Sachsenmaier
Sports Editor Jeff Howe
Circulation Manager Thomas Hecht
Distribution Manager Nick Gleason
Finance Manager Daniel Conti
Human Resource Phil Smoller
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Caren Tortorici
Assistant Business Nathan Chomsky
Asst. Arts & Living Mackenzie Imler
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Jones
Assistant News Megan Daley
Assistant News Matt Belliveau
Assistant Photo Elizabeth Caristi
Assistant Sports Eric Athas
Assistant Sports Dan Duggan
Assistant Editorial Kristen LaCasse

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the fall and spring semesters at the University of Massachusetts Amherst. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became The College News in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been headquartered since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 and 5:30 P.M.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Belanger
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Kate Sachsenmaier
COPY EDITOR
Dan O'Brien
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Irving Mercado, Jackie Ronan

THE NEW IS WHAT GIVES MEDIA ITS MEANING.

The New School, from its founding, has been open to fresh thinking, change, and innovation. And that's a driving force behind its forward-looking Master's degree in Media Studies. More than 400 students from across the country and around the world are partners in a program that integrates theory and practice, offers on-site and online courses, and provides professional facilities in audio, video, film, and digital media. The faculty is drawn from all walks of academic, artistic and commercial life. The locale is the media capital of the world.

MEDIA STUDIES
THE NEW SCHOOL

INFORMATION SESSIONS: November 7 and December 8 at 6PM
66 West 12th Street, NYC

To RSVP or for more information:
nsadmissions@newschool.edu
212.229.5630

www.mediastudies.newschool.edu

An affirmative action/equal opportunity institution

First Fifty UMass Students Wearing a Costume...receive a UMASS Athletic Tee Shirt

A Howling Good Time in the DCs

Join in the Excitement and Savor the Local Flavors of Halloween!

All are welcome.
Use your meal card or $10.00 cash.

MENU
Live Lobster
New York Strip Steak
Baked Fresh Stuffed Zucchini
Local Red Roasted Garlic Potatoes

Worcester and Berkshire DC: 5 to 9 pm
Franklin and Hampshire DC: 5 to 8 pm

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, OCTOBER 31, 2005

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mid college crisis

Debbie Friedman

What do you want to be when you grow up? I can only imagine the hundreds of times this question comes up in the course of an average adolescence. It seems that the moment we are old enough to utter the word "cop" or "doctor" society quickly pushes packaged toys out us, intending to mold us into some sort of a profession. We start small but aim high. In elementary school everyone wants to be a doctor, lawyer or something noble like a firefighter. During this age in which disillusionment has yet to pounce upon us, everyone can be anything. Being president doesn't seem all that unattainable. Working at McDonalds seems like the best job ever, and all you need to be a movie star is the right pair of star shaped, glitter sunglasses.

However, once the glasses come off and reality rears its ugly head on our innocent young minds, the idea of what we want to be becomes a much harder question to answer. This struggle to pick a path in life is not easy, and that is why the question of "what do you want to be when you grow up" becomes scary instead of exciting. The scariest thing of all though, is the day you realize "when you grow up" is not an answers close, but quite possibly staring you right in the face. This realization is what I like to call the college mid life crisis, or the M.C.C.

Typically the M.C.C hits some time during your junior year, although depending on you personally, can vary. It is usually prompted by a stressful meeting with your advisor, roaming aimlessly through a job and/or internship fair, or talking with an annoying classmate who has their life's goals in place and listed in bullet points on glossy white paper. Around this time, you might force yourself to sit down and think about where you want to go in life, and how you are going to get there. After five minutes of serious contemplation you will probably come to the conclusion that you have absolutely no idea how to answer either of those questions, and decide to clear your room to head to the nearest bar, party or in the person you know will drink with you to celebrate at the drop of a hat.

Unfortunately, there is no known cure for M.C.C. You can't handle it like 40-year-olds do when they hit mid life. We don't have the money to go out and buy something ridiculously expensive like a sports car. We can't start dating someone significantly younger because that would get us into some serious legal trouble, and we can't decide to start drinking because we already have that covered as college students. So, how are we supposed to deal with the haunting realization that college is half way over and the time to pick a career and life direction is upon us?

In a country where seventh graders start looking at colleges, it is no wonder that we feel pressured to have our lives planned out by the age of 22. If you go into career services they have handouts outlining what steps to take to get you into a cubicle as quick as possible, but what is the rush? I say, so long as you are not that person watching episodes of Pokemon on your laptop in lecture you have absolutely nothing to worry about (yes, I really have seen that happen). Sometimes it is quite stressful thinking about a future that is so unknown, but mapping out your destiny is impossible and will put you on the fast track to Prozac instead of a career.

> It is usually prompted by a stressful meeting with your advisor, roaming aimlessly through a job and/or internship fair, or talking with an annoying classmate who has their life's goals in place and listed in bullet points on glossy white paper.

Since we are laying the foundation now to build the rest of our lives upon, it is important to work hard and make it as solid as possible. However, what will be built is something that will come with time. If you are currently dealing with anxiety associated with M.C.C, I would suggest taking a deep breath and try to take each day as it comes. Of course we have to plan things out to some degree, but if you are always planning the future, you are not living the present, clique as it may sound. As Ferris Bueller once said "Life moves pretty fast. If you don't stop and look around once in a while, you could miss it."

I suppose the trick is to find a happy medium between obsessive planning and aimless ignorance with regards to the rest of your life. And as long as you bring some of your starry-eyed childhood virtue with you to balance out the cynicism of growing older, you will be able to get through any crisis.

Debbie Friedman is a Collegian columnist.

Are taking "Five College" classes worth the hassle?

What do you think about the whole "Five College" process? Do you . . .

a) Think it is really easy and well organized.

b) Think the process is difficult but well worth it.

c) Tend to shy away from things that require that much paperwork.

d) Think the process is way too difficult and therefore don't bother with it.

Submit your vote online at dailycollegian.com

The new wave of sedentism

Jackie Hai

Many of us sit around a lot, in classrooms, offices, dorms, homes, and cars. Those places where we spend so much of our lives, the story is always the same. Rapid advances in information technology have changed the face of how people in developed countries make a living, so that more and more we're settling into a lifestyle that involves sitting in front of a screen for hours on end.

The Internet, telephones, and video conferencing let businesspeople conduct trade without stepping foot from their workplaces. Telecommuting, or working from home, was the latest buzz among employees in the late 1990s and is a practice that is increasingly widespread.

Here at UMass, the convenience of OWL tempts us to just submit homework online in lieu of showing up to lecture. On that note, it's possible that entirely online classes will become more common, giving future students even less reason to leave their rooms.

Even the things we do for fun are trending towards a decrease in physical activity. Especially in the colder New England months, how many of us choose to pack around a TV and cheer for our favorite sports teams from the comforts of the indoors instead of going outside to play? Likewise, we chat over IM with our friends instead of trekking to the other end of campus to meet in person. Reading, watching movies, playing video games, surfing the web; the list of sedentary recreational activities goes on and on.

As products of the digital revolution, we have embraced technology for the convenience it gives us. What we end up ignoring for the most part, however, are the negative effects such convenience has on our health.

Yet interestingly, this isn't the first time in human history that we've faced a similar trend. Around 5,000 years ago, another technological revolution was going on – the invention of farming led to widespread sedentism as villages of people settled down to grow their food instead of chasing after it. Agriculture is widely hailed as one of the most significant discoveries made by man; after all, it can almost be directly credited for the formation of complex states and civilization as we know it.

However, the increase in productivity was not without its costs. Archaeological studies have shown a marked decline in health immediately following the rise of agriculture, due to malnutrition and the higher likelihood of deadly diseases spreading in denser populations. Our bodies never quite recovered from that first wave of sedentary living. In the nineteenth century, we traded in our farm tools for machines during the Industrial Revolution and packed ourselves even tighter into cities filled with factories and the clang of mass production.

> As products of the digital revolution, we have embraced technology for the convenience it gives us. What we end up ignoring for the most part, however, are the negative effects such convenience has on our health.

Only in the last century or so have human life spans crept back up to the ripe old ages our nomadic foraging ancestors enjoyed – and not because we're eating and living healthier, but because medical care has become better at putting bandaids on the problems we've created for ourselves. As a species, we are still not as physically fit as the first humans who strode across the prehistoric plains. A clear pattern arises when one observes the progression of technology and its effect on us: first, society as a whole became sedentary, and now, we as individuals are following suit. Medicine is prolonging our lives, but not necessarily improving a quality of living that only having good health can produce.

Nowadays, still poised near the brink of our new technological age, we have a lot more of a choice in the matter than our Neolithic or industrial age ancestors did. We're not being forced to farm all day and subsist on just one or two staple foods, or stand in assembly lines breathing coal fumes from dawn to dusk to earn our livelihoods (one should also remember that we're lucky in that sense; many people in less developed areas of the world today still do). Ironically, in becoming more sedentary than ever through technological progress, we've come full circle and leisure time is slowly back on the rise. What we do with our health, therefore, is up to the individual choices we make in our lifestyles and how we spend that time.

Being active doesn't even have to mean devoting hours every week to working out in a gym or participating in sports. A recent article in the New York Times writes about a new type of fitness routine called integrative exercise; simply by putting extra energy into your daily actions, you can wake up your body and get into better shape. Jog part of the way to class. Take the stairs instead of the elevator. Our bodies will thank us for making the effort to offset our self-imposed devolution. We just need to start by sitting around a little less.

Jackie Hai is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

DEMOCRATIC DEBATE MISTAKEN FOR OPPRESSION

"The Political Lynch Mob," belongs to a new and popular genre of conservative polemic. Gillon Marchetti's piece goes something like this:

"I love freedom of speech but don't practice it, even in the safety of the classroom, because I am afraid of the liberal backlash. Politics can only exist in an Olympian space of pure objectivity amongst dispassionate and stoic minds. P.S. Can't we all just get along?" (The "all" is referring to the imagined diversity of political thought represented by the two parties, Democratic and Republican).

Marchetti, a veteran of the "Army of One, Be All that You Can Be" U.S. military has been persecuted in the classroom. Here is where his oppression begins: Marchetti announced his continuing support for President Bush and his agenda due to Bush's steadfastness. A fellow student who disagreed with Marchetti replied by recalling how the inability of other war-time presidents to change course during the U.S. invasion and occupation of Vietnam led to disaster.

Did you miss the lynching of Gillon Marchetti? You must not have been paying attention. You see Marchetti was lynched when someone had the gall to disagree with him. To Marchetti, being engaged in an intellectual debate where his views are challenged is the same thing as being lynched.

When democratic debate is mistaken for one of the most disgusting and violent forms of oppression, we know the reaction is caused by the cognitive dissonance of someone trying desperately to maintain the homogeneity of discourse within their environment, especially within their own internal environment consisting of beliefs and personal identity.

This is the mark of uncritical minds, the mark of someone who is good at taking orders but not thinking for himself. Someone who is content to be without passion, someone who lacks the courage of their convictions, and hides behind the flabby excuse of personal ignorance. It is much easier to do as you are told and to reflexively believe whatever official explanation is given regarding the state of society. It is much easier to have a sedentary and domesticated mind than a nomadic and rebellious one.

Gillon Marchetti, you don't have to worry. As long as you keep following your political science professor's instructions for political engagement you will never be lynched. Just like in the army, as long as you never disobey orders you will never get in trouble with those who run the show, but don't you dare compare yourself to those who have been lynched, or killed for following the courage of their convictions. No one will ever make you drink hemlock, or gun you down at a political rally, or hang you by the neck from a tree. Your silence and conformity will protect you.

Myles Sullivan
UMass student

EMBARASSED BY HALLOWEEN ADVICE

Having just finished reading Matt Brochu's article on Halloween at UMass my first reaction is to be outright appalled at what was written. It seems as though it isn't the fault of students if they have a horrible hangover on Tuesday, Nov. 1 as a result of Halloween. I for one, am terrified of Halloween when I'm going to be tied to a chair and forced to drink so much alcohol that I feel that I "feel like Rocky after the Ivan Drago fight."

Also, I applaud those professors that have assignments or tests on Nov. 1. Well, applaud as much as I can considering I have two tests on that date, but I think what Brochu needs to remember is that the weekdays are for working. Weekends can be used for whatever. Hey, even take the occasional Thursday if you don't have anything due the next day.

All I know is that there is one person responsible if a student fails a test this coming Tuesday because of a hangover, and it isn't the one that handed out the test. As for Brochu's outline for girl's costumes, I'm hoping that it is in jest and mocking the often slutty costumes that seem to be the prominent choice for college-aged coeds. In fact, I hope this entire article was tongue-in-cheek.

The fact that the author encourages girls to be "w-ifying" makes me want to gag. Yes, I know it will happen. Yes, I know they're old enough to decide what they want to wear, but I still don't feel it needs to be pushed. Some may think I'm a prude, but I think I'm sensible. To be perfectly honest I don't care if you bomb a test or miss an assignment because of a hangover on Halloween. Nor do I care if you're a girl who used Brochu's costume specifications and ended up doing something you regret with someone who only cared to talk to you because they liked what you were wearing. I don't care, and I especially don't sympathize.

I wonder this, if someone has a presentation for work due on Tuesday and shows up hung over, should the boss take it easy on them, maybe let them go home early or show up late? Maybe college isn't the work force, but I think my point gets across.

Matt Tinney
UMass student

Write a letter or editorial for Ed/Op: editorial@dailycollegian

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, OCTOBER 31, 2005

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The forecast is bright for Cage

By Jake Monte
Collegian Staff

Dave Spritz, played by Nicolas Cage, is a weatherman whose routine run-ins with his viewing audience aren't always pleasant. In "The Weatherman," he gets hit with a Big Gulp, a slurpie, and an apple-pie from McDonald's. When someone asks for his autograph, he tells them they've got the wrong guy. Dave is a man who diffidence is endearing and whose humanness makes us laugh.

"The Weather Man"
Directed by Gore Verdinski
Starring Nicolas Cage Michael Cane
Paramount Pictures
Rated R
101 mins.
Grade A

Dave has a daughter, a son, a father, and a wife (with whom he's separated). His son Michael, played by Nicholas Hoult (the star of "About a Boy," now much older) is a teenager who has just finished rehab.

Michael comes to be friends with a suspiciously friendly drug counselor and this tests Dave's merit as a father. His daughter gets called "camel-toe" in school (better to see the film to find out why) and she's interested in archery and that's where the bow and arrows you may have seen in the previews comes from. His father, played by Michael Caine, is a writer who won the national book award when he was 28-years-old. He's always making Dave aware of the negative character traits "camel-toe" has. The problems don't stop there. His wife, played by Hope Davis, has deep seated animosity towards Dave despite his attempts to save their marriage. There's a scene when they go to a couple's therapy session. They each have to write something down that the other doesn't know about their relationship. Then they exchange notes without looking at what the other has written and promise they won't look in the future. You can guess what Dave does – he looks. Much of the film has a melancholy tone of dark humor and dreary imagery which some might find depressing, but others may find pleasingly atmospheric.

Gore Verbinski directed "The Weatherman." He's the man behind "Pirates of the Caribbean" and "The Ring." In "The Weatherman," Verbinski shows us bold creativity combined with technical aptitude. He doesn't play it safe like some directors that want to film everything like a play, or a Woody Allen movie so as to pander to narrow-minded critics. Verbinski loves keeping the audience entertained and knows how to do it while still maintaining the artistic quality of the work.

The Weatherman may be the best film of the semester, and one of the best of the year. It is funny, totally engrossing, astutely directed, flawlessly acted, and beautifully written. There are plenty of films that just entertain. But there is a style of films that, because of the depth of characterization, and the tone of profundity to the storyline, promise the viewer that the ending will put some type of stamp of comment on the film's content, as well as a satisfying resolution to the lives of the characters. "The Weatherman" delivers. It's not a pat ending and not what you'd expect. But the ending is smart, and not in the least bit contrived – as is the story as a whole.

Nicholas Cage's performance is completely convincing from the basic weatherman TV persona he has to the idiosyncrasies of a character who is essentially good, but flawed, and very amusing to watch. "The Weatherman" ultimately becomes an iconic symbol; someone many people will see a bit of themselves in, and the film presents a statement about finding one's dignity, coming to terms with who we really are, and learning to be happy with who that person is. Or put more simply, finding a way not to get hit with a slurpie every now and again.

'Shopgirl' surpasses expectations for a typical date-film

By Jeffrey Horowitz
Collegian Staff

It would be too easy to call this a sweet movie. Though it is sweet, there is something deeper and sadder at its core, about people that know little about what they want in life, and yet less about what they want in romance. It's a touching portrait of a young sales woman working at Saks Fifth Avenue named Mirabelle (Claire Danes) who dates two different men at two different times. Thankfully it does not fall into the conventional choice between the two men. They are not competing for her, in fact neither even knows of the others existence. They simply both fall for her at different times, for different reasons and at different levels of commitment.

"Shopgirl"
Directed by Anand Tucker
Starring Steve Martin Claire Danes Jason Schwartzman
Touchstone Picture
Rated R
104 mins
Grade B+

It was based on the critically acclaimed novel by Steve Martin, who also wrote the screenplay, and plays Ray Porter, one of the men who falls for Mirabelle.

It was directed by Anand Tucker who does something very bold, creating a slow and steady pace that is deliberate in taking its time to watch and study these characters. The pace works in favor of the movie at some moments and against it at others but it is so apparent in allowing close observation on their feelings, their actions, their transformations and their emotional growth.

All three characters are allowed to emotionally grow over the course of the film. As it begins a prepubescently awkward relationship forms between Mirabelle and Jeremy (Jason Schwartzman); he serves as the comic goof for the majority of the film. Jeremy meets Mirabelle at a laundry mat. He shows her his art, and they talk about their jobs and their lives. He asks for her number and they go out, sit in front of a movie theater and stare at the billboard.

"We can go in," she says.

"No," he says, "it's like ten bucks a ticket. I like to just come here and stare and think."

"We could split it," she says.

"Ok," he says, "Let's split it. Can I borrow two bucks?"

At the end of the date she rejects him, and then day's later, feeling lonely she calls him to

See SHOPGIRL on page 6

"Shopgirl" starring Steve Martin and Claire Danes (above) doesn't fit the stereotypical date-film mold, but rather features dynamic characters who learn and grow as the film progresses.

SOURCE

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England

MondayOctober31

A Howling Good time will be available in all 4 Dining Commons on the UMass campus from 5:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m. Join in the excitement and savor the local flavors of Halloween! Enjoy the joy the pumpkin carving contest, best costume contest, table magic & fortune telling.

The Rocky Horror Picture Show will be showing from 9:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Actors dressed as the characters will be performing in front of a projection of "The Rocky Horror Picture Show."

Kanye West will be in concert tonight at the Mullins Center. With his latest album "Late Registration" reaching #1 on the Billboard charts, the Grammy Award-winning artist. Doors open at 7:00 p.m.

Brand Name Warehouse Clothing Sale will be in the Campus Center Auditorium. It will run until Nov. 3rd. Free admission. One can find brand name clothes at warehouse prices.

TuesdayNovember01

MCAS and High Stakes Testing: Is it Working? Is It Fair? will be in the Campus Center from 3:00 to 4:30 p.m. This point-counterpoint exchange will feature two leading scholars who will cover such topics as the meaning of teaching-to-the-test in an educational system like MCAS, the quality of the MCAS assessments, myths and misconceptions about the MCAS, and student drop-out rates and grade retention.

"Master Harold...And the Boys" will be performed in the Bowker Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. Seven Stages' production of "Master Harold...and the Boys," by Athol Fugard, launches the Atlanta based company's first tour. For ticket information visit: www.tickets.com

Jazz Lab Ensemble will be performing a free concert in the Bezanson Recital Hall at 8:00pm. UMass Amherst's Jazz Lab Ensemble, John Leonard, director, presents a free concert in Bezanson Hall.

Movie Night "Dreamkeeper" will be playing in Chadbourne from 8:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. Join us in watching Dreamkeeper. A Native American story teller weaves traditional lessons with modern times.

WednesdayNovember02

Woman, Work & Motherhood: Discussing the "Mommy Myth" will be speaking in Herter from 12:00 p.m. to 1:30 p.m. Meredith W. Michaels co-author of The Mommy Myth, Professor of Philosophy at Smith College, and UMass alumna will speak.

Tai Chi and Kung Fu at UMass workshops will be in Boyden Gym from 6:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. The UMass Inner Arts Club sponsors in-depth training and Workshops in Yang and Chen Style Tai Chi, Pa Kua Chang, and Wu Chi Kung Fu.

Major Fair will be in the Student Union Ballroom from 6:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m. The Majors Fair provides an opportunity for undeclared students to explore potential areas of study while allowing current majors to learn about other options they may not know exist.

Not Ready for Bedtime Players in Chadbourne will begin at 8:00 p.m. Join us for an evening of side-splitting laugher, informative skits and free condoms. For more information visit: www.umass.com

ThursdayNovember03

Theory Lecture Series will begin in Bezanson Recital Hall at 12:20 p.m. A 50-minute talk by Professor Gary Karpinski titled, The Limits of Systems and the Transition from Tonal to Post-Tonal Aural Skills.

Sex Pictionary will be in McNamara at 7:00 p.m. Sexuality Pictionary – a Peer Health Education workshop. By students, for students. For more information visit: www.umass.com

Lark String Quartet will play in Bowker Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. The Lark Quartet, now in its twentieth concert season, enjoys a reputation as an ensemble of the highest artistic integrity and versatility.

Studies in Abstraction in the Student Union Art Gallery will be available to view until Nov. 4th. The artists represented in this exhibition are accomplished painters whose understanding of modern art has led them to very different interpretations of what it means to be an abstract painter.

H.G. "Buzzy" Bissinger, Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist and author of best selling book Friday Night Lights and Three Nights in August will give a lecture about his work in 622 Tobin Hall at 4:00 p.m. Pizza will follow the reception.

FridayNovember04

A Specialized Inventory Problem in Banks - Optimizing Sweeps will begin at 11:00 a.m. in the Isenberg School of Management. Professor Suresh Nair of the University Of Connecticut School Of Business will deliver the fourth lecture in the fall 2005 Operations Research / Management Science Seminar series.

"Who Took Manhattan" from 2:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m. will be in 209 Bartlett. Join Evan Pritchard for "A Multi-Media Armchair Tour of Native Manhattan." For more information visit: www.umass.com

Home Land Security will be in Bowker Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. It's a multimedia theatrical performance about the impact of September 11 and the War on Terror in the lives of New England minority communities created by artist Marty Pottenger in partnership with Portland's Center for Cultural Exchange.

Something Every Friday: "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory" will be in the Student Union beginning at 9:00 p.m. The magical mind of director Tim Burton takes us back inside the most famous chocolate factory in the world.

SaturdayNovember05

Polishing the Chain of Friendship will be in the Campus Center from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

WEEKLY PINUP

KANYE WEST

With his latest album "Late Registration" reaching #1 on the Billboard charts, Grammy Award-winning artist Kanye West will be in concert tonight at the Mullins Center. Doors open at 7:00 p.m.

Come and be a part of this historic event as the people who made history come together to discuss, explain, and assess their achievements.

Men's Hockey vs. Providence game will start at 7:00 p.m. in the Mullins Center. Come support your men's Hockey will take on Providence at the Mullins Center.

12th Annual Hasa/Casa "Frutas del Caribe" from 7:00 p.m. to 2:00 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. The Haitian Student Association (HASA) and Casa Dominican (CASA) proudly present the 12th Annual HasaCasa Cultural Night.

SundayNovember06

Mashantucket Museum Visit from 9:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. will begin in Chadbourne. The Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center is sponsoring a trip to visit the Mashantucket Pequot Museum. Please join us in honoring the history of our Native neighbors.

BRAND NAME WAREHOUSE'S

CLOTHING SALE

Jeans	from	$16.99
Tanks		$5.99
Tops	from	$7.99
Shorts	from	$7.99
Pants	from	$12.99
Sweaters	from	$12.99
Outerwear	from	$24.99
Accessories	from	$0.99

OCT. 30 - TO NOV. 3
SUNDAY: 5PM - 9PM
MON - THURS: 10AM TO 9PM
LINCOLN CAMPUS CENTER AUDITORIUM

Martin, Danes shine

SHOPGIRL from page 5

come over and they sleep together.

Eventually a customer named Ray Porter (Steve Martin) buys some gloves from her department, just to be able to meet her. He sends her the gloves with a note asking her out. They go out, despite the thirty year age difference. He pays and then she returns to his luxury apartment where we learn of his enormous wealth.

Eventually she falls for him, as he puts it, well warned that he does not want anything serious. Of course without them intending it to be serious, it gets very serious. She loves him and he is unable to express any kind of love or pain or emotion because perhaps he is too scared. As much as the relationship works, can there ever really be a future? They're so good together, they work as a couple, and at a time when she is in dire need of emotional and medical support he is there for her. They have chemistry as a couple and yet, the relationship seems unrealistic, not just because of the age difference but because of Rays inability to confront his emotions or admit any kind of love for her.

Jeremy has gone on a road trip with a band interested in buying his art work and his companies speakers and they bombard him first with rock and roll music and then to calm him down with self help tapes and sounds of the forest. Then, since its around Valentine's Day, they get him "How to Love a Woman" audio books and he travels with them on a road trip that for them is on its way to another concert but for him is a learning experience perhaps even a character transformation.

When he comes back he is better suited to have a relationship with Mirabelle. She however has to choose whether Ray can possibly be "the one" or whether he just isn't capable of offering that kind of love which deep down inside we suspect he actually feels. There is a wonderful moment where Jeremy is expressing his love to her, she hugs him and he emotionally utters the words, "I'll protect you" and he is sincere.

There's also some narration by Steve Martin that speaks as if from the stars, watching down on Mirabelle and smiling as though it already knows she'll make the right choice and be better for it. This is a warm, intelligent and observant movie about men and women and the growth they make from painful relationships where love can't quite come far enough to save all.

www.dailycollegian.com

ASIAN ARTS & CULTURE PROGRAM

homelandSecurity

home land security

Friday, November 4, Bowker Auditorium at 8pm

A multimedia theatrical performance about the impact of September 11 and the War on Terror on the lives of New England's minority communities. Creator Marty Pottenger employs interviews and story circles with members of Maine's immigrant and refugee communities to reveal connections among the participants and illuminate the context of their changed lives. The evening-length piece is performed by community-based participants from Portland's Afghan, Sudanese, Somali, Latino, Jewish and Franco-American communities.

General Admission $15, Students $7

For more information and related events go to www.fineartscenter.com/asian

FINE ARTS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS

Supported by the Five College Multicultural Theater Committee

TICKETS: 1-800-999-UMAS or 545-2511

UMass competes at A-10's

By Joey White
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's cross-country team will finish the year as the sixth-place team in the Atlantic 10 conference. This is a step behind last year's fifth-place showing.

The Minutemen will be in action again as they return to Franklin Park in Boston in two weeks for the NCAA Regional.

"We could've on a great day have got fourth, and if we didn't run well at all could've finished eighth. And we finished right in the middle in sixth," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said.

Crossing the line first for the Maroon and White was senior Ryan Corbett who placed 25th out of 131 runners with a time of 25:45.1. Right behind him for the 26th spot was sophomore Nils Fischer with a time of 25:51.8.

"He's a veteran performer. He's been to this level already. So his experience has really helped him out," O'Brien said. "Ryan knows how to space himself out during the regular season and to compete well at the end of the season."

La Salle was looking forward to tying the record for consecutive A-10 championships with Penn State when they were in the conference with five in a row, but was upset by Duquesne, with Charlotte finishing third overall.

"The difference between them and us is that they have a front runner," O'Brien said. "What we don't have is a top runner to finish in the top five, and the only way we can make that up is if they finish 10 to 15 places higher."

The next three runners for the Minutemen were also pretty close to each other. Freshman Jesse Regnier placed 37th (26:17.0), senior Sean Corbett finished 39th (26:22.9), and senior Paul Soone crossed the line in 40th with a time of 26:24.0.

"I felt that the entire team ran well, nobody had a bad day. We had a good effort across the board," O'Brien said. "We can do a lot together in three weeks to finish off the season. I think we're on the right track to raising the program."

Senior Sean Corbett placed 41st overall at this weekend's cross-country Atlantic 10 championships. UMass placed sixth out of 14 other teams and will compete at the NCAA Regional meet on Nov. 12.

As for the Minutewomen, they too dropped from last year's fifth-place showing as they finished 9th out of 14 teams this year. The Maroon and White will also be in action is in two weeks at Franklin Park in Boston for the NCAA Regional.

Sophomore Christina Derosa crossed the line first for UMass, as she earned a sixth-place showing out of 125 runners with a time of 18:21.1.

"Christina Derosa ran an outstanding race," UMass coach Julie LeFreniere said. "It was the best race I've seen her run since she's been with us."

Derosa went out with a little different plan of attack for this race. She paced herself to start the race and it paid off for her because she was able to finish stronger in the last two miles at Philadelphia.

Next for the Minutewomen, placing 44th, was junior Cuisle Kierans with a time of 19:38.2. Then came sophomore Amanda Bodette who finished 49th (19:48.5). Rounding out the top five for the Maroon and White was junior Erin O'Donnell placing 56th (19:55.6) and sophomore Ashley Davidson who finished 65th with a time of 20:11.3.

"Our athletes ran well, but we're not happy with where we placed," LeFreniere said. "As a pack [the two through five runners] we're just too far back, we need to step it up. It would've made a big difference if they finished 10 to 15 places higher. We need to move that pack. I feel overall that they raced well, but just not good enough for this conference."

LeFreniere is hoping to add one or two more runners next year to run up front and finish in the teens for next year's championship. Winning the A-10 again this year was La Salle, followed by Charlotte and the University of Richmond.

"I thought they would've done better than 9th, maybe I overestimated," LeFrenier said. "The teams were a little stronger than I thought they were.

"My athletes did run hard and we have a longer road ahead of us than maybe I thought. But we still have time to develop, we're still young, and it was a good experience," said LaFrenier.

Sophomore Christina Derosa was honored as an Atlantic-10 All-Conference runner after finishing ninth overall for the Minutewomen. The team placed sixth out of 14 overall teams.

Swimming teams take down Stony Brook

By Joey White
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team, going for its sixth consecutive Atlantic 10 Championship, started the season off right as it defeated Stony Brook 165-135 in front of the home crowd.

The Minutemen were down at the halfway point, but were able stay with it in the close race and come away with a victory. The maroon and white will be in action again next weekend when they travel to Southern Connecticut State University.

"We ran a good first meet," UMass coach Russ Yarworth said. "I think these guys are learning."

UMass was led by junior Greg Chartier, whose lowest finish was second in the 1000-yard free style event with a time of 10:10.53. He took first place in the 500-yard free style (4:56.40), the 200-yard individual medley (1:59.30) and was also on the relay team that grabbed first place in the 400-yard relay.

"Chartier did a great job," Yarworth said. "He really carried the team on his back."

Next to lead the way for the Minutemen was freshman Brad Sloan. Sloan won the 1,000-yard free style race with a time of 9:58.56. He placed second behind Chartier in the 500-yard free style (4:58.21) and third in the 200-yard individual medley (2:02.56) in his first regular season meet in college.

"We had good spirit and got a reward from our training," Yarworth said.

Another standout freshman performance for the maroon and white was from Nate Bromage, who earned a first place showing in the 200-yard free style (1:46.51) and in the 100-yard butterfly event (52.04). He was also on the second-place relay squad in the 200-yard medley relay and finished third in the 200-yard butterfly race with a time of 1:59.44.

On the diving side of the swim meet for UMass, sophomore Reuben Rappe placed first in both the three-meter diving event and the one-meter with scores of 308.03 and 270.6, respectively. Right behind for second place in both events was junior Kirk Scimone, with a score of 219.08 in the three-meter and a score of 252.60 in the one-meter.

"We swam pretty well for October," Yarworth said. "But we better improve or we won't win anything."

As for the Minutewomen, they too started off the season on the right foot as they defeated Stony Brook at home with a score of 172-124. The next meet for the maroon and white will be next weekend at Southern Connecticut State University.

"We had so many positives that we did today," UMass coach Bob Newcomb said. "We were very strong and had a really impressive day."

Leading the way for UMass was freshman Taryn Prout, who earned a first-place showing in the 100-yard free style with a time of 10:45.75. She was also first to cross the line in the 500-yard free style event (5:14.19) and on the squad that placed first in the 200-yard medley relay.

"For a freshman she had a really good meet," Newcomb said. "She was faster and better than two weeks ago."

Christa Narus, another freshman, also led the way for the Minutewomen with a number of victories. She was first in the 200-yard free style (1:53.33), the 100-yard butterfly and was on the same squad as Prout, which took first in the 200-yard medley relay.

Another good performance for the maroon and white came from sophomore Allison Volpe, who with a third-place showing had her best time ever in the 100-yard butterfly event with a time of 1:01.01. She also took first place in the 100-yard free style (54.67) and was part of the squad that finished third in the 200-yard medley relay.

"She was phenomenal," Newcomb said. "She has a lot of confidence and we're now seeing it in the result."

On the diving part of the women's meet, freshman Karen Upperco stole the show with victories in both the three-meter and the one-meter with scores of 245.55 and 245.92, respectively. Junior Melissa Pond finished second in both diving events with a score of 231.60 in the three-meter and a score of 235.20 in the one-meter.

"Those four [divers] are going to make hell for the other teams," Newcomb said. "For October I am satisfied. We've got a lot of work to do, but we're on the right track."

The UMass men's and women's swimming and diving teams won both meets against Stony Brook this past weekend.

Lopez dies after suffering heart attack

By Jennifer Kay
Associated Press

MIAMI — Al Lopez, a Hall of Fame catcher and manager who led the Cleveland Indians and Chicago White Sox to American League pennants in the 1950s, died Sunday at 97.

Lopez had been hospitalized in Tampa since Friday, when he suffered a heart attack at his son's home, Al Lopez Jr. said.

Lopez was the oldest living Hall of Fame member, said Jeff Idelson, spokesman for the Hall.

Lopez hit .261 with 51 homers and 652 RBIs during a 19-year career in which he was one of baseball's most durable catchers and set the record for most games caught in the major leagues at 1,918. The record was later broken by Bob Boone, then Carlton Fisk.

Lopez was best known for being the only AL manager to lead teams that finished ahead of the New York Yankees between 1949-64. He helped the Indians to the 1954 pennant and, until last week, was the last manager to lead the White Sox to the World Series — their 1959 loss to the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"We're saddened by the news," White Sox chairman Jerry Reinsdorf said through a spokesman Sunday. "Al lived a long and good life. We're so pleased we were able to win the World Series this year and that he was able to see it before he died."

The two-time All Star's first full season in the majors was 1930, and he played 18 seasons for Brooklyn, Boston, Pittsburgh and Cleveland. He managed the Indians from 1951-56 and the White Sox from 1957-65 and 1968-69.

Every off-season, Lopez returned to Tampa, where he was born in 1908.

"They've treated me real nice here," Lopez said in a 1994 interview. "They've given me parades, they've given me banquets, they named a ballpark after me. Now they tore the ballpark down, so they named a park after me and put up a statue.

"I say, 'Why are you doing this? I was just doing something I liked.'"

Lopez caught Bob Feller, Dizzy Dean and Dazzy Vance, but never forgot working as a teenager with Walter Johnson, who won 417 games and possessed a legendary fastball. During spring training in 1925, the Washington Senators hired the 15-year-old Lopez to catch batting practice for $45 a week.

Johnson was nearing the end of his career by then, but still made an impression on the youngster.

"He wasn't firing like he used to, but he was still very fast and had very good control," Lopez said. "All you had to do was hold your mitt around the strike zone, and it'd be right there."

break from the ordinary

Acapulco
7 nights at El Presidente
$899

Cancun
7 nights at Dos Playas
$749

Negril
7 nights at Fun Holiday Beach Resort
$769

STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
U of M Campus Center, Rm. 224
(413) 256.1261
STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND

WE'RE LOOKING FOR A FEW EXCEPTIONAL STUDENTS.

At Quinnipiac University School of Law, you'll find everything you need to succeed. From a challenging yet supportive academic environment to faculty members who will become intellectual colleagues. From live-client clinics to real-world externships. Plus annual merit scholarships ranging from $3,000 to full tuition. For more information, visit http://law.quinnipiac.edu or call 1-800-462-1944

- Outstanding faculty
- Rigorous academic programs
- Six concentrations
- Extensive experiential learning opportunities
- Student faculty ratio 15:1

Criminal | Dispute Resolution | Family | Health | Intellectual Property | Tax

QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW
Hamden, Connecticut

UMass can't stop Santos, Ball

FOOTBALL from page 10

passer, turning what would have been a fourth-and-two into a first down, and UNH went on to drive down the field to score its second touchdown.

And with just under 11 minutes remaining in the game, a bad snap to UMass punter Christian Koegel allowed the Wildcats to take over at the UMass 11-yard line and eventually lock a field goal to put them ahead 34-21.

"You can't make those kinds of mistakes in a game of this magnitude and expect to be able to overcome it," Brown said. "You can't have an illegal motion [penalty] that calls back a touchdown, and you can't have a late hit [penalty] that prolongs a drive. If those things don't happen, who knows?"

Trailing by those same 13 points with 4:13 left on the clock, the Minutemen took over at their own 22-yard line, and Liam Coen, who threw for 401 yards – including a brilliant fourth quarter in which he was 15-of-24 for 186 yards and a touchdown – went to work.

On the first play of the drive, Coen hit receiver Brandon London over the middle for a gain of 26 yards. On the next play, Coen hit Stewart, who made an acrobatic catch, for 17 yards, and Rasheed Rancher proceeded to make a one-handed catch on the play after that for 15 yards, setting UMass up at the UNH 35-yard line.

Five plays after that, Coen lobbed a high pass to London, who leaped over defensive back Etienne Boulay to cap off the drive with a six-yard score, cutting the margin down to 34-28 with 2:20 remaining.

After the onside kick was recovered by Ball, UNH was able to eat up just 89 seconds of the clock before heeding possession to the Minutemen at their own 28-yard line with 51 ticks left on the clock.

Coen connected with London on back-to-back passes of 17 and 15 yards to get the Minutemen to the UNH 40-yard line, but Baylark was tackled in bounds at the 35-yard line on the next play, allowing the clock to run out.

The Minutemen came out of the locker room at halftime on fire, taking the opening possession of the second half 65 yards on six plays and used an 18-yard touchdown run by Baylark to cut the lead to 17-14.

After forcing the UNH offense to go three-and-out on their next possession, the Minutemen again made easy work of their next drive and got a second touchdown out of Baylark to give them their first lead of the game at 21-17 just a little more than seven minutes into the third quarter.

The lead was short-lived, though, as UNH needed just eight plays and 3:17 of game clock to march down the field and reclaim its advantage on a drive capped off with Ball's third touchdown reception.

And with 13:43 to play in the fourth quarter, UNH quarterback Ricky Santos found Ball, who was wide open on the right side of the field, for a 33-yard air strike, which proved to be the game-winning score and stretched the lead out to 31-21.

KAREN WONG/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore David Burris and the UMass football team was not able to overcome the UNH offense on Saturday. Burris posted eight total tackles, two tackles for a loss and a sack during the loss.

UM playoff hopes still possible challenge Bullen and cut down his angle, but the crafty senior bounced the ball right over the goalie and into the net.

MEN'S SOCCER from page 10

The 49ers tied the game at one in the 36th minute of play when Jon Nabers got the ball off of a Charlotte penalty kick from Floyd Franks. Nabers collected the ball and fired it from in front the net past Simmons.

Freshman Costa Tsolirides then put the Minutemen back on top with his second goal on the season. With a cluster in front of the net, Tsolirides was able to get his shot off and into the net. Sophomore Greg Cirillo was credited with the assist.

Then for the second consecutive Friday, the Maroon and White gave up their second half lead on Ruud's laser bicycle kick.

"They're a good team," Koch said. "With the tie I think we're still in the hunt, its still hunting season. We just got to go get Richmond on Sunday. We've got to win on Sunday."

That's exactly what the Minutemen did.

Before the start of the game, UMass honored the two seniors they have on their roster, Billitier and Bullen. The pair was brought out onto the field and presented with framed pictures of themselves and took pictures with Koch, Sam the Minuteman and members of their families.

Freshman Nick Kelly got the game-winner for his first ever goal in a maroon and white uniform. When the shot from the right side hit the back of the net all the UMass players and Koch jumped in the air with their fists pumping.

As the game got underway, it was an ugly start for the Maroon and White and it looked as if the season was over. Richmond went on top 2-0 in the first six minutes of play.

Chris Lahoud scored the Spiders' first goal off of a corner kick. Callum Thomas inbounded the ball from the corner and Lahoud got it past Simmons on a header just four minutes into the game.

Then just under two minutes later Anders Walleck doubled the Richmond lead with a goal of his own. Scott Loesser dished the ball to Walleck, who then unleashed a strike from 30 yards out. The ball sailed right into the net past a diving Simmons.

Sophomore Kenny Cook, who has been an offensive rock all year for the Minutemen, changed the face of the game when he cut the lead in half just a minute and half later.

Cook found the twine from five yards out and right in front of the net. Assists were awarded to freshman Michael Connolly and sophomore Douglas Rappaport. Cook's goal was big for the Minutemen as it allowed them to take some momentum back from the Spiders. Koch had one word to describe it.

"Huge," he said after the game. "The longer we're down 2-0 the more momentum they get and the tougher it is for us to get going. That was a huge goal to get us right back in the game. That was a critical goal for us."

Junior Stewart Wagner then knotted the score at 2-2 when he put his first goal of the season away. In the 84th minute Cirillo inbounded the ball off of a corner kick. The boot found Tsolirides, who bounced it off a Richmond defender and right to Wagner who fired it in from five yards out.

Minutemen falter weekend games against UNH and Maine

HOCKEY from page 10

The Minutemen answered UNH's opening tally with one of their own. Moving the puck down the right side, Stephen Werner fired a shot that caromed out to the blue line straight to Mike Kostka, who rocketed a one-timer into the back of the net to even up the score at 1-1.

With just under five minutes remaining in the second period, UNH defenseman Brian Yandle sent the puck in towards the net from beyond the right point. With a slue of traffic in front of Quick, Matt Fornataro was able to find enough space to clean up the mess and give UNH a 2-1 advantage.

The Wildcats put the game away early in the third period on a play starting with Brian Pouliot holding the puck behind the net. A defensive lapse allowed Andrew Leach to get open in front of Quick. Pouliot fed Leach, who promptly buried the puck into the back of the net. Brett Hemingway added an empty netter to close out the scoring with 1:54 to play.

After UMass outworked Maine to earn a brunt of the scoring opportunities in the first period on Saturday night, the Black Bears were able to put a dent in the scoreboard when Rob Bellamy flicked the puck toward the net, and it hovered through the crowd and past goalie Gabe Winer to put Maine ahead 1-0 with 1:45 to go in the opening frame.

Derek Damon, who scored the game-winning goal against Boston College the night before, redirected Josh Soares' feed passed Winer to give the Black Bears a 2-0 advantage on the power play goal at the 6:15 mark of the second period.

A little more than five minutes later, Keenan Hopson found himself alone in front of Winer. His first shot was deflected by Winer's leg, but the rebound went straight back to him, and Hopson made sure Winer wouldn't stop his second opportunity.

KAREN WONG/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore P.J. Fenton and the UMass hockey team dropped two decisions this weekend, losing to UNH 4-1 on Friday and to Maine 4-3 on Saturday.

Jon Jankus added Maine's fourth goal on a breakaway. Entering the UMass zone all by his lonesome, Jankus faked left, Winer committed and he easily slid the puck around Winer's left leg.

Minutewoman season ends

WOMEN'S SOCCER from page 10

that UMass took a bit of a shake-up.

Goalkeeper Kristin Walker made a clearance of the ball, but her knee wobbled, sending her to the ground for nearly ten minutes. The injury put the Minutewomen in a very sticky situation. They had no backup goalie, as senior Kristin Rutland has only played one minute all season and was hurt for this one.

Walker got up and finished the rest of the game, but she was far less mobile and wasn't able to go after a lot of balls that she normally would.

"That rattled the hell out of our team," Rudy said. "What absolutely changed was that now she couldn't take goal kicks, she couldn't punt effectively, she couldn't play back passes to her pressure. We rely on the goalkeeper for back passing and pressure."

Now it was Jessie Wolfe playing the Blyler role, scoring a goal in each half for Richmond to fuel their 2-0 win on their final home game of the regular season. The Spiders will not be playing in the A-10 Tournament either.

In the 40th minute, Wolfe approached a ball off of a corner kick from Sarah Hilt that normally Walker may have been able to get to. But nonetheless, she headed it, and the ball went by Walker for the 1-0 score.

Wolfe then added to the scoring four minutes into the second half with a long and high chip shot from 30 yards out that beat Walker to the upper right corner of the goal for the 2-0 score and, eventually win.

The Spiders out-shot UMass 20-8 in the game and had a 9-3 advantage on corner kicks. The junior Walker closes out the 2005 season with seven shutouts – a career-high. She recorded four in 18 starts last season, giving her a career total of 11.

UMass loses six seniors to graduation, including four starters. Without a doubt, the efforts of co-captain Lindsey Bellini, Blyler, Morgan Czaja, Tiffany Hamill, co-captain Amy Maffucci and Rutland will be missed.

"They're a great group of kids," Rudy said. "That's a hell of a way to go out."

Atlantic 10 tournament on tap

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

It took an extra day, but the Massachusetts field hockey team will return to the Atlantic 10 tournament this season after defeating Rhode Island 2-1. After days of heavy rain, the game was moved from Saturday to Sunday in an effort to let conditions improve on the University of Rhode Island's natural grass field. The Rams (7-10 2-5 Atlantic 10) came into the game with an outside chance of earning a playoff spot, but needed a win and losses by several other teams. The Minutewomen (7-12 4-3 A-10), however, needed only to win Sunday's game to get into the tournament for the 16th time in 17 years.

They did just that and will face No. 2 seed Temple (11-9 6-1 A-10) in the first round of the A-10 tournament as the third seed.

"We were on natural grass [for the first time], and it was [URI's] senior day, but we're right where we wanted to be," UMass coach Patty Shea said after the game.

UMass were guaranteed a playoff berth with a win, as the Minutewomen were the only remaining playoff contenders in the A-10 that controlled their own destiny.

Saturday the Owls defeated Saint Joseph's (10-9 3-4 A-10), allowing the Minutewomen to move up in the standings from fourth to third. St. Joe's (10-9 3-4 A-10) will take the fourth seed and face top-seeded Richmond (12-5 7-0 A-10) in the other first round match. St. Louis (7-11 3-4 A-10) became the team on the outside looking in after losing to Richmond 3-0 on Sunday.

The Billikens finished the regular season tied for fourth in the conference, but lost the tie breaker for the final playoff spot due to a head-to-head loss to St. Joe's earlier in the season.

The Rams got out to the early lead with a goal by freshman Laura Hackenberger on a feed from senior Amy Brown just 2:55 into the first half. The Minutewomen would respond, as the first half would belong to the seniors. On one of nine penalty corners on the day, senior midfielder Patricia Borneo hit senior back Jaime Bawden at the top of the circle, who sent a laser past Rhode Island goalie M. J. Britt to tie the game.

As the first half belonged to the seniors, the second half went to the freshmen of UMass. With just over eight minutes to play, freshman midfielder Brigitte Leonard fed freshman forward Mary Shea who scored the game-winner, her third of the season. Leonard's assist marks her first career point.

With two UMass seniors combining for a score in the first half, and two freshmen doing the same in the second, Sunday's game was a symbol of how the team has performed all season. The combination of youth and experience is something the Minutewomen have used to their advantage all year.

"The great thing is that no one cares who gets the credit," Shea said. "The seniors are willing to pass the ball to the freshman in order to get a score."

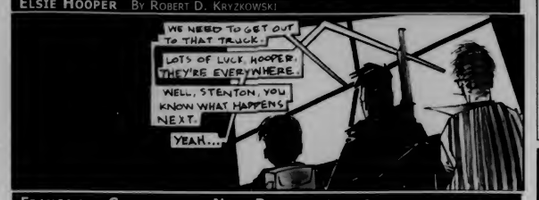
UMass dominated the game offensively, out shooting the Rams 17-6, including a 10-1 shot advantage in the second half. The Minutewomen also led 9-4 in penalty corners, with three in the second half to zero for URI.

The stage is now set for the Maroon and White to return to the A-10 championship and avenge a 3-1 loss to Richmond in last year's championship game held at Garber Field. If both teams win their first round games in Philadelphia this weekend, they will meet on Saturday for the rematch.

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.northamherstmotors.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repairs & Glass Replacement

Monday-Friday 7:30-6
Thursday 7:30-8
Saturday 7:30-4
SATURN
Saturn of Hadley
40 Russell St, Route 9
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 584-6066
Our service center repairs all kinds of cars...not just Saturns.
Oil & Filter Change Only $19.99
Includes topping off all fluids, adjusting tire pressures, Check antifreeze for winter protection.
FREE wash & vacuum. FREE 27 point inspection.
• Mass State Inspection Station
• Free shuttle service to & from UMASS
• Located directly on bike path & PVTA stop.
No Appointment Needed
10% off mechanical repairs
Late hours on Thursdays



ROADHOUSE CAFE
The Roadhouse Cafe features
"WHERE BAY ROAD MEETS ROUTE 9"
A Healthy Place To Eat!
Organic fruits and vegetables
Healthy and nutritious homemade meals
Custom-baked cakes
Mention this ad and receive $1.00 off a breakfast special!
Stop by our cozy bar, enjoy great food, rides, and catch up on some reading. We are happy to serve you. The chefs the boss!
OPEN: Monday-Friday 6 to noon; Sat.-Sun. 7 to 2 p.m.
BELCHERTOWN, MA • 323-6175

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
WANT A HOT JOB?
Learn to be a Professional Bartender!
Classes Starting Now!
Boston Bartenders School
218 Memorial Avenue • West Springfield
1-800-357-3210
www.bostonbartender.com

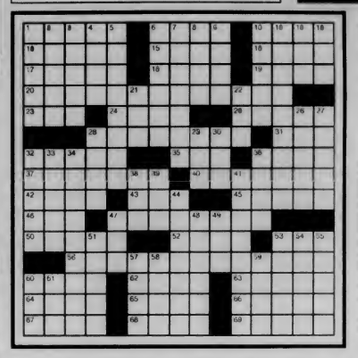
LABRAT By Richard Martelly

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Kryzkowski

FRANCO THE CLARINETTING NAVY BEAN By Rainy Stanford

RANDOM CHATTER By Chris Sala

FUNCTIONAL DYSTOPIA By Zeid Rusan



ACROSS
1 Landing area
6 "Paper Lion" star
10 Urgent memo letters
14 Cake cut
15 Forest denizen
16 Perform a task again
17 ___ Porthos and Aramis
18 Lisa's first name?
19 Blackthorn
20 Not give a rap about
23 Prepared
24 Space
25 Make law
28 Current events at old movies
31 Armed conflict
32 Preminger and Kruger
35 Move on a PC
36 Tonoise rival
37 Orderless
40 Fertility goddess
42 Gulf relative
43 Shad delicacy
45 Convex moldings
46 Period
47 Carolina team
50 Principle of faith
52 Patriot Nathan
53 Circle part
58 Green arrow, e.g.
60 Part of speech
62 Good fortune
63 Skater Kerrigan
64 Leather punches
65 Preacher Roberts
66 Attempted
67 Dog tired
68 Noah of "E.R."
69 Way too heavy

DOWN
1 Rhubarbs
2 Church contribution
3 Punch again
4 Desktop image
5 Most annoying
6 Owns up to
7 Workout wear
8 Fender damage
9 Inland sea of Asia
10 Fiery crime
11 Conscious
12 Bother
13 "The Gold Bug" penner
21 First gear
22 Snakelike fish
26 Blanche's first name?
27 Elm and oak
28 Lunch time
29 Actress Gabor
30 McElaim and McMahon
32 Two quartets combined
33 At that place
34 Hairy spider
36 Cronies
38 Author Levin
39 Pro's opposite
41 Ripped open
44 Moral
47 School org.
48 Type of artificial fly
49 Golfer Ernie
51 Dada artist Max
53 Lebowitz or Lanston
54 Tries to outrun
55 Glasgow's river
57 Run smoothly
58 Intense anger
59 Clothing
60 Collar
61 Have debts

Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

Don't like what you see?
Draw your own!
e-mail collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Submit your comic!
e-mail collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Bring your calculator to class today. You won't regret it.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your neighbors don't hate you nearly as much as they say they do.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
That mask is wicked scary. Take it off before you don't have any friends.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
It's time to break out the winter jacket. Sweatshirts just aren't cutting it anymore.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Way to fail that test in the only class you really need credit for.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your Halloween costume is almost as unoriginal as your sense of humor.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You look like a leprechaun today. It is not attractive.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Your nails totally don't look like you did them yourself.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your goal for the day is to not order food.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You need more calcium in your diet. Drink orange juice.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You will run out of coffee at a critical moment today.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You will hear your favorite song of all time on the radio today.

Quote of the Day

"Each person must live their life as a model for others."

—Rosa Parks

New in Town?
Amherst Hairstylists
Caren's Place
You can trust us with your hair.
40 Main St.
Downtown Amherst
(Next to Newbury Comics)
413 253 1200
Mon-Fri 10-6
Sat 10-4
Visa/MC/S
This Ad Will Run Mon & Thurs
•Haircuts & Styling
•Hair Coloring (Free Highlighting Consultation)
•Multi-Color Highlighting
•Body & Facial Waxing
•For Both Men & Women
•Walk-Ins Welcome!
Get it done right the first time!
Full Semester Coupon Special!
1/2 price facial waxing on Wed through December.
$1 off any service with this ad until 12/05
Only with this coupon
www.carensplace.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$600 Group Fundraiser Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising programs Equals $1,000-$3,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for up to $600 in bonuses when you schedule your fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments. Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Civic DX Good condition CD Many new parts. $1699 obo 413-212-9384

EMPLOYMENT

Work Study – Admin Asst Must have computer skills and know Access and Excel. 10 hours per week max. $8.19-9.48 hr. Application on line at www.lsse.org Email application to: bilzb@amherstma.org

Rent us your ears! Listening experiments $10/hr English must be your first language email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8 Hr 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location – NO SALES! Night & wknd; shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience nees. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Web programmer with experience with graphics design wanted for work in the Office of ALANA Affairs Up to $10 an hour Apply at office in room 302 in Student Union or email ofalana@stuaf.umass.edu

FOR SALE

In the market for a hard-to-find item? Why not try your luck with a classified ad in the Collegian? Call 545-3500 to place an ad. Or visit us in the Campus Center basement between the hours of 8:30am & 3:00pm.

FURNITURE

Sealy Mattress Set KING $575.00 QUEEN $465.00 FULL $365.00 TWIN $195 Save 50% or more off store prices. For more details call 215-431-9584

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons for both males & females in Northampton www.westernmassboxing.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Nice room in Echo Hill. Busline. Everything included internet $350.00 413-687-0430

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

SPRING BREAK – Early Booking Specials – FREE Meals & Drinks - $50 Deposit – 800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

Advertise in the Collegian: Reach over 14,000 readers daily! Call 545-3500 to speak with an advertising representative about your advertising options.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

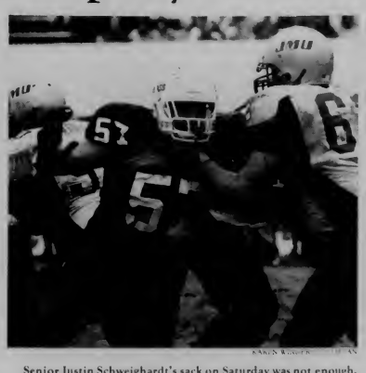
SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, OCTOBER 31, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Wildcats play 'Ball'

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts football team (6-2 5-1 Atlantic 10) was able to erase a 14-point first-half deficit, but time ran out on the Minutemen while trying to overcome a 13-point disadvantage and fell to No. 4 New Hampshire 34-28 in front of 12,539 fans on a cold Saturday at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.



The Minutemen return to action on Saturday when they kick off a three-game road trip to close out their schedule with a 1 p.m. contest against Delaware.

UMass, ranked seventh in the nation entering the game with New Hampshire, didn't have an answer for UNH (7-1 5-1 A-10) wide receiver David Ball, who tied a McGuirk Stadium record with four touchdown receptions and also contributed with 199 receiving yards on nine catches.

"He didn't have a great game against [UMass] last year in our minds," UNH coach Sean McDonnell said. "He came back this year. He wanted to play and wanted to show some people that he is the best receiver in the league. I don't think there is any doubt in anybody's mind right now, with the way he played today, how good of a receiver he is."

"We doubled [Ball] a bunch," UMass coach Don Brown said. "We were playing two-shell, double, three-shell. We had the flat and curl covered underneath him, had three deep. We played every possible coverage you can possibly think of. We showed blitz.

"I have a lot of confidence in our guys. You're not going to beat a team – offensively, with those kind of guys – if you just play them one way and one way only. Unfortunately, for us, we gave up plays."

KAREN WINOGRON/COLLEGIAN

Senior Justin Schweighardt's sack on Saturday was not enough, as the UMass football team fell to New Hampshire 34-28.

And just like in UMass' loss at Colgate on Sept. 10, the Minutemen made a few too many key mistakes, which doomed their fate in the end.

Trailing 7-0 on their first possession, the Minutemen drove the ball into the red zone, but they failed to come away with any points after Armando Cuko missed a 33-yard field goal wide right.

On their next possession, an illegal motion penalty on wide receiver Dominique Stewart negated a 26-yard touchdown run by Steve Baylark.

Six plays later, on fourth-and-two, UMass coach Don Brown opted against sending Cuko and the field goal unit onto the field, and Liam Coen's pass to Tim Day fell to the ground, giving UNH possession on its own 15-yard line.

After appearing to force the Wildcats to a three-and-out, however, Jason Leonard was flagged for roughing the

See FOOTBALL on page 8

Minutemen drop weekend games

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

It's hard to imagine that one team can fail to catch any lucky breaks over the course of an entire year, but that is continuing to hold true for the Massachusetts hockey team (1-4-0 0-2-0), which dropped a pair of Hockey East contests over the weekend at the Mullins Center.

After outplaying No. 13 New Hampshire (2-2-1 1-0-0 HEA) through much of Friday night's contest, UMass fizzled in the third period and fell to the Wildcats 4-1 in the conference opener for each team.

Then, the Minutemen mustered up plenty of scoring chances but never saw any of them come to fruition on Saturday night in their 4-0 loss to No. 5 Maine (7-1-0 2-0-0 HEA), which has now won six consecutive games.

"[Saturday], for this first time, we were coming apart at the seems, and Maine is the type of team where once they see that happening they just pounce on you," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "It made tonight's performance a whole lot worse than [Friday] night's, and it made the weekend a real difficult one for us."

Adding to UMass' offensive woes is the team's inability to generate any end results on the power play, as the Minutemen have failed to score a power play goal in their last 18 opportunities.

"We're not scoring five-on-five goals," Cahoon said. "We're not real productive. We need something on special teams, and as much as you don't want to panic about it, there has got to be some sense of urgency."

The Minutemen have now only scored one goal in their last 126:36 and just two goals in 173:17 of action.

"We've got to convert," Cahoon said. "We can't be scoring one or two goals a game and expect that we are going to win. We can strategize all we want. We can play pretty competitively, but we've got to put three, four, five goals on the board on a consistent basis if you're going to win in this league."

UMass was able to survive a horrific start against UNH after seeing defenseman David Leaderer head to the penalty box for roughing 45 seconds into the game and watching defensive captain Marvin Degon face an ejection just 68 seconds after the opening faceoff for hitting from behind.

Just a few seconds after UNH's two-man advantage expired, Jacob Micflikier fed Daniel Winnik from just below the right point. Winnik, open in front of UMass goalie Jon Quick, redirected the pass through the five-hole of the rookie net-minder.

See HOCKEY on page 8

KAREN WINOGRON/COLLEGIAN

Senior captain Stephen Werner and the UMass hockey team was outscored 8-1 this weekend. Werner is second on the team in scoring with five points.

UNH offense won the battle

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

Prior to the start of Saturday's brawl between the Massachusetts football team (6-2 5-1 Atlantic 10) and New Hampshire (7-1 5-1 A-10), it was assumed that the outcome of the contest would be based off of the success of the Minutemen's No. 1 defense in 1-AA football, and the Wildcat's pass-happy duo of Ricky Santos and David Ball.

With Santos and Ball connecting on four touchdowns to spark UNH's 34-28 victory, the A-10's most deadly offense, namely Ball, proved to be the difference-maker.

And it was the Wildcat's ability to beat the maroon and white on third downs that gave UNH life, and the necessary edge to earn the victory.

"That's just something our offense has been prone to do this season," Santos said. "When it comes to crunch time, the guys up front always find a way to give that extra protection; the [receivers] get open for me. With all these weapons on our side, my job's pretty easy — they get open for me and I just get them the ball."

In a contest in which UNH was able to convert on 9-of-16 third down attempts, the first TD from Santos to Ball came following a crucial third-and-11 during the game's very first drive of the afternoon.

A dump-off pass from Santos to senior tailback John McCoy extended the Wildcat's opening-drive, as McCoy sprinted 17 yards down the left sideline and into Minuteman territory, setting up the first of four Ball touchdowns.

Two McCoy rushes brought up another third down for UNH, this time from the UMass 45-yard line. Santos hit Ball in stride, and the A-10's leading receiver ran it in for the game's first score.

"David Ball was probably the difference in the game, we had trouble handling him all day long," UMass coach Don Brown said. "I think they're pretty good, I think Ball's very good, Santos is very solid. They're a pretty good offensive football team. They've got a lot of weapons and they spread it out pretty well."

With Ball catching one TD pass in each of the game's four quarters, the second came 20 seconds into the second quarter. Just four yards away from the Minuteman end-zone, Santos and Ball again overcame the nation's top defense on third-and-goal, hooking up for the second of four touchdowns.

The third TD strike by Santos and Ball came at a decisive point during the contest. After the Minutemen rallied back from a 14-point deficit in the second half to take the lead 21-17, with 4:23 remaining in the third quarter, and yet another third down, Santos delivered for his squad.

From the UMass 12-yard line, Santos dropped back, and tried to find time for his receivers to get open. Scrambling around in the backfield, two UMass defenders looked as though they had sacked the sophomore quarterback, but Santos broke away from them and zipped a pass to Ball, who was open in the back of the Minuteman end-zone.

"They blitzed off the right edge, it was actually my fault why they came, I slid the protection the wrong way," Santos said. "I had to buy some time, kind of faked one to the left, shook off [Keron Williams], and I kind of just tried to jump back to the right."

The final TD by the duo occurred 1:17 into the fourth quarter, when Santos threw to an open Ball for a 33-yard play.

Ball finished the afternoon catching nine passes for 199 yards and four touchdowns, while Santos completed 18-of-28 passes for 248 yards and his four TD passes to Ball.

UM soccer still alive

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team continues to cling on to its Atlantic 10 Tournament hopes.

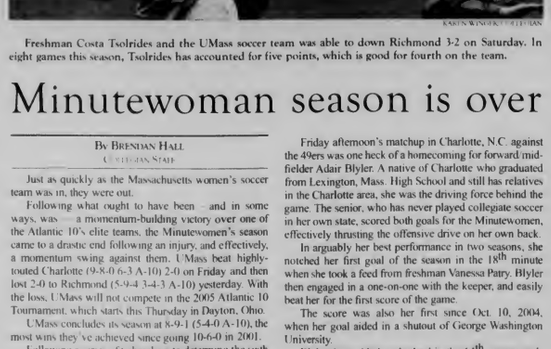
A 2-2 tie against Charlotte on Friday and a dramatic 3-2 come-from-behind victory against Richmond yesterday allowed the Minutemen to keep their playoff aspirations alive for the time being.

In order to have a chance to make the tournament, it looks as if UMass will need to win both of its games next weekend against Fordham and St. Bonaventure on the road.

With their success this weekend, the Minutemen moved up two places in the conference standings from 12th place to 10th.

On Friday it took a late second half goal from Charlotte's Adam Ruud to force the overtime periods in which neither team could capitalize.

Ruud's equalizer came at the 87:36 mark of the game with just over two minutes remaining in the game. The senior bicycle-kicked a rocket right over the head of UMass goalkeeper Zack Simmons. The shot was so hard Simmons barely had enough time to get his hands in front of his face.



"[Ruud] finished a great goal in the last two minutes. I feel bad for our guys we didn't get the result," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "I think we're frustrated and you can't leave a guy wide open inside the 18-yard box and let them have a chance like that and [Ruud] can put them away. We knew that going in and we had a mental lapse for a moment and it cost us."

In the overtime periods both teams had chances to end the game, but neither could get the job done.

UMass jumped on the 49ers early when senior captain Oral Bullen netted his first goal since Sept. 5 against Michigan.

At the 15:39 mark of the first half Bullen took a pass from fellow senior Ernie Billittier and dribbled in toward the net. Charlotte goalkeeper Tim Seibert came out to

See MEN'S SOCCER on page 8

KAREN WINOGRON/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Costa Tsolrides and the UMass soccer team was able to down Richmond 3-2 on Saturday. In eight games this season, Tsolrides has accounted for five points, which is good for fourth on the team.

Minutewoman season is over

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Just as quickly as the Massachusetts women's soccer team was in, they were out.

Following what ought to have been – and in some ways, was – a momentum-building victory over one of the Atlantic 10's elite teams, the Minutewomen's season came to a drastic end following an injury, and effectively, a momentum swing against them. UMass beat highly-touted Charlotte (9-8-0 6-3 A-10) 2-0 on Friday and then lost 2-0 to Richmond (5-9-4 3-4-3 A-10) yesterday. With the loss, UMass will not compete in the 2005 Atlantic 10 Tournament, which starts this Thursday in Dayton, Ohio.

UMass concludes its season at 8-9-1 (5-4-0 A-10), the most wins they've achieved since going 10-6-0 in 2001.

Following a series of tiebreakers to determine the sixth and final seed in this year's Atlantic 10 Tournament, the Minutewomen were informed late yesterday afternoon that they were eliminated on a technicality. Although they clobbered Duquesne in head-to-head competition in pouring rain earlier this season, the Dukes had a better winning percentage against in-common opponents than UMass.

That will be the tie-breaker that the Minutewomen will be forced to deal with. UMass coach Jim Rudy was a little shocked to hear the news.

"We're shocked that it could go that way," Rudy said. "I'm disappointed. I thought we did enough to get in, but the tie-breaker rules didn't favor us at all."

Friday afternoon's matchup in Charlotte, N.C. against the 49ers was one heck of a homecoming for forward/midfielder Adair Blyler. A native of Charlotte who graduated from Lexington, Mass. High School and still has relatives in the Charlotte area, she was the driving force behind the game. The senior, who has never played collegiate soccer in her own state, scored both goals for the Minutewomen, effectively thrusting the offensive drive on her own back.

In arguably her best performance in two seasons, she notched her first goal of the season in the 18th minute when she took a feed from freshman Vanessa Patry. Blyler then engaged in a one-on-one with the keeper, and easily beat her for the first score of the game.

The score was also her first since Oct. 10, 2004, when her goal aided in a shutout of George Washington University.

Blyler then added to the lead in the 64th minute midway through the second half, taking a feed from a different Vanessa – this one, sophomore Vanessa Luna – to score a cross from two yards out.

This is the second and final two-goal effort for Blyler in her career, her other coming in the 2003 season opener against Quinnipiac.

Through the first 19 minutes of yesterday's match-up in Richmond, Va., their second match this season on FieldTurf, it seemed again that the Minutewomen were going to take another win. But it was in that 19th minute

See WOMEN'S SOCCER on page 8

UMass did not capitalize on opportunities

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

It was a real rough weekend for the Massachusetts hockey team (1-4-0 0-2-0 Hockey East). The Minutemen dropped their first two league games of the season against New Hampshire (2-2-1 1-0-0 HE) and Maine (7-1-0 2-0-0 HE) on Friday and Saturday night and in the process they couldn't capitalize on virtually any of the scoring opportunities they had.

The puck was not bouncing the Minutemen's way either night. The Maroon and White could not buy a goal against UNH's Tim Pietrasiak and Maine's Matt Lundin.

The only one they could slip by the opposing goalie was Mike Kostka's score on Friday night, midway through the first period.

Both nights the Minutemen had plenty of chances to put the puck in the back of the net but they just couldn't capitalize on any of the opportunities that were presented to them.

In the games against the Wildcats and Black Bears, the Maroon and White took a combined overall 144 shots. However, not many of those shots even made it through the defense to reach the net.

Out of those 144, only 68 of the pucks actually made it to the goalie. Once they got there, all but one was saved by the opposing goalie.

UMass had 41 shots blocked by the defense on the weekend.

During both games they just couldn't seem to get quality shots on the opposing net. Coach Don Cahoon recognizes his team's problem with missed chances.

"Obviously our inability to convert when given opportunities continues to haunt us and we don't have an answer for that yet," Cahoon said after the UNH game. "We had some really great chances, we got to convert, we can't be scoring one or two goals a game and expect that we're going to win."

One major area where the Minutemen aren't taking care of their chances is on the power play. UMass had a very tough time of it when they had the man advantage this weekend. They had a combined 11 power play opportunities but weren't able to convert any of them.

"I feel like as big a part of them winning the game was us not winning the game, our inability to execute our inability to put together or assemble any type of power play," Cahoon said Saturday after the Maine game. "Those are pretty good players I'm putting out on the power play unit and the fact that they're not getting some things done together is really mystifying to me."

On one power play on Saturday night, UMass was awarded a five-minute man advantage as Maine's Matt Duffy was given a major for hitting from behind, and a game misconduct.

During the extended man advantage, UMass proceeded to lose a faceoff in their own zone and then was called for icing.

The power play was then cut short when freshman Alex Berry was given a two minute penalty for too many men on ice forcing play back to even strength at four-on-four.

"Our power play has been not very good for a long stretch here now," Cahoon said. "We need some power play, we're not scoring five-on-five goals we're not real productive we need something in special teams. As much as you don't want to panic about it there's got to be a sense of urgency."

NOVEMBER

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 2005 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM VOLUME CXVI ISSUE 38

Annual Majors Fair to be held for students

By ANNA DOLIANITIS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The annual Majors Fair will be held this Wednesday in the Student Union Ballroom from 6:00-8:00 p.m.

The Majors Fair has been held for several years, and has evolved over time. "Pre-Major Advising had its own event, Commonwealth College had its own event, and somehow they got together and turned it into this large, one-time event," said Peter Woodsum, a representative of Commonwealth College.

The event is meant to help students not only to select majors, but also to find minors and certificate programs. "People who are looking for certificate programs and minors – something to supplement their majors – also attend the fair," said Woodsum.

"I think it serves as a tool to help students find their major and also, two-fold, it gives departments an opportunity to showcase their programs and services that they offer," said Regina Middleton, an academic advisor with Pre-Major Advising Services.

The event consists of tables and displays set up by the departments, which students visit at their own convenience, spending time speaking with representatives about majors and programs that interest them.

Representatives include academic advisors, graduate students, professors and, in some cases, undergraduates. "[Students] can go and talk to these people and find out why they are in this major and what the career choices for this discipline are," said Woodsum.

See MAJORS on page 3

Student shares Katrina researching experience

By CAMERON J. WOODS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For many, the effects of Hurricane Katrina are devastating, but for Jennifer L. Bonin the damage of these storms is so powerful that it has followed her back to the University of Massachusetts.

Bonin, a graduate student at UMass in the geological sciences department, joined a team of researchers heading for Louisiana and Mississippi. "It was just so terrible, people in New Orleans were angry about human error but the people in Mississippi are just so lost because of how damaging nature was," said Bonin.

She spent Sept. 9-23 traveling up the path left by Hurricane Katrina as a member of a research team associated with Radio Response, a company based out of Denver, Colo.

"I was there to make maps," said Bonin. "It was sad; there was so much devastation that for search and rescue it was nearly impossible to tell what used to be what."

In her time there, Bonin worked closely with Jim Patlent and Kevin Cupit, who also worked for Radio Response. The team did research on mapping out of towns along the Gulf of Mexico, reflecting the area's population density and other key types of information needed by rescue workers. She said, "It was bad. When I got there, I saw people using tourist maps just trying to get a sense of where survivors might be."

Over the two-week period, Bonin and the team started in Ponchitula, Louisiana and moved northeast along the Gulf of Mexico into Mississippi, through such towns as Bay St. Louis, Waveland, Biloxi and Gulfport. Bonin explained the significance of this region by saying, "The eye passed right over Gulfport, meaning the greatest damage done by Katrina happened right around there on the outer edges of the eye."

COURTESY JENNIFER BONIN

Once a three-story house, this building was destroyed by the violent winds of Hurricane Katrina.

The level of devastation that Bonin saw is beyond anything done by nature in recent North American history. The worst hurricane to pass through New England in the last couple of decades was the Category 1 Bob. That storm tore up trees, moved homes and caused tidal flooding along the Atlantic coast for days. The power of a Category 5 hurricane, which Katrina was, is roughly 5,000 times that of a Category 1.

See KATRINA on page 2

SCERA organizes march to chancellor's house

By MIKE PARRISH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Concerned students gathered last night on the Student Union steps and then marched to Chancellor John Lombardi's house to protest several University of Massachusetts policies that they disagree with.

This protest was organized by Jamie Jee, a Public Policy graduate student and coordinator of the Student Center for Education and Reform (SCERA).

Throughout the day, Jee and other members of SCERA handed out concern cards to students. The cards presented issues to be addressed and left space for students to write any other concerns they may have. Throughout the day, they collected 300-500 cards to be brought up to Chancellor Lombardi's house.

According to SCERA, UMass has not been complying with the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) by ignoring a request for student campus data. SCERA sent in a request for this information in the summer of 2004, and the University has not released any information since the request was filed.

Another complaint that was brought up at the protest was the fact that the University has been trying to pass plans for searches of students' dormitory rooms and/or bag searches, which could lead to profiling.

Anthony Hall, a resident in Gorman and a freshman communications major, said, "I don't think it's fair to have random searches of bags in dorms or profiling."

Carrie Sallgren, a senior English major, said, "I'm concerned about the administration and having [it] implement particular restrictions. I feel it is an invasion of privacy and unconstitutional." Salgren, who was previously a Resident Assistant at UMass, said, "I think it would make it difficult to build community in the dorms."

Jee said the goal of SCERA is "primarily to make this [protest] informational by introducing students to what is going on and trying to get them involved. In general, the University has a number of issues that we'll need to get students involved in. We want a fully-funded and accessible UMass. We're helping to start broader involvement on campus."

Concerned students converged on Chancellor John Lombardi's house last night to hand deliver cards documenting student concerns.

The march on Lombardi's house, following the protest, involved over a dozen students with concern cards in hand to give to Lombardi and to personally express their concerns.

Lombardi came to the door expecting trick-or-treaters, but was greeted by students with orange cards. When he was handed the concern cards, he stated, "I'm always glad to have that."

See MARCH on page 3

Graduate record entrance exam faces changes

By KERI FULTON
(UWIRE) DAILY BRUIN

WASHINGTON — By next October, the Graduate Record Exam will have completed its biggest makeover in 55 years.

Students around the country take the Graduate Record Exam, or GRE, each year as they apply to graduate schools. Admissions officials use scores from the test to predict how applicants may perform in graduate school. Based on data gathered over four years of research, the Educational Testing Service, or ETS – the nonprofit group that designs the test – will incorporate different formats and questions into the existing verbal reasoning, quantitative reasoning and analytical writing sections. The changes will lengthen the test from two and a half hours to over four hours.

In addition, there will be increased protection against cheating.

"These changes are intended to make the GRE ... a more accurate gauge of how qualified prospective students are to do graduate-level work," said David Payne, executive director of the GRE program for the Educational Testing Service's higher education division.

The group said it considered guidance from the graduate education community in making changes to the test.

The verbal reasoning measure will soon consist of two 30-minute sections instead of one 30-minute section, and it will place a greater emphasis on cognitive skills and less emphasis on vocabulary, the test-makers said. The section will also include a broader selection of reading passages and an expansion of computer-enabled tasks.

The quantitative measure will include two 40-minute sections instead of one 45-minute section, with fewer geometry questions and more real-life scenarios with data interpretation. There will also be an on-screen, four-function calculator with a square root feature.

The analytical writing measure will be 15 minutes shorter with more focused questions to ensure original analytical writing. A 30-minute argument and issue tasks portion will also be added.

Due to additional questions in the verbal and quantitative sections, the point scale on which the test is graded faces changes. ETS plans on finalizing the new scale as of next November.

Unlike the current exam, each version of the revised GRE will be used only once, making it more difficult to cheat on. The exam will be given 70 times each year around the world.

"The new test will emphasize complex reasoning skills that are closely aligned to graduate work," Payne said. Payne believes that changes to the test will improve its usefulness to students and graduate schools.

Although ETS insists that these changes are beneficial and necessary, Robert Schaeffer, Public Education Director of the National Center for Fair & Open Testing, or FairTest, said that he suspects the remodeling of the test to be a "marketing ploy."

FairTest is an advocacy group that works "to end the misuses and flaws of standardized testing and to ensure that evaluation of students, teachers and schools is fair, open, valid and educationally beneficial."

Schaffer said that the test will also likely be more expensive for students. Schaeffer said the changes resulted from ETS losing parts of contracts for the new SAT and GMAT, other entrance tests the group manages, within the last year. In an effort to keep demand for the GRE up, Schaeffer said ETS made cosmetic changes to the GRE.

Schaeffer said he believes ETS has a monopoly on graduate admissions testing, and that the new test has its setbacks, "without necessarily improving its value as a predictive tool for graduate admissions."

Bush names new Supreme Court nominee

By DAVID ESPO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush named Appeals Court Judge Samuel Alito to the Supreme Court on Monday, hoping to usher in a historic new era of judicial conservatism while ending a Republican divide that doomed an earlier nomination.

Minority Democrats signaled a potentially bruising confirmation battle ahead. Sen. Harry Reid of Nevada, the party's leader, asked whether Alito was "too radical for the American people" and wondered aloud "why those who want to pack the court with judicial activists are so much more enthusiastic about him than" Harriet Miers.

Bush, naming a replacement for Justice Sandra Day O'Connor four days after Miers withdrew her name, said Alito "has a deep understanding of the proper role of judges in our society."

"He understands that judges are to interpret the laws, not to impose their preferences or priorities on the people," the president said.

Alito's politically conservative views were not in dispute. "Of course he's against abortion," his 90-year-old mother Rose told reporters at her home in Hamilton, N.J.

Despite the unguarded comments of a proud mother, Sen. Arlen Specter, who will chair Judiciary Committee hearings, told reporters in the Capitol, "There is a lot more to do with a woman's right to choose than how you feel about it personally." The Pennsylvania Republican cited adherence to legal precedent in rulings over 30 years upholding abortion rights.

Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist welcomed Alito warmly to the Capitol less than two hours after Bush's announcement, escorting the judge, his wife and two children into the Rotunda to stand before the casket of civil rights pioneer Rosa Parks. The Tennessee Republican said the Senate would vote by year's end if possible, in accord with Bush's wishes, but he made no commitment.

Senator Bill Frist meets with Samuel Alito Jr. at the Capitol as he became President Bush's new choice to replace departing Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.

Several Senate aides said it could be several weeks into 2006 before the full Senate votes on the 55-year-old son of an Italian immigrant.

Even before Alito arrived at the Capitol, both parties were searching his record.

Democrats pointed to two cases in which he had issued rulings from the bench that were rejected by the Supreme Court. More than a decade ago, he upheld a requirement for spousal notification in an abortion case. Earlier this year, with O'Connor casting the deciding vote, the high court threw out a death sentence that Alito had upheld in the case of a man who argued his lawyer had been ineffective.

See ALITO on page 3

ARTS & LIVING

WEST MEETS EAST
Kanye West performed at the Mullin's Center last night

PAGE 7

EDITORIAL/OPINION

ONE PUNCH
One Collegian editor takes a look at the fragility of life.

PAGE 5

WEATHER

TODAY Partly Cloudy, H67°, L41°
TONIGHT Partly Cloudy, H41°, L37°
TOMORROW Sunny, H57°, L33°

SPORTS

HAMILL ENERGIZES UMASS
Tiffany Hamill was a catalyst for the UMass soccer teams improved record

PAGE 10

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Cameron J. Woods
BUSINESS MANAGER Hirak Shah
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerry O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egosian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Matthew O'Rourke
COMICS EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Allison Edles
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
PHOTO EDITOR Kate Sachsenmaier
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
HUMAN RESOURCE Phil Smoller
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Nathan Chomsky
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mackenzie Isler
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Jones
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Daley
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Belliveau
ASSISTANT PHOTO Elizabeth Caristi
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eric Athas
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Kristen LaCasse

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Cameron Woods
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Julie Teece
COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Balanger
PRODUCTION STAFF
Chris Martin,
Sarah Balanger

UMass student describes Katrina's destruction

KATRINA from page 1

"She was a monster," said Bonin. "I saw three-story houses reduced to their foundations, railroad tracks just tossed a mile from where they started, tied in knots and then some houses just seemed to have been passed over."

Not only do residents along the Gulf face the trials of rebuilding their towns, but they also face the long-term effects of the massive tidal surge that accompanied the storms. Bonin said, "Because of how high the salinity is after the flooding, the ecosystem in the entire region is just ruined indefinitely."

While helping rescue efforts Bonin crossed paths with the Rhode Island Urban Search and Rescue Squad, who were also working to repair what they could. A Rhode Island native herself, Bonin said, "It was just so amazing to come across those guys all the way out there. They were really great."

In light of the devastation done to the region, Bonin found residents in these towns to be tempering their sorrows with a bit of humor. One such individual Bonin met was Buddy. "I found him sitting on a lawn chair in what was once his lawn with a beer and a cigar; he looked at me and said, 'You know what? For the last 20 years I have hated my rich neighbors for blocking my view of the Gulf – well, I finally got it back.'" In another area of town Bonin found an empty house lot with a hand made sign which read, "Missing one red house; if found please call ..."

Bonin teaches Natural Disasters, a course offered through the geological sciences department and plans to use some of the images she captured along the trail of Hurricane Katrina's destruction as visual aids for the course. "It is just unbelievable the amount of damage a Category 5 [hurricane] can do, and I think that having these pictures to show will really help the students understand," said Bonin.

COURTESY JENNIFER BONIN

This is a view of the Gulf Coast as seen through what used to be someones living room. The house that used to be here was torn completely off of its foundation during Hurricane Katrina.

Police briefs: liquor violations on the Halloween weekend

On Friday evening, there was a liquor law violation. The police arrived at 179 Lincoln Ave at 7:47 p.m. The vehicle the suspects were in was a 2002 Nissan SE. Erica Chloe Striar, 20, of Wayne, Pa., was arrested for underage possession of liquor and possession of a class D substance.

On Saturday, there was a fire at Puffton Village 67. The police arrived at 12:24 p.m. to assist the Amherst Fire Department. The police were then required to remain in the area for crowd control.

Later that morning, there was a disturbance at Puffton Village 73. The police arrived at 1:35 a.m. The police got a complaint about people smoking marijuana in the area. The suspects were gone by the time police arrived.

Around that same time, there was a fight at 50 Meadow St. The police arrived at 1:43 a.m. The police did not find a fight, but they were confronted with heavy foot traffic.

A few minutes later, there was a disturbance outside the Alpha Delta Phi house. The police arrived at 2:04 a.m. at 382 North Pleasant St. Thon Agany Ayiel, 21, of Brockton, was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct.

A short while later there was a case involving operation of a vehicle while under the influence. The police arrived at 2:09 a.m. at the corner of Fearing St. and North Pleasant St. The vehicle in question was a grey 1988 BMW SE. Kevin Timothy Crane, 20, of Plymouth, was arrested for operating under the influence of liquor, failure to yield or stop at a sign, and for speeding.

Also on Saturday morning was a liquor law violation. The police arrived at 144 Fearing St. at 2:35 a.m. David J. Corbett, 19, of Southborough, Mass. was arrested and charged with underage possession of alcohol and having an open container of liquor.

On Saturday evening, there was a noise complaint. The police arrived at 87 East Pleasant St. at 8:23 p.m. Van Tsoulas, 20, of Peabody, Paul Robert Debendetto, 20, of Somerville, Kevin Mahoney, 20, of Peabody and Michael Rosenfeld, 20, of East Meadow, N.Y., were all arrested and charged with creating unlawful noise.

On Sunday morning, there was a liquor law violation. The police arrived at 150 College St. at 12:05 a.m. Virginia Rives Kitchell, 19, of Amherst and Cecilia Kelly, 18, of Houston, Texas, were arrested for having an open container of alcohol and for underage possession of alcohol.

A few minutes later, there was a town by-law violation. The police arrived at 872 North Pleasant St. at 12:20 a.m. Aaron M. Snow, 23, of Amherst was arrested and charged with having an open container of alcohol.

About a half hour later, the police received a noise complaint. The police arrived at 560 Bay Rd. at 12:53 a.m. Bradford J. Stott, 22, of Nashua, N.H., and Paul Ronald Bolduc, 21, of Amherst were both arrested and charged with creating unlawful noise.

A few minutes later, there was another town by-law violation. The police arrived at 434 North Pleasant St. at 12:59 a.m. Kevin Mathew Ruocchio, 22, of Medford was arrested for having an open container of alcohol.

Later that morning there was an assault. At 111 Main St., around 3:19 a.m., Christopher T. Emery, 20, of Amherst was being released for a prior arrest. He then committed assault and battery on a police officer and was arrested again.

–Arka Sen

Teach for America draws applicants

By Cathy Wu
The Dartmouth (Dartmouth)

HANOVER, N.H. — Teach for America, a non-profit organization that brings college graduates into underprivileged public school classrooms, has generated significant interest at Dartmouth, where an astounding 11 percent of the senior class applied for positions last year, according to Teach for America recruiter Sam Clark.

The program begins with a summer-long training session, followed by regional orientation. Certified students are then placed in classrooms across the nation to teach underprivileged children.

Teach for America participants are not volunteers; they are paid by the school districts where they work and receive instructional support from Teach for America. Though Dartmouth students have traditionally been actively involved in needy communities, the appeal of Teach for America seems to be its effectiveness, its relatively short two-year time-commitment and the benefits for both graduates and their students.

"I was thinking about applying for Teach for America because it is a good way to give back to the community and a good way to contribute," Echo Brown '06 said.

Another incentive Teach for America offers its students is its connection with graduate schools and employers. On its Web site, Teach for America lists many graduate schools that offer tuition waivers, scholarships and two-year deferrals to students who join the program. The Web site also lists companies that actively recruit for Teach for America alumni.

"The main reasons that hold me back [from applying] are that I just want to be certain that I'm doing it for the right reasons. I just want to make sure that my intentions are right," Brown said.

The greatest incentive for students however, seems to be their own drive toward a greater good.

"If you're in it for the wrong reasons, it could lead to unsuccessful teachers," Clark said.

"It is not something people do just so it looks good on [their] resume," Julie Crudele '06 said.

Crudele is applying for a Teach for America position for next year. "I think people who apply and certainly the people who do it really want to do it."

Although most involved in the program agree that Teach for America is affecting social change, the summer-long training and orientation session and the two-year commitment have some students concerned about the program's long-range effectiveness.

"A lot of people are concerned if you can get the preparation you need in five weeks," Brown said. She also expressed concern for students who will have a rotating cast of educators during their early education. "What happens to these kids after these two years?" Brown asked.

Others point to the short-term commitment as a reason for the program's attractiveness for recent graduates.

"I think it's good that it's only two years," Crudelé said. "For those two years they just give up everything and do nothing but teach. If the program was longer, they would not have as many teachers."

Despite the challenges that graduates will face during their time with Teach for America, active recruiting and an opportunity to even out educational inequity has prompted many students to apply.

"We've seen a very positive interest and people are generally interested in affecting social change," Clark said.

COURTESY BILL GREENBLATT

Francis G. Slay participates in teach for America Week by teaching a 6th grade social studies class at L'Ouverture Accelerated Middle School.

QUINNIPIAC U:

OUR TOP 10 GRADUATE MAJORS:
MBA
Physician Assistant
Interactive Communications
Teaching
Biomedical Sciences
Molecular/Cell Biology Journalism
Nursing Accounting
Computer Information Systems

MASTERING THE ART OF TEACHING
Sheila Wycinowski, Director of Curriculum and Staff Development at Amity High School, explains, "Basically we look to hire Quinnipiac students. They have a clear understanding of lesson planning and classroom management and the balance between them." She also characterizes Quinnipiac students as articulate, creative, able to encourage higher-level thinking in students, and able to incorporate technology into their teaching.

RAVE REVIEWS FOR OUR MBA
The Quinnipiac University School of Business MBA program continues to prepare business professionals for the realities of management in global, technology-driven work environments in specializations such as:
• MBA WITH CONCENTRATIONS IN ACCOUNTING, CIS, FINANCE, INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS, MANAGEMENT, MARKETING
• MBA – CHARTERED FINANCIAL ANALYST® TRACK
• MBA IN HEALTHCARE MANAGEMENT

>> YOUR NEXT MOVE
Quinnipiac University offers graduate programs in 17 distinct disciplines. Whether you are interested in our AACSB nationally accredited business program, the master of arts in teaching (MAT) program or one of the Northeast's most highly regarded journalism and interactive communications programs, all have been designed to thoroughly prepare you for a professional career. For more information, call 1-800-462-1944 or visit www.quinnipiac.edu

QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY
Hamden, Connecticut

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
OPEN HOUSE
Nov. 8th
11 - 3 p.m & 5 - 9 p.m.
Open to all students, faculty and anyone who would like to come.

CAMPUS PARKING NOTICE

Due to the end of Daylight Savings Time, effective Monday, October 31, 2005 any vehicle with a valid UMass parking permit may park in any unrestricted, non-reserved space starting at 4:00 p.m. on weekdays instead of 5:00 p.m. Parking is still prohibited in tow zones, handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces, and reserved vehicle spaces. Also excluded are lots, which require 24-hour permits — 21, 22, 29, 44, 47, 49, 50, 54, 64P, 67, North Village Apartments and Lincoln Apartments. This parking policy will remain in effect through March 31, 2006. Parking meters will continue to be enforced for payment 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

PARKING SERVICES
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST

New Supreme Court nominee named

ALITO from page 9

While there was no immediate talk of a filibuster that would deny Alito a yes-or-no vote, Democrats also expressed dismay over rulings on gun control, immigration and the Family and Medical Leave Act over a 15-year career on the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia.

Republicans sounded relieved to be rid of the Miers appointment, which collapsed last week after it became clear she faced an uphill climb in winning confirmation.

"Let's give Judge Alito a fair up-or-down vote, not left or right," said Sen. John Thune, R-S.D.

He was one of several Republicans to say so, and there was irony in that.

After battering Democrats for years about denying GOP judicial candidates yes-or-no votes, Republicans eagerly acquiesced in Miers' withdrawal without either hearings in the Judiciary Committee or a vote on the Senate floor.

"I think that unfortunately with Miers the president ended up fighting his own political family," said conservative activist Gary Bauer. "And now with Judge Alito the battle is where it belongs, it's a battle against the president's avowed political enemies."

Liberal groups, largely silent during on Miers, signaled they were ready to rejoin the fight. Alito's "ideological similarity to Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia has earned him the nickname Scalito," said the Alliance For Justice, referring to the court's most outspoken conservative.

Whatever the outcome, Bush's selection marked an attempt to shed his own recent political difficulties, including poor polls, high energy costs, the indictment of a White House aide in the CIA leak case and the failure of Miers' nomination.

It signaled, as well, the latest turn in an unpredictable transition at the high court, which until this summer had gone 12 years without a change. O'Connor has announced her retirement and John Roberts was named to replace her; Chief Justice William Rehnquist died and Roberts was ticketed for his post instead, then confirmed while O'Connor agreed to remain on the court.

Miers was appointed four weeks ago, only to abandon her quest under the conservatives' criticism.

Purely in political terms, Alito seemed more in the mold of Roberts than Miers.

Like the 50-year-old chief justice, he has an Ivy League education and a glittering conservative resume. He served at the Justice Department under President Reagan and gained his appointment to the appeals court from the first President Bush.

Like Roberts, he has an extensive paper trail. Senate Republicans seeking information about his judicial philosophy will have access to an estimated 350 rulings he has written since 1990. It was unclear what papers dating to his service in the Reagan-era Justice Department would be made public. Democrats used such documentation to raise questions about Roberts.

With Miers, Bush said he would not turn over papers relating to confidential advice.

Samuel Alito Jr., President Bush's new nominee for Supreme Court Justice after Harriet Miers withdrew her bid, meets with Senator Bill Frist.

Majors Fair gives students options

MAJORS from page 1

"Sometimes instructors of college writing will bring the entire class," said Middleton. Although the Majors Fair is geared toward freshman and sophomore students, it is open to all students.

"It gives students the opportunity to one-stop shop for their majors. Instead of sort of having to go all over campus looking for people and talking to people, it's all happening in one place, at one time, in two hours," said Woodsum.

"In our department, what we try to do is come up with tools, programs, and services to gear students toward that decision of declaring a major. That's one of the main reasons why we have partnered with Career Services and Commonwealth College; to come up with an event that would cause them to begin researching. Then they would have to follow up," said Middleton.

"It is a very popular event," Woodsum said. "Hundreds of students, maybe 1,000 at the peak, will come through the ballroom. It's very busy, and there is lots of energy in the room."

"It's a success every year," Woodsum said. "We always have a good turnout, and we're expecting an even better one this year. People really go there to talk to the advisors and get information."

Over 100 departments will be represented at this year's fair. Light refreshments will also be provided by Career Services.

Students are urged to visit the Pre-Major Advising website at http://www.umass.edu/uaase/pas.htm before attending the Majors Fair for a suggested list of questions to ask department representatives, as well as further information about the event.

The fair is being sponsored by a collaboration of Pre-Major Advising, Commonwealth College and Career Services.

The three departments sponsoring the event hope, once again, to pack the ballroom on Wednesday night.

UMass students march to protest

MARCH from page 1

Students asked him about the FOIA request and he responded, "It's the choice of the federal government; I can only do what they tell me." He added, "I think the data infringes on the students."

When he was asked about room and bag searches Lombardi said, "I am in favor of searching rooms if we find drugs. We wouldn't be in your room if we didn't have probable cause."

When asked what would constitute "probable cause," he said, "I'm not a lawyer, so whatever the law explains probable cause to be, that's what it is. Call a lawyer." He also said he would be giving the cards to the people who need to see them and that he would look them over himself as well.

Jee said about the march, "I think it went well. At first he claimed not to know what we were talking about, but after us further discussing our concerns he was receptive. I feel he was hedging and making a false dichotomy between the data they could and should provide. They do provide aggregate data but it is not specific enough. That's why Lombardi said, 'We're going to wait.' They're not complying with the FOIA data we requested."

Jee feels that receiving this data would allow students to compare it to other information available and see that they are making a difference in the right direction.

Administrators target alcohol advertising

By Alexandra Aaron
(UWire) D.C. Bureau

WASHINGTON — Beer companies promoting drinking games have recently been accused by college administrators of targeting college students and marketing the dangerous and potentially fatal habit of binge drinking.

According to a recently released study, out of a surveyed 6,000 students, 50 to 80 percent of college students play drinking games.

"Drinking games are so popular because they combine competition and alcohol," said Chris Singel, a student at George Washington University.

Anheuser-Busch, the company that makes the popular beer Budweiser, promoted their version of the game, Bud Pong, to 47 different markets including various college towns, according to an article in the New York Times.

The company distributed Bud Pong tables, glasses, and balls in an effort to encourage Bud Pong tournaments in which various teams and leagues can compete using a scoring technique like those used in any basketball tournament.

"It's catching on like wildfire," said Francine Katz, spokeswoman for Anheuser-Busch.

But the recent article in the New York Times scrutinized the Anheuser-Busch company for encouraging binge drinking.

According to a recent study released by analysts at Indiana State University, 44 percent of men who play drinking games did so to sexually manipulate other players.

On Oct. 19, only two days after the New York Times article was published, Anheuser-Busch withdrew its promotion for Bud Pong. The company said in a statement that it did not know people were using beer for the games.

The official rules called for the use of water.

"It has come to our attention that despite our explicit guidelines, there may have been instances where this promotion was not carried out in the manner it was intended," said Katz in a statement.

College students feel exploited by the marketing of the games.

"Anheuser-Busch advertising a water-drinking game is like Phillip Morris advertising for candy cigarettes. Budweiser knew what they were doing and were too afraid to take responsibility," said Singel.

Many colleges around the country have banned drinking games on campus, including Bucknell University and Kenyon College.

Yale University announced on Monday that they would be adding eight new restrictions to the popular tradition of tailgating at home football games, including banning drinking games and requiring tailgaters to clear out for each game's second half.

"We think creating a climate where people are expected to behave in mature and healthy ways and look out for each other's safety is a better approach," Yale College Dean Peter Salovey said in a statement.

The university will confiscate any drinking game paraphernalia at the games.

"Tailgates should not be for the sole purpose of getting drunk," said Judith Krauss, head of Yale's Council of Masters.

Now that drinking games and the beer companies that are promoting them have come under fire, other college campuses plan to discourage the games.

"We're not here preaching abstinence," said Margot Ables, Tufts University's director of drug and alcohol education services. "We talk to people about what they do to be safer ... tell them to think about [limited] participation in drinking games; about not drinking so much so fast."

Maximillian Rothmeier shows of a bottle of his own brand of beer. Vendors like Rothmeier are feeling the pinch of alcohol advertising trends.

Bill could bring end of video recording

By Steve Shinney
The Utah Statesman (Utah State U.)

LOGAN, Utah — A bill currently being discussed in Senate and House committees could prevent people from recording their favorite shows ever again. The bill, sponsored by both the Motion Picture Association of America and the Recording Industry of America Association, is aimed at giving the Federal Communications Committee the power to add a broadcast flag to all TV signals.

Jerry James, an assistant professor of computer science at Utah State University, is one of many people across the nation worried about this new flag. According to James, the broadcast flags are a group of bits in the TV signal that would regulate what the program could be used for on the receiving end.

"You will no longer be able to pop a tape into your VCR and know that you will necessarily be able record what you want," James said. Using the broadcast flag, those broadcasting the signal would be able to decide if those receiving it would be able to save the program onto any format or be able to use a service like TiVo to pause or skip commercials.

If enacted, the bill would also give power to the FCC to regulate the kinds of technology that TV and VCR companies can use in making their products.

"This will put a huge cap on innovation," James said. "No one will be able create a new kind of digital TV."

James said that the legal battle over these flags goes back a while. A few years ago, the MPAA and RIAA went to FCC and asked for them to be able to start sending these flags with all signals to protect materials being transmitted from being saved.

According to Cnet, a prominent technology news Web site in November 2003, the FCC made a rule saying all products sold in the United States after July 2005 would be required by law to recognize these broadcast flags.

In May of this year, the U.S. Court of Appeals, D.C. Circuit, ruled that the FCC didn't have the right to limit digital TV signals in that way, the FCC didn't have authority from Congress to make such "sweeping changes."

James says that the bill currently being discussed is aimed at giving the FCC this power.

James has already written to Robert Bishop, the area's representative of the House, about the issue. Bishop is not on the Subcommittee on Telecommunications and the Internet, which is currently discussing the bill, but he says he is planning to vote against it should it come up for a vote.

According to the U.S. House of Representatives Web Site, no Utah or Idaho representatives are on the committee.

BRAND NAME WAREHOUSE'S

CLOTHING SALE

Jeans from $16.99
Tanks $5.99
Tops from $7.99
Shorts from $7.99
Pants from $12.99
Sweaters from $12.99
Outerwear from $24.99
Accessories from $0.99

OCT. 30 - TO NOV. 3
SUNDAY: 5PM - 9PM
MON - THURS: 10AM TO 9PM
LINCOLN CAMPUS CENTER AUDITORIUM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 2005

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The damage one punch can do

Dan Duggan

By now many of you have probably heard the story, either on the news or by word of mouth.

It's the story of the 21-year-old man, John O'Connell, who was punched while trying to break up a fight outside of a Westfield bar less than two weeks ago. The Westfield State senior fell back after getting punched, hit his head on the cement and ultimately died due to injuries.

And while you may have heard the story, I'm going to give you a slightly different perspective on this tragedy. The reason my perspective is different is because that 21-year-old "man" was my best friend.

I put the word "man" in quotes because it's funny to see my friend called a man in a news story. To me he's just Okie, the same kid that I met eight years ago at freshman football practice and was friends with ever since.

I'm not writing this to tell you what good friends we were, or how great of a person Okie was (although if I wanted to do that I could fill this whole paper with stories about what a remarkable person he was). I'm not going to do that though, because if you didn't know him, reading about him isn't going to matter very much to you.

> What I hope people can realize is how fragile life is. One punch is all it takes to take so much away. And it's not just about the physical damage that one punch can do – one punch can also do damage to friends and family that will never heal.

The reason I am writing this is that I am hoping everyone can learn a lesson from his tragic, senseless death.

And believe me, I'm not trying to give some "stop the violence" public service announcement, if for no other reason than it'd be hypocritical, as my friends and I have never been ones to shy away from confrontations. But I have realized that all of the fighting and hostility that takes place every night at bars and parties is just not worth it.

I don't know why there is always this underlying tension whenever groups of guys are gathered in places such as bars and parties – it's some combination of the need to seem tough, this ridiculous feeling of what it is to be a "man" and, of course, alcohol.

What I hope people can realize is how fragile life is. One punch is all it takes to take so much away. And it's not just about the physical damage that one punch can do – one punch can also do damage to friends and family that will never heal.

Okie's death was no doubt a freak incident. And I'm sure many of you are reading this and thinking that this could never happen to you. I know before this ordeal I never thought it could happen to any one I knew, but the simple truth is that if it could happen to Okie, it could happen to anyone.

Okie wasn't a small kid by any stretch. In fact the 6-foot-3-inch, 220-pound former standout high school athlete was one of the toughest kids I've ever known. He just found himself trying to do the right thing, but in the wrong place.

He was only trying to help a friend who was involved in a fight. And while he was playing the role of peacemaker, some 28-year-old scumbag, who didn't even have the guts to square off with Okie, sucker-punched him in the mouth.

And while I hope that justice is served, whatever happens to this lowlife isn't going to bring my best friend back. That's why I hope people can learn something from Okie's far-too-short life, so that even in his death he can continue to touch people's lives.

It's a given that bad things are going to happen in life. It was less than a year ago that another one of my best friends was killed in a car accident when his car was hit by a drunk driver. And while that experience was equally as devastating, car accidents are a part of life. Obviously you hope your loved ones aren't involved in any, but at least there is some sense to that.

The thing that is impossible to get over in Okie's situation is how the life of an amazing person was brought to such an abrupt end for no good reason.

Now I have no illusions that reading this will change everyone's mindsets and there will be no more fights on this campus. But hopefully what can happen is that you'll think twice the next time some drunk idiot bumps into you in a crowded bar uptown. Maybe you'll realize that you don't need to prove to him or anyone else how tough you are.

Instead, let it go, and go sit back at the bar, grab a beer and have a laugh with a friend.

Because God knows I'd give anything to have just one more chance to do the same with Okie.

Dan Duggan is a Collegian editor

A victory for elitism

Mike Sances

In politics, accurate predictions are almost impossible. But as students of the University of Massachusetts, there are some things we can assume with a higher-than-average level of confidence. For one: none of us will ever be president, and none of us will ever serve on the U.S. Supreme Court.

This maxim – you might even call it a fact of life – is understood and accepted by all, even if it might be a bit impolitic to state outright. When I first heard it, coming from one of my instructors at this school, I was a little shocked and more than a little defensive. But before long I had accepted its unassailable logic, confirmed again and again by real events.

For example, the fate of Harriet Miers, who was until Thursday the president's nominee to replace Sandra Day O'Connor's spot on the Supreme Court, and who has now humbly returned to her role as White House counsel. Unlike newly confirmed Chief Justice John Roberts, who sailed through his hearings to replace the late William Rehnquist only weeks ago, Miers lacked a degree from an elite law school like Harvard. Instead, she attended Southern Methodist Law School, in Dallas, Texas, ranked 52 in U.S. News's authoritative rankings.

Also unlike Roberts, Miers, though she was hardly what you would call "mainstream" in an economic sense, is worth only a "surprisingly modest $674,925," according to the Wall Street Journal, compared to Roberts's net worth of $5.3 million.

These are the only facts I can see that might have rendered Miers unqualified to serve on the highest court in the land. There are, of course, many others offered, but they simply don't stand up to strict scrutiny.

Let's review. Could the rejection of Miers have something to do with her being a woman? That didn't prevent O'Connor from being confirmed, nor has it prevented a handful of other women from being mentioned as potential nominees after Miers withdrew.

Was it because she had never served as a judge before? That wasn't a problem with Rehnquist. Because she was seen as a "crony"? Again, that wasn't a problem with Rehnquist, who served in Richard Nixon's Justice Department and who faced similar accusations when he was first nominated in 1971.

> All signs then point to the simple fact that Miers wasn't rich enough to serve on the Court – she hadn't gone to the right schools and wasn't sufficiently entrenched in the stock market. She was, at least relative to John Roberts, too much like you and I.

Was it because there was the scent of scandal involving James Dobson, an influential leader of the religious right who claimed to have received assurances from the White House that Miers would overturn Roe v. Wade, the landmark decision that found a constitutional right to abortion? Scandal certainly didn't stop Clarence Thomas from getting confirmed.

Was it because Miers performed poorly on her pre-confirmation hearings questionnaire, submitted to her by the Senate Judiciary Committee? If so, that would mean the impetus behind "Justice Sunday" and the so-called "nuclear option" – that all of the president's nominees deserve an up-or-down vote – has been thrown out the window.

All signs then point to the simple fact that Miers wasn't rich enough to serve on the Court – she hadn't gone to the right schools and wasn't sufficiently entrenched in the stock market. She was, at least relative to John Roberts, too much like you and I. And people like you and I must not be allowed to serve on the Supreme Court. For all the vitriol, hot air and froth the so-called "conservative" movement has spent over the years in their raging against the elitist Court, when push comes to shove, as it did with Harriet Miers, they are revealed to be just as great a pack of elitists as their counterparts in the Democratic Party.

I realize that most people in the country, and at this university, probably aren't even following the political drama of the recent Supreme Court nominations. I think that proves my point, and that people can't be bothered to pay attention because they are smart enough to see the Court, and politics in general, as they really are.

But I pity the true-believers, the partisan Court-watchers who, in contrast to most of us, delude themselves into thinking that the powerful care at all what they think or what would be in their interests, and who root blindly for the victory or defeat of the president's nominees.

I stand by the prediction I opened this column with, though I would be more than happy if I was proved wrong. I just find it a little puzzling that anyone at this school could align themselves with either of two political parties who will never nominate anyone at all like them to the Supreme Court, or, for that matter, as a candidate for president.

Mike Sances is a Collegian columnist

Study shows disadvantage for powerful women, but why?

Rachel Alkon

Girls, drop your newspapers, books and classes. There's an anti-feminist trend emerging. "Are Men Necessary: When Sexes Collide," a new book by the New York Times columnist Maureen Dowd, discusses why smarter women are less attractive candidates for long-term relationships.

To support her claim about men's desire for brainless ladies, Dowd cites a 2004 study led by Dr. Stephanie Brown, a social psychologist at the University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research. The research, conducted on 320 undergraduates, revealed that "powerful women are at a disadvantage in the marriage market because men may prefer to marry less accomplished women."

If this is the case, then all of us striving for a leadership role – in college and at work – are ineligible candidates as girlfriends and wives. But does a woman's academic prowess really impede her ability to maintain a relationship? Are men really that intimidated by intelligent, free-thinking women?

On a campus with a liberal reputation, in an era of increasingly flexible gender roles, one would assume that independent women are in high demand. Who wants to date a beauty-queen moron? I'd hope the supposed "open-minded" boys would hate to see their girlfriends in a subordinate role. What happened to equality in relationships? What's so attractive about "less accomplished" women? Maybe she'll be more prone to wash underwear or reorganize a boyfriend's room?

It's true – smart girls are somewhat threatening, and often perceived, or misconceived, as demanding, critical and too intelligent. But why does this laundry list of qualities scare men and place women at a disadvantage in the meat market?

I'm hesitant to agree that a box of rocks is more attractive than a bold, sharp and motivated woman. Try pursuing a serious relationship with a brainless chick – at first she may make you melt, but beyond that her appeal will quickly dwindle. Try discussing politics with an idiot and you will be left arguing with a blank wall. And while that outspoken girl from lecture may tangle a boyfriend into a few steamy debates, criticize his wardrobe, and ultimately fail to fit the mother-role he craves, she'll turn out to be an admirable role model, capable of offering solid, realistic advice and insightful, stimulating discussion.

> It's true — smart girls are somewhat threatening, and often perceived, or misconceived, as demanding, critical and too intelligent. But why does this laundry list of qualities scare men and place women at a disadvantage in the meat market?

Men, by retaining the intellectual upper hand, possess total sovereignty over their significant others. Dowd interviewed a New York producer, who explained that men "prefer women who seem malleable and awed." Okay, let's analyze this statement: "malleable" synonymous with pliable and flexible, terms associated with a subservience and eagerness to bend toward man's desires; and "awed" – meaning frightened or intimidated. Does this mean men want to marry Barbie dolls they can twist and turn on a whim?

Is retaining control worth sacrificing a partner's intelligence? While selfless mates may be nurturing and caring, independent women make for better partners. Dumb gals can be lusty eye-candy, but after spending a few days or years with this person a man will become vexed and inundated with nothingness. In the short-term, a dim-witted woman can satisfy a man's needs, but in the long-term idiotic females become burdensome and reliant on their partners' advice for every trivial decision.

If Dowd and Brown have drawn accurate conclusions, men need to reevaluate their preferences for "malleable" girls. The University of Michigan study shows that guys may have unrealistic perceptions about the opposite sex. But when it comes to relationships, men cannot "have their cake and eat it too." Opposites attract, but do they endure?

And women can also learn a valuable lesson from Dowd: Even though a psychological study reveals a shift away from feminism, women should stick to their ambitious goals. Without their own share of power and money, women will remain dependent, and "be mere domestic robots, lasering their legs and waxing their floors – or vice versa – and desperately seeking a new Betty Friedan."

By Rachel Alkon, a columnist at the University of Wisconsin, written for the Badger Herald

A subtle hero remembered

David B. Lawrence

One of the great heroes of the 20th century has been taken from us. Not a brilliant orator or a renowned scientist. Not a fighter with Herculean military skill or an athlete whose prowess charmed a generation. With neither the pen nor the sword Rosa Parks shook apart the shackles of segregation that bound a nation of blacks to legal inferiority. For this she received the Congressional Gold Medal of Honor (the highest honor a civilian can receive in the United States). For this we will fly our flags at half-staff this Wednesday as she is laid to rest. And for this she will become the first woman and second civilian to lie in state at the capital rotunda – the honor we bestow upon presidents.

Rosa Parks was not an uncommon woman. In 1955 she was 42 years old, a seamstress, and on the afternoon of Dec. 1, she took a seat on a bus headed home. When that bus became crowded, the African-American Parks was asked to give up her seat for a white passenger.

> [Rosa Parks'] story is the kind that gives us goose bumps. It conjures up images of David vs. Goliath, but even David at least had a sling.

She didn't. She was tired, she has said. " … Not tired physically, or no more tired than I usually was at the end of a working day. — … No, the only tired I was, was tired of giving in."

Montgomery's segregation laws didn't make exceptions for being tired (of giving in or otherwise). If you were black, you gave up your seat and moved to the back when a white passenger needed it. If you didn't, you were subject to arrest and would pay a fine if convicted.

And so the tired seamstress, who did not relinquish her seat, was arrested and convicted, but she did not pay the fine. A local black organization fought back socially and legally under the direction of one Martin Luther King, Jr. They organized a bus boycott in Montgomery and mounted a legal defense that would lead to segregation laws being deemed unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court. The fire that was the civil rights movement was lit that day in Montgomery, Ala., and Rosa Parks provided the spark. Enter desegregation, "I Have a Dream …," the Civil Rights Act and the Congressional Medal. The tired Parks did not relinquish her seat.

Her story is the kind that gives us goose bumps. It conjures up images of David vs. Goliath, but even David at least had a sling. The bus segregation laws were wrong, but it would not have been difficult for Rosa Parks to give up her seat. She refused not because it benefited her or because it would have been difficult to comply. She refused because she understood what was right. She faced up to an evil in the smallest of ways, and in so doing pointed out how great and how pervasive that evil was. Parks exemplified that intriguing characteristic of human nature that nudges us all towards what is right despite convenience, self-interest and the dominating paradigms of society. It begs us to wonder if we each might act the same way if asked to get up from that seat and leaves the glimmer of hope that we would.

Today Rosa Parks lies in state under the capital dome because she refused to give up her seat on a bus. She was a unique figure in American history who left an indelible mark on this country: she changed history and gave whites and blacks alike hope for a better future. Her example will live on as an inspiration for us all to follow.

David B. Lawrence is a Collegian columnist.

Are taking "Five College" classes worth the hassle?

What do you think about the whole "Five College" process? Do you . .

a) Think it is really easy and well organized.

b) Think the process is difficult but well worth it.

c) Tend to shy away from things that require that much paperwork.

d) Think the process is way too difficult and therefore don't bother with it.

Submit your vote online at dailycollegian.com

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 2005

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Boston houses master of photography

By Jacqueline Mercer
Collegian Correspondent

"Ansel Adams" at the Museum of Fine Arts Boston is a comprehensive showcase named after and featuring one of the most brilliant and iconic artists to come out of the 20th century.

Many of the photographs in the show were classic Adams' works permanently etched into the consciousness of American culture. His "Rose and Driftwood" or "Moonrise, Hernandez, New Mexico," can be found in black and white on many a dorm room wall right on this very campus. Still, these famous images were striking when seen in their original form, as Adams made them. The glossy prints with Adams' penciled signature sweeping across the lower right hand corner do a justice to the work that no poster reprint ever could.

The 100 or so photographs in the exhibit are supplemented with plenty of extras to keep the visitor busy. Examples of the cameras and equipment Adams used to make his photographs, as well as many original books collecting his early work, are on display in cases in the center of the rooms whose walls are covered with the product of almost 60 years of photography. A ten-minute video showing Adams out in the field creating some of his masterpieces runs over and over again off to one side of the gallery. A painting of a sunflower by Georgia O'Keefe hangs proudly next to the photograph it is featured in, where new details emerge in the transition from brilliant color to muted black and white.

Ansel Adams
Museum of Fine Arts
Through Dec. 31st
$13 student

Small plaques alongside many of the photos, both rare and well known, provided insight into the methods that went into creating them and give small background anecdotes about Adams and his past that bring a new level of intrigue to the work. The plaque alongside two prints of "Monolith, The Face of Half Dome" explained how a red filter was used to bring the shadow falling across the looming granite rock face into sharper focus in the second image.

One photograph, "Scripps Pier," the famed image of two surfers at a distance walking down the beach by the legendary California pier, was notably missing from the exhibit. This can be forgiven because in its place were dozens of rarely seen photographs that reveal an artist interested in more then just landscapes.

Though Adams is best known for capturing the breathtaking scenery in the Midwest, particularly our country's national parks, the collection of photographs that has been amassed by the Museum of Fine Arts showed his interest in small wonders like the shadow that falls across a simple fence in "Boards and Thistles," a photo he made in San Francisco in 1932. Images like "Political Signs and Circus," a scarcely seen photograph of campaign posters plastering a clap board fence, captured the political climate at the time Adams was working and the plaque next to "Cemetery Statue and Oil Derricks" discussed how the social relevance of a statue of a mourning angel of death flanked by oilrigs in the background has evolved since the picture was first made in 1976.

Perhaps most startling were the prominently featured portraits featured throughout the exhibit. "Georgia O'Keefe and Orville Cox," possibly the most famous of Adams' portraits, felt like getting a glimpse into an inside joke between artists. The eyes of a small toddler staring straight into the camera as she huddled close to her two older siblings in "Trailer Camp Children" haunt the viewer and serve as a reminder of why Adams is widely considered to be one of the greatest photographers to have ever lived.

"Ansel Adams" runs in the Museum of Fine Art's Gund Gallery though Dec. 31. Tickets are $22 for adults and $13 for students. The exhibit is open from 10 a.m. with last entry at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday through Friday, and 10 a.m. until 3:30 p.m. the rest of the week. Aim for an earlier time because the gallery closes promptly an hour and 15 minutes after last entry and you will definitely want longer than that to take in all this exhibit has to offer.

Above is Adam's "Monolith, The Face of Half Dome." It is one of many photographs on display in Boston.

West meets east

Grammy Award winning artist, Kanye West performed at the Mullin's Center last night at 8 p.m. His latest album "Late Registration" is currently #1 on the Billboard Charts. His supporting acts included Fantasia and Keyshia Cole.

Boudreaux's '21 Days' fuses culture and art

'Dark Descendants'
Donald Boudreaux
Through Nov. 22
Augusta Savage Gallery

By Leann Leake
Collegian Staff

Stepping into Donald Boudreaux's exhibit "Dark Descendants – 21 Days In Rodebosch South Africa" feels like stepping into a cave. The palate of his works – red-browns, blacks, the occasional yellow – remind the viewers of the prehistoric cave paintings of Lascaux and arrangement of the room heightened this feeling of almost mystical story-telling. But in these caves we don't find spirit animals or ancient hunts. Instead, you may find a series of nine carefully allegorical abstract paintings. At the door, a circle of chairs for placing bags and for stowing shoes beneath (you will need to get rid of these to view the works). In front of each piece is a similar chair, resting on a strip of black cloth that connects to cloth backing each carefully spot-lit piece. It's a setup that feels reverential, almost worshipful – at opening night, one viewer actually said that it made them think of ancestor worship. The artworks on display are, after all, pieces of the past on display; they just happen to be the histories of whole peoples, not individuals.

Local artist, Donald Boudreaux spent three weeks in South Africa as part of Augusta Savage Gallery's Arts International [illegible] Program. Above is part of his artwork being displayed.

Boudreaux traveled to South Africa and spent three weeks there as a part of the Augusta Savage Gallery's Arts International Residency Program (AIR). This exhibit is his response to what he saw there. Much of his work reacts to the [illegible] Apartheid system that [illegible] Afrikaner from the [illegible] white population and [illegible] from white citizens starting in 1948. The system was dissolved between 1990 and 1994, after years and years of protest and struggle. Boudreaux tells Augusta Savage Art Gallery, "When I got to South Africa, it humbled me. I saw wise people in both children and [illegible] approach [illegible] tion, an [illegible] I saw."

The story [illegible] tell is a very [illegible] itself with a focus on [illegible] he does not tell a [illegible] means. No, as the gallery card tells us, he has chosen to use trees as his stand-ins for the people of South Africa. Boudreaux elaborates, "How have trees survived? How have South Africa survived? The people remind me of trees, of their seasons and their shifts."

The pieces themselves are elaborately coded and intensely worked multimedia drawings on handmade paper. The rough white edges standing out sharply against the black cloth they're displayed on. The colors, the paper, and importance of symbols all combine to make these works feel more like artifacts from another time than ever. Occasionally a piece of string will unfold from a line, or pieces of paper (perhaps from magazines?) will bring words and photos to the energy of the pieces. The dominant medium is colored chalk or pastel, used expressively with sharp, strong lines – erased, half-erased, and redrawn. Everything is full of energy – an energy that varies from piece to piece in its nature, but never lets up. The drawings all have an urgency from them – hardly surprising, considering the story that they have to tell. Twice, Nelson Mandela is quoted, saying, "Never and never shall it be that this beautiful land will again experience the oppression of one by another." Moving from piece to piece in the series, you can see a people growing, changing, resisting – coming gradually into focus, flourishing, repressed, but pushing and growing and surviving no matter what. It's not peaceful or calming, but it is astonishing and powerful. When a face stares out at you from the eighth stage, mouth stitched with yellow yarn in some sort of distorted scream, you know: these people fought for what they have, and no one is going to take it away again.

Dark Descendants will be in the Augusta Savage Gallery (in the New Africa House, Central Residential Area) through Tuesday, Nov. 22. The Gallery is open Mondays and Tuesdays, 1-7 p.m. and Wednesdays to Fridays, 1-5 p.m.

'Gum' leaves people talking with its handling of sex and gender

By Jared Demick
Collegian Staff

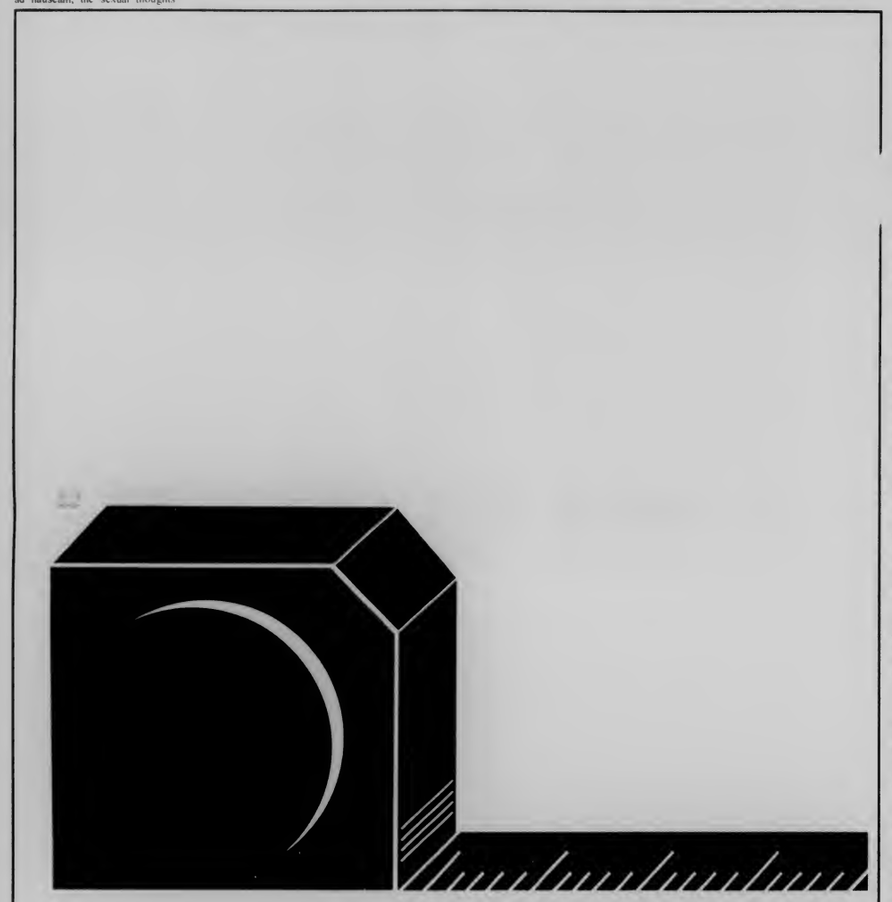
Provocative, erotically charged, sensuously presented and intensely acted, the University of Massachusetts Theater Department's production of Karen Hartman's "Gum" will certainly leave people talking. Whether audiences walking out of the Curtain Theater will rave about the play's complex treatment of sex and gender and its skillful use of light and sound or vent about the elliptical nature of the plot and the odd behavior of the characters, "Gum" won't leave anyone who witnesses it unengaged.

'Gum'
FAC Curtain Theater
Nov. 1-5
$5 student

While much of "Gum" is left up to one's own interpretation, it remains an explosive and harrowing investigation into adolescent female sexuality. While the budding sexuality of male teenagers has been portrayed in drama and other arts ad nauseam, the sexual thoughts and desires of girls is a thematic territory that to this day is still largely unexplored. Furthermore, Hartman's play explores the lives of its two main characters, the sisters Rahmi and Lina, with a distinctly female point of view. The results are a fresh look into the female perspective on love, loss and eroticism.

Evoking the spirit of Lorca and early Sam Shepard, Hartman's play abandons realism and takes a more poetic approach to its subject matter. Structured into a series of interrelated vignettes, "Gum" is set in a fictitious foreign country. Throughout the play, characters use odd hand gestures and take part in ceremonies that are a mixture of various cultures. This results in making the audience feel that they are in a world that is vaguely familiar and yet completely different. The director, Maryann Lombardi, and the dramaturge, Talya Kingston, also pointed out that by not setting the play in one particular culture, people will be forced to make sense of this culture without the aid of stereotypes.

In this fictitious, faraway land, chewing gum is against the law and it becomes a powerful aphrodisiac. Two sisters, Rahmi and Lina, are especially entranced by gum and they crave it passionately, even speaking of it in sexual terms. The relationship between the sisters is intense with the more subdued Lina looking up to her sexually adventurous and passionate sister. The fusing of gum with sex becomes important in the play because both are taboo in a society where the behavior of girls is strictly regimented. Rahmi and Lina both must wear veils and be subservient to both males and their elders. They also have to endure the reproaches of their aunt who sees the body as something that must be sanitized and controlled.



The tension in the play arises from the fact that just as these two sisters are beginning to think of themselves in sexual terms, the people around them are seeking to control that. While Lina reluctantly accepts this and follows the wishes of her aunt and society, Rahmi attempts to rebel fiercely. It is because of this that Rahmi is labeled as a wayward girl and must accept the marriage proposal of Inayat, a lecherous perfume merchant who is her only suitor. However, while Rahmi agrees to marry him and puts up with his advances, her heart is elsewhere. Having had a sexual experience involving two boys and gum, she is restless at the prospect of having to live a life under the control of a husband. Rahmi's restlessness causes her to clash with Inayat and Lina, which leads to the play's ending, a finale as explosive and shocking as a firecracker blowing up in your face.

While some might find Hartman's play too experimental, the cast and crew are absolutely spectacular. They transform a somewhat difficult text into a thrilling and sensuous theater experience. Robert Strano's lighting design and Vincent Olivieri's sound design are breathtaking accompaniments to the plot and immerses the audience into the internal states of the characters. Strano used a combination of pinks, greens, and blues that mirrored the mysterious eroticism of the characters' behavior. Olivieri, meanwhile, used jarring sounds of machines and an austere mixture of bells and horns that kept the audience from being lulled by the play's poetic language. Sean Cote's set design and Bethany Marx's costume design were spare, but tasteful and effective as they made the idea of a totally foreign society tangible.

The actors are to be commended for handling such an unusual play with skill and sensitivity. Jennifer Reddish (Rahmi) and Rachel Cummings (Lina) conveyed the desperation and frustration of the sisters. Nissa Perrott (Auntie) gave a world-weary turn as Auntie, portraying her as a woman who adheres to the conventions of her society and yet understands the damage they sometimes cause. Kevin Kordis (Inayat) and Scott Braidman (Young Man) really caught on to the predatory nature of their characters and successfully made them into characters that one loves to hate.

Finally, Kingston and Lombardi deserve special attention as they brought a coherent and tantalizingly strange vision to the script. The result is a production that is as compelling as it is provocative, a show not afraid to confront its audience in its quest for truth.

If you haven't seen "Gum", it is still playing at the Fine Arts Center in the Curtain Theater. Show times are Nov. 1-5 at 8 p.m. and there is also a 2 p.m. showing Nov. 5. Tickets are $5 for students and $10 general admission and are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office. Take a chance and see a great show that is truly jolting, one that will give you and your friends something to endlessly debate.

The positive effect of beginning your career with Ernst & Young is too great to measure.

A great start can take you further. At Ernst & Young we've created an environment that's conducive to personal and professional growth and success. And what we're offering is an opportunity to learn from some of the best talent in the industry. Become a benchmark for success. Visit us on the Web at ey.com/us/careers, or look for us on campus.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2005

Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

Smith hosts French masters

By Alex Butler
Collegian Contributor

From now until Dec. 11 of the glorious year of 2005, students from the five colleges and town dwellers alike are invited to settle in the warming comforts of the Smith College Museum of Art.

Now, before this is dismissed as dull, bland and uninteresting, hear this out.

There [illegible] about French Portrait Revolution to Restoration.

When you walk in, you would think one would know what to expect. We have all been to the Museum of Fine Arts – there is even a chance we have been to see some French works around a similar timeframe. This would be no different. Not to the least.

The atmosphere was a bit different the Saturday before last. When visitors walk in, they are met halfway through by a creepy-looking aristocrat hung on the wall. His name was Jean Louis Laneville.

Glancing around the light blue room was a bit unnerving – big watery brown eyes staring at you from all fronts. It is these same eyes that draw you into every painting and pull you from one painting to the next. Now, if it is the eyes that pull you in, it is the hair that keeps you there. Almost every piece has hair that is, with no doubt, the focal point of it. The detail is so unbelievable; every strand seems captured on the canvas with amazing intricacy.

Now, we're getting ahead of ourselves. This is an article on the portraits, not on the hair.

France between 1784 and 1826 was full of trouble, excitement, mystery and gaudy men and women. Yes, certainly the time to live. This is the time when grown men paid good money to get dressed up in the most eccentric clothes they could find and posed. They posed in front of mountains, streams, with one leg up, maybe with a dog in the foreground, maybe not. Don't believe me? Head over to see "Silence" on the far right wall and you'll see, brother. Beautification was certainly an important aspect when it comes to the rich, the high and mighty; but these weren't the only people getting their pictures done.

The exhibit does a very nice job separating the paintings while maintaining a balance and equality amongst the artwork. Even busts are displayed – busts. The Smith College Museum of Art is doing alright for itself.

"Dress," "Familial Ties," "On a Smaller Scale" and "Faces of the Empire": these are all small sections that build the exhibition to extraordinary heights.

But hey, let's be honest. Not everyone reading this article is springing from their seat and grabbing the first bus over to Northampton to drool over the French Portraits. And that is fine. Heck, some might even get inspired and head over only to realize that they hate the bloody things. This is not everyone's cup of tea – no no. But if you feel like expanding the mental pallet and broadening the cultural boundaries, head over. Try it. This is not your usual walk through the park. Try it, and you will be surprised.

New Music Tuesdays

"Music expresses that which cannot be said and on which it is impossible to be silent." - Victor Hugo

Week

*AM Stereo
1.5/10
Can't
The Gentlemen's Recording Company

A sense of humor is always a good thing in the dark world of rock 'n' roll. *AM Stereo has a pretty good sense of humor. The Boston band has just released their latest album with cover art where a soup can next to an apostrophe and a t represents the title of the album ("Can't"). On the band's website the members are credited as playing sitar, harmonica and glockenspiel in lieu of their actual instruments, but in reality *AM Stereo is meaty, '80s-influenced power-pop that consists entirely of guitar, bass, and made-for-arena melodies.

And while *AM Stereo seem like they are probably fun guys to hang out with they aren't particularly interesting or fun as musicians. "Can't" is pretty much 13 tracks of stadium-sized, derivative pop-rock. Huge riffs of distorted guitar chords into harmonics and big dumb lyrics are *AM Stereo's bread and butter. And while there is nothing wrong with that – in fact there have been some great bands that worked with little more than those ingredients – *AM Stereo has nothing new to say and they aren't even particularly good at repeating old tricks.

"Can't" is such a numbing record – track after track of the same exact thing – that even rotating vocalists doesn't make a difference; it all sounds the same. And while the band cites brainy indie-rockers like Pavement, Superchunk and Soul Asylum as influences, they have nothing in common with those bands except an occasional vocal similarity to the latter band – and certainly none of what made Pavement and Superchunk so loved and revered. In fact it seems that *AM Stereo did nothing more then try to mimic fellow Boston-based hard rocking power-poppers Waltham to exact specifications, making "Can't" something like a stale 4th- or 5th-generation take on the genre, retaining absolutely none of its redeeming values.

Repetitive, clichéd music, empty and brainless lyrics and dime-a-dozen vocal melodies add up to another album that is occasionally offensively bad but more often just plain old bad.

T. Raumschmiere
1.5/10
Blitzkrieg Pop
Novamute

T. Raumschmiere's latest electro-punk album "Blitzkrieg Pop" may reference the Ramones, but, to be sure, the group shares nothing with the punk legends aside from perhaps simple, repetitive song structures. If the front cover, which portrays a digital-age skull-and-crossbones (with keyboards for bones) wearing a trucker hat doesn't make it clear that T. Raumschmiere is the type of slick, dumb, ineffective frat-techno that is almost embarrassing to listen to. "A Mess" is a bumbling attempt at social commentary; "Sick Like Me" is a watered-down take on mid-'90s industrial, though it sounds more like the Mortal Kombat theme song, which takes the initiative that few artists have – rhyming "schmuck" with "suck."

If that's not enough to warn away any potential costumers, it should be noted that T. Raumschmiere aren't just lacking in the lyrical department. As a techno band, poor lyrics and vocals can be excused in favor of propulsive, interesting music. Unfortunately "Blitzkrieg Pop" sounds exhausted before it even starts. Almost all the songs are extremely repetitive, in a tedious way, to be sure, rather than in the effective way the Ramones' songs were, and there are barely any subtleties in the music. Each song sounds clumsily slapped together.

The album has a handful of generic electro-ballads mixed in between the faux-aggression that pervades the album, but nothing that the band tries can change the mood and feel of "Blitzkrieg Pop." It's a generally embarrassing listen; it's hard to imagine the band themselves enjoying the album, but it's more innocuously bland then patently offensive. And for that T. Raumschimere can be set free – there's no need to war against a "Blitzkrieg" no one will notice.

Holopaw
6/10
Quit +/or Fight
Sub Pop Records

It can be safely said that any good album grows on repeated listens, no matter what the initial impact is. "Quit +/or Fight," the sophomore album from Holopaw, is one of those albums that practically begs for multiple listens but, sadly, does not deliver on its promise. The album is packed with intricate arrangements, a slew of instruments, literate lyrics and soft vocals that straddle the line between folky alt-country and wide-eyed indie-rock.

While Holopaw's sound is somewhere between Wilco and John Vanderslice, the songs aren't as strong. "Quit +/or Fight" swirls by like a half-hour blur – enjoyable, but not memorable. The songs are all amiable and the lyrics reveal themselves to be intriguing and clever, but singer John Orth's fine voice, which is quite reminiscent of Vanderslice, is often so soothing it buries itself. The music, too, is grabbing at first, but over the course of the album it loosens its grip, eventually becoming pleasant but complacent. Holopaw have dug themselves a nice niche, one that requires a level of talent and creativity, but they may have burrowed a little too deep.

Those required multiple listens only serve to annunciate the strengths and weaknesses of the record, which alternately make for a more satisfying and frustrating listen. The haunting melodies that sway in and out of "Ghosties" are a perfect example of how good Holopaw's songwriting can be but the overwhelming amount of similar songs and tones that permeate the album only drag down the best moments. For every subtle electronic effect there is a generic indie-folk riff; Orth's lyrics deserve far more attention then the band is willing to give them but often it is the singer's own inability to find an interesting way to present them that does them in.

That being said, the good does out-weigh the bad on "Quit +/or Fight." In fact, it's only because the good is so good that the bad, which isn't actually bad at all, is so apparent. Holopaw is a young band with a lot of potential that, like many of their peers, hasn't yet harnessed their abilities to the fullest and that's no crime. "Quit +/or Fight" might not resonate the way a great album would, but it sure beats a lot of the competition.

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

Ticonderoga
8/10
Heilig-Levine LP
Figh

After the successful soundtrack to the movie "Garden State," every record label in the country went out to look for a band similar to The Shins. Some of them failed, some of them got a cheap rip-off, but one label, 54'40' Or Fight, to be exact, already had their Shins like band.

For proof, go listen to their band Ticonderoga and listen to their new album "Heilig-Levine LP." Sure they don't have all the effects of pop samples, but they have the slow-fast transition down, as well as the vocals.

Or maybe that's just all mere coincidence and Ticonderoga is just a band who went and ignored the myth of the sophomore slump and released a really good second album. "Heilig-Levine LP" isn't just their second album, but their second album of this year.

Two albums in one year is a feat not heard of in today's music world. In fact, most of the time it's just not allowed due to contract issues, so the band normally would have to wait until at least the following year and by then the music is stale.

"Heilig-Levine LP" is far from stale. Each member of the band has their own style they bring to the band. They each sing the songs they write so they take turn playing each other's instruments and sometimes bringing other non-rock 'n' roll instruments into the material as well, such as a cello or a violin.

The orchestration is what brings in the comparison to The Shins, but also destroys it at other times. The Shins use more sound effects than instruments at times contrasting with Ticonderoga who utilize more actual instruments making a more unified.

The band still has a lot more conquering to do. Heck, they still haven't played the western half of the country yet, but as for recording they are already proving themselves to be worthy of success.

Sheryl Crow
8.5/10
Wildflower
AM Records

Sheryl Crow has been around a lot longer then most of her newest fans think. Blame MTV or pop radio all you want for misleading you, but Crow has been around for well over the past decade, so when mainstream recognition and success came calling for her last album, it was well-deserved.

The follow up to "C'mon, C'mon" is "Wildflower," originally planned to be part one of two albums this year, but for one reason or another it turned out to be the only album Crow is going to release this year.

Since "C'mon, C'mon" has been released, Crow's life has turned for the better. She is now engaged to Lance Armstrong, six-time Tour De France champion and cancer survivor. This shouldn't surprise anyone who saw last year's Tour De France because the camera kept panning back to Crow to talk about her and her relationship with Armstrong.

While "Wildflower" doesn't seem to have a standout track to become a single for the album that will sell millions more albums for her, the album has a feel that would be right at home if it was still the mid-'90s with the release of the "Globe Sessions."

"Wildflower" is definitely more rocking then anything Joni Mitchell or Joan Baez would release, but that's partially who Crow is. She's always been more rocking then a folk singer. "Wildflower" reunites Crow with her duo producer team consisting of Jeff Shanks and John Trott, but went in a different direction with her recording procedure. Crow used to write songs in the studio and perform them fresh there. This time she brought songs to the studio already written and waiting to be performed instead.

Crow's newest fans might at first be set back due to the album being not poppy enough, but with each listen they should learn to love this album too. The lyrics are outstanding and the overall musicianship is top-notch. Crow has a lot to teach about the world with her wisdom of the world and this record starts the lesson off well.

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

New Music Tuesday

Slip and Tarantula A.D. leave their fans with a flawless show

By Alex Butler
Collegian Contributor

There are very few times that a journalist has the opportunity to review an absolute gem on a Friday night, a concert where the good vibes were almost visible. Last Friday night was one of pure gold. Tarantula A.D. and the Slip entertained a crowd of about 50 and, to tell the truth, planets and stars seemed to align somewhere high above us all, because no one knew what to expect.

A small, eager crowd was met by Tarantula A.D., an artsy trio that played something along the lines of "Metal with a Spanish kick." In the first moments of the night. With cellos, a central drummer, crying guitar and sporadic vocals, the band had fun on stage, but went a bit askew with the crowd. Halfway through their set, you could tell that the kids in the venue were looking for a taste of familiarity, a sign that their band was coming. Tarantula A.D. played well, but the wrong opening band for what was to come.

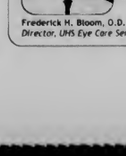
It is wrong for someone to point out flaws and not provide some answers, though. To tell you the truth, The Slip really needed no introduction. They came out, instruments wailing, sounding a bit like they were tuning up. And it was beautiful.

Here, we have a band that is not young. These were veterans who have been to crowds that reach the amount of 75,000. To them, this would be a venue of little importance. This was not the case. Looking around, anyone could have seen the connection between band and crowd, music and listener. Everyone felt the music that night. Heck, some people even had a step up on others when joints were pulled out and lit.

Early on in the show, maybe a quarter of the way through it, it seemed that the Slip was graduating from the Jam Band feel. They were playing songs – actual rehearsed and practiced songs with choruses. Some dazed journalist, in the week past, painted the Slip as a band that one might find in a basement, playing with bands like Phish or Blue Oyster Cult. Doubt and uncertainty hit this journalist in a cold sweat. Had they changed? Was this the end of the road for jamming with this trio? Was this the end of the line?

This is around the point when Brad Barr called the audience up on stage to dance. With this, they hit a groove that they simply did not stray from. Note after note, the band sounded more beautiful than the last. A connection was felt, almost built like a bridge between man and music. Brad seemed to be singing to his guitar, Marc Friedman was dancing along with his bass, and Andrew Barr was so involved with his drum kit that concern was expressed amongst the crowd. Roughly an hour and 45 minutes into the show, the band informed the audience impromptu that they would play their New Year's Eve show in the venue. The audience certainly was not surprised, but pleased nonetheless. Even after their encore, they showed no signs of slowing down. This, seemingly, was a gem.

After leaving, many people were bewildered of what just hit them. Was this normal for the Slip? Ho, ho, do they do this at every show? Is Northampton no different? Are we no different? This, no question, was the breaking point of many "Slip"-virgins. Confused, this virgin crowd asked these questions to themselves. The answers came from the Slip veterans, and it was refreshing.



"Best Slip show I've ever seen." "That was amazing, I haven't seen any of them go that hard for a long time."

There is little more to say. A good time was had by all.

The Arts Department is hiring for the spring semester, call Matt, Ian or Mackenzie at 545-1361

Smith College School for Social Work
OPEN HOUSE
for MSW & PhD programs
Saturday, November 5, 2005
Campus Center
Noon–5:00 pm
To register, please call the Office of Admission at 413-585-7988 or email to sswadmis@email.smith.edu
Smith College School for Social Work
Office of Admission, Lilly Hall
Northampton, Massachusetts 01063
Tel 413 585 7960
E-mail sswadmis@email.smith.edu
www.smith.edu/ssw

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1. Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2. A great place to get contact lenses
3. FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4. Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5. Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6. FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5383
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

Rudy impressed with Hamill's improvement on the field and off

HAMILL from page 10

away from her, she's right back in there. The other team can never get a good clear off her."

And Maffucci would know. She and co-captain Lindsey Bellini have known Hamill since their days together on the Western New York Olympic Development team. Most of Hamill's play, from what UMass coach Jim Rudy saw, was in the back, so naturally she ended up playing defense for a majority of her first two-and-a-half years here in Amherst.

The intensity was evident early in her career, starting 16 of 17 games on defense in her freshman year for a Minutewoman squad that went a dismal 6-11, just the second losing season in the history of the program. Hamill was a central part of the defense, and things would stay that way from therein.

Her sophomore season saw more of the same, playing with an intense swagger but only this time on a team that suffered a high amount of injuries. Then something happened over that off-season that hindered her from making the jump to the next level.

During the spring of 2004, Hamill suffered a tear to her meniscus, a cartilaginous tissue in the knee, sidelining her for most of the spring and summer. While she ended up playing in the Empire State Games that summer, she didn't play much else that season, and her training regimen took a serious blow as a result. She was unable to work out as often or in the way she was used to.

UMass coach Jim Rudy switched Hamill up towards midfield, a position more suitable for her style of play, but the lack of training and experience in the off-season showed. Again, she garnered just one point, once again on an assist.

But then, suddenly almost, something happened over the off-season. Be it an injury-free off-season, the realization of her senior year or maybe something in her cereal, Hamill was suddenly the most talked-about player during this year's preseason camp.

"She was clearly the fittest player in preseason, and may still be the fittest player," Rudy said. "She can cover miles during the game. I mean, if we keep her on, she will cover miles. She's willing to do it, and can do it."

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Tiffany Hamill finished her college career on a high note, stepping up her play and her work in the classroom this year.

Whatever it was that had made her improve so much apparently carried over into the classroom as well. Last spring Hamill, who is a legal studies major, got into some classes for her major that she says she "completely fell in love with." That love had its fruition, as she raised her grade point average a full point higher to a 3.3.

"My classes were so interesting to me, and the professors were great people too," Hamill said. "Also, the fact that I put forth an effort was a big deal."

And of all the great moments this season on the field, this one was what Rudy says sticks out most in his mind.

"My favorite moment is without a doubt last spring, seeing those grades," Rudy said. "She had made such a jump academically, and she made a jump on the field … she just started attacking the flank like a wild stallion. Last spring was my best moment with her so far, just to see that emergence on both sides."

The moments are endless with her, though. There are the stories of her stuffed animal "Fluffy," which she takes on road trips and is often "held hostage" by a teammate or two.

Another moment, earlier this year against Duquesne, sticks out as arguably the highlight of her career. Playing in the pouring rain at home against a Dukes team that figured to roll by the Minutewomen en route to the Atlantic 10 Tournament, Hamill made a statement that ultimately broke the game wide open.

Playing in conditions that she says she loves, Hamill got off a beauty of a shot six minutes into the contest from 15 yards out, that sailed into the upper right corner of the net for a 1-0 lead. It was the first goal of her career, and the Minutewomen got untracked soon after to win 4-0.

"That was just something I've been waiting so long for," Hamill said. "It was such an exciting thing. After the game I was so excited about it. People score tons of goals all time, but this was really just perfect."

Regardless, there is one storyline that has remained unchanged throughout her entire tenure at UMass, even as it comes to a close this May. You'll rarely see her smile on the field, but rarely see her frown off of it.

"She's fun," Bellini said. "She's fun to be around. You want to be around her because when you have a bad day she'll lift you up."

For anybody that's been around her, that's one thing you will not forget.

Weiss commits to ND

WEISS from page 10

about on-field results, off-the-field understanding of the Notre Dame athletics and academic culture, recruiting, public relations or any other area, Charlie already has indicated that he possesses the abilities to position our program to compete at the elite level of college football."

It took almost 30 years for Weis to transition from Notre Dame student to distant admirer to head coach, but only a few months to prove he grasps the unique demands of the job.

He can dazzle – whether serving as master of ceremonies at the pep rallies, parrying questions at news conferences, or out on the recruiting trail. Even his retro look – brush cut and generous waistline – fits.

Still, Notre Dame is expecting more than appearances for that kind of cash.

The decision to lock up Weis for the long haul most likely was sealed during the heart-stopping loss to top-ranked and unbeaten Southern Cal two weeks ago.

But moral victories don't count much with Weis and they'll get old with his bosses soon enough.

And if you don't think they're expecting a return on their money, consider something else: Right now, the Fighting Irish are 5-2 and squarely in contention for a BCS bowl.

Under the current contract, qualifying as an at-large team means Notre Dame picks up a cool $14 million and shares it with no one. Next year, in the first year of a new BCS pact, that figure drops to $4.5 million.

"When I came here," Weis said Sunday, "the thought of people thinking that I was here for a short time fix, those type of things do affect me. It is very important for me to be loyal to this university."

The Irish, too, expect him to stay for a long time, and win. But make no mistake – the sooner, the better.

PGA eyes possible 'Fall Classic'

PGA from page 10

"When it first was played in 1987, it was a huge deal," said Curtis Strange, whose playoff victory over Tom Kite at Pebble Beach in the 1988 Nabisco determined the money title and made him golf's first $1 million man.

"It was done to help the fields at the end of the year," he said. "The top players didn't play any more than they would have. But guys from [Nos.] 25 to 50 did everything in their power to get in it."

The Tour Championship has lost some of its buzz in recent years. Its prize money, $6.5 million this year, is less than the World Golf Championships ($7.5 million) and not much more than tournaments such as the Wachovia Championship. Plus, the Tour Championship has not decided player of the year seven out of the last 10 years. The new model would not allow for that.

Woods already has won two majors, two World Golf Championships and has clinched the money title. One source privy to the discussion said under the new model, points would be adjusted after the PGA Championship so that up to 70 players would still have a chance to qualify for the Tour Championship and win the points chase.

The source said the latest proposal is for the points race to start at the season-opening Mercedes Championships and run through the PGA Championship. Then, points would be staggered for the final month of the season, much like NASCAR's Chase for the Championship.

The Bridgestone Invitational at Firestone would switch to the week before the PGA Championship instead of the week after. That means players like Woods or Phil Mickelson might have to compete in six events in seven weeks.

"We kind of have to if you want to have a chance of the playoff system, especially toward the end of the year," Woods said. "If you're playing well, you're going to want to play them all."

Woods has met with Finchem at least four times this year, and presumably has signed off on the changes.

The one fear about change is getting rid of tournaments that have languished in the fall with bad fields and low TV ratings. But as the tour gets closer to its finished product, it appears more likely that those events will be played after the Tour Championship and give some players a chance to still finish in the top 125 and keep their cards. In fact, two sources said the tour might add an event in Northern California, and a title sponsor already has been found.

It's all part of a plan to make golf compelling beyond the four majors.

"There has always been this challenge, having as long a season as we have, trying to define it for the fan," Finchem said. "The reason the other sports find it easy is because their season is always about the end. We need a culminating event that's special, and that you have to play hard to get into."

Plummer realizing potential

PLUMMER from page 10

little help from Plummer. They had every reason to expect him to make a dumb mistake.

After all, this is the quarterback who has tossed 144 interceptions in his career. This is a quarterback who, in his first eight seasons, never quite learned how to stay away from disaster.

Plummer showed wise restraint, even when the Broncos defense was crumbling. He didn't give anything to the Eagles as Broncos collapsed in the late second quarter and the entire third quarter. By not trying to do too much, Plummer helped rescue the Broncos from a disastrous loss.

It wasn't McNabb's afternoon. He threw 11 incompletions and an interception in his first 12 throws and hobbled after the game with the pain of a sports hernia.

But McNabb offered a thin smile when asked about Plummer.

"He was comfortable out there," McNabb said. "He was making some big-time throws."

Plummer is not the most cuddly of players. He's surly, even after victories, and was silly enough to cuss out a Denver gossip columnist earlier this month.

What's often lost in the talk about Plummer's lack of manners is he really dislikes talking about himself. He doesn't enjoy discussing his interceptions, sure, but he also finds little joy in reliving his touchdowns. He hates analysis. He just wants to play.

He's the rare NFL quarterback who wants to walk through life as a regular guy, just another player on the roster. That's refreshing.

He was asked about his recent streak of success.

"I really don't care," Plummer said. "… I'm going to continue to play football, whatever role or streak I've got going, I'm trying to lead the team the best I can."

Then came a touch of self-depreciation.

"With this run game we've got going, with the guys up front and what they're doing in the run game, there's not many quarterbacks who wouldn't be on a roll in this system right now," Plummer said.

He's being modest, and this, of course, is a wonderful trait. But he's not being honest. Only a mature quarterback knows when to run away from risks.

NEED HELP FINDING A MAJOR?

Come to the MAJORS FAIR!

Wednesday, November 2, 2005
6:00 - 8:00 p.m.

Student Union Ballroom

Don't miss this unique opportunity to explore the impressive range of majors & resources available at UMASS: representatives from more than 90 departments & programs in one location.

Sponsored by Commonwealth College, Pre-Major Advising Services, & Career Services.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
- a grade dispute?
- teacher, roomate or job concerns?
- billing problems?
- harassment?
- ...or any other University related problem?

THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course!)

students, faculty, and staff are all welcome

823 Campus Center
Office hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
telephone: 413-545-0867
fax: 413-545-9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Support UMass Athletics

Interested in being a sports writer for the Daily Collegian?

E-Mail us at Sports@DailyCollegian.com

UNIVERISTY OF MASSACHUSETTS - AMHERST DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS presents
THE NINTH ANNUAL PHILIP GAMBLE MEMORIAL LECTURE

JULIET SCHOR
Professor of Sociology, Boston College
Author of
Born to Buy: The Commercialized Child and the New Consumer Culture
and
The Overworked American: The Unexpected Decline of Leisure
"Children, Market and Culture: How Corporations are Re-making Childhood"
4:00 p.m.
Thursday, November 3, 2005
174 - 176 Campus Center
Free and Open to the Public

Newman Center Café
472 North Pleasant St / Next to SOM Building
Mon-Thurs 7 am- 8 pm Fri 7 am-5 pm Sat & Sun 8 am-2 pm
Phone: 549-0401 Free Wireless Internet

APPETIZERS & SIDES
Onion Rings $3.25
Cheese Sticks $4.75
Nachos $3.75
Loaded Fries $4.25
Fries $1.25
Cole Slaw $1.25
Cottage Cheese $1.25
Chips $1.00
Mashed Potatoes $1.50
Mixed Vegetables $1.50
Broccoli $1.50
Rice Pilaf $1.50

BREAKFAST served all day
2 Eggs & Toast $2.00
2 Eggs, Toast, Meat $2.75
2 Eggs, Toast, Meat & Homefries $3.25
3 Pancakes $2.75
3 French Toast $2.75

OMELETTES w/ toast & homefries
Ham & Cheese $4.25
Vegetable $4.25
Western $4.25
Cheese $3.75

BREAKFAST SANDWICHES
Egg & Cheese $2.25
Egg, Cheese, Meat on a Bagel add $2.75 $0.75

BREAKFAST SIDES
Bagel $1.25
w/ cream cheese $1.75

GRINDERS/WRAPS/PITAS w/ chips
Ham & Cheese $5.25
Turkey $5.75
Roast Beef $5.75
Tuna Salad $5.75
Chicken Salad $5.25
Veggie $4.75
Chicken Parm $6.50
Grilled Chicken $6.25
Fried Chicken $6.25
Buffalo Chicken $6.50
Pastrami $6.25
Cheeseburg $6.25
Meatball $5.75
Steak & Cheese $6.50
Super Stk 'n' Cheese $6.75
Roast Beef $5.25
Italian Cold Cut $5.75

MEDITTERANEAN PITAS $5.25

SOUP
Cup $2.00
Bowl $2.75

BASKETS w/ fries
Chicken Fingers $6.75
Clam Strips $6.75
Shrimp $7.25
Cod $6.75

BONELESS WINGS
3 Wings $2.75
6 Wings $5.75
10 Wings $9.50

PIZZA by the slice
Cheese $2.00
Pepperoni $2.25
Deluxe $2.75

DESSERTS
Ice Cream & Other Desserts

DRINKS
Rao's Coffee

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS By Comradde X

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

FRANCO THE CLARINETTING NAVY BEAN By Rainy Stanford

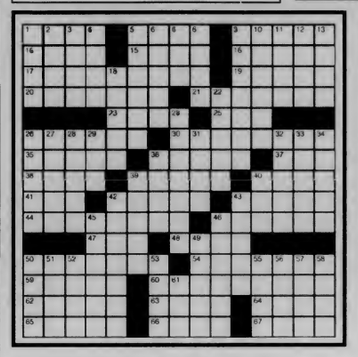
RANDOM CHATTER By Chris Sala

THE ZOO By Gabe Strine

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Anger is a gift."

—Zack de la Rocha



ACROSS
1 Nearly round
5 Sudden pain
9 Bikini, for one
14 Roman ladder
15 Bear in the sky
16 Where Pago Pago is
17 Bookish quality
19 Puppeteer Lewis
20 Righteous Brothers hit
21 Discolored
23 Shuttle grp.
25 Humble abode
26 Each
30 Serving's Zone
35 Hit from the tee
36 Incline
37 Fish eggs
38 Gordie of the NHL
39 Does ushering
40 Gyro bread
41 Eggs
42 Meager
43 Walking sticks
44 Persistent "in the Wind"
46 Moray
48 Out yonder
50 Quarrelsome, informally
54 Waste time worrying
59 Wynonna's mom
60 Height-measuring device
62 Type of renewal
63 Welfare
64 Play divisions
65 Narrow valleys
66 Easter bloom
67 "... Darn Cat"

DOWN
1 Twins preceder
2 Part of speech
3 Part of U.A.E.
4 Sort of soul
5 Hot fudge creation
6 Klimer poem
7 Blockhead
8 Low pitch
9 Violent attack
10 Paganini's location
11 Muscat, sultanate
12 Traditional knowledge
13 Installed as carpet
18 From then until now
22 Dilutes
24 Georgia capital
26 ___ committee
27 Utah city
28 Dubuque resident
29 Actress Arden
31 Steam engine man
32 Pulverize
33 Temporary residence
34 Make fun of
36 Actor Penn
39 Dandruff source
40 "Peter ___"
42 Old-time underwear
43 Billiards shot
45 Sailor
46 With wariness
49 Deadly
50 Cozy
51 Jung of psychology
52 Judge's attire
53 Ketch's sister
55 Shipshape
56 Restless craving
57 Greek letter
58 In the past, in the past
61 Waikiki garland

Find today's answers online

www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP
NEW!! Wireless Internet
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
November Special!
$1.50 PBR Bottles; Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 a pitcher
Tonight: • TRIVIA NIGHT!
Wed. • Cold Duck Complex
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. · N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments

Submit your comic!

e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You will be visited by a scary ghost tonight.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You were born to freestyle. Follow your heart.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Don't let yesterday's weather deceive you. It's November.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Halloween is over. You can take your costume off now.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
You are due for a trip to the dentist next week.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Spend less time doodling and more time listening.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Count how many skittles you can fit into your mouth at once.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Don't worry, you did great on that midterm.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You will spend all day trying to recuperate from last night.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Invest in a new desk chair, preferably one with wheels.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Eat every meal like it's your last. You never know.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Buy some crayons and color instead of doing homework.

★ Submit your comic ★

e-mail
collegiancomcis@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$600 Group Fundraiser Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising programs Equals $1,000-$3,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for up to $600 in bonuses when you schedule your fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments, Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Civic DX Good condition CD Many new parts. $1699 obo 413-212-9384

EMPLOYMENT

Staffing Now, Inc. Needs Seasonal Workers! We are in need of 2 data entry clerks who are available for temporary assignments. One position is located in S. Deerfield and the hours are M-F from 6AM-2PM. The other is in Holyoke and it is M-F from 2PM-7PM. Both positions are paying $9 and will be starting immediately. Perfect solution to earn some extra $$ before the holidays! Call 413-529-7100 for immediate consideration. Staffing Now, Inc. www.staffingnow.com

Work Study – Admin Asst Must have computer skills and know Access and Excel. 10 hours per week max. $8.19-9.48 hr. Application on line at www.lsse.org Email application to: bilzb@amherstma.org

EMPLOYMENT

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Web programmer with experience with graphics design wanted for work in the Office of ALANA Affairs. Up to $10.00 an hour. Apply at office in room 302 in Student Union or email ofalana@stuaf.umass.edu

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8.00 Hr. 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location NO SALES! Night & wknd: shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

EMPLOYMENT

Mystery Shoppers get paid to shop! Up to $150 a day. Training provided Call 1-800-690-1273

FURNITURE

Sealy Mattress Set KING $575.00 QUEEN $465.00 FULL $365.00 TWIN $195 Save 50% or more off store prices. For more details call 215-431-9584

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons for both males & females in Northampton www.western-massboxing.com

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK FROM $569 BAHAMAS, CANCUN, ACAPULCO, JAMAICA! FREE PARTIES, FREE DRINKS. Sign up early and save. Organize a small group and you travel FREE. Or become a CAMPUS REP and GET PAID COMMISSION on each trip sold. Call today and get started 1-800-GET-SUN-1

TRAVEL

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

ACT NOW SPRING BREAKERS Book Early & Save! Free meals parties by 11-7. Lowest prices. Be a rep & TRAVEL FREE! Get the ultimate hookups with STA TRAVEL 413-256-1261.

Collegian Advertising: Reach over 14,000 readers daily! Advertising fit for your needs and budget! Call 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30am & 3:00pm to speak with an experienced ad representative.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hamill brings intensity

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Forget Charlotte. Forget Saint Louis. Forget Rhode Island. Forget UConn. Forget the FieldTurf, rain-soaked grass, Astroturf or "Astrodirt" for that matter. Heck, throw out flu shots, Martha Stewart's reality show and Halloween while we're at it.

The Massachusetts women's soccer team's biggest scare of the season came in the first half of its Atlantic 10 season-opener last month against the Fordham Rams at Rudd Field. Midway through the first half of the contest, a player went down, clutching her knee in a way that sent a chill up everyone's spine.

While she hadn't scored a single point up to that date in time in the season and had tallied just two career assists, it was another element of her game that was part of the backbone of UMass's attack – her ferocity, her never-quit, never-say-die attitude. Often quoted as the "Energizer Bunny" of the team, it was truly a finger-crossing sight to see midfielder Tiffany Hamill not being able to run around on the field as if the rapture was just around the corner.

"That was a huge scare for us," senior and co-captain Amy Maffucci said following the eventual victory over the Rams. "You never want to see someone go down like that. We thought it was a knee [injury], but she popped back up.

"Having her out there is great. Any time we need the extra push on defense, she's there. She takes her cover run harder than anybody else. She works harder and runs faster than anyone else on the team."

When the blonde-haired, wild-eyed senior isn't on the field running to every ball with her sleeves rolled up regardless of the weather, it's hard to tell where the energy on the field is coming from. If there were ever a more convincing argument that statistics never tell the whole story, the UMass women's soccer team cordially invites you to try.

"She never stops. She absolutely never stops," Maffucci said. "If she loses the ball, if the ball gets

See HAMILL on page 8

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Tiffany Hamill and the Minutewomen finished their season on Sunday with a loss to Richmond. Hamill's improved play was a big factor in UMass' improvement this year.

Epstein calls it quits, parts ways with Sox

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON — Red Sox general manager Theo Epstein resigned Monday, surprising Boston and the baseball world just one year after he helped build the franchise's first World Series championship team since 1918.

The team said in a statement that Epstein will continue working for several days to assist in the transition and prepare for the offseason.

The Boston Herald, which first reported the news on its Web site, said the Yale graduate has told associates that he may leave baseball, or at least take a year off.

The Dodgers, Phillies and Devil Rays have GM openings, but none has a $120 million payroll to match the one Epstein was given in Boston.

The 31-year-old Epstein was reportedly offered about $4.5 million for a three-year extension – quadruple his previous salary. But it was still short of the $2.5 million a year the Red Sox offered Oakland's Billy Beane in 2002 before making Epstein the youngest GM in baseball history.

Although Epstein and team president Larry Lucchino haggled over the usual issues of salary and authority, the Herald said Epstein went through "agonizing soul-searching" about his relationship with his mentor. The Herald said a Sunday newspaper column contained inside information about their relationship, "slanted too much in Lucchino's favor," and convinced Epstein there had been a breach of trust.

Epstein grew up blocks away from Fenway Park and worked for Lucchino with the Baltimore Orioles and San Diego Padres. A lifelong Red Sox fan, Epstein was brought to Boston to be the assistant GM and promoted to his dream job in 2002, about five weeks before his 29th birthday.

A devotee of statistical analysis who values his scouts as well, Epstein's tenure has been marked by bold adventures that often conflicted with baseball orthodoxy:

He signed first baseman Kevin Millar, despite an unspoken agreement not to poach from Japanese clubs.

He went without a traditional closer in his first year, with disastrous results.

He tried to trade for reigning MVP Alex Rodriguez – a deal that would have meant shipping out Manny Ramirez and Nomar Garciaparra – and then, without remorse, pulled the plug when the deal became too expensive.

He ate Thanksgiving dinner with Curt Schilling in a college football-style recruiting trip that lured the right-handed ace to Boston.

He traded Garciaparra, the face of the franchise, for the parts he needed to complete the World Series puzzle. But the efforts have paid off.

The Red Sox reached the AL Championship Series in 2003 before the lack of a closer doomed Grady Little in Game 7 at Yankee Stadium. The next year, with a new manager and the closer it had lacked, the ballclub won its first World Series in 86 years.

Bruschi provides spark

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. (AP) – The return of linebacker Tedy Bruschi was inspirational, but it didn't cure all the New England Patriots' ailments.

"There's certainly was room for improvement there," coach Bill Belichick said Monday, after the Patriots rallied from nine points down in the fourth quarter to beat the Buffalo Bills, 21-16, on Sunday night. "I'm not saying that was any masterpiece."

It was good enough, though, to solidify the Patriots' hold on first place in the AFC East. At 4-3 they have the upper hand on division foes Miami (3-4), Buffalo (3-5) and the New York Jets (2-5).

They also have Bruschi back, 8 1/2 months after the linebacker suffered a mild stroke days after playing in his first Pro Bowl. He later had surgery to repair a small hole in his heart.

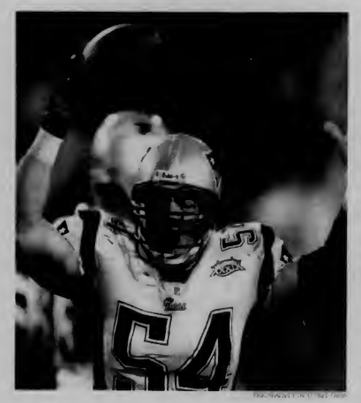
The defensive captain logged plenty of playing time in his return because the Bills held the ball for almost 40 minutes. He was credited with seven tackles, and several teammates said his presence energized them.

"It was certainly a positive having him out there," Belichick said. "I'm sure he'll play a little bit better the next time. It was his first time out all year. He's got a little bit of catching up to do, but he still gave us a good lift and performed well."

Even though Bruschi only started practicing two weeks ago, he regularly has attended defensive meetings since training camp and has been working out at the team's facility for several months.

With Bruschi back, the defense rediscovered its knack for the big play.

They forced two turnovers, including Rosevelt Colvin's sack and fumble recovery that set up the winning score. Cornerback Asante Samuel's third-quarter interception was the Patriots' first takeaway in 17 quarters, dating back to Week 3 win in Pittsburgh.



The Patriots also forced the Bills to settle for field goals on each of their three trips inside the 20-yard line. New England entered the game with the league's worst red zone defense.

On the other hand, the Patriots allowed 147 yards on the ground. They also let Eric Moulds catch nine passes for 125 yards and watched Buffalo convert seven of its 14 third-down opportunities.

The Patriots know those numbers don't bode well for next Monday's home game against unbeaten Indianapolis. The Patriots know they will have to contain Peyton Manning, Edgerrin James and Marvin Harrison.

"We can do a lot of things better," linebacker Willie McGinest said. "We have one of the best teams — if not the best team — in football right now coming in here next week. We have our hands full. If we don't get better, there are going to be some problems."

Associated Press

Patriots linebacker Tedy Bruschi returned to the lineup in Sunday's 21-16 win over Buffalo. It has been less than nine months since Bruschi suffered a stroke.

Plummer not making mistakes

By David Ramsey
Knight Ridder

DENVER — Andy Reid offers a simple explanation for this new, improved version of Jake Plummer.

"He's on a good football team," Reid said after Plummer led the Denver Broncos to a 49-21 demolition of the Philadelphia Eagles.

Reid, coach of the Eagles, remembers when Plummer played, and struggled, for the Arizona Cardinals.

The Cardinals, now and forever, are not a good football team. When Plummer labored as Arizona's quarterback, he was forever trying to lift his overmatched teammates to victory.

That was then.

Plummer is on a roll, silencing critics each week with his steady leadership of the Broncos.

He was at his best Sunday, throwing four touchdowns, collecting 309 yards and finding eight different receivers.

Most importantly, he never stumbled to a major mistake. Plummer has often been the most generous of quarterbacks, tossing interceptions without a care, but for most of this season he's been, of all things, cautious and wise.

Plummer has not thrown an interception since Sept. 18. That's six games and 171 straight throws. It's no accident the Broncos have won five games and barely missed a sixth victory Oct. 23 against the Giants.

The Eagles (4-3) have suffered through a huge tumble this season, but they grabbed, for a few minutes, a touch of the might that pushed them to the Super Bowl last season.

The Broncos ripped to a 28-0 lead, but Eagles quarterback Donovan McNabb refused to surrender. He pushed Philly right back into the game and even unloaded one pass to the end zone that could have tied the game at 28.

Domonique Foxworth read McNabb's eyes, cut in front of Eagles receiver Reggie Brown and intercepted the pass. Foxworth's quick reaction brought life back to Invesco Field, filled with scared Broncos fans. They knew Denver had been outscored, 37-3, in the fourth quarters of the last three games.

But what the Eagles really needed in the second half was a

See PLUMMER on page 8

Weiss will have an era at ND

By Jim Litke
Associated Press

The man is guaranteed an era.

Rockne, Leahy and Parseghian weren't, and Ty Willingham wasn't even given the chance.

Loyalty is in such short supply in college football these days that plenty of coaches think seeing through a five-year contract with a courtesy car thrown in is like stealing money. But over the weekend, the higher-ups at Notre Dame didn't just hand Charlie Weis a contract running through 2015; they opened the bank vault and warmed up the getaway car.

Reports peg Weis' salary over the life of the deal in the $30-40 million range. If correct, that makes him the highest-paid member of the college fraternity, even though Weis is barely through rush week.

And if that sounds like rapid advancement, consider that 10 months ago he was barely a blip on Notre Dame's radar screen.

But then the dominoes fell his way in quick succession. First, Steve Spurrier spurned Florida and opted to resurrect his reputation at South Carolina instead. And then Urban Meyer, who seemed destined at birth to one day coach Notre Dame – and even had an "out" clause in his contract at Utah for just such a contingency – turned down an offer from the Golden Domers and latched onto the Florida gig instead.

The only person who wasn't surprised at the time, apparently, was Meyer's father, Bud. He told a newspaper a few days before his son officially became Gator bait, "Unless he's still drawn to the aura of Notre Dame, the better job is Florida. ... If you go where you can't win, you won't be coaching long."

Spurrier and Meyer both proved again Saturday they can still win, even though it's not quite as often as they'd like. The old ball coach scraped together just enough offense to beat up an old patsy in Tennessee. The new ball coach, meanwhile, throttled back his ambitious spread option and got his season pointed in the right direction with an upset of Georgia.

But Weis had a better weekend than either, even though the Fighting Irish enjoyed a bye.

"It is important when you are doing things like this," he said, after signing the new deal, "to set your priorities. What is the most important thing? For those that know me, they know the more important thing to me is my family and being true to your word.

"I have been both good to my family and true to my word at the same time," Weis added, "without this being about money."

Noble as that sounds, it's not entirely correct. Weis was making a handsome living as an NFL assistant – arguably the best offensive coordinator in the game – working for Bill Belichick and the Patriots. Still, it wasn't this kind of money, and maybe not even this kind of security.

But the speed with which Notre Dame doubled Weis' five-year deal should make a few heads spin.

For one thing, rumors that he was being wooed by the NFL were hardly more than that at this point.

For another, the people in charge beneath the Golden Dome are still paying plenty for terminating Willingham after three seasons of a lucrative six-year deal.

"In a very short period of time, Charlie has clearly and impressively demonstrated the ability to take the Notre Dame program where we all want it to go," athletic director Kevin White said. "Whether you talk

See WEISS on page 8

PGA planning on adding its own version of a 'World Series'

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

PONTE VEDRA BEACH, Fla. – For almost 50 years, the golf season has been defined by four major championships that start in April with the Masters and end in August with the PGA Championship.

What the PGA Tour wants is a World Series, its own version of a Fall Classic.

Tour commissioner Tim Finchem is pulling together the final pieces of a radical shift in the schedule to feature a shorter season and a points race that intensifies after the majors. The plan is for three blockbuster events to qualify for the Tour Championship, with perhaps a $10 million payoff to the winner.

Multiple sources involved in the discussion, all speaking on condition of anonymity because the changes have not been announced, say the three tournaments will be the Barclays Classic in New York, the Deutsche Bank Championship outside Boston and the Western Open in Chicago.

Still undecided is a title sponsor for the Western Open, with Chrysler in negotiations over the weekend.

Finchem will give his "State of the Tour" on Wednesday at the Tour Championship, although he might only be able to provide an outline of the proposed changes.

"I'm not quite sure what I'm going to say," Finchem said in an interview. "We've got so many things going on. Given where we are, on the brink of going to TV [negotiations], I don't want to mislead anyone. But I want to give folks a broad sense of what we're looking at."

A PGA Tour source said Finchem might be in position to announce The Players Championship moving from the end of March to the beginning of May, which would give golf a major event every month from April to August.

The changes are designed to put some sizzle into the end of the year, when TV ratings plummet as golf struggles to compete against football.

Finchem believes golf can hold its own in September when football is just getting started, and would fare much better than in early November when the Tour Championship typically is held. He was inspired by higher ratings the last two months at the Presidents Cup, which came down to the final match, and the American Express Championship, where Tiger Woods beat John Daly in a playoff.

"Good tournaments can compete and perform very nicely," Finchem said. "And the Tour Championship doesn't do that bad, but it's too far removed. It reinforced to us that if you put something special out there, we can carry the audience with us into September. And if it's a strong enough finish, then the season becomes more important."

This isn't the first time the tour has tried to revamp the end of the year.

It created the Vantage Championship in 1986, which offered a $1 million purse – enormous in those days – along with a $500,000 bonus to the winner of a season-long points competition. Also available was a $25,000 bonus for leading each of the nine statistical categories.

The event was tweaked a year later. The Nabisco Championship – the precursor to the Tour Championship – again offered massive prize money and a separate payoff for the points race, only all the money counted as official.

See PGA on page 8

New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Wednesday, November 2, 2005 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXIV Issue 39

Parking Dis-Services?

Students raise concerns over parking woes

By Georgia Kelley and Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

In the wake of complaints from students against University of Massachusetts Parking Services, some say they feel unsafe, cheated and inconvenienced due to flaws within the system.

One student complained that a parking sticker promised to her was for a different lot than originally expected.

Dana Carbone, a junior nursing major at UMass, said she was "seriously frustrated" after she expected a sticker in the purple lot near her dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area and received a sticker for the yellow lot in the Mullins Center — at least a 20 minute walk from her room.

"I had to rely on my friends to take me to and from my car," said Carbone, who no longer parks in the lot.

With winter creeping on New England's doorstep, Carbone is concerned for students who currently park in the Mullins Center lot, due to the poor conditions. The Daily Collegian found the parking lot to be unpaved and suffering several pot holes and gullies after the recent record rainfall.

There are no marked lines in the lot to indicate where cars should park, which causes many students to park in places that are clearly not designated spots.

"The condition of the Mullins Center lot is completely unsafe. When people park, they have nothing to go by, so they park crazy," Carbone said.

The UMass Transit Service's Web site says the on-campus shuttle from the Mullins Center to various parts of campus arrives once every 45 minutes after 5:18 p.m., seven days a week.

"By the time I waited for the bus, I could've walked there," Carbone said, adding that the lighting in the area was poor and a serious lack of visible police officers were available.

There are three yellow lots on campus: lot 12 at the Mullins Center, lot 13 near the University Admissions Office and lot 11 near Southwest. On last check, the price of a yellow lot sticker was $155 and $195 for a purple lot sticker for the 2005-2006 academic school year. Purple lots are located closer to the dorms than the yellow lots.

The condition of lot 13 near Admissions was similar to that of lot 12 near the Mullins Center. The lot is also unpaved, poorly lit and there is little police presence.

"I didn't mind walking the extra couple of feet to the yellow lot. The only thing that bothered me was coming home from waitressing at night... I would call my mom or [my boyfriend] and talk

See PARKING on page 2

Numerous photos sent to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian show a UMass Parking Services van parked in between a handicap spot and a "no-parking" space for 20 minutes while a worker writes tickets for nearby cars.

Photos catch attendant in violation

An outraged student from Van Meter Hall in the Central Residential Area e-mailed the above photos to the Daily Collegian. The photos clearly show an employee of University of Massachusetts Parking Services returning to a University van that he illegally parked in both a handicap spot and a tow zone.

Stephen Ferguson, a UMass student and resident of Central, says he took the pictures at approximately 4:30 p.m. on Monday, Oct. 3.

"This is a blatant disregard for not only the rules that Parking Services has set down, but also the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and I want the public to know," Ferguson said.

As one can plainly see, the operator illegally parked a University van in both a non-parking spot and a handicapped vehicle parking space. He then, left his van to write a few tickets and checked out his surroundings before getting back into his vehicle.

Parking Services refused comment for this story after nearly a month of repeated phone calls and e-mails by the Daily Collegian.

However, their mission statement on their Web site is something to the contrary of the actions spotted by Ferguson.

"Our goal is to provide safe, orderly, and fair parking for employees, students, and visitors to our campus. We strive to make parking on campus as convenient as possible, while promoting safe movement of vehicles, providing for pedestrian safety, and assuring free and continuous access to buildings and walkways for pedestrians and emergency vehicles."

Mary Spicer, sophomore at UMass, had her car towed after parking in the purple lot behind the Van Meter building.

"I had my car towed away and was forced to pay $110," said Spicer. "And this came after I had just been given a $25 ticket two weeks ago."

Spicer admits that she did park illegally, but that her actions were out of concern of her own safety.

"I know I'm supposed to park in the yellow lot," which is nearly a half a mile away, said Spicer. "But if I'm out at night, I don't feel safe walking all the way back."

The UMass Parking Services Web site explains that the fine for parking in a handicap space is $100 and parking in a "no parking zone" is a $40 fine.

According to the 2003 Parking Services Regulations, "Spaces designated for handicap parking are to be used ONLY by vehicles displaying handicap license plates, a state issued handicap placard, or a handicap parking permit issued by UMass Parking Services. Spaces designated as handicap parking are reserved at all times."

The Parking Services Regulations also say that the purpose of UMass Parking Services is "intended to promote orderly and safe movement of all vehicles, provide for pedestrian safety, and assure free and continuing access to buildings and walkways."

— Georgia Kelly

Matt Belliveau and Dan O'Brien contributed to this report

Kanye West goes for 'Broke'

By Brian Duffey
Collegian Staff

Kanye West hovered around perfection with a powerful and inspiring performance this Monday evening. The Halloween show of the "Touch the Sky Tour" also featured female R&B artists Fantasia and Keyshia Cole.

Frank and Norah Foley were among the first fans to arrive on Monday night. Frank is Norah's 59-year-old father. The father-daughter team made a three and a half hour drive from Burlington, Vt. to see Kanye West. Norah, who practices hip-hop dance, said, "[Kanye West] is a lot different than other artists."

Frank Foley said, "He's the real deal." Mr. Foley said that he might have been the oldest person in attendance.

Keyshia Cole, from Oakland, Calif., began the evening. She came on stage wearing high, silvery boots with considerable heels. Her long red hair, flashy jewelry and thin frame did not hurt her likeability. Her set started with the song, "I Changed My Mind," off her debut CD "The Way It Is." This song features Kanye West on the album, although they did not perform it together. Keyshia sang the hook to the song with serious conviction, "I changed my mind. I don't love you. I don't love you no more. Don't waste my time."

This song set the tone for her performance. Each song she sang involved relationships. She also sang the radio hit, "I Should've Cheated." Cole explained a man who she dated inspired the song. This man, who repeatedly accused her of being unfaithful, turned out to be married. She finished with the song, "I Want It to Be Over."

Troyanna Evans, a fan of Keyshia Cole and said, "You can see her emotions when she's singing."

Annie, a student at UMass, was not as impressed. "I didn't like it that much, but she was energetic."

See KANYE on page 6

Kanye West's "Touch the Sky" tour, hit the Mullins Center Holloween night along with R&B artists Fantasia and Keyshia Cole.

Bush assigns new FDIC chair

By Lara Jakes Jordan
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. was assigned by the Bush administration on Tuesday to oversee the federal government's disaster recovery efforts on the Gulf Coast.

Donald Powell, 64, a wealthy contributor to President Bush's presidential campaign, will be in charge of coordinating long-term plans to rebuild the states hit by hurricanes Katrina and Rita in late summer. The sluggish federal response to Katrina, the first and most damaging of the two, has been widely criticized.

Powell will be the administration's point man for dealing with Congress, state and local governments, and private businesses on relief efforts. He has worked on economic development and housing issues — two central matters in hurricane rebuilding efforts — as a Texas bank executive, university administrator and chamber of commerce official, officials said.

"Don has the leadership, ideas and optimism that the residents of the Gulf Coast region deserve," said Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff.

The top federal official overseeing day-to-day Katrina recovery efforts, Coast Guard Vice Admiral Thad Allen, will leave that post by year's end.

President Bush also created a special White House council to develop and review administration plans to help rebuild the region. Headed by National Economic Council Chairman Al Hubbard, it will be made up of Cabinet secretaries and other administration officials.

Lawmakers from Gulf Coast states had pleaded for a federal official to oversee reconstruction projects — in part to safeguard against improprieties in awarding lucrative government contracts.

Sen. David Vitter, R-La., who pushed the White House to create the post, said he was pleased the president named "a single, focused federal coordinator for the hurricane recovery effort." Louisiana's other senator, Democrat Mary L. Landrieu, said she welcomed "anything that can reduce the red tape, streamline operations and ensure accountability."

But Rep. Bennie G. Thompson, D-Miss., said state and local governments need more support from Washington to rebuild communities instead of "adding another layer of bureaucracy." And Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., called Powell's appointment "business as usual" for the administration because the longtime banker has no disaster recovery experience."

"I find this terribly troubling — especially given the tragic missteps of Michael Brown," said Kennedy. He was referring to the former FEMA director who resigned in Katrina's wake amid questions about his experience to handle disasters. Qualifications for federal response officials have been fiercely scrutinized since Katrina.

Administration officials pointed to Powell's three decades in the financial services industry, including work as president and CEO of the First National Bank of Amarillo, Texas; chairman of the Amarillo Chamber of Commerce; and chairman of the Texas A&M University System's Board of Regents.

One of the "Pioneers" who raised at least $100,000 for Bush's presidential campaign, Powell has great personal wealth. He was praised by the banking industry when Bush appointed him to chair the FDIC in August 2001.

Powell traveled in early September to areas in Louisiana and Mississippi struck by Katrina to inspect damage to banking operations and services. Recently, he was considered to be an overseer of the private-donation fund for Katrina headed by former presidents Bush and Clinton.

In a message to FDIC employees on Tuesday, Powell said he was honored to lead the rebuilding effort though said to leave the federal agency.

"I can look back with pride on our many accomplishments in each of our three major priority areas: stability, sound policy and stewardship," he wrote.

FDIC Vice Chairman Martin Gruenberg was to take over Powell's job until a permanent successor is named.

Congress has so far provided $62 billion for Gulf Coast hurricane recovery efforts, of which about $40 billion has yet to be spent.

Katrina, which hit Aug. 29, flooded New Orleans and devastated much of the Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama coasts. Hurricane Rita arrived two weeks later, damaging parts of coastal Texas and Louisiana.

ARTS & LIVING
RUN RELEASES NEW ALBUM
"Distortion" shows that the Reverend's old-school style does not mix with new-school beats
Page 6

EDITORIAL/OPINION
WAL-MART TAKING OVER?
With the proposed construction of a Wal-Mart "SuperCenter," who is to benefit?
Page 4

WEATHER
TODAY Mostly Sunny, H57°
TONIGHT Clear, L33°
TOMORROW Sunny, H61°, L40°

SPORTS
BRUSCHI SHOWS TOUGHNESS
Patriots defensive captain returns to the field after medical scare.
Page 12

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Cameron J. Woods
BUSINESS MANAGER Hirak Shah
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherel Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerrs O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Eganian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Matthew O'Rourke
COMICS EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Allison Edles
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
PHOTO EDITOR Kate Sachsenmaier
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
HUMAN RESOURCE Phil Smoller
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Nathan Chomsky
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mackenzie Issler
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Jones
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Daley
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Belliveau
ASSISTANT PHOTO Elizabeth Caruso
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eric Atha
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Kristen LaCasse

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED 21 NATIONAL AND 1994 NEW ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

Students speak out against against Parking Services to them while I was walking," said Abigail Haines, a resident of the Thoureau dormitory in Southwest who parks in lot 11.

PARKING from page 1

Chris Gazzara, a junior theatre major who lives in the Brett dormitory in Central and has a sticker for lot 13 near Admissions explained how the lot was always full when he tried to park his car there.

"I have a spot in the yellow lot. For a week straight, every night, I drove my car back there to park after work. Every night, the lot was completely full," Gazzara said.

ELIZABETH CARLSTADT/COLLEGIAN

A photo taken in the Orchard Hill parking lot shows large potholes due to the extensive damage on the busy roads.

Having no idea what to do, Gazzara says one night he called UMass police looking for answers.

"[The police] told me my best bet was to park in the yellow lot down by the Mullins Center. I did, and when I returned to my car a couple days later, there was a ticket," he said. "I can't believe I'm paying for a spot that doesn't exist and I'm getting a ticket for it."

On several occasions, reporters from the Daily Collegian found lot 11 near Southwest to be completely full on a weekday, leaving latecomers to park their cars on the grass and in unmarked spaces.

Many wonder whether freshman should be allowed to have spaces on campus, as many campuses including the University of Hartford, Holy Cross, Westfield State College and Salem State College do not allow freshman to park on campus. UMass only started letting freshman students park on campus within the last decade.

ELIZABETH CARLSTADT/COLLEGIAN

A photo taken in the Mullins Center parking lot illustrates the poor conditions prevalent throughout the entire lot.

UMass students pay a good chunk of change if their cars get towed. The violator has to pay over $100 in towing fees plus the cost of a ticket if his or her car is towed. The student must also find a way to pick up their car at North Amherst Towing, some two miles north of campus.

The UMass Board of Trustees annually decides which towing company is contracted by the University.

What is your opinion of UMass Parking Services?

a.) They do a great job, they are fair.
b.) They are extreme at times, but do an OK job.
c.) They're unfair and go out of their way to write tickets.
d.) I don't own a car vote at www.dailycollegian.com

Bush outlines $7.1 billion strategy for flu pandemic

By Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush outlined a $7.1 billion strategy Tuesday to prepare for a possible worldwide super-flu outbreak, aiming to overhaul the vaccine industry so eventually every American could be inoculated within six months of a pandemic's beginning.

Such a huge change would take years to implement — Bush's goal is 2010 — and his plan drew immediate fire from critics who said it wouldn't provide enough protection in the meantime. States, too, got an unpleasant surprise, ordered to purchase millions of doses of an anti-flu drug with their own money.

The long-awaited strategy also stresses expanded attempts to detect and contain the next super-flu before it reaches the United States, with particular attention to parts of Asia that are influenza incubators — a global focus that flu specialists have insisted the government adopt.

"Early detection is our first line of defense," Bush said in a speech at the National Institutes of Health. He called on other countries to admit when super-flu strains occur within their borders. "No nation can afford to ignore this threat," he said.

At the same time, Bush sought to reassure a public jittery over the spread of bird flu, called H5N1, which has killed at least 62 people in Asia since 2003 and caused the death or destruction of tens of millions of birds.

There is no evidence that a human pandemic, of H5N1 or any other super-strain, is about to start, Bush said repeatedly.

Still, there have been three flu pandemics in the last century and the world is overdue for another. Concern is growing that the bird flu could provide the spark if it one day mutates so that it can spread easily from person to person.

"Our country has been given fair warning of this danger to our homeland, and time to prepare," Bush said.

Topping Bush's strategy:

—$1.2 billion to stockpile enough vaccine against the current H5N1 flu strain to protect 20 million Americans, the estimated number of health workers and other first-responders involved in a pandemic.

—$1 billion for the drugs Tamiflu and Relenza, which can treat and, in some cases, prevent flu infection. Enough to treat 44 million people and prevent infection in 6 million others is headed for the federal stockpile. States were told to buy 31 million treatment courses, but Bush is funding only a quarter of the states' anticipated bill.

—$2.8 billion to speed production of pandemic vaccines — including better-matched strains — by learning to manufacture them in easier-to-handle cell cultures, instead of today's slow method that relies on millions of chicken eggs.

campus to career:
from umass amherst
to the real world

a panel presentation on how to look, feel & present yourself in a career search featuring umass amherst's own "fab 3"

Mary Lou Andre '86
Founder & President
Organization by Design, Inc.

Rochelle Rice '83
President
In Fitness & In Health

Roberta (Bobbie) LaPorte '74
President and Founder
RAL Associates

thursday, november 3
4:30–6:30 pm
bezanson hall, fac

Moderator: Vincent Capozzi, '76
Senior Vice President
Sales and Marketing
Harvard Pilgrim Health Care

ILLUMINATING

Harvard Pilgrim Health Care

I AM
ENJOYING THE VIEW

I AM AIM

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Michael Busack
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Jen Kennedy
COPY EDITOR
Dan O'Brien
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Matthew Fox, Allie Mamone

Democrats force Senate into closed-door session

By Liz Sidoti
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Democrats forced the Republican-controlled Senate into an unusual closed session Tuesday, questioning intelligence that President Bush used in the run-up to the war in Iraq and accusing Republicans of ignoring the issue.

"They have repeatedly chosen to protect the Republican administration rather than get to the bottom of what happened and why," Democratic leader Harry Reid said.

Taken by surprise, Republicans derided the move as a political stunt.

"The United States Senate has been hijacked by the Democratic leadership," said Majority Leader Bill Frist.

"They have no convictions, they have no principles, they have no ideas," the Republican leader said.

In a speech on the Senate floor, Reid demanded the Senate go into closed session. The public was ordered out of the chamber, the lights were dimmed, and the doors were closed. No vote is required in such circumstances.

Reid's move shone a spotlight on the continuing controversy over intelligence that President Bush cited in the run-up to the war in Iraq. Despite prewar claims, no weapons of mass destruction have been found in Iraq, and some Democrats have accused the administration of manipulating the information that was in their possession.

Vice President Dick Cheney's chief of staff, I. Lewis "Scooter" Libby, was indicted last Friday in an investigation that touched on the war, the leak of the identity of a CIA official married to a critic of the administration's Iraq policy.

"The Libby indictment provides a window into what this is really all about, how this administration manufactured and manipulated intelligence in order to sell the war in Iraq and attempted to destroy those who dared to challenge its actions," Reid said before invoking Senate rules that led to the closed session.

Libby resigned from his White House post after being indicted on charges of obstruction of justice, making false statements and perjury.

Senate Minority Leader Sen. Harry Reid (D-Nev.) center, and fellow Democrats walk to a news conference to unveil their own Katrina emergency relief plan.

Democrats contend that the unmasking of Valerie Plame was retribution for her husband, Joseph Wilson, publicly challenging the Bush administration's contention that Iraq was seeking to purchase uranium from Africa. That claim was part of the White House's justification for going to war.

Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., said Reid was making "some sort of stink about Scooter Libby and the CIA leak."

A former majority leader, Lott said a closed session was appropriate for such overarching matters as impeachment and chemical weapons — the two topics that last sent the senators into such sessions.

Spingfield corruption case hits City Hall

By Adam Gorlick
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD—After four years of indictments and convictions, an ongoing federal public corruption probe has hit the highest levels of City Hall.

Anthony Ardolino, former Mayor Michael Albano's chief of staff from 1996 to 2001, pleaded innocent Monday to charges that he failed to pay a quarter-million dollars in taxes.

Ardolino's brother, Chester Ardolino, a former city police officer convicted last spring in a real estate scam, also pleaded innocent to the same charges outlined in a 33-page indictment, along with business associate Matt Campagnari.

Campagnari also pleaded innocent to three witness tampering charges. All three were released on unsecured bonds.

A fourth person, contractor John Walsh, was charged in a separate indictment with obstruction of justice, perjury and making false statements for his alleged role in covering up the tax fraud. Walsh denied those charges and was released on an unsecured bond.

"The central theme in these indictments is tax and the misuse of public office," said Rebecca Sparkman, a special agent with the Internal Revenue Service. "The bottom line is that public corruption is motivated by greed."

According to the charges, the Ardolino brothers had a 20 percent stake in two of the bars owned by Campagnari, but their names were kept off the books because they were on the city payroll.

Mayor arrested in extortion scheme

By Adam Gorlick
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD — Chicopee's mayor was arrested Tuesday, a week before Election Day, after federal agents allegedly caught him on videotape taking $10,000 in cash from two business owners seeking favors from the city.

Richard Goyette, 36, a Republican running for a second term, was arrested Tuesday morning and charged with extortion. He did not enter a plea and was released on personal recognizance following an initial appearance in U.S. District Court in Springfield. A grand jury is now expected to hear the case.

"The alleged conduct of Mr. Goyette is an unconscionable breach of the public trust, and only serves to undermine citizens' confidence," U.S. Attorney Michael Sullivan said at a news conference. "Citizens rightfully expect public officials to uphold the best interests of all constituents without expecting cash contributions to do their job."

An FBI affidavit unsealed Tuesday describes a pair of surveillance videos, both shot Sept. 2, that allegedly show Goyette accepting $5,000 cash contributions from two business owners who agreed to cooperate in the investigation.

One witness — identified by investigators as "Concerned Citizen II" — is the owner of a towing company who said he gave Goyette the money to keep his contract with the city. The man said he made a $2,500 contribution to Goyette's 2003 campaign in hopes of securing the contract, investigators said.

"It became clear that Goyette expected to receive substantial campaign contributions from towing companies that did business with the city of Chicopee," FBI Special Agent Susan Kossler said in her sworn testimony.

On the video, according to affidavit, when the towing company owner takes the cash from his desk drawer, Goyette says, "What, no envelope?"

On the same day, Goyette went to the office of a Chicopee developer — dubbed "Concerned Citizen IV" — and allegedly pocketed another $5,000 in exchange for a guarantee that problems with the man's development project would be smoothed over. That exchange also was videotaped, the FBI said.

Several photographs were attached to the affidavit, including two purporting to show Goyette putting the cash in his pocket.

Judge rolls back Wal-Mart suit

By Marcus Kabel
Associated Press

BENTONVILLE, Ark.— An Arkansas judge Tuesday dismissed a large part of Wal-Mart Stores Inc.'s lawsuit against former Vice Chairman Tom Coughlin, saying the executive and the company had agreed not to sue one another over any events that happened during Coughlin's tenure.

Wal-Mart had claimed Coughlin, a protege of company founder Sam Walton, misused $500,000 in cash and property over a number of years.

Benton County Circuit Judge Jay Finch, whose courtroom is about a mile from Wal-Mart's headquarters, said Wal-Mart failed to show that Arkansas law required a company officer to disclose any improprieties before signing a general release from liability.

Finch said Wal-Mart can still pursue losses that occurred after Jan. 22, when the company and Coughlin waived their right to sue over past events. Wal-Mart says it gave Coughlin $400,000 in April because of a benefits calculation error and wants the money returned.

Wal-Mart, the world's largest retailer, had sued the 28-year company veteran this summer after referring the matter to federal prosecutors.

An agreement between Coughlin and Wal-Mart said they would release each other "from any and all liability from claims, causes of actions, demands, damages, attorneys fees, expenses, compensation or other costs or losses of any nature whatsoever, whether known or unknown."

Finch's order said Wal-Mart could only pursue claims for any alleged wrongs that occurred after the release was signed.

"We grant Coughlin's motion to dismiss that part of Wal-Mart's complaint of all allegations occurring prior to signing the mutual release," Finch wrote. "With regard to Wal-Mart's post-release allegations, we deny Coughlin's motion to dismiss."

Coughlin retired in January but remained on the company board. He resigned from the board in March, when the company disclosed it was handing documents over to the Justice Department showing that $500,000 had been misused.

A grand jury has been meeting in Fort Smith to address Wal-Mart's claims against its former executive. Coughlin, through his attorney, has denied any wrongdoing.

Join us in the Bluewall Café
For a Grand Opening Celebration
Thursday Nov 3, at 10am
Prizes, specials and much more!

DINING SERVICES

Pura Vida Fair Trade Coffee:
Changing the world, one cup at a time.

UMass Amherst Center for Student Development
UP TO THE MINUTE

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 4
Something Every Friday
Charlie and the Chocolate Factory
With Johnny Depp
Student Union, Cape Cod Lounge, 9pm FREE

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5
Men's Hockey vs. Providence
Mullins Center, 7pm
FREE to UMass Amherst students

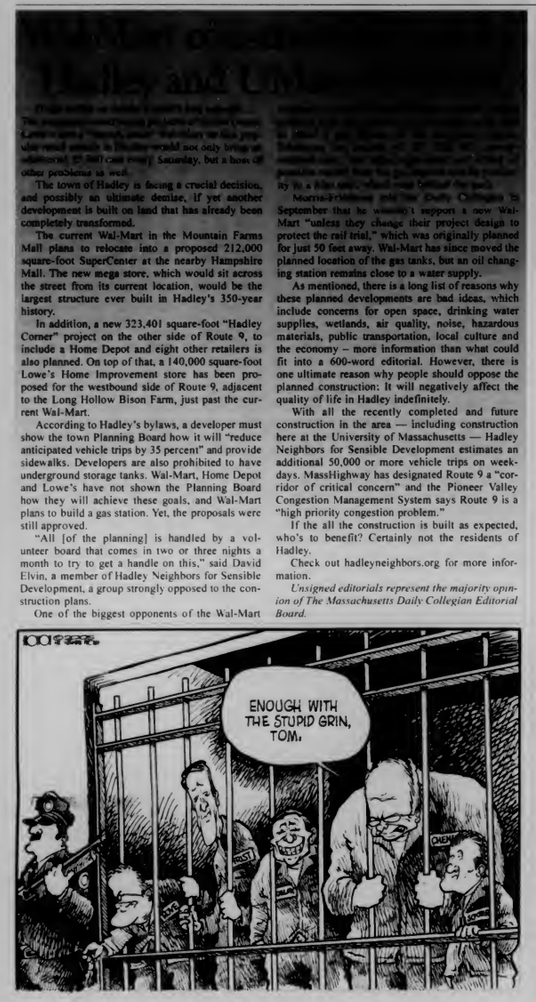
To the EXTREME
CJ Johnson, Comedy Hypnotist
Mad Chad Taylor, Extreme Comedy
Crazy, dangerous, and incredibly funny, you'll never believe what Mad Chad does with chainsaws! CJ Johnson makes audience members the stars through the power of the human mind.
Fine Arts Center, 8pm FREE

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 6
Sunday Night Movie
Charlie in the Chocolate Factory
With Johnny Depp
Student Union, Cape Cod Lounge, 9pm FREE

Student Union Craft Center daily hours: Monday -Thursday 11am – 5pm, Friday 11am – 6pm, Saturday 1pm – 6pm. Come create your own silver jewelry, stained glass, photos, silkscreening, leather, beading, and more. FREE

Student businesses are open! Located in the Student Union: the Bike Coop, Campus Design & Copy (CDC), Earthfoods Café, People's Market, Tix Unlimited. Located in the residence halls: Greenough Sub Shop, Sweets 'N More (Field), & Sylvan Snack Bar (McNamara).

Brought to you by Student Affairs and Campus Life
UMass Amherst Calendar of Events: www.umass.edu/umhome/events



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 2005

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The town of Hadley is facing a crucial decision, and possibly an ultimate demise, if yet another development is built on land that has already been completely transformed.

The current Wal-Mart in the Mountain Farms Mall plans to relocate into a proposed 212,000 square-foot SuperCenter at the nearby Hampshire Mall. The new mega store, which would sit across the street from its current location, would be the largest structure ever built in Hadley's 350-year history.

In addition, a new 323,401 square-foot "Hadley Corner" project on the other side of Route 9, to include a Home Depot and eight other retailers is also planned. On top of that, a 140,000 square-foot Lowe's Home Improvement store has been proposed for the westbound side of Route 9, adjacent to the Long Hollow Bison Farm, just past the current Wal-Mart.

According to Hadley's bylaws, a developer must show the town Planning Board how it will "reduce anticipated vehicle trips by 35 percent" and provide sidewalks. Developers are also prohibited to have underground storage tanks. Wal-Mart, Home Depot and Lowe's have not shown the Planning Board how they will achieve these goals, and Wal-Mart plans to build a gas station. Yet, the proposals were still approved.

"All [of the planning] is handled by a volunteer board that comes in two or three nights a month to try to get a handle on this," said David Elvin, a member of Hadley Neighbors for Sensible Development, a group strongly opposed to the construction plans.

One of the biggest opponents of the Wal-Mart [illegible] in September that he wouldn't support a new Wal-Mart "unless they change their project design to protect the rail trial," which was originally planned for just 50 feet away. Wal-Mart has since moved the planned location of the gas tanks, but an oil changing station remains close to a water supply.

As mentioned, there is a long list of reasons why these planned developments are bad ideas, which include concerns for open space, drinking water supplies, wetlands, air quality, noise, hazardous materials, public transportation, local culture and the economy – more information than what could fit into a 600-word editorial. However, there is one ultimate reason why people should oppose the planned construction: It will negatively affect the quality of life in Hadley indefinitely.

With all the recently completed and future construction in the area — including construction here at the University of Massachusetts — Hadley Neighbors for Sensible Development estimates an additional 50,000 or more vehicle trips on weekdays. MassHighway has designated Route 9 a "corridor of critical concern" and the Pioneer Valley Congestion Management System says Route 9 is a "high priority congestion problem."

If the all the construction is built as expected, who's to benefit? Certainly not the residents of Hadley.

Check out hadleyneighbors.org for more information.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Tale of a Pacific virgin

Wesley Miller

One of the best effects of being abroad is the heightened sense in which one perceives the world around him or her on a day-to-day basis. The senses become sharpened, colors more vivid and smells more sensual, more pungent. Inevitably, this brings on a fierce sense of introspection. Revelation is a powerful force of change and something that we often take for granted while living in what we perceive a normal model for reality. When that's turned upside down, when you're thrown into a situation that you have no ability to make sense of, you begin to wonder why.

Up until a week ago, I had never seen the Pacific Ocean. A true New Englander, the beach trips I grew up with were to my grandparents' house in Maine's Penobscot Bay. I still think of that area as one of the most beautiful in the world with its rocky coastlines, endless pine trees and weather beaten cottages. I had initially turned down the first trips to the coast of Mexico, notably to Puerto Vallarta, the mere mention of which made me think of Bob Barker and "The Price is Right." A few of my friends got together and decided they would rather rent cars and search for virgin beaches around La Manzanilla. That struck a more positive note.

When I first got here, everything knocked me flat. Who would have known that such a beautiful place, with such lovely people could be so negatively stereotyped by the very people I considered my friends and family. I eventually had to learn to just sit back and let things take affect, consider them in their pure form, let them reveal themselves to me. I took this philosophy out to the Pacific, where I would let it literally wash over me.

We left at 5 p.m. on Friday and pulled into Manzanilla at around 10 p.m. We ate dinner at a little restaurant run by a French expatriate. All the while, we were a stones throw from the ocean. I could hear the waves crash and I could taste the salt. Unfortunately it was still too dark to utilize my sense of sight, so I caught an early night and fell asleep to sounds of the ocean like I used to do as a child in my grandparents' cottage.

> When I first got here, everything knocked me flat. Who would have known that such a beautiful place, with such lovely people could be so negatively stereotyped by the very people I considered my friends and family.

Before I could even rub my eyes, I was being herded into the waiting rental cars outside the hotel. Apparently, the beach was too rocky and violent to swim in and thus we were headed out to Tenachatica, a protected cove with fine sands and minimal riptides. The road there was long and winding, nestled in cliff sides and forests of palm trees. My mouth hung open like an excited child, completely speechless. Then we were there: a beach miles long, flanked by rock formations 30 feet high snarled in cactus and of course the waves crashing musically on the shore.

"Not a bad introduction to the Pacific" a friend commented to me. I realized I had probably said "I've never been to the Pacific" 30 times between the commencement of the trip until this point. I doused myself in sunblock and waded into the water. It washed over my ankles and then pulled me in like a warm, inviting Latin American mother. I swam all day without fatigue. The waves were big enough to body surf so I did that too until one threw me in a full somersault. After a fit of hysterical laughter, I decided to take it easy.

When the sunset finally came, a friend of mine from Winnipeg and I bought some beer and took our plastic folding chairs down to the water's edge. We sat there and talked about our lives, our families; the kind of conversation that you want to have with the people around you but can only manage to have while drinking beer on a Mexican beach in the sunset. It looked like something out of a Corona advertisement. If only I had a beeper on me I could have skipped it out into the ocean in defiance. Of course, someone had to come down and take the facebook picture. Just as they did a wave came through and knocked me out of my chair, making my beer nice and salty.

Driving back to Guadalajara, I felt as if I'd experienced something great, something soul changing. Art was going to be more beautiful, food more delicious and life more enjoyable. Being abroad makes you feel fortunate to be able to experience well ... anything. Your values begin to change along with your perceptions, perceptions of the world around you, others and most importantly, yourself.

Wesley Miller is a World Perspectives columnist. He is currently on exchange in Mexico.

A true melting-pot society

James T. Ellison once said, "The death of America will come when everyone is alike." But why, then, do we fail to celebrate others' differences and instead, settle for a "separate but equal" society?

Simply put, the answer is a puzzling one.

Prejudice is something experienced by many. Whether it is in regards to race, sexuality, gender, religion, age or disability, to name a few, only a small part of society will ever be spared from such discrimination. But in the present, the term is most commonly interchanged with racism since cultural bigotry occurs most often in this country.

Becky Martins

A problem dating back hundreds of years, judgmental thinking based on outward appearances is an archaic practice. Yet, certain individuals have yet to let certain racist ideology die with the changing times. It makes one wonder what could be hindering our society from coming "full circle." Slavery was abolished, internment camps banned and civil rights attained, and still, divides exist within our country whether people acknowledge them or not. But maybe the core of this issue does not lie in what people know of other members of society. Instead, it is what they do not see, understand and identify with that halts all hopes of a truly "United" States of America.

It would be lying to say my life had always been lived diversely. For many years, I grew up sheltered, failing to realize the severity of issues like racism in my "bubble." But in actuality, such backward thinking on my part stemmed from my own ignorance. Having grown up in a primarily white community, it was easy to pretend prejudices did not exist since my exposure was limited. Looking back, I wish my upbringing had allowed me to see the world as I do now. But what is more disturbing is the number of people who are still unaware of life's harsh realities.

> But maybe the core of [prejudice] does not lie in what people know of other members of society. Instead, it is what they do not see, understand and identify with that halts all hopes of a truly "United" States of America.

Today, diversity is something my life hardly lacks. I have dated outside of my race. Many of my close friends are not white. For my own interest, I enjoy experiencing other cultures in the forms of food, music, dance, etc. Thus, it is baffling to hear of people discriminated against for cultural and racial reasons: differences which I find so unique and intriguing about an individual. Obviously not all ethnic groups practice the same customs, speak similar languages and look alike. Thus, why do some carry negative connotations according to certain individuals outside of the culture?

Upon coming to Amherst for college, I took a job at a local elementary school in town, serving as a teacher at an after school program. At first, the only thing I took from the position was a paycheck each week. Yet, upon closer examination of my working environment, I now realize what a great thing occurs each time I'm there.

The racial makeup of the program and school is one to be admired. Children attending grades K-6 there come from various backgrounds: European, African, Asian and Middle Eastern, as well as those who classify themselves as bi-racial. But what makes this diverse makeup most refreshing are the children's reactions to one another.

In my three years of working there, never has a racist issue come up between students. Instead, they pronounce each others' names perfectly, regardless of how foreign they sound, play with each other, despite their physical differences and find interest in others' cultures, even if they are much different than their own. Coming to work each week honestly restores my faith in society. After sitting in college lectures and learning about atrocities that occurred throughout history, this experience gives me hope that the world really can change for the better.

Cultural assimilation is a double edged sword of sorts: people fear losing their own ethnic identity in the process of uniting with a larger group. However, I do believe it is possible to live life relating to more than a single culture, as the children do at my after school program. Individuals should never lose sight of their own languages, customs and traditions, yet by exposing oneself to different types of people, a culture would become less foreign to those on the outside. That is what we need more of in this country: understanding. If people kept open minds, the mystique of racism would become less puzzling. Stereotypes and other false impressions would eventually disappear if people realized how inaccurate they were. More people would stop treating others so negatively if the targeted group were viewed as individuals, instead of statistics, minorities, etc.

Essentially, it is impossible to rewrite history and change the perceptions of people living with a lifetime of such ideas. However, the future can erase mistakes made in the past if we allow it to. Maybe then differences existing between Americans will prove less dividing and instead becomes intertwined into the fabrics of our melting-pot society.

Becky Martins is a Collegian columnist.

This great school we have

This is part two of a two part column.

Asif Khan

I wrote last week about the Five College consortium, Amherst College politics and the distinctions made between private and public schools and their students. To follow up on that, I have been working at the Annual Fund here at UMass since I was a freshman. Over there students call alumni and raise funds for the university. I started out as a caller and have been a supervisor for the past three years. In these past few years the Annual Fund has made more than $2 million per year for the university for everything from Biology to Campus Beautification.

However these millions pale in comparison to what our privately funded neighbors get from not just alumnus but also big corporations, wills and trust funds. Sitting in my class at Amherst College with my shoes on a plush red carpet, sitting on a leather chair with a giant screen and comfortable central heating and then the next day sitting in Herter Hall on high school style plastic chairs trying to look at slides on a projector that works when it wants to one realizes that there is a clear-cut distinction made. And it is aggravating.

It would be more aggravating however if this extended in to academia as well. Fortunately it does not. Money thankfully does not entirely buy a "good education." Even though that classroom in Herter is all that, I have the privilege of listening to one of the country's premier Islamic art historians.

I can honestly say that in my personal experience classes here at UMass have been equally if not more challenging and hard as the classes I have taken at Smith and Amherst. As a matter of fact I would argue that they are even tougher because rarely can I ever walk up to a professor at UMass and have them extend my paper deadline without penalization. This phenomenon is quite common in other "more prestigious" institutions. I have taken some great classes here with some amazing professors; men and women who have not given in to the extra dollars they are offered at other schools and have remained dedicated to our school.

> I can honestly say that in my personal experience classes here at UMass have been equally if not more challenging and hard as the classes I have taken at Smith and Amherst.

I have noticed several times that people who go to UMass consider it their "safety school" that they came to because it was cheap and they got in easily as Massachusetts residents. The sense of pride at UMass is definitely not very high. Most of us may sport UMass wear frequently but that is where it ends, we are very quick to criticize everything about this school every chance we get. Take it from me; this is a very good school with a good reputation in the United States, as well as the rest of the world, and has graduated many successful and important people like Richard Gere, Bill Cosby, Julius Irving and award winning writer Kamila Shamise. When I tell people abroad or outside of Massachusetts that I go to UMass at Amherst I get an "Ohhh that's a really good university, good for you," not an "Oh UMass is so trashy, you must get drunk every night."

So let's continue living these fun, multi-tasking lives we all lead at this university. We are not here just to spend four years, graduate and then get some job that will pay enough. You have this great opportunity in front of you where you can make substantial changes to yourself and to your country. Take advantage of all the opportunities this school provides you, including the Five College consortium.

I do not mean to say that all private schools are bad and public schools are great. They both have their ups and downs. But at the end of the day I cannot help but be proud of the fact that I as well as many of you work two jobs, go out every weekend, write for this paper and at the same time be indebted for the next five years with loans that I will pay for myself.

So stop living the stereotype of rioting, skipping class and talking about how much you do not like being here. These are the best years of your life. Live them up. Every alumnus I have spoken to at the Annual Fund have seconded that. Yes, maybe we do not have a huge endowment and leather armchairs in our classrooms but what we have is the ability to work hard and play hard and to graduate the people who form the backbone of society. Be proud of this great school and try and make it better.

Asif Khan is a Collegian columnist

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Can a woman become president?

Andrew Freeman

An announcer begins to read the sentence "This season on ABC, a woman will be president" and breaks down laughing in the midst of it. The announcer once more attempts to read the sentence, and erupts in laughter again. The scene continues for a few moments, as the announcer expresses his utter disbelief. I watched this skit, which parodied ABC's advertising for "Commander in Chief," on Mad TV this weekend. I didn't find it funny.

President Bush's second term is just beginning, and already there is discussion of who should succeed him in 2008. Interestingly, two women have arisen to be front-runners in the far-off campaign. Senator Hillary Clinton, wife of former president Bill Clinton, and Secretary of State Condoleeza Rice both do quite well in polls, considering that neither is officially running for president. Clinton leads the field of potential Democratic nominees with the support of 41 percent of respondents, according to an Oct. 21 poll by WNBC-TV/Marist. In the same survey, Condoleeza Rice tied former New York mayor Rudy Giuliani at 21 percent among the Republicans. There is the possibility that either one or both of these women might gain their party's nomination.

Many, if not most, countries have had at least one assertive female ruler in their history. China had Empress Wu Zetian, England had Queen Elizabeth I and Russia had Catherine II, to name just a few prominent examples. In monarchies, it is arguably easier for a woman to gain power, in cases where a woman holds the best claim to succession for example. Most female rulers were expected to marry and let their husband rule, but those listed above did not.

> The tagline for many advertisements is "This fall, a woman will be president," implying that this would shock Americans. Why, aside from the lack of precedent, would we not accept a female president?

Women have headed democratic systems of government, including Indira Gandhi of India, Margaret Thatcher of England, Golda Meir of Israel and most recently Angela Merkel in Germany. Yet until recently the idea of a female president in the United States seemed untenable, even impossible. How many of us remember that one of the nine top Democratic candidates for president last year was Carol Moseley Braun? Women in American political history have rarely figured prominently.

Americans today appear largely receptive to the idea of a female candidate. A poll by the Westhill Partners and the National Journal's Hotline asked 1,015 Americans if a woman was "tough enough to be president," and 64 percent strongly agreed with the statement. When faced with the choice of Rice or Clinton, however, the support fell considerably, with the former receiving 21 percent of those polled, and the latter 32 percent. This drop may correspond to party-identification, with staunch Democrats refusing to support the Republican Rice, and solid Republicans detesting Clinton. Another possibility, however, is that Americans are more uncomfortable with a female president than they would like to think.

The advertising for ABC's new drama, "Commander in Chief," in which the female vice president ascends to power after her boss is killed, reflects this anxiety. The tagline for many advertisements is "This fall, a woman will be president," implying that this would shock Americans. Why, aside from the lack of precedent, would we not accept a female president?

Concern over national security is one potential factor. In an October USA Today poll, Americans declared by a ratio of 2-1 that a man would better handle national security, a critical issue given the War on Terrorism. "Commander in Chief" challenges this notion, when Geena Davis' president threatens Nigeria with war should they execute a woman for committing adultery? History abounds with examples of bellicose female leaders, most recently with Margaret Thatcher's decision to wage war with Argentina in 1982 over a chain of British islands that nation had seized.

Another factor is male fear and insecurity about powerful women. Hillary Clinton experienced this through her husband's two terms, and there is still a great deal of hatred directed against her. A quick search for "Hillary Clinton" and "hate" turns up products comparing her to Hitler and many other expressions of loathing. Many men prefer to date and marry women who are subordinate to them, fearing those who are independent and intelligent. A 2004 British study found that women with high IQ scores at the age of 11 had significantly worse prospects for future marriage than men with high scores at the same age. Some men fear that intelligent, competent women will be less faithful to them, and more critical of their actions. These same irrational anxieties could easily extend to a female presidential candidate.

If Clinton, Rice or any other woman runs for president, she will run up against these factors, and more. She will be subject to media scrutiny far beyond the level of any male candidate, including extended discussion of her appearance and dress, and her family. Will a woman be able to surmount these barriers? We'll find out in 2008.

Andrew Freeman is a Collegian columnist.

Supreme Court should enforce Geneva Convention's rules

Jason Rhode

Here's a court case you probably haven't heard about: Hamdan vs. Rumsfeld. The Supreme Court is deciding this week whether or not to take it up. Hamdan deals with the rights of the foreign suspects the Bush administration is holding at Guantanamo Bay Naval Base, Cuba.

Two courts ruled on it this summer. The first said the president didn't have the right. The second — the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia Circuit — reversed that decision July 15. Judges A. Raymond Randolph, Stephen Williams and now-familiar-face John Roberts presided.

With that affirmation came a symbolic approval for the White House to conduct this kind of business with the widest kind of legal interpretation — meaning no constraints needed.

The second ruling has stood, and will stand, unless the high court picks it up.

They should.

The current policy is a blatant violation of the Constitution and the Geneva Convention. Chief Justice Roberts said he would rescue himself if Hamdan is chosen. But that's no reason for the rest of the justices to do the same.

The Hamdan of the case — Salim Ahmed Hamdan — is a Yemenese man we captured in Afghanistan, late November 2001. He was transported to Cuba and held at Camp Delta. He was Bin Laden's driver and personal aide.

As such, he was designated to be under the sway of Bush's peculiar "Order Concerning the Detention, Treatment and Trial of Certain Non-Citizens in the War Against Terrorism" issued in November 2001. Hamdan and his lawyers objected. And so the battle began.

As the appeals ruling noted, the prior court found "that Hamdan could not be tried by a military commission unless a competent tribunal determined that he was not a prisoner of war under the 1949 Geneva Convention governing the treatment of prisoners." The Appeals Court overturned the lower ruling on two kinds of technicalities: one, the tribunals were acceptable because they were Congress-approved; two, Geneva doesn't apply because al-Qaida isn't the kind of enemy we had in mind in 1949.

The first argument is just stupid. It's called separation of powers for a reason. Despite the congressional approval, these special courts are the president's creatures.

The White House created these tribunals — decided what made a crime and a criminal and set the rules for them. This is wrong. A singular branch of government is not to be invested with the powers of judge, jury and prosecutor. Nothing is more disagreeable to our Constitution.

> We will give the evil of this earth the treatment they would never have given us. Why? Because this is the burden of being good; because not to do so would lower us. Our enemies are scum; we are not. We are a nation of rules.

Moreover, the tribunals condone a lack of due process, accept unsworn testimony and allow evidence garnered in a coercive fashion. At a tribunal, you are not innocent until proven guilty. You also have no right to be present at your own trial.

Hell, why have a third branch of government at all? In fact, why have a system of checks and balances in the first place? It is good to know that a couple of millennia of jurisprudence can be junked so easily.

The second argument is a coward's excuse.

We are clearly at war, gang. To say that we are not going to live by our promises simply because al-Qaida doesn't have a Reichstag is pathetic. The attempt of the District Appeals Court to worm its way out of the treatment we agreed on almost 60 years ago is like watching some billionaire fat cat try to squeeze his way out of paying taxes.

Everybody knows what the rich man's duty is; it's only shyster tricks that let him get away with what he shouldn't.

Perhaps you wonder why all this fuss for a terrorist. Why should we give this guy a fair shake? Because it's what the superior person does. This is what it means to be the better culture, my friends. Mussolini's butler or Bin Laden's cabana boy; it makes no difference. We're America.

We will give the evil of this earth the treatment they would never have given us. Why? Because this is the burden of being good; because not to do so would lower us. Our enemies are scum; we are not. We are a nation of rules.

Are we to conduct affairs of state through loopholes? Is the United States, bestriding the world like a colossus, to snoop lowly around its own law like a thief in the night?

If we chuck the rule book because of these guys — if the Supreme Court, the physical embodiment and representation of American justice, declines this case because the fear of looking weak trumps doing the right thing — then the villains really have won. They're made us change. Bush will be turning the knife on himself.

Here's another reason you should worry: The limits set by the Appeals ruling on Hamdan are foolishly broad. If the Roberts' court does not deign itself the guardian of the division of powers at least, this unchecked expression of executive might goes unchecked. In theory, this president or any future president could expand this legal precedent to set up rights-free courts, civilian or military, for any "terrorist" anywhere, even citizens on our own soil. If that doesn't scare you, it should.

What makes our republic work is we obey laws, and we divide our authority. The current policy does neither. When it comes to allotting itself power, the best government is no better than the best junkie — allow it the means, and it will find a way. When you write a blank check, don't be surprised when the till runs dry.

By Jason Rhode, a columnist at Texas Tech University, written for the Daily Toreador.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

WOMAN'S ROLE MISINTERPRETED

I am writing in response to the Nov. 1 column "Study show disadvantage for powerful women, but why?" I took several issues with Ms. Alkon's position, and though she does not write specifically for the Collegian, and won't read this, I feel that a response to the issue is more important than one to the author.

The first problem with the column is the clearly obtuse, single-minded approach it takes to a complex question. The column takes the basic premise that "stupid" or at least "less accomplished" women do better in relationships. Why is this? Rather than pursuing several possible explanations, it adheres to the time-honored tradition of mediocre minds: stereotyping. She assumes that men want subservient, stupid women and that they are threatened by more capable ones, and she does this without even a glance towards any alternative reasons.

The article fails to take into account that perhaps these "dumber" women are simply more able to participate in the ridiculous mating rituals our kind goes through. Maybe without the stressors of academic and professional work, they can more easily refine their skills in the mating game. They may be more manipulative and subtly controlling, embracing socially Machiavellian principals that, though repugnant to more open minded, enlightened souls, are nonetheless effective. This is not to say that dumb girls are more or less skilled at the acquisition of a mate, but it's certainly a possibility that merits mention.

It's also entirely reasonable that women without large career goals might be more likely to get married. Like it or not, ambition means you have less time for relationships. Of course you can still balance work, school, any political activism you're involved in and still have a healthy relationship; my point is it's harder than just balancing leg-waxing and a relationship. Sometimes romance comes second when you're a well-rounded career man or woman.

As far as the "marriage market" goes, the column did not consider that more ambitious, educated women may chose not to marry because they find the practice archaic and inherently subjugating. They may content themselves with long-term, non-matrimonial relationships.

These are just a few possibilities, and ultimately I can only fault a column so much for not examining multiple angles of an argument. What bothered me more is the gross overgeneralization of the piece. Citing "a New York producer" that Maureen Dowd interviewed, Alkon believes that men want a woman who is "malleable and awed." From this, she provides her own definitions of the words, and applies them to some sinister male attempt to control women by keeping them in intellectual and financial subordination. And we won't even touch on the ridiculous standards applied to men when seeking partners in relationships.

The creepy, Freudian assumption that men want sex mommies with lobotomies is perhaps most poignant because it's superseded by the author's own vision of a woman's place as an "admirable role model" mere paragraphs before she espoused equality in relationships.

Ben Gaines
UMass student

ROSA PARKS: AN ICON

Allow me to expand on David Lawrence's column "A subtle hero remembered." As a college student witnessing history in the making with Rosa Parks' recent passing, I find it imperative that the true story behind Rosa Parks and her actions is not forgotten or glossed over, as has been the case with so many other social icons.

Rosa Parks is portrayed in most media outlets as an average woman who was just "tired." The common story is that Parks was sick of the injustice and committed a small act of defiance that happened to spark a nationwide movement. This, however, is not the whole story. Rosa Parks knew exactly what she was doing. She had attended workshops and conferences dealing with non-violent protest prior to the bus "incident," and she had been an active member in the local NAACP for over 10 years prior to that 1955 day.

A bus boycott was already being planned by civil rights groups, and she knew that she had to be the one to initiate it. Not only did she instigate change in that isolated event, but she also continued working for civil rights long after the buses were de-segregated. In fact, as recently as 10 years ago, she still felt, "we still have a long way to go in improving the race relations in this country." It's important to remember Parks as a well-informed citizen that saw change as not only possible, but completely necessary. She knew that by playing what seemed like a small part, huge change would result. This is why people need to know the whole story — we shouldn't wait until we are "sick of an injustice," we should realize that action should be taken now, however small that action may be.

In our not-yet-perfect country, everyone should strive to have a little Rosa Parks in them; a piece of them that realizes change is possible and that they can be the ones to do it. Hopefully, in this crucial time of remembrance and honoring, the American public will not allow Rosa Parks' story to be altered or distorted over time, and instead demand that the whole truth is made into common knowledge. And may Rosa continue to inspire people to initiate change.

Carly Lonergan
UMass student

MORE TO ROSA PARKS

David Lawrence's opinion column, "A subtle hero remembered," in the Nov. 1 Daily Collegian rightly highlights a significant historical accomplishment and honors a courageous human being. However, this rendition of the familiar story lacks the event's most vital context. Before Rosa Parks gave up her bus seat, she spent 12 years working with the NAACP, attending training sessions at the Highland Center, Tennessee's labor and civil rights organizing school, and interacting with an older generation of civil rights activists.

Paul Loeb put it best in his essay, "The Real Rosa Parks," when he said, "Parks didn't come out of nowhere. She didn't single-handedly give birth to the civil rights efforts. Instead, she was part of an existing movement for change at a time when success was far from certain. This in no way diminishes the power and historical importance of her refusal to give up her seat. But it does remind us that this tremendously consequential act might never have taken place without the humble and frustrating work that she and others did earlier on."

I often hear it said that we need heroes; we need symbolic representations of the ideals for which we strive. Yet the problem with glorifying activists is that it conceals the remarkable efforts of the many other people involved in the movement, and it tells a false tale of what it means to make social change. Loeb elaborates, "The conventional retelling of her story creates a standard so impossible to meet that it may actually make it harder for the rest of us to get involved ... It reinforces a notion that anyone who takes a committed public stand — or at least an effective one — has to be a larger-than-life figure, someone with more time, energy, courage, vision or knowledge than any normal person could ever possess ... This belief pervades our society, in part because the media rarely represents historical change as the work of ordinary human beings who learn to take extraordinary actions. And once we enshrine our heroes on pedestals, it becomes hard for mere mortals to measure up in our eyes."

This selective interpretation of Rosa Parks' story gives the impression that social change occurs isolated from focused organization, strategy and action. Again, as Loeb says, "Our culture's misreading of the Rosa Parks story speaks to a more general collective amnesia by which we forget the examples that might most inspire our courage and conscience. Most of us know next to nothing of the grass-roots movements in which ordinary men and women fought to preserve freedom, expand the sphere of democracy and create a more just society ... But their stories, like the real story of Parks, are erased in an Orwellian memory hole. Parks' actual story conveys an empowering moral that is lost in her public myth."

I write this to encourage the multitudes of activists working today, without recognition, to realize social progress, as Rosa Parks did before that momentous occasion that became the limited depiction of decades of organized motion. If we are ever to achieve our aspirations for a better world, we must recognize that the power to do so is accessible to everyone and that the success of our endeavors is dependent on our ability to work together, organize and mobilize.

Shannon Davis

Are taking "Five College" classes worth the hassle?

What do you think about the whole "Five College" process? Do you...

a) Think it is really easy and well organized.

b) Think the process is difficult, but well worth it.

c) Tend to shy away from things that require that much paperwork.

d) Think the process is way too difficult and therefore don't bother with it.

Submit your vote online in the opinion section at www.dailycollegian.com

THE COLLEGIAN IS LOOKING FOR OPINION COLUMNISTS. IF INTERESTED E-MAIL US AT EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 2005

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'College Dropout' sells out Mullins Center

KANYE from page 1

American Idol champion, Fantasia Barrino, took the stage wearing high healed black boots, a black skirt and a white dress shirt with a popped collar. She opened with the song "Selfish," off her album "Free Yourself." With backup singers, a full band and strong energy, Fantasia got the crowd going from the start.

The song, "It's All Good," recounts a relationship gone sour because of infidelity. "Everything that you ever said turned out to be all lies." Her voice and strut during this song was reminiscent of the legendary Tina Turner.

She covered Prince's "Purple Rain" and Aerosmith's "Dream On" before she belted out her radio hit, "Truth Is."The song brought out some intense emotion from the young North Carolinian.

Following the performance, UMass student Lauren Daniels said, "She was crazy."

"I thought she was annoying," said Chris Grippo, a high school senior from New York.

Kanye West may be the biggest thing in hip-hop today. In fact, this Windy City native may currently be the biggest artist in all of music. Recently this "College Dropout," said that, "George Bush doesn't care about black people" during an NBC live concert fundraiser for the victims of Hurricane Katrina. This Rocafella producer/rapper stays true to form with his lyrics, which are hard-hitting and painfully honest. His Halloween performance was a testament to his persistence.

It all started with a funny, yet serious skit, "Broke, Broke, Broke, Flat Broke." He opened with "Touch the Sky." Mr. West entered the stage with khakis, blazer, medallion, sunglasses and a crisp pair of white sneakers. Behind this charismatic superstar, a pair of backup singers was situated off to the back corner of the stage. In addition, a DJ, drummer, keyboardist and full string section were all set behind a transparent curtain and above the level of the stage. This arrangement is the first of its kind in the history of hip-hop tours. The lights and glamour of the set for this first tune were spectacular. "I got to testify, come up in the spot looking extra fly. 'Fore the day I die, I'm gonna touch the sky." These words were perfectly matched with the glitter and glitz around him. In the second verse of the song he confesses, "I'm trying to right my wrongs, but it's funny them same wrongs help me right this song." Throughout his set, the concept of good and evil were expressed. His lyrics continually make mention of the lure of negative forces and their consequences. His words are deeply spiritual in nature. They depict a man caught between the pull of two opposing forces.

He was then joined by Keyshia Cole for the song, "We Don't Care," which is off his first album, "College Dropout." The words, "Drug-dealing just to get by, stack your money till it gets sky high. We weren't supposed to make it past twenty-five, jokes on you we still alive," describe the conditions in inner cities, where it's hard to make money without making illegal decisions.

The song "Addiction" spoke about the allure of excess. "Why everything that's supposed to be bad, make me feel so good?"

The song "Spaceship" featured rapper Consequence. The song details the struggle and anxiety associated with working for a low wage. Consequence also joined Kanye for "Gone," off "Late Registration." The album version of the song also features Cam'ron.

In the song "Crack Music," he took a stab at President George W. Bush, saying he makes money off the anguish of the poor. Whether or not the intention of the song reached the crowd is hard to determine.

He performed the song "Roses" as an ode to his grandmother. He sat next to an empty stretcher as he sang this tune. Kanye also did the song "Hey Mama," an emotional piece that pays homage to the strength of his mother, and all mothers who struggle to keep families intact. Kanye sang with obvious emotion, "Hey mama, I wanna scream so loud for you, 'cuz I'm so proud of you."

"All Falls Down," off his first album, was the best song of the night. Kanye reemerged on stage wearing a UMass t-shirt for the tune. The crowd erupted and most of those in attendance knew the words. This song created an emotional level within the Mullins Center that is rare to find at any event, musical or otherwise. In the song, Kanye admits to being self-conscious and spending money that he might not yet have.

"Gold Digger," which features a Ray Charles sample from "I Got a Woman," allowed Kanye to showcase his dancing ability. He did the legendary head jerk that became famous from the song's video.

In "Through the Wire," Kanye showed his ability as a writer and truth teller. "Swear I should be locked up for stupid shit that I did, but I'm a champion, so I turned my tragedy to triumph, make music that's fire, spit my soul through the fire."

"Jesus Walks," which is the featured track off the highly anticipated movie "Jarhead," displayed Kanye's need to get right with himself and something higher. "Only thing that I pray is that my feet don't fail me now."

Still not finished, Kanye performed "Bring Me Down" as a response to all the negative criticism he has received. He held up his middle finger at the conclusion of the song as negative quotes cascaded down a screen set behind him.

"Diamonds from Sierra Leone" brought the place down and capped off a great event. Kanye West did what few can do. He blended hip-hop music with elements of rock and roll, R&B, reggae, blues and classical. This show was incredible and those in attendance testified to that.

Johanna Perez, a Smith College student and San Francisco native, said, "I really liked it."

Steve Morris, from Somerville, agreed. "It was crazy. He's a perfectionist. The sets were elaborate."

COURTESY DEBBIE BOWLES-LB

Instead of looking for problems before dating, look for positives

Lovers Only
Hannah Drake

Last week, I was eating lunch in the Blue Wall when I ran into Wilder, one of my ex's fraternity brothers. He said he saw my last column, nothing else. I asked him what he thought of it. He said it was okay, and then talked to me for half an hour about how he thought I was advocating for people to bail as soon as relationships hit rocky ground, and to play mind games in order to get what you want.

To clarify for others who thought the same, this was not the case at all. Read the articles closely, because I only get 700-800 words, so I make it all count. If a person, guy or girl, repeatedly disrespects your wishes and/or needs in a relationship, and you warn them on several occasions that you're not happy, then you should break up with them to show that you're serious. But only if you really do want to break up; don't break up in order to get them to pay attention. You might want to consider, however, that if a person doesn't pay attention to you until you break up with them, it probably isn't a great relationship to begin with.

During Wilder's critique of my column, we discussed the mentality of what he considered to be the typical guy, which I reminded him were, in fact, fraternity guys. However, his viewpoint transcends Greek life. Many guys could find happiness and contentment in their relationships a lot faster if they would heed his wisdom.

Here's his argument: "How can one justify the pursuit of perfection, when one itself is not perfect?"

For some reason, maybe because of the multiple images that men are subjected to every day by the media, men commonly end up with a picture in their minds of their ideal woman. Some hold so strongly to this image that when an otherwise perfectly good girl comes along, they ruminate on her flaws and decide she's not good enough. Wilder points out the irony of this thought pattern in his quote. How can an imperfect guy decide not to date a girl he otherwise likes besides a few minor flaws? It goes both ways. The girl he is deciding to kick to the curb has also noticed the guy's flaws, but because she likes him more than she doesn't, she's in.

Another reason this thought process comes into play during college is because there are many girls for a guy to choose from. A guy will think, "Well she's really cool, but she put out too fast, so she's not really girlfriend material," or, "She's cool, but she has this annoying laugh, so no." Listen up, boys: chances are you're tossing aside girls that could make you really happy if you stopped putting them up against your ideal. Guess what? If you did ever meet your ideal, chances are she wouldn't want you because you're probably not perfect, either.

I'm not saying guys are the only ones to do this. Girls do it too, except instead of putting a guy up against our ideal, we tend to put guys up against each other. "Well, he's really smart, and he calls when he says he will, but the other guy is more affectionate." This is another good way to prevent yourself from finding a good relationship; all people have flaws, and you won't be happy with one person if you try to compare him to another guy or your last boyfriend.

So what do you do when you're involved with more than one person and are trying to make a choice? If you're going to play nice, then all involved persons should know that they are, in fact, competing. Secondly, I don't advise serious physical involvement unless you're monogamous. Thirdly, wait it out. You'll know before long who you like more. Yes, there's a chance that you'll lose someone along the way, but if they're not willing to wait for you then they don't like you that much anyway. Going back to caveman days, primarily the guys were the hunters. They were happy when the made the kill. Today, guys are happy when they win the game, or, when their favorite team wins the game. Likewise, guys are happy when they get the girl they want. They are not afraid of competition, so if a guy decides to drop out of the running when he's up against other guys, then he's probably not that into you.

The simplest way to find what you want is to stop looking for what you want, and instead find the positive in what's right in front of you, and figure out if that could be what you need. As Sheryl Crow says in her happy-go-lucky song "Soak Up the Sun," "It's not having what you want, It's wanting what you've got."

Need Advice? Have Comments? E-Mail Hannah at

Loversonly@gmail.com

Thurman tries comedy in two new roles

By JOE NEUMAIER
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

NEW YORK — Uma Thurman has lived a lot since she last graced a romantic comedy: the 35-year-old beauty has had two children, been in some hits and misses at the multiplex, starred in the two-fisted comeback "Kill Bill" and seen her marriage to actor Ethan Hawke crumble.

But in two new films, the New York-based actress is embracing both the sexy and silly sides of love.

Thurman — whose last date movie was 1996's "The Truth About Cats & Dogs" — stars in "Prime," which opened Friday. The comedy-drama from writer-director Ben Younger is about a recently divorced woman in her mid-30s who takes up with a guy 13 years her junior (Bryan Greenberg). And, unknown to both of them, his mother (Meryl Streep) is her shrink.

In December, she gets back in touch with her va-va-voomness in the movie version of Broadway's "The Producers," as uber-vixen secretary Ulla, who drives Max Bialystock and Leo Bloom (Nathan Lane and Matthew Broderick) to fits of distraction.

"Doing a romance now is a whole different thing," says Thurman as she curls up on a couch — or rather, curls up as much as a woman who's 6 feet tall can. "And I think having a long absence from an aspect of your work and then returning to it in a new way can be powerful."

"I felt very emotionally full and sensitive to the meaning of the subject matter here."

The subject matter of "Prime" is more about making a relationship work than the gooey falling-in-love stuff most romantic comedies traffic in. And that, certainly, is familiar to Thurman: two years ago, her marriage to Hawke — whom she met making 1997's sci-fi drama "Gattaca" — dissolved after the actor was linked to a woman he met on the set of a film. The couple reportedly worked at making things right, but ultimately split up (both remain very involved in the raising of their children, ages 7 and 3).

Thurman, who was previously married to actor Gary Oldman from 1990-92 and is now dating hotelier Andre Balazs, thinks that in real life, she may not be the easiest person to get involved with.

"First of all, I'm a single mother with two children — I'm not easy lifting!" she says. "That's not a small thing, or a shallow thing — it's a lot. It's not gonna be fun for most people."

"I did feel like she was working things through cinematically, though we never talked about that specifically," says Younger. "But no matter where it comes from, this performance is extremely nuanced and subtle."

Thurman was born and raised in Massachusetts by her father, a Buddhist scholar, and her mother, a psychotherapist. Pursuing acting, she first gained attention with a stunningly erotic turn in 1988's "Dangerous Liaisons."

That led to more literary sexiness in 1990's "Henry & June" — the film that pioneered the NC-17 rating — but Thurman, just barely 20 at the time, was smart enough to see a pattern emerging.

"Dangerous Liaisons" and "Henry & June," she says now, "were the classiest way you could do it, and it still wasn't OK. I got into acting so young, and those movies have very adult themes ... doing those highbrow movies still resulted in other teenagers going, 'Wow, you're naked, woo!' And that freaked me out. I was 18, 19 years old. I thought, 'These are classy,' and yet there was still a reaction that I wasn't anticipating."

In 1994, director Quentin Tarantino made her a pop-culture icon with her role in "Pulp Fiction." He later gave her another cinematic valentine with the two-part "Kill Bill" saga.

Yet the attention given to "Kill Bill" and Thurman's character, the Bride — recently voted the top action movie heroine by an online poll — "doesn't even feel like it's associated with me," she says. "It was something so inherently bold, I don't feel connected to it."

Not so with Ulla in "The Producers," a part that has helped Thurman reconcile with her inner sexpot.

"Ulla — to me, she's the ideal," she says. "Even in her cliche sexuality, there's no negative feelings about sex in that character. Ulla is about sex being natural. She has a kind of divine wisdom."

"Uma has a real sense of fearlessness," says "Producers" director Susan Stroman. "She was never afraid of flipping off a desk, or sliding across a sofa, or being thrown in the air. There was no fear in her eyes, just a twinkle."

Ulla's the embodiment of self-acceptance," says Thurman, "so I could take any edge off of it, and just let it ride!"

New Run album fails

RUN from page 6

right as he says, "Always helping, never selfish, that was my man Jay/We ain't lose 'em or choose 'em he was God's idea/ And since home is where the heart is/Homie he's still here," but the pronounced "woof" in the middle of the guitars destroys the nostalgia of the sample and delivers horrifying memories of "Who Let the Dogs Out." In addition, the Reverend is from Queens, not Alabama, making his choice of the southern rock anthem completely mystifying.

This is just one of several moments on "Distortion" where Run seems stuck in limbo. Part '80s old school and part modern hip-hop, the Reverend's new sound comes off as an awkward mix of the two genres.

A major issue with the album is that the sampled classic rock songs don't sound right when combined with new school hip-hop beats. When Run DMC was at its peak, the beats behind the group were much simpler. This allowed for a smoother incorporation of rock elements. Here, layer after layer of synth, snare and guitar behind already heavy rock samples are just too much.

Run's flow, however, remains as excellent as ever. Always energetic, the Reverend's voice is powerful and nimble throughout the CD, finishing each verse with an emphatic punch.

Ultimately, this album has too much background noise and too little lyrical content to be worthy of a trip to the record store. While no one can take anything away from Reverend Run as one of the most influential artists in rap history, perhaps he should focus on his other commercial opportunities and let his Run DMC-era music speak for itself. After influencing likely every rapper since the late '80s, the Reverend doesn't have anything left to prove to us — this record only shows how different hip-hop used to be and what hip-hop is today.

There are worse things you can do with 25 minutes than listen to Reverend Run's "Distortion," and if you happen to fall into a copy of the record, it's worth a listen, but don't bother going to the record store to buy your own copy — you will spend more time in transit than you will actually listening to the music.

Reverend Run has no new rhymes to bust on 'Distortion'

By ERIC MASSBACH
BADGER HERALD (U. WISCONSIN)

MADISON, Wis. — Reverend Run, a.k.a. Joseph Simmons, has had a busy past couple of years. One-third of possibly the most influential rap group ever, Run DMC, Rev Run has a lot going on, both commercially and personally. He has "Run's House," a new MTV reality sitcom, and also spends much of his time preaching at his church in New York City. In addition, he has been coping with the still unsolved murder of his friend and Run DMC colleague, Jam Master Jay. Therefore, it comes as quite a surprise (although the timing from a marketing standpoint couldn't be better) that the Rev has found time to put out a new album.

"Distortion," released on brother Russell Simmons' new record label, is a tired update of Run DMC's music aimed at a new generation. Despite a title which aptly describes the music on the album — an often confusing mixture of old school hip-hop vocals and modern gangster rap beats with heavy classic rock sampling — it does pack a little bit of a punch for being only 26 minutes in length.

The Rev seems to be searching for an identity that will make him relevant to another generation of music listeners, but he misses his target. Refusing to rest on his laurels as a rap god, Run shouldn't have bothered with this album, especially considering how much he has going on in other aspects of his life. For all his fame and previous success, Reverend Run's album is so short in length that it isn't remotely worth paying the full price to pick it up in stores.

Much of what made Run DMC so influential was the group's crossover potential. They were able to reach a mainstream audience through their heavy use of rock 'n roll, most notably on the song "Walk this Way" with Aerosmith. The same formula applies here, as the relatively unknown producer Whitebey throws in samples of Blondie, Joan Jett and Lynyrd Skynyrd along with classic old-school beats, while throwing the bass into overdrive.

Over all of the background noise, Run lays down fierce, although self-serving rhymes. He manages to boast of his place as the father (or at this point, grandfather) of rap, with the tracks "I Used to Think I Was Run," and "High and Mighty Joe," and boasts of his preaching skills on "The Way."

Things get slightly sappy (although you can't help but feel his pain) as an awkward sample of Lynyrd Skynyrd's "Sweet Home Alabama" is incorporated as a backdrop for Run expressing his feelings about the death of his friend Jam Master Jay. The words are

See RUN on page 7

The legendary Reverend Run's latest album, "Distortion," cannot detract from his status as the father of hip-hop, but shows how different the genre has become from what it was when Run was putting out his best work.

Results you can feel... without the side effects!

Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Participating provider for HMO's student insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, car insurance & most others.

www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com

Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street • Amherst 549-1500

NEED HELP FINDING A MAJOR?

Come to the MAJORS FAIR!

Wednesday, November 2, 2005
6:00 - 8:00 p.m.

Student Union Ballroom

Don't miss this unique opportunity to explore the impressive range of majors & resources available at UMASS: representatives from more than 90 departments & programs in one location.

Sponsored by Commonwealth College, Pre-Major Advising Services, & Career Services.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE
a grade dispute?
teacher, roomate or job concerns?
billing problems?
harassment?
...or any other University related problem?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course!)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
823 Campus Center
Office hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
telephone: 413-545-0867
fax: 413-545-9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Newman Center Café
472 North Pleasant St. / Next to SOM Building
Mon-Thurs 7 am- 8 pm Fri 7 am-5 pm Sat & Sun 8 am-2 pm
Phone 549-0401 Free Wireless Internet

APPETIZERS & SIDES
Onion Rings $3.25
Cheese Sticks $4.75
Nachos $3.75
Loaded Fries $4.25
Fries $1.25
Cole Slaw $1.25
Cottage Cheese $1.25
Chips $1.00
Mashed Potatoes $1.50
Mixed Vegetables $1.50
Broccoli $1.50
Rice Pilaf $1.50

BREAKFAST served all day
2 Eggs & Toast $2.00
2 Eggs, Toast, Meat $2.75
2 Eggs, Toast, Meat & Homefries $3.25
3 Pancakes $2.75
3 French Toast $2.75

OMELETTES w/ toast & homefries
Ham & Cheese $4.25
Vegetable $4.25
Western $4.25
Cheese $3.75

BREAKFAST SANDWICHES
Egg & Cheese $2.25
Egg, Cheese, Meat on a Bagel add $2.75 $0.75

BREAKFAST SIDES
Bagel $1.25
w/ cream cheese $1.75

GRINDERS/WRAPS/PITAS w/ chips
Ham & Cheese $5.25
Turkey $5.75
Roast Beef $5.75
Tuna Salad $5.75
Chicken Salad $5.25
Veggie $4.75
Chicken Parm $6.50
Grilled Chicken $6.25
Fried Chicken $6.25
Buffalo Chicken $6.50
Pastrami $6.25
Cheeseburg $6.25
Meatball $5.75
Steak & Cheese $6.50
Super Stk 'n' Cheese $6.75
Roast Beef $5.25
Italian Cold Cut $5.75

MEDITERRANEAN PITAS
$5.25

SOUP
Cup $2.00
Bowl $2.75

BASKETS w/ fries
Chicken Fingers $6.75
Clam Strips $6.75
Shrimp $7.25
Cod $6.75

BONELESS WINGS
3 Wings $2.75
6 Wings $5.75
10 Wings $9.50

PIZZA by the slice
Cheese $2.00
Pepperoni $2.25
Deluxe $2.75

DESSERTS
Ice Cream & Other Desserts

DRINKS
Rao's Coffee

Delivery:
413.549.0077
Tel: 413.256.8923
413.256.8924
Fax: 413.253.1173

103 N. Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA

Panda East
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine

Featuring:
- Vegetarian options
- Lunch Specials
- Sushi Bar
- "Light and Healthy" entrees

~ We Bring China Town to you ~
Semester Special

Bring in this ad and receive 10% off your total

*Cannot be combined with any offers, coupons or OCMP.

visit us at: www.pandaeastamherst.com

New additions to line-up show 'Adult Swim's' decline

By Robert Hanson
The Good Five Cent Cigar (U. Rhode Island)

KINGSTON, R.I. — Cartoons were something we were supposed to get over once we became teenagers. As cool as "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" was, we had to grow up and begin to appreciate "adult" programs, such as "Frasier." Nobody ever counted on people beginning to tailor cartoons toward adults.

First there was "The Simpsons." Then even more adult programs such as "South Park" and "Family Guy" came on the scene. Finally, an entire night of cartoons were collected that were so adult that they could only be described by using the word "adult" in the title — "Adult Swim," on Cartoon Network.

"Adult Swim" was originally a collection of a few cartoons that were basically exploiting Cartoon Network's access to every Hanna-Barbera cartoon ever made. The "Adult Swim" cartoons included "Space Ghost Coast to Coast" and "Sealab 2021," both of which were old, failed cartoons that were simply re-edited and re-dubbed to make them funny. They later added "Family Guy" and "Futurama," both of which were normal adult cartoons that were in syndication after being cancelled.

However, "Adult Swim" has recently been taken over by original content that was created specifically for the programming block. The first was "Aqua Teen Hunger Force," which is a 15-minute-long show that features a flying box of french fries, a walking milkshake and a ball of meat, all of which talk. The show is about nothing, is cheaply animated and there is absolutely no continuity between episodes. The show is also hilarious and has been part of the reason "Adult Swim" has been ranked at or near No. 1 for adults 18 to 34 for close to a year.

The show seems to have seized on the realization that there is no need to have a plot or be well-produced to be funny, but instead be incredibly absurd. While "Seinfeld" was famous for being a show about nothing, it did have continuity between episodes (e.g. when George was getting married, etc.) and was clean and flashy. "Aqua Teen Hunger Force" has none of that.

"Aqua Teen" may have been inspired by the animated short "Rejected" (2000), which is a 9-minute-long collection of poorly drawn cartoons that are billed as an animator's commissioned works that become increasingly absurd and violent. You may have heard quotes such as, "My spoon is too big," or, "I'm feeling fat and sassy," from the short and not recognized where they were from. "Rejected" was nominated for an Academy Award and is now available on DVD (or could be downloaded, if you can find it illegally, not that I'm advocating that).

"Rejected" and "Aqua Teen Hunger Force" both use the same formula of absurdity, cheap animation and violence to make an incredibly hilarious product. Unfortunately, "Adult Swim" has decided to feature a number of other original shows that try to seize on the same formula, but do so inconsistently or fail to do it at all.

These shows include "Squidbillies," "12 oz. Mouse" and "Tom Goes to the Mayor." Again, the shows are completely random and inane, badly animated and oftentimes violent. Unlike "Aqua Teen" and "Rejected" before them, they aren't nearly as funny. Perhaps it's hubris on the part of the "Adult Swim" management or show creators that they can make silly and inane shows and people will like it. Perhaps they don't understand what made "Aqua Teen Hunger Force" funny, and just know they don't get it. Either way, "Adult Swim" is declining.

This is not to say that it's not worth watching anymore. The Monday through Wednesday lineup is still excellent — "Futurama," "Family Guy," two episodes of "Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law" and then anime that people assure me is good (but it's not my thing). Also, the original shows do have their moments (for example, when in "12 oz. Mouse" the main character says "I need a drink, so I can drive"). It's just hard to enjoy a program where things are so random it gets hard to follow (for example, the character that is just an eye in the aforementioned "12 oz. Mouse").

All good things must come to an end, and this may be "Adult Swim's" time. I hope it is just a hiccup, however, because I don't know what my weeknights would be like without "Aqua Teen."

The newest cartoons on Cartoon Network's "Adult Swim" attempt to capture the absurdity and humor of shows such as "Aqua Teen Hunger Force," but fail.

Weapons laws in Massachusetts and what they mean to students

Ask the Attorney
Michele Leaf

Q: My roommate and I were written up by our resident assistant for weapons possession in violation of the code of student conduct. I had a plastic gun and my roommate had a wooden facsimile sword with blunt edges which he covered in duct tape to make it look like metal. How can the university take disciplinary action for this?

A: The code of conduct prohibits the "possession or use of fireworks, firearms or other hazardous or dangerous weapons, including but not limited to, facsimiles of weapons that might be construed to be capable of or are capable of firing projectiles of any kind." Under this definition, any toy gun which appears capable of firing a projectile is prohibited, even though legal under Massachusetts law. Since the wooden sword is neither a weapon nor capable of firing a projectile, it should have been permitted. As for your toy gun, if it looks real or is capable of firing a bb or other projectile, it is banned. Even if the gun cannot be fired, it could be mistaken for a weapon, inciting fear of other students. You will have the opportunity to contest the write-up at a judicial conference with your resident director and then will have the right to a hearing before a board or an appeal to the Dean of Students Office.

Q: It seems like there has been an increase in violent behavior on campus lately and I would like to carry a knife or gun to protect myself. Am I allowed to do this?

A: There are a wide range of products sold for personal protection, including knives, mace and handguns. The possession and use of weapons for personal safety poses risks not only for the person against whom the weapon is used, but also for the owner of the weapon and innocent bystanders. This is one of the reasons why Massachusetts has very strict licensing procedures as well as restrictions on which types of weapons are allowed in the state.

Generally speaking, the more damage that can be done, the more work the owner must do to legally own and carry the item. Guns are considered lethal weapons and are stringently regulated. Massachusetts requires a license to carry lethal weapons and the owner must be licensed, after undergoing an investigation by the local police chief.

The licensing procedure is strict, requiring the applicant to demonstrate good character and lack of criminal history, to the satisfaction of the police chief. Not only must the owners of the weapons meet certain standards, but the weapons themselves must be on the approved Massachusetts weapons roster, as well as meet strict Attorney General Regulations. Of course, guns are prohibited from campus even if legal in the state and the owner is properly licensed.

With respect to knives, you are permitted to carry a pocket or utility knife without any special permit. Butterfly knives and other spring loaded knives are not permitted to be sold in Massachusetts, nor are certain larger fixed bladed knives. If you purchase a knife from a store in another state or on the Internet, there will be no guarantee that it meets Massachusetts standards.

Another common protection device is mace or pepper spray. These products can be very effective and can easily be carried in a pocket or purse. Although commonly available in many other states, Massachusetts requires a license to carry and own Class D, purchase or carry the spray device. This license can be obtained from the local police after an application process which will include providing fingerprints. It is a much less stringent process than applying for a gun permit.

It goes without saying that weapons must be treated with respect and used judiciously. Any weapons should be properly stored and locked and kept out of reach of children. In addition, even if used in a legally permissible manner, there are risks. In the case of firearms, every use constitutes deadly force, which might not be justified. Even showing a firearm could result in serious assault charges. With regard to a knife, there is danger of causing serious injury, even if this is not intended. Since pepper spray or mace is not lethal, they are much safer to use if you are in danger, and less likely to cause unintended injury.

TO CHANGE THE WORLD,
YOU NEED A NEW PERSPECTIVE.

New ideas and new perspectives are what make The New School new. They also make our Master's degree in International Affairs unique. The program combines interdisciplinary study with practical problem-solving skills. More than 200 students from 55 countries work directly with international practitioners and scholars. The focus is on global economics, poverty, international institutions, NGOs, organizations, and culture – with a special emphasis on the problems facing developing countries.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS
THE NEW SCHOOL

INFORMATION SESSIONS: November 9 and December 1 at 6pm
66 West 12th Street, NYC

To RSVP or for more information:
nsadmissions@newschool.edu
212.229.5630

www.gpia.newschool.edu

3 Inches revisit old-school style

By Michael Deeds
Knight Ridder

As every American knows, Canadians are funny.

Just don't let Vancouver-based heavy metal group 3 Inches of Blood hear you laugh.

Not when vocalist Cam Pipes adjusts his studded leather forearm gauntlet and shrieks "Enemies of metal/Your death is our reward!" in a eunuch falsetto that could slay a poodle at 50 yards.

Not when second vocalist Jamie Hooper urges the audience to put on its eye patches, declaring, "This song's about pirates!" Not even when the straight-faced sextet delivers skull-stomping songs such as "Destroy the Orcs" and "Swordmaster," or lyrics about sea battles and cyborg attacks.

Nope, you must headbang in utter seriousness. Because the members of 3 Inches of Blood are reverent about their craft, performing heavy metal the only way they know how: old-school style.

"We got dogged in the early days after our first record came out," Pipes, 28, explains. "People thought it was a joke because we don't necessarily dress like hardcore metal dudes. There's one longhair amongst the lot of us.

"And given our age, they think, 'These guys look so young, there's no way they could truly be classic metal fans, so they must just be rehashing old (stuff) and trying to make fun of it.'"

Sacrilege. Pipes insists that he and his bandmates are anything BUT mocking metal. "It IS fun," he says. "But we'd never be trying to poke fun at it in any way."

Formed in 2000, 3 Inches of Blood is unique not only because it replicates the metallic sound that ruled high-school keggers in 1985, but because it employs two singers simultaneously: Hooper, who growls hardcore-punk style; and the melodious Pipes (yes, that's his real name), whose voice resembles a hybrid of Iron Maiden's Bruce Dickinson and former Accept singer Udo Dirkschneider.

Pipes grew up listening to Iron Maiden. He wears a large Accept patch on the back of his jean jacket. "Proudly," he says.

Pipes sang along to Iron Maiden as a teenager. Finding that he could hit notes in the upper register, he joined a few bands — often singing in "growlier" vocal styles — before finally trying out as the cloud-scraping falsetto vocalist for 3 Inches of Blood.

After signing to Roadrunner Records, the group began criss-crossing the planet on a seemingly never-ending tour. "When it's all said and done, we'll have done 11 out of the past 13 months on the road," Pipes says cheerfully.

The grueling trek is paying off. 3 Inches of Blood's 2004 album, "Advance and Vanquish" has sold more than 20,000 copies in the United States and landed a minor genre hit with the well-played video "Deadly Sinners." But the commitment to touring also has caused personnel churn: Pipes and Hooper are the only two members remaining from the original lineup.

Nevertheless, Pipes says, fans shouldn't expect 3 Inches of Blood to change its style: "This sound that got us where we are," he says, "we're totally happy with it." And if a few metalheads snicker and mention Spinal Tap?

What the heck. Pipes will be too busy shrieking his way through a three-part tale about swashbucklers to notice anyway.

"If you think it's funny and cool, that's all right," he says. "But we're not necessarily trying to evoke laughter out of people with anything we do."

Campus Parking Notice

Due to the end of Daylight Savings Time, effective Monday, October 31, 2005 any vehicle with a valid UMass parking permit may park in any unrestricted, non-reserved space starting at 4:00 p.m. on weekdays instead of 5:00 p.m. Parking is still prohibited in tow zones, handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces, and reserved vehicle spaces. Also excluded are lots, which require 24-hour permits — 21, 22, 29, 44, 47, 49, 50, 54, 64P, 67, North Village Apartments and Lincoln Apartments. This parking policy will remain in effect through March 31, 2006. Parking meters will continue to be enforced for payment 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

Parking Services
University of Massachusetts Amherst

Bruschi's health an issue

BRUSCHI from page 12

They remember Reggie Lewis, who was an all-star with the Celtics when he collapsed in the first period of a 1993 playoff game with Charlotte.

A medical "Dream Team" assembled to treat Lewis diagnosed him with a potentially fatal heart problem, and the Celtics said he would probably never play basketball again. Just hours later, though, he transferred to a different hospital where a doctor said he had a minor neurological condition and a normal athlete's heart.

Two months later, Lewis collapsed and died while shooting baskets at Brandeis University. An autopsy revealed his heart was abnormal, enlarged and extensively scarred.

Bruschi's doctors issued a statement a few weeks ago saying he is "exceptionally healthy" and that there's nothing more to worry about than what a 32-year-old linebacker in the violent world of the NFL always has to worry about.

The doctors are all experts in their field and they certainly wouldn't knowingly do anything to put him at risk. Then again, there isn't a large pool of football players who try to come back after suffering a stroke to learn from.

Bruschi himself is convinced he's OK, and, for one night at least, he played like it.

"I gathered all the information and made sure I was safe playing football again," Bruschi said after the game. "And so, once I did that, there was a question of what are you going to do. And I felt like I wanted to get back to living my life and playing football."

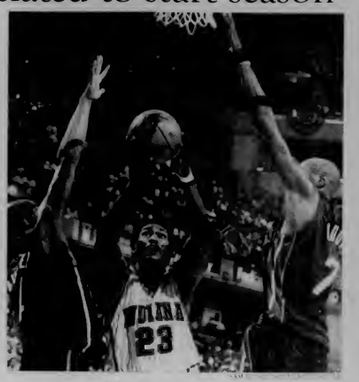
So Bruschi is back, doing what he loves and making a living the only way he knows how.

His fans, meanwhile, can only hold their breath and hope that his doctors are right.

Turkoglu slated to start season

TURKOGLU from page 12

Artest will be playing in his first regular-season game since the Motown Meltdown and, well . . . lucky Turkoglu.



"I bet he'll come out real aggressive," Turkoglu said, only half laughing.

"It's a good challenge for me. I've played against him before [when Turkoglu was with Sacramento and San Antonio], but it wasn't for as long a period as it will be now."

Turkoglu figures he's tougher, too.

He spent about a month with the Turkish Army this summer, fulfilling his country's mandatory military obligation. Although he spent time signing autographs, posing for pictures and being a celebrity, he learned hand-to-hand combat and to shoot guns.

"I had shot small ones before, but not the big ones," he said. "I shot – what do you call it? – a machine gun."

Pacers star Ron Artest will face Magic forward Hedo Turkoglu tonight. Turkoglu is in as a replacement for injured Grant Hill.

Pickett will be put to the test

PICKETT from page 12

ing's gone down considerably. It looked like a grapefruit last week. I couldn't even bend it."

But Smith still has a full leg wrap with a brace covering his knee. He was inactive for the Tampa Bay game.

Nolan said he would have no hesitation in having Pickett make the start.

"Cody can make some things happen," Nolan said. "He's been here in the system. If you bring a guy in from an outside system and he doesn't know it, he's got lot to learn.

"He's got to learn the language and the plays and the players. Cody sees all of our guys and knows all of our guys. The guys know him. They like him and they know he'll compete."

Nolan said he hopes to have wide receiver Arnaz Battle back this week. Battle has missed three of the past four games because of a knee sprain.

Manny and A-Rod win Silver Slugger

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The New York Yankees' Alex Rodriguez and Boston's Manny Ramirez both won their eighth Silver Slugger Awards on Monday, while eight of the nine members of the NL team were first-time winners.

Boston's Manny Ramirez won his eighth Silver Slugger award on Monday. Red Sox Jason Varitek and David Ortiz also won awards.

Los Angeles second baseman Jeff Kent, who won for the fourth time, was the only member of the NL team to have previously won the award.

He was joined in the NL by Chicago Cubs catcher Michael Barrett and first baseman Derrek Lee, Cincinnati shortstop Felipe Lopez, Houston third baseman Morgan Ensberg, Atlanta outfielder Andruw Jones, Florida outfielder Miguel Cabrera, Milwaukee outfielder Carlos Lee and St. Louis pitcher Jason Marquis.

Winners were picked by major league managers and coaches, who were not allowed to vote for their own players.

Selections for each position were based on a combination of offensive statistics, such as batting average, on-base percentage and slugging percentage, as well as impressions of a player's offensive value.

Rodriguez, who won seven Silver Sluggers at shortstop, won for the first time at third base and was joined on the list by Yankees outfielder Gary Sheffield, a four-time winner.

Ramirez was among three Boston players on the team, joined by catcher Jason Varitek, a first-time winner, and designated hitter David Ortiz, who made the list for the first time in 2004.

Texas first baseman Mark Teixeira repeated, and Rangers shortstop Alfonso Soriano made it for the second straight year and third time overall. Baltimore shortstop Miguel Tejada also repeated.

Ramirez won for the seventh straight season and was joined in the outfield by Sheffield and the Los Angeles Angels' Vladimir Guerrero, a five-time winner.

Guerrero, Derrek Lee, Ramirez, Rodriguez, Tejada and Varitek earned bonuses of $100,000 that were part of their contracts.

Barrett earned $50,000, Ensberg $25,000 and Carlos Lee $15,000.

The awards are given annually by Hillerich & Bradsby Co., the maker of Louisville Slugger bats.

— Associated Press

Notre Dame to make the jump to the Big East in 2011

By Tom Coyne
Associated Press

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Notre Dame will play three Big East opponents a season in football starting in the 2011 season.

The longtime football independent, a Big East member in most other sports, agreed to play three games a year against Big East teams after being approached by league officials, said John Heisler, a Notre Dame senior associate athletic director.

"I think it's part of us being a good partner," Heisler said Tuesday. "We've made it clear that we expect to continue to be an independent and don't look for us to be ready to jump into your football conference. We've been saying that since '95, when we first joined the league."

Heisler said the league approached Notre Dame during summer 2004 with the proposal.

Big East Commissioner Mike Tranghese said the conference made the request after Boston College, Miami and Virginia Tech withdrew from the Big East to join the Atlantic Coast Conference.

"I thought with the loss of certain members, it would be helpful if we had opportunities to play Notre Dame," Tranghese said. "It gives us some quality games, obviously we want to play good people, and it's going to give us some quality TV time."

Tranghese said Notre Dame and Big East have a unique relationship.

"I get pressured constantly by people who think I should be pressuring Notre Dame to join us in football. But I think I have a clear understanding of Notre Dame's unique situation in football. They want to be an independent, they've never varied from that," Tranghese said. "I think from time to time we've done things to assist Notre Dame and they've done things to assist us, and neither one of us intrudes on the other's territory."

Heisler said because Notre Dame will play three Big East teams a season, it will stop playing Boston College following the 2010 season. The Irish played the Eagles every season between 1992 and 2004. They are scheduled to play again 2007-2010.

Heisler said the move is part of its scheduling philosophy announced last year that calls for Notre Dame to begin playing seven home games a year instead of the current six and to play one neutral site game a season.

He denied reports that the decision to drop Boston College was related to the way the Eagles following wins in 1999 and 2002 when they tore up turf at Notre Dame Stadium. The Eagles also trashed the locker room at Notre Dame Stadium following the 2002 victory.

Heisler said the Irish simply don't have room for Boston College — the only other Catholic university playing Division I football — on their schedule after adding the three Big East opponents.

"They made a business decision to go to the ACC," Heisler said.

Heisler said no decision has been made yet on which Big East teams the Irish would play. Notre Dame plays Syracuse on Nov. 19. In recent years they have also faced West Virginia.

Theodore gets his redemption against New York Rangers

By Ira Podell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Jose Theodore had plenty of time to get ready for the rematch against the New York Rangers.

Montreal Canadiens goalie Jose Theodore picked up his play after being benched in Saturday's 5-2 loss to the New York Rangers.

After allowing three goals on 13 first-period shots Saturday night in a home loss to the Rangers, the Montreal Canadiens goalie was benched for the remainder of the 5-2 defeat.

Given a chance to atone two nights later, Theodore did just that – making 23 saves in a 4-1 road victory Monday.

"When we play well defensively in front of him, I guarantee he's going to make the saves he's supposed to," Montreal captain Saku Koivu said.

Theodore was matched save for save by Rangers counterpart Henrik Lundqvist and Monday's game was scoreless heading into the third period. His toughest period was again the first, and Theodore responded by making nine saves.

He stopped Jaromir Jagr twice on good scoring chances, and turned aside a hard shot from the slot by Blair Betts. Theodore's workload decreased the rest of the way as the Rangers found themselves constantly short-handed – including 8:44 of the second period and 15:31 overall.

"The last game, as a team, myself, I didn't think we played the way we should," Theodore said. "I was unhappy with the way I played, so today was a big challenge for us to play well and for me to bounce back."

Theodore's only blemish was Jagr's NHL-leading 12th goal of the season that came while New York was on a 5-on-3 power play during the third period.

"It wasn't a good game for us," Jagr said. "We were kind of flat, maybe we were overconfident. We scored a goal and we were excited and then they scored their second one. That's what killed us."

Steve Begin scored a short-handed goal 1:14 after Jagr tied it and Alex Kovalev and Niklas Sundstrom padded the lead for the Canadiens, who have earned 11 of a possible 12 points away from home (5-0-1).

Theodore helped Montreal win at Madison Square Garden for the sixth straight time – including both meetings this season.

The Canadiens (8-3-1) have eight October wins for the fifth time and first since 1991.

"It was one of our better games because we played the way we have to play," Theodore said. "We played well defensively and we waited for our chances. That's how we're going to have success and that's the way we have to play at home."

Koivu gave Montreal a 1-0 lead with a power-play goal 47 seconds into the third period before Jagr answered at 9:40.

While the Canadiens were still killing off Theodore's delay-of-game penalty, Sundstrom sent Begin and Andrei Markov off on a 2-on-1 break. Begin held the puck as Marek Malik tried to disrupt the play and then rifled a high shot that beat Lundqvist's glove to make it 2-1 with 9:06 left.

"We really tried, but it seemed that we didn't play the way we really wanted to play," Lundqvist said. "We tied the game and then we made some easy mistakes."

Kovalev made it 3-1 with 3:46 left by scoring his fourth of the season, assisted by Koivu. Sundstrom sealed it with an empty-netter with 36.4 seconds remaining.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
ATTENTION GRADUATING SENIORS
CONSIDERING LAW SCHOOL?
ATTEND BOSTON UNIVERSITY'S PARALEGAL OPEN HOUSE

Learn from legal experts about how paralegal experience can help you

- Enhance your credentials for law school
- Gain exposure to the legal work environment
- Confirm your decision to pursue a legal career

And, find out how to gain your paralegal certificate in just two weeks in Paralegal Boot Camp

Tuesday, December 6, 6–8 p.m.
School of Education
2 Sherborn Street, Boston

Wednesday, December 7, 6–8 p.m.
Bay Colony Corporate Center
1050 Winter Street, Suite 1400, Waltham

COURSES START IN EARLY JANUARY
REGISTER TODAY
Boston University

Wendy Hill • Nicole Miller • James Perse • G1 • Plenty
LA Made • Diane von Furstenberg
Seven for all Mankind • Susana Monaco

cathy o'toole
FOR WOMEN

151 Main Street • Downtown Northampton • 413.586.9398
www.cathyostolefashion.com

ASIAN ARTS & CULTURE PROGRAM

home land security
The Center for Cultural Exchange

Friday, November 4, Bowker Auditorium at 8pm

A multimedia theatrical performance about the impact of September 11 and the War on Terror on the lives of New England's minority communities. Teatro Martí employs interviews and story circles with members of Maine's immigrant and refugee communities to reveal connections among the participants and illuminate the complexity of their changed lives. The evening-length piece is performed by community-based participants from Portland's Afghan, Sudanese, Somali, Latino, Jewish and Native American communities.

General Admission $15, Students $7
For more information and related events go to www.fineartscenter.com

FINE ARTS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS

TICKETS 1-800-999-UMAS or 545-2511

Golden State Warriors stay young, agree to terms with Dunleavy

By Joe Stiglich
Knight Ridder

OAKLAND, Calif. – The Golden State Warriors renewed their commitment to their young core Monday, signing small forward Mike Dunleavy to a five-year contract extension just hours before their deadline for doing so expired.

Dunleavy is set to earn $4.5 million in the final season of his rookie contract, but he'll reportedly get $44 million over the length of his new extension. That's comparable to what other small forwards have signed for in recent months around the NBA.

He would have become a restricted free agent at season's end were he not locked up by 9 p.m. PST Monday.

Though weeks of negotiations went down to the wire, Dunleavy maintained a cool optimism that a deal would be reached. He signed the extension around 3:15 p.m. Monday.

"It's great to have a deal done," Dunleavy said on a conference call. "I know I'm going to be here a while. I don't have to worry anymore this season. Obviously I'm very excited about it."

It's further proof that the Warriors believe they have the right pieces to become a force in the Pacific Division.

Shortly before last season's opener, the organization signed shooting guard Jason Richardson and power forward Troy Murphy to lucrative long-term contracts. Both were in the same situation at Dunleavy entering their fourth NBA season.

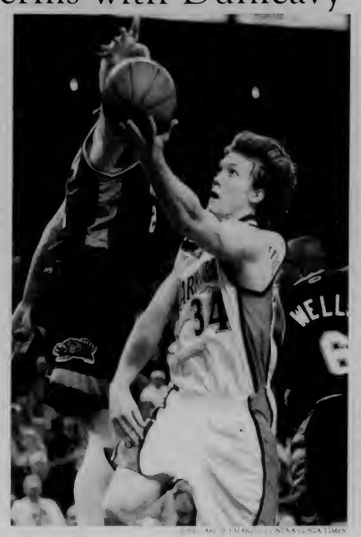
Over the last 16 months, team owner Chris Cohan has shelled out $313 million on contracts for Dunleavy, Murphy, Richardson, guard Derek Fisher, center Adonal Foyle and point guard Baron Davis, who was acquired via trade Feb. 24.

Fan optimism is reflected in the roughly 4,000 new season ticket orders placed before this season. Clearly, the team's hierarchy will have its own expectations.

"Now it's up to the players to go out and perform," Warriors executive vice president of basketball operations Chris Mullin said. "That's what it's all about. Given the ages of these guys, and the way they're put together, we feel good about it."

Had Dunleavy become a restricted free agent, he would have been free to sign an offer sheet with another team, and the Warriors would have had 15 days to match that offer.

That could have been a costly proposition if Dunleavy, 25, enjoys the breakout season some think he's primed for.



Though he's been inconsistent over his first three NBA seasons, he showed flashes of his potential in the final 34 games of last season, when he averaged 15.1 points and 5.7 rebounds and shot 48.4 percent from the field.

When he's on, Dunleavy, the third overall pick in the 2002 NBA draft, gives the Warriors an outside shooting threat with an array of offensive tools.

"I think it's coming along well," Dunleavy said of his development. "I had a rocky start early on. It was an organization that drafted me very high, and there were a lot of expectations. Through that I've persevered. I'm pleased with where I'm at and where the team's headed."

Asked if the team's current financial commitment would hinder its ability to go after other players down the road, Mullin gave a direct response.

"We're going to have the ability to do what we need to do to win games," he said. "As we all know, things change in the blink of an eye. As long as we feel this team is winning, we'll continue to do what we have to do to continue that. If not, there will be adjustments along the way."

Small forward Mike Dunleavy was signed to a five-year contract extension with the Golden State Warriors on Monday.

Pro athletes act freely

By Jemele Hill
Knight Ridder

If only there were a constitutional amendment that stated, "and every American, he or she, shall possess common sense."

Life would be so much simpler, but it would leave the sports world wondering what to do with tons of unnecessary paperwork.

The new mantra in professional sports is to throw a policy at it.

Can't keep your players off a boat with strippers? Give 'em a code of conduct. Can't keep them from getting beaten up at clubs? Threaten to practically stone 'em if they go near a certain entertainment district. Can't stop 'em from looking like they stepped out of a 50 Cent video? Make 'em wear a suit.

It's not a practical approach by any league or coach, and hopefully athletes have noticed how much their personal freedoms have come under attack recently.

Obviously, organizations must protect their investments. But teams and coaches seem to have forgotten they're dealing with adults, and none of these policies is going to stop 3 a.m. calls from the police.

I say this fully understanding athletes represent their organizations, which they generally shouldn't try to embarrass.

Most of us in our daily jobs can't get away with just anything but understand playing sports for a living is hardly a normal job.

Like it or not, the players in Minnesota were on their personal time and whatever happened on the boat was between consenting adults.

If anyone has a right to gripe, it's the owners of the yachts because they had no idea their ships were being turned into a boudoir.

Why the FBI is looking into the "lewd" activities on those yachts and not, say, terrorism is beyond me.

The NBA wants to try to use a dress code to change its reputation as being a haven for young punks.

The league stupidly believes this will help them with their image, but Armani can't tackle that problem.

Certainly when Ron Artest went charging into the stands last year during the Pistons game, everyone's first thought was whether Artest put on a double-breasted Hugo Boss or Rocawear afterward.

And while it's tragic safety Ken Hamlin was brutally beaten outside a Seattle nightclub, Seahawks Coach Mike Holmgren has no right to tell players what to do or where to spend their free time – whether that free time be spent on a boat with strippers or researching Thoreau in the public library.

Of course, athletes face a greater responsibility than the average person because of their fame and status.

But a litany of rules will do nothing but encourage rebellion.

Kellen Winslow Sr., who is in charge of events planning at Disney's Wide World of Sports complex, made sure his son, Kellen Jr., had everything he wanted or needed.

That, unfortunately, didn't stop the Cleveland tight end from playing around with a motorcycle he was too inexperienced to handle.

His motorcycle accident last May tore a ligament in his right knee and caused Winslow to miss this season. Luckily for Kellen Jr., he will make a full recovery and Browns decided not to recoup the $10 million in bonus money he'd already been paid.

The Browns, like most NFL teams, have a contract clause that prevents players from engaging in at-risk behavior off the field. But it just shows that ultimately no policy can legislate common sense.

Kellen Sr., was unwilling to share his personal feelings about his son's accident, but he did concede this: "You really don't separate yourself from the organization, but the organization can separate itself from you at any time."

Translation: Big Brother has got nothing on professional sports.

Trojans are back on top of BCS

By Ralph D. Russo
Associated Press

NEW YORK – Southern California and Texas flip flopped again, putting the Trojans back on top of the Bowl Championship Series standings.

USC jumped over the Longhorns on Monday, returning to first place after a one-week stay in second. It's the first time in the eight-year history of the BCS that the top two teams in the standings switched positions in consecutive weeks.

"I'm not sure how it happened last week and I'm not sure how it happened this week," Trojans coach Pete Carroll said. "We weren't cheering when the new BCS ranking came out this morning. I know that. The BCS ranking is really important when you finish the season, not now."

The margin between USC and Texas is still small – only .0038 – though up from last week when the difference between first and second in the standings was the slimmest it's ever been.

Third-place Virginia Tech gained on the top two this week, but the Trojans and Longhorns remain on course for a Rose Bowl showdown.

The switch didn't faze Texas.

"The sun's going to come up tomorrow. We'll be all right," Texas tackle Justin Blalock said.

Coach Mack Brown said, "I don't care. I want to be one or two."

The top two teams in the final BCS standings play in Pasadena, Calif., on Jan. 4 for the national title.

The first five teams in the latest BCS standings are unbeaten, with Alabama fourth and UCLA moving up a spot to fifth.

"If we let ourselves start worrying about this and that, that's the quickest way to get yourself beat," Alabama coach Mike Shula said.

It's the second straight season that the BCS top 10 has five unbeaten teams with five weeks to go in the regular season. Last season, Auburn became the first team from a conference with an automatic BCS bid to go undefeated in the regular season and not play in the national title game.

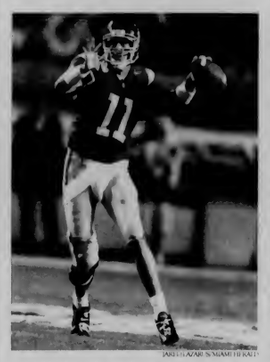
USC beat Oklahoma in the Orange Bowl and won the national championship. The Tigers finished 13-0 with a win in the Sugar Bowl and were ranked No. 2. Utah (12-0) also finished the season unbeaten.

"The [BCS has] got to hope there's not more than two undefeated teams at the end or they've screwed up again, very honestly," Brown said. "That's what they've got to hope."

USC has been No. 1 in The Associated Press, coaches' and Harris Interactive polls all season, but last week Texas inched ahead in the BCS standings because the computer rankings favored the Longhorns. It marked the first time in the past two seasons USC was not No. 1 in the BCS standings.

Both the coaches' and Harris polls make up a third of a team's BCS average. A compilation of six computer rankings makes up the final third, with best and worst grades thrown out for each team. A perfect BCS average is 1.000.

Texas is tops in the computer rankings again this week, but USC's 55-13 victory over Washington State helped boost the Trojans' computer score enough for them to reclaim first. The Longhorns rallied from 19 points down to beat Oklahoma State 47-28 Saturday.



"It's the game of football and key is to win games and we won the game. Teams are going to struggle with teams, that's just going to happen," Texas defensive tackle Rod Wright said. "It's kind of like you have to blow everybody out and that's not realistic."

Southern California's BCS average is .9767. The Trojans have won 30 straight game going into Saturday's home game against Stanford. Texas is at .9729 and plays at Baylor this week.

Virginia Tech is .0435 behind second-place. The Hokies get their best chance to change the minds of voters and up their computer grade Saturday at home when they face Miami, which is sixth in the BCS standings.

Notre Dame (5-2), which needs to finish the season with nine wins and a top-12 finish in the BCS standings to be eligible for the Sugar, Orange or Fiesta bowls, is 14th.

The Fighting Irish have moved up one spot each of the last two weeks.

Quarterback Matt Leinart and his USC football team regained their No. 1 ranking in the BSC standings Sunday.

The Empress Josephine

UPCOMING EVENTS

Conversation with Isabella Rossellini

Saturday, November 5
4:00pm
Stirn Auditorium, Amherst College
Discussing her role as Josephine in the film, Napoleon (A&E, 2002)

Art & Royal Identity

Film Series begins Thursday, October 20th!

MEAD ART MUSEUM AMHERST COLLEGE
ON VIEW THROUGH DECEMBER 18TH

Call 542-2335 for more information or visit us on the web www.amherst.edu/mead

RAIN

Three Clubs / DJs Under One Roof! Party Till 2 a.m!

HOT BODY CONTEST
Every Thursday Night
18+ College Night

- Weekly $100.00 for Top Male/$100.00 for Top Female
- GRAND PRIZE: $500.00 cash & loads of Prizes for Top Male and Top Female
- Cover Charge: 18+ with College ID $10.00 / 21+ $5.00

21+ COLLEGE KARAOKE BATTLE
Friday Nights @ TBA

Show flyer and receive free admission before 11pm

$100 weekly prize
GRAND PRIZE - $500
$1 Draft Beer
Sign up at 9pm

Now Hiring: Bartenders, Waitstaff, Promotions and Security Staff
10 Stearns Square • Springfield, MA 01103 • (413) 827-9000 • www.RainSpringfield.com

Watroba's Liquors
79 Sunderland Road North Amherst (liquor store 11:00 AM - 11:00 PM)

Just before the Harp!

Watroba's Market
Red Bull 4 - Pack $7.29 plus deposit

- Corona and Corona Light Loose Case Bottles $20.99 + dep
- Jim Beam Kentucky Whiskey $19.99 1.75 ml Btl
- SKYY Vodka $14.49 750 ml Btl
- Svedka Vodka $17.99 1.75 ml Btl
- Mirassou Assorted Wines $7.99 750 ml Btl
- Pabst Blue Ribbon 30 Pack $13.99 + dep
- Genny Light 30 Pack $12.99 + dep
- Vast array of HUGE Deli Sandwiches
- Coke 12 Pack Cans and Coke products 2 for $6.00 + dep

Jagermeister $20.99 750 ml Btl With FREE T-shirt or FREE shot glass

KEG SPECIALS

Bud & Bud Light	$63.99+
Michelob Lager & Ultra	$63.99+
"Natty" Light & Ice	$59.99+
Miller Lite	$59.99+
Pabst Blue Ribbon	$44.99+

Try our selection of European and Micro Brew Beers

FRANCO THE CLARINETTING NAVY BEAN By Rainy Stanford

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Kryzkowski

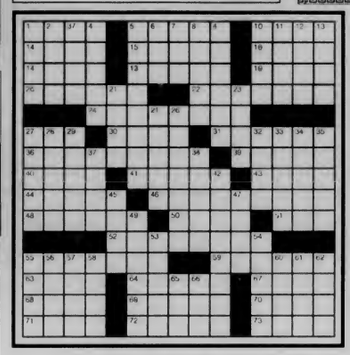
LABRAT By Richard Martelly

RANDOM CHATTER By Chris Sala

FUNCTIONAL DYSTOPIA By Zeid Rusan

Quote of the Day

"Wisdom is better than silver and gold, I was hopeless, now I'm on Hope road."
—Lauryn Hill



ACROSS
1 Snoozing
5 Terror
10 Shapes with an axe
14 High peaks
15 Fight site
16 Soot-covered
17 Party-giver
18 Establish
19 Reclined
20 Time out
22 Achieve
24 Spots with small splashes
27 Sound of a leak
30 "A Death in the Family" author
31 Impassive
36 Pain relievers
39 Proverb
40 Mild expletive
41 Sen Thurmond
43 Loser at
44 Writer Zola
46 Product display area
48 Most wan
50 Extinct bird
51 Help!
52 Urgent
55 Prime cut of beet
58 Came to terms
63 Tennis great
64 Attack
67 Summit
68 Nolo contendere for one
69 Ham it up
70 Prudish
71 Burn slightly
72 Links up chronologically
73 Continential cash

DOWN
1 Cowardly Lion portrayer
2 Cosmetic ingredient
3 End users watchdog grp
4 Photorebelial painter
5 Corridors
6 Exist
7 Court separator
8 Harden
9 Frolics
10 Monty or Huntz
11 Morales of "Bad Boys"
12 Kind or eid
13 "Auld Lang ___"
21 Junk on your PC
23 Cinema canine
25 Campers' abodes
26 Groups of four
27 Hypnotist's command
28 Greek letter
29 Animal in a mobile home?
32 Olfactory offense
33 Largest city in Nigeria
34 Icy abode
35 Considers
37 Like a couch potato
38 Recital pieces
42 Acts as a go-between
45 NHL star Phil, to fans
47 Tune
49 Clan groups
53 Opponent
54 Jelly choice
55 Digs a trench
56 Wight or Skye
57 Emu's cousin
58 Shakespearean king
60 Hosiery shade
61 Bahrain ruler
62 Sample tape
65 Family member
66 Off-used abbr

Find today's answers online

www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP
NEW!! Wireless Internet
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
NOVEMBER SPECIAL!
$1.50 PBR Bottles; Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 a pitcher
Tonight. • Cold Duck Complex
Thur. • D.J. Oliguist
Fri. • Irish Seisiun
Sat. • Amun Ra
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments

Submit your comic!
e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Only sticks and stones can break your bones.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your goal for the day is to not wake anyone up.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Closing your shades will help you sleep through your first class.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You will run out of black ink for your printer.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You have a bad habit of pressing buttons you shouldn't be touching.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
If you wear a hat today something bad will happen to it.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't take out the trash unless you know you have fresh garbage bags.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Your schedule for next semester is looking great.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Stop hanging out in places that make you catch a cold.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It's okay to wear tank tops in the winter.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If you happen to go to the zoo, don't feed the animals.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Stop picking on your younger brother and/or sister.

★ Submit your comic ★
e-mail
collegiancomcis@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Looking for GO, Baduke, Weigi Players. New players welcome. Call 339-225-0537. 253-9873

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments, Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Civic DX Good condition CD Many new parts. $1699 obo 413-212-9384

EMPLOYMENT

Work Study – Admin Asst Must have computer skills and know Access and Excel. 10 hours per week max. $8.19-9.48 hr. Application on line at www.lsse.org Email application to: bilzb@amherstma.org

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8.00 Hr. 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location – NO SALES! Night & wknd; shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

Staffing Now, Inc. Needs Seasonal Workers! We are in need of 2 data entry clerks who are available for temporary assignments. One position is located in S. Deerfield and the hours are M-F from 6AM-2PM. The other is in Holyoke and it is M-F from 2PM-7PM. Both positions are paying $9 and will be starting immediately. Perfect solution to earn some extra $$ before the holidays! Call 413-529-7100 for immediate consideration. Staffing Now, Inc. www.staffingnow.com

Mystery Shoppers get paid to shop! Up to $150 a day. Training provided Call 1-800-690-1273

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience nees. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

FURNITURE

Sealy Mattress Set KING $575.00 QUEEN $465.00 FULL $365.00 TWIN $195 Save 50% or more off store prices. For more details call 215-431-9584

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons for both males & females in Northampton www.westernmassboxing.com

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

ACT NOW – SPRING BREAKERS Book Early & Save! Free meals/parties by 11/7. Lowest prices. Be a rep & TRAVEL FREE! Get the ultimate hookups with STA TRAVEL 413-256-1261.

SPRING BREAK – Early Booking Specials – FREE Meals & Drinks - $50 Deposit – 800-234-7007 www.endlesssummer-tours.com

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Wish your friend a happy birthday in the classifieds! Cheap and easy: call 545-3500.

Collegian* Advertising: Reach over 14,000 readers daily! Advertising fit for your needs and budget! Call 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30am & 3:00pm to speak with an experienced ad representative.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Walking away from McGuirk

Jeff Howe

I have only known Massachusetts football through one perspective, high above the field, behind a dozen sheets of paper, a notebook and a laptop.

I never got to wear maroon and white to a game, never got to tailgate with my friends, never got to yell and scream when the Minutemen scored. I would sit in the press box, trying to put together a fluid story for whoever would read it, all the while letting the Minutemen write each individual chapter themselves.

I'm not complaining. I love every second of it.

But on Saturday, after UNH escaped from McGuirk Stadium with a 34-28 victory, I walked out of the press box for what could potentially be the last time.

It crossed my mind some at the beginning of the season, a little more throughout the last week and anytime my mind began to wander between plays on Saturday.

With three games remaining on the schedule, the 2005 book hasn't come close to reaching its final sentence, especially with the strong possibility of a tournament bid on the horizon.

Yes, there is still a small likelihood the Minutemen will host a game in the first round on Thanksgiving weekend, but after hearing about the raw deal they got in 2003 and watching the UMass men's lacrosse team get royally jobbed by the NCAA last spring, I'm no longer holding my breath.

It was also somewhat symbolic as my personal football career at McGuirk came to a close in a game against the Wildcats since I am a transfer from UNH, and the first game I witnessed as a collegiate undergrad was a 45-29 UNH victory over Hampton on Sept. 1, 2001.

And like I said before, I still have three-plus football games to cover, on top of a full winter in Cahoonaville and another spring tangling with the Garber Gorillas, but there is something special about that McGuirk press box. It's where I learned how to really cover a team, how to appreciate a sport beyond the sightlines of a fan and what it actually meant to be a sports writer.

Daily Collegian writers face a unique experience entering a UMass press box, as the only people in attendance who must quell their school pride to acquiesce to the objective professionalism required by members of print media.

While writers from the Boston Globe, Boston Herald, Republican and Daily Hampshire Gazette disperse to their respective homes at places unknown, we stay at least a stone's throw from campus, often within walking distance of the field, stadium or arena we cover these games in.

So it's no wonder places like McGuirk, the Mullins Center or Garber Field leave a lasting impression on us the way fans share a bond with the bleacher seats in the student section.

When I walked out of McGuirk on Saturday, I walked away not knowing if I would ever be back, taking in some of the things I have seen there during my two seasons following the team from an inside angle.

There was the redemption game against Colgate, the blocked extra point against Maine in overtime, the record-breaking three safeties against Albany and the two straight Mud Bowls with Northeastern and James Madison just a few weeks ago.

It is a stadium that houses a defense that could go down as one of the best in Division I-AA history, and it has seen Liam Coen start his rise to quarterbacking stardom with Tim Day turning into one of the great stories of the college football season.

So as I walked away, somewhat signifying things to come in my senior year, my head started to cloud up with all of these priceless memories, some of which will be around forever in writing and others that I can carry with me in other ways.

There was something special and unique with Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

In the hours after the game, I hadn't quite figured out what that exactly was, and I still may not a few years from now.

But right now, I think that's alright.

Jeff Howe is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at JeffHowe@DailyCollegian.com

Bruschi displays his toughness

By Tim Dahlberg
Associated Press

There are tough guys, and then there are tough guys.

No one doubts Tedy Bruschi is one tough guy. He's also a great story, something ESPN's fawning announcers never let you forget for a moment the other night even as he and the other 21 players on the field in Foxborough, Mass., tried to play a game.

At one point, Mike Patrick, Joe Theismann and Paul Maguire seemed so overwhelmed by the emotions of the whole thing that you expected them to share a group hug and maybe shed a tear or two.

But, hey, we're talking about a guy who just eight months ago could hardly see, much less walk. This is a guy who then underwent surgery after that to repair a hole in his heart that doctors believed triggered the stroke.

This is also a guy who seems almost embarrassed that people are making such a big deal out of the whole thing.

They did Sunday night because most had never seen anything like this. Bruschi had no business being on a football field this season, but here he was in the seventh game of the season flying around the field like he didn't have a care in the world.

Many of the 68,756 on hand weren't so sure. They cheered wildly every time Bruschi's name was announced. But they also held their breath every time he collided with an offensive lineman 100 pounds bigger.

In the stands, Rick Stimets wore a blue No. 54 Bruschi jersey that wasn't big enough to cover his conflicted feelings.

"It's bittersweet. It's great for the team, but I don't think he's making the right decision," Stimets said. "As much as I like to see him out there, I'd like to see him healthy."

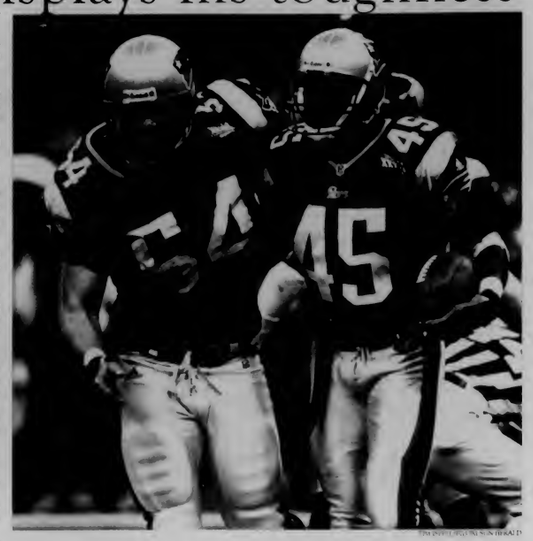
Bruschi, of course, insists he's healthy. He says every doctor he has seen has cleared him, confident that it was the heart problem that caused the stroke.

He's a football player, probably underpaid at $850,000 a year, but that's what he does. A guy's got to make a living and, besides, NFL careers are notoriously short anyhow.

"Sometimes you just got to pick yourself up off the ground and get back to living your life, and that is all I am trying to do," he said.

Unfortunately, doctors aren't always right. They tend to guess a lot about things like this and, even if the guesses are educated, there are no guarantees.

Joe Mesi would be back earning a living just like Bruschi if he and some of his doctors had their way. Thankfully, they haven't gotten it.



Mesi, you might remember, was on the verge of fighting for the heavyweight title a few years ago. But he had bleeding on the brain affter nearly being knocked silly in a fight with Vassiliy Jirov, and Nevada boxing authorities have refused to allow him back in the ring.

Like Bruschi, Mesi came armed with a doctor's note saying everything was OK. He got three neurosurgeons to testify he was no more at risk for further injury than someone who hadn't had a subdural hematoma.

Other doctors disagreed and Nevada stood firm. For once, the system actually worked in boxing.

New England sports fans know better than most that doctors aren't always right.

See BRUSCHI on page 9

Patriots linebacker Tedy Bruschi (left) returned to the field on Sunday after being cleared by doctors, despite suffering a mild stroke in February. Bruschi had seven total tackles during the team's 21-16 win over the Bills.

Vikings look to overcome the loss of Culpepper

By Dave Campbell
Associated Press

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. – During training camp, the Minnesota Vikings rewarded Daunte Culpepper for a career year with a raise worth almost $8 million in additional guarantees.

As the Vikings and their franchise quarterback were reminded, bonus money is really the only thing that's guaranteed in the NFL. Health sure isn't in this intense, violent game.

Vikings quarterback Daunte Culpepper will miss the remainder of the season with a knee injury.

Culpepper will miss the rest of the season with a devastating injury to his right knee, further demoralizing this struggling team already stuck in the middle of a big mess.

"Whether it's on the field, in the locker room, practice – he's a guy that's definitely been the leader, true leader, of this team," free safety Darren Sharper said Monday. "We'll have to have other guys step up and fill that void."

Culpepper, a three-time Pro Bowl pick whose effectiveness had fallen off dramatically this year due to several factors, tore his anterior cruciate, medial collateral and posterior cruciate ligaments in Sunday's 38-13 loss at Carolina.

"This is just another hurdle we have to overcome," coach Mike Tice said.

Once the swelling subsides, the 28-year-old Culpepper will have surgery and several months of arduous rehabilitation. An injury of this nature typically takes a year to recover, but at least right now the Vikings are optimistic about his status for 2006.

"Our expectations are he's going to be ready for the season," athletic trainer Chuck Barta said.

Culpepper was hurt on the final play of the first quarter, when Panthers cornerback Chris Gamble hit him low at the end of an 18-yard run for a first down.

"I was right behind him, trailing it, and I saw it all happen," center Melvin Fowler said. "It's sad and unfortunate. He's a great player, and he'll be missed for the time that he's out."

Veteran Brad Johnson, who played for the Vikings from 1992-98 and returned to his original team this year, will be the starter. Untested Shaun Hill moves up to second string.

Culpepper finishes with six touchdown passes and a league-high 12 interceptions and an ugly passer rating of 64.4. Last season, he threw for 4,717 yards, 39 TDs and only 11 interceptions with a rating of 110.9 – and set an NFL record for combined yardage passing and rushing.

The Vikings were widely considered one of the best teams in the NFC at the beginning of the year, but they've so far endured two miserable months. Still-unresolved allegations of sexual misconduct by several players on a boat party earlier this month darkened a season that was already deteriorating.

After watching offensive coordinator Scott Linehan leave, trading star receiver Randy Moss and losing injured Pro Bowl center Matt Birk for the season, a once-mighty offense has fallen hard. Culpepper was under constant pressure behind a leaky offensive line and bothered by preexisting soreness in the knee.

Then came the punctuation.

"Daunte pours his heart and soul into the game and into every play," Johnson said. "It's the first time I've really seen him go down hard. Your heart goes out to him. I hope he recovers as fast as he can."

Johnson is not nearly as nimble as Culpepper, but the 37-year-old has a Super Bowl ring from 2002 with Tampa Bay and the respect of his team.

"The most important thing is just be yourself," he said. "You can't fake it. The proof is putting up points. The proof is winning ballgames."

This is the third time in six seasons as Minnesota's starter that Culpepper will be sidelined. In 2001, he missed the final five games after surgery on a sprained left knee. In 2003, he sat out two games because of an injury to his lower back.

Tice has talked to Culpepper, who was unavailable for comment, a couple of times since the injury.

Magic to lean on Turkoglu

By Brian Schmitz
Knight Rudder

ORLANDO, Fla. – Hedo Turkoglu didn't serve in the Turkish Army in his homeland this summer to prepare for Ron Artest, but the training certainly didn't hurt.

"Yeah, I'm ready!" said Turkoglu, pounding his chest with his fist.

Turkoglu, a 6-foot-10 forward for the Orlando Magic, is one of those friendly, carefree athletes. "I have no worries," he said, often adding, "It's not the end of the world."

While Turkoglu might not have any worries, the coaching staff and Magic fans might be more than concerned about the spot in which Turk finds himself.

As if replacing small forward Grant Hill in the Magic's lineup wasn't enough, Turkoglu must match up against Artest in the season opener against the Indiana Pacers on Wednesday night.

The club said Hill had successful surgery to repair a sports hernia Monday in Philadelphia.

He will be out 3-6 weeks, meaning Turkoglu is being counted on to hold his own until Hill's return.

While Hill was preparing to launch another comeback from left-ankle problems, the Magic signed Turkoglu last summer as insurance.

Hill wound up playing 67 games, keeping Turkoglu in his role as sixth man for most of the 2004-05 season. Hill made the all-star team and averaged 19.7 points per game while Turkoglu was solid, averaging 14 points.

But with Hill facing a new medical issue, Turkoglu says he realizes critical eyes will be on him as he starts the season as a starter.

"I guess so," he said. "People saw what I did last year, and they're going to expect more than last year. They expect for me to step up. . . . I want to be strong until 'G' (Grant) comes back."

Magic Coach Brian Hill has had to tweak his offense, because Turkoglu offers a drastically different style than Grant Hill.

The Magic likely don't want to add more jump shots to their game plan, but spot-up shooting is the streaky Turkoglu's strength.

They lose Hill's trademark ability to drive to the basket which can equal easy points and free throws - and his mid-range game.

"Grant probably puts a little bit more pressure on the defense because of his ability to penetrate," Brian Hill said. "Hedo is more of a spot-up shooter. We're trying to get him to do those things [that Grant does] . . . to drive-and-kick and not hold the basketball for a long period of time, to make quick decisions.

"We have to do some things offensively to accommodate Hedo that maybe we wouldn't run when Grant is on the floor."

But where Turkoglu will be put to the test is on defense, which, admittedly, is not his strong suit.

Hill is a little better defender, but every small forward has trouble handling the 6-8 Artest, regarded as one of the league's best defenders.

"He's a beast," Brian Hill said.

Artest has muscled up to 265 pounds and is rumored to have a wild streak in him.

Of course, Artest was suspended for most of last season after igniting a brawl in Detroit that spilled into the stands and embarrassed the NBA.

It was just the latest act of bizarre behavior from Artest.

At least in the preseason, he has made good on his promise to reform.

See TURKOGLU on page 9

Pickett could get the call for 49ers

By Dennis Georgatos
Knight Rudder

SANTA CLARA, Calif. – Cody Pickett has already done a little bit of everything for the 49ers this season. The expectation now is he'll do a lot more of one thing, as in play quarterback.

With Ken Dorsey and Alex Smith both questionable because of injuries, Coach Mike Nolan said Monday that Pickett probably would start Sunday's game against the New York Giants.

A final decision is expected by Wednesday, when the team begins installing its game plan for Sunday.

If it does come down to Pickett, Nolan said it would take every available practice snap between now and Sunday to get the one-time fourth stringer ready for his first career start.

Pickett, a seventh-round draft pick in 2004, has barely worked at quarterback this season, spending his time on special teams and as a scout team wide receiver and safety. He said the last time he had a full week of practice as the starting quarterback was three years ago during his senior season at the University of Washington.

"I have been doing a lot of different things," said Pickett, 25. "If they do say I'll be the starter, I have a lot of work to do. I'll probably be in here watching film the whole week. Hopefully, I'd be able to go out there and be successful."

He did well enough Sunday when he played most of the fourth quarter in relief of an injured Dorsey, helping to nail down the 49ers' 15-10 win over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

"It was good that I got a chance to go out there and be a part of it," said Pickett. "My footwork was pretty sloppy. There are a lot of things I have to clean up."

He nevertheless completed the only pass he threw and picked up a first down with an 8-yard scramble during a drive that ended in Joe Nedney's fifth field goal of the game. It was Pickett's first game action since his NFL debut Dec. 26 against Buffalo, when he also came in for an injured Dorsey and completed 4 of 10 throws for 55 yards with two interceptions.

Depending on the status of Dorsey and Smith, Nolan said the 49ers might sign another quarterback. He wouldn't say who is under consideration. Among the available free agents are Kordell Stewart, who was with Nolan last season in Baltimore.

"We have a list," said Nolan. "I just came from a meeting and we were talking about it, so we will wait and see."

Dorsey's ankle injury is not as bad as first feared.

He's wearing a protective boot on his left foot and is dealing with pain and swelling in the ankle, but doctors found no signs of structural damage. Dorsey plans to test the ankle Wednesday.

"That's definitely a big practice day," he said. "I'll take some drops and see if I can make some throws. If I can do it, I can do it. If not, we'll figure it out."

Smith is likely to miss his second consecutive game with what he described as a partial tear in the ligament that holds the kneecap in place.

"It's a lot better," said Smith, who suffered the injury Oct. 23 at Washington. "The swe-

See PICKETT on page 9

New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Thursday, November 3, 2005 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXVI Issue 40

SGA gives funds for litigation service

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association of the University of Massachusetts voted in favor of allocating $37,000 towards hiring a lawyer for the purpose of student litigation services in last night's Senate meeting.

Growing concern about the quality of defense services available to UMass students has prompted the leadership of the Student Government Association and the Graduate Student Senate, together with the Student Legal Services Advisory Committee and staff, to propose the restoration of criminal defense powers to the Student Legal Services Office.

The UMass Student Legal Services Office (SLSO) had been allowed to represent students continually in the past few years, but they were stripped of their powers by Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life, Michael Gargano, after director of SLSO, Chuck DeMare, sued UMass on behalf of a student, ending in a lawsuit that produced a multi-million dollar settlement.

UMass students, who were already supported with legal advice by student legal services, will now be given the use of a qualified lawyer specially fit to meet their needs.

"The money is there, the need is there," said Elvis Mendez, chairmen of administrative affairs. "This is something that will be very beneficial to the UMass student body."

Many students are ineligible for access to public defenders because their parents' income is counted towards their wealth. This program would allow student legal services to fill in the proverbial gaps.

According to Shawn Robinson, chairman of the Way and Means committee, these lawyers will hold a level of dedication that cannot be commonly obtained in a court appointed lawyer.

"A court appointed lawyer isn't necessarily a competent lawyer. They're going to be bitter about the fact that they are spending time on your case and not making the normal hourly rate. Whereas the lawyers here are doing their job because they care about the students and the case and are more than happy to work for $40,000 a year."

Currently there are only four court appointed lawyers that serve the two court districts within Hampshire County.

"The lack of court appointed lawyers is a matter of extreme concern right now in this state," said Robinson. "And the ones who are court appointed share concern about the amount of money they're making and the lack of pay increases.

"As a public university we should be providing legal services to students here because otherwise those students may not be able to obtain those services," he said.

"It's really a matter of economic justice. If I become involved in a drunk driving case against someone else and his family has more money than mine, he or she is going to hire

See SGA on page 2

Naked protesters bare opinions against Bush

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

The air was brisk yesterday at the Amherst Town Common, but that did not stop 16 people from removing their clothes to protest the presidential administration and the war in Iraq.

The protest, termed the "Naked Anti-Bush Demonstration," was a grassroots effort by people in the Five College area to stand against the policies of President Bush's administration.

Samantha Goldman and Usher Shrair are students at Mt. Holyoke College and members of the World Can't Wait group, which strongly opposes the Bush administration. The two women were the main speakers at the event, which mostly focused on the United States occupation in Iraq and the Christian ideologies of the administration.

"People are outraged, especially the women are outraged, that their rights have been taken away from them by Christian fascists," Goldman said.

At one point, Shrair rallied up the crowd by chanting phrases such as "We want Bush out!" to the sound of cheers.

The rally began around 12:30 p.m. when approximately 100 protestors lined North Pleasant Street holding signs, waving to passing cars, and chanting catchy phrases such as "Move, Bush, get out the way!" in reference to a popular song by rapper Ludacris.

The protestors moved to the Common grass a short time later, where several people from various organizations spoke their thoughts on the current administration.

"Do we have to put a stop to another f---ing war?" exclaimed one Amherst resident when she took the microphone. "We can put a stop to this, but we have to take it to the streets."

Goldman pointed out to the crowd that several students from Amherst Regional High School blocked doors so you all couldn't come, but you're all here!" Goldman said with excitement.

The protest group included students from each of the schools in the local Five College network. Several students explained that the war, the environment, and the way the U.S. government affiliates itself with countries that conduct human rights violations are prime reasons for the protest.

"The Bush regime in particular is taking steps that we've never seen before," said Ana Gordon-Lobel, a first year student at Hampshire College. "He's rounding up and detaining Arabs, Muslims and South Asians and keeping them in detention camps."

"Your government is moving each day closer to a theocracy, where a narrow and hateful brand of Christian fundamentalism will rule. Your government suppresses the science that doesn't fit its religious, political and economic agenda, forcing present and future generations to pay a terrible price," Goldman said.

After an hour of speeches, poetry and music, it was time to get naked.

Goldman explained that getting nude was a "personal decision," and "not the focus" of the protest. Shrair hoped that at least 30 people would remove their clothes to spell out the words "No Bush," with their bodies. However, only 16 people chose to protest nude, and the phrase had to be changed to "No W."

"Make sure you separate the 'o' and 'w' with enough space so that it doesn't spell out 'now,'" Goldman told the protestors.

The air was increasingly chilly throughout the protest, and the temperature hovered around 50 degrees Fahrenheit when the protestors removed their clothes.

Apryl Sabadosa, a UMass student, said she got naked because "this war is B.S."

"There's too many unjust things happening and we need to put a stop to it. And it sounded like a good idea to get attention and bring the attention to us," Sabadosa said.

Even some of the ARHS students added to the naked statement.

"I felt like there was a lot of pressure on me. Protest the war and break free of social constraints," said Shyam Khanna, an ARHS student.

Sixteen people out of 70 protestors chose to get nude during an anti-Bush administration rally on the Amherst Town Common yesterday afternoon. The protestors spelled out the phrase "No W." with their bodies at the rally to protest the war in Iraq and several policies set forward by the President's administration.

Student victim speaks out against drunk driver

UMass student Ciara Tran, left, poses for a picture only hours before she would be hit by a drunk driver on Commonwealth Ave. near the Mullins Center on Sept. 24, 2004 as she walked with friends around 2:30 a.m. Tran was the designated driver that night.

By Jamie Mason
Collegian Staff

When University of Massachusetts student Ciara Tran woke up at Bay State Medical Center after being in and out of consciousness for four days, she asked a nurse why she was there. When she was told that a car had hit her, she laughed.

Heather Winchester, a UMass student, hit Tran on Sept. 24, 2004 at 2:30 a.m. while driving drunk on Commonwealth Ave. near the Mullins Center. Winchester, now 22, was recently sentenced to three months in jail at the finish of the fall 2005 semester for drunken driving.

Tran, now 20, had spent the night of Sept. 24, 2004 being the designated driver for her friends who she went with to Club Rain in Springfield.

"I parked my car in Lot 12. I usually parked in Lot 11 but I got too many tickets, so that night I decided to park where I was supposed to," Tran said.

Tran and her three friends were walking back to Southwest from Lot 12 on the side of the road where the sidewalk eventually ends when she was hit.

"They put stitches in my forehead and I was discharged in seven days," said Tran. "I was home for less than 24 hours and then was rushed to children's hospital because I had cerebral spinal fluid leaking from my nose. I was then told that I had to have brain surgery. I had multiple fractures and my brain was bruised, liquefied, and filled with air and fluid. They had to put six plates in my head to replace my forehead, which was smashed. I then had two more surgeries and plastic surgery on my forehead.

See TRAN on page 2

After harsh times, interns from Kosovo enjoy life at UMass

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Besim Kokollari, Elhamme Buzuku and Ardian Haxhaj have come a long way to get here.

After struggling to get through harsh times in Kosovo, these three University of Massachusetts library interns are enjoying the finer things of life here in western Massachusetts.

They shop at the shopping malls. They take in some of the local dining flavor with a smile. They've enjoyed a walk through New York City and will soon visit Washington, D.C. It's as good a feeling as ever, given the hardships they endured during war time.

The three landed here in the United States last August as part of a program funded by the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs of the United States Department of State. The program itself is conducted by the Institute for Training and Development and the Simmons College Graduate School of Library and Information Science, which trains Kosovars properly for when they return home. Upon arrival back in Kosovo, all three will return to work at the National and University Library of Kosovo, located in the capital city of Prishtina.

"We feel a lot of opportunity here," Kokollari, 28, said. "There is opportunity here to have a good life, good service, good places to sleep properly, which in Kosovo we did not have."

Buzuku, 30, enjoys the hospitality of the locals.

"People are nice, friendly, always willing to help out for anything," she said.

It goes without saying that all three enjoy the new atmosphere they're living in. They've been taking in many of the different cuisines around the Amherst-Northampton area, and have taken a liking to stores like Best Buy. It turns out they like many of the things some of us might take for granted – like Wal-Mart. While some are

See INTERNS on page 3

Majors Fair at UMass draws students planning a future

By Anna DeLantis
Collegian Correspondent

Wednesday night's Majors Fair at the University of Massachusetts Student Union Ballroom was a huge success.

The event has been in existence for several years and has grown over time. Over 100 departments and programs were represented at Wednesday's fair, and the turnout exceeded several hundred students.

In addition to the majors, other student programs were also present, including Air Force and Army ROTC, Residential Academic Programs, Study Abroad, Domestic Exchange, and the OASIS First Year Seminar.

Professors of OASIS, a freshman program run by Pre-Major Advising, required their students to attend the Majors Fair. Upon entering the room, these students were provided with a worksheet containing questions to ask for the representatives, as well as pertinent information for their own academic planning.

"I learned everything I need to do to get into my major. I'm already in the right classes, and I found out what I have to take next semester," said OASIS student Tom Thermen, an undeclared freshman planning to study Mechanical Engineering.

Although he was required to attend the event, Thermen said, "I probably would have come anyways, because I knew that it would be helpful."

The purpose of the event was to allow students the opportunity to "float around the ballroom and find information about majors and programs that interest them," said Peter Woodburn, a representative of Commonwealth College.

Tables were set up in the ballroom covered with displays, literature, and, in many cases, cookies and candy. Students, professors, and advisors were available to answer questions and distribute information.

See FAIR on page 3

ARTS & LIVING
THE FINAL CHAPTER
"Revenge of the Sith" hits DVD.
Page 5

EDITORIAL/OPINION
NBA DRESS CODE
One columnist examines the non-issue of race behind the new NBA dress code.
Page 5

WEATHER
TODAY Pt. Cloudy/Windy. H62°
TONIGHT Clear, L42°
TOMORROW Partly Cloudy, H70°

SPORTS
BACK IN ACTION
Minutemen head to Delaware, try to avoid first losing streak of season.
Page 10

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael Busack
Managing Editor Cameron J. Woods
Business Manager Hirak Shah
Production Manager Nicholas Belanger
Night Supervisor Sherd Wolnik
Advertising Manager Kerri D'Orsi
Advertising Production Lauren Egesian
Editorial Production Amanda Allen
Arts & Living Editor Matthew O'Rourke
Comic Editor Amanda Allen
Editorial Editor Allison Edles
News Editor Dan O'Brien
Photo Editor Kate Sachsenmaier
Sports Editor Jeff Howe
Circulation Manager Thomas Hecht
Distribution Manager Nick Gleason
Finance Manager Daniel Conti
Human Resource Phil Sineiller
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Caren Tortorici
Assistant Business Nathan Chomsky
Asst. Arts & Living Mackenzie Isler
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Jones
Assistant News Megan Dales
Assistant News Mari Belliveau
Assistant Photo Elizabeth Carson
Assistant Sports Eric Athas
Assistant Sports Dan Duggan
Assistant Editorial Kristen LaCasse

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian (USPS Publication Number 545 280) is published Monday through Friday during the academic year except during vacations and examination periods. Periodicals postage paid at Amherst, MA 01002. Postmaster: Send address changes to The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, 113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sherd Wolnik

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Jamie Lau

COPY EDITOR
Katie Huston

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Melody Natal

PRODUCTION STAFF
Kristen LaCasse, Chris Martin

UMass drunk driving victim shares experience

TRAN from page 1

"I then had to go to rehab for two weeks to learn how to walk again. I had broken bones in [my] head only because I was hit from behind, so my body was relaxed. I lost two main senses, smell and taste. They came back, but they are distorted now. I then went to outpatient rehab for two months for physical and speech therapy, where I had to do ridiculous tests to make sure that I could come back to school since I had brain damage," she said.

Tran also suffered from diabetes insipidus, a chronic metabolic disorder characterized by intense thirst and excessive urination, caused by a deficiency of the pituitary hormone vasopressin from the surgery that she had to undergo. She had to take three pills a day to regulate everything in her body. She had lost her pituitary hormone, which came back — luckily, she said.

"I am a bartender. I don't drink. I'm always sober. What are the chances that I get hit?" Tran said. "Emotionally it was not a walk in the park. It was hard knowing that someone had ran me over and left me there. What kind of person does that?" she said.

Tran had to withdraw from UMass three weeks into the fall 2004 semester due to her injuries.

"I feel fine, being back now, but last semester was hard. I had to adjust to being behind everyone. I didn't know who knew [about the accident] and I didn't want to be pointed out. The doctors told me to take three classes. I took six. I don't want to fall behind; it's hard to carry on with life. I work with disability services in case I feel overwhelmed. I use them to my advantage. They are only here to help," Tran said.

Tran did not see Winchester until her court date on Oct. 19. She was unsure of how she would react to seeing the woman that hit her.

"She wrote me a letter that I was not allowed to read until the day of court. It felt like a general apology and meant nothing to me. Seeing her in court, and how she carried herself, I was unable to maintain composure. She did not seem affected by my presence. She tried to make it sound like I jumped in front of her car, like I had been playing in traffic," Tran said.

Winchester was sentenced to three months in the Ludlow House of Corrections. Once released, she must perform 100 hours of community service in a head-trauma unit or talking with high school students about drinking and driving. She also had to pay a $500 fine and she is on probation for the next three years. In addition, she must also undergo substance abuse counseling, and pay for any of Tran's medical bills not covered by insurance.

Tran believes that she got off easy. "That's nothing," she said.

"The legal system took a long time, and I am glad that it is over," Tran said. "I feel like she made her bed and now she has to lie in it. If she stayed at the accident instead of kept driving, this wouldn't be happening. I'm not a cat. I am a human being. I don't care how drunk you are, you would notice a human body bouncing off of your windshield.

"I am not one to preach, and I know this school has a reputation for partying, but people don't realize how serious drinking and driving is. In a group of friends, everyone should take a turn at being the designated driver one night so that you know your friends will be safe. It's not hard to sacrifice one night of drinking so that you know people's lives will not be in jeopardy," she said.

In a brief interview with the Daily Collegian, Winchester said, "I would rather do anything than go to jail.

"I can't go back to the way life was before. It was a huge mistake and I wish it never happened. I'm still sorry every day [for] what happened."

"My outlook has changed. I have a greater appreciation for life," Tran said. "It takes something like this to put things in perspective. Life is too short to waste time and you never know what is going to happen."

Tran will be taking summer classes to catch up because she wants to graduate with her friends. She expects to graduate in 2008.

Ciara Tran, a UMass student, was hit on a stretch of Commonwealth Ave. near the Mullins Center on Sept. 24, 2004 by another UMass student, Heather Winchester, who was driving drunk at the time of the accident.

SGA allocates funds for student litigation service

SGA from page 1

a more competent lawyer and I'd find myself out of college and out of a future," said Robinson. "I don't want a student to have to go to jail for something they didn't do because they didn't have the means to obtain a competent lawyer."

The motion will now be passed on to Gargano who can decide whether or not the motion will go through.

Gargano denied passage of last year's proposal claiming that the motion was without the proper factual information.

"We've catered this year's proposal in the light of Gargano's concerns from last year. Gargano might not be happy with the fact that SLSO can represent students again, but he is going to have to come up with some other reasons if he's going to deny this years motion," said Speaker Sean Bliss, who sits on the SLSO board along with President Pavel Payano.

The Senate also passed an increase of $20,000 to the Finance Committee in order to better fund RSOs events this year. This is consistent with their mission to better fund and support RSOs in their ambitions this year. That additional $20,000 will now be available along with the $50,000 that the finance committee started with.

Students discuss how to allocate funds to a planned litigation service for UMass students who have to appear in court, but cannot afford a lawyer. There are only four court-appointed lawyers in Hampshire County.

Students look for options at Majors Fair

FAIR from page 1

"I think the more information we can give, especially to undergraduates, about the opportunities available to them, the better it is," said Major Jennifer Parenti, an assistant professor of Aerospace Studies who was manning the Air Force ROTC table.

Melvin Rodriguez, Director of Academic Programs and Diversity in Management Education Services, said that after obtaining information at the fair, "about 90 percent [of students] will come to an information session," Isenberg School of Management was undoubtedly the most popular display on Wednesday night.

The increase in popularity of the event, coupled with the increase in representation from the departments, crowded the ballroom, much to the dismay of students.

"I think they should have each of the colleges have their own Majors Fairs on different nights," said Laura Freeman, a freshman.

However, the crowdedness of the room did not deter students from seeking the information that they came for.

"I came to the fair last year, and I went to a couple of tables that I hadn't looked into, and I talked to a couple of professors that sparked an interest for me. These particular tables are the ones I'm looking into now," said Rachel Seavey, an undeclared sophomore.

The fair was not only geared to undeclared students, but also helped students find programs to accompany their majors. "I asked questions about the programs, and found a certificate within a major that I was interested in," said sophomore Nick Philpott.

"It's a great turnout with lots of people walking around asking questions and checking out the different programs," said Woodsum about the success of the event.

"I'm excited about the turnout, the response from the departments, and my hat's off to all the students and departments who gave their might to come here," added Regina Middleton, an academic advisor with Pre-Major Advising.

"The key to building a successful roadmap to your future is based on gathering good information with which to make informed decisions," states the Pre-Major Advising website. The 2005 Majors Fair aimed to do just that, and was, by all means, successful.

Hundreds of UMass students filled the Student Union Ballroom for the annual Majors Fair on Wednesday.

Kosovar interns enjoy living in the States content with the quality of products and clothing and others aren't, Buzuku is impressed.

INTERNS from page 1

"Wal-Mart actually has some pretty good quality, I'm surprised," she said. "I had heard their reputation has been falling down."

But after experiencing what they have endured, anyone would enjoy some of life's simple pleasures.

Between March and June of 1999, war broke out in the Serbian province of Kosovo between Yugoslavs and NATO. Heavy bombing ensued during this time, forcing many residents to flee to safety. Some sought refuge in homes in the U.S. during this time.

For Kokollari, the outbreak of war meant sometimes going lengthy periods of time without eating. A native of Budakova, Kosovo, he and many of the townsfolk fled to the nearby mountains when their village became under attack. Only when they felt it was safe would they sneak back into town to their homes for food, usually at night. They had to make sure guards were not around their houses before following through. This meant Kokollari sometimes went as many as three days without a meal.

"We had to be very careful when we came back," Kokollari said.

Buzuku's recollection of the harsh times is something she never wants to feel again.

"That time has been the worst part of my life," she said.

She recalls waking up one morning at 4 a.m. in the soaking rain to flee from Prishtina, which was being bombed on a daily basis at the time, at the urging of her brother. Troops were coming around her neighborhood every day, and it was no longer a safe place to stay. She ended up in a village out of sight of the bombings.

"Being moved from your home, with no idea where you might end up, was a very hard time for me," she said.

Haxhaj, clutching a Dolce and Gabbana belt buckle, is precise and blunt about his experience during war times.

"Take any crime movie you've seen," he says. "It's like that."

Kokollari, Buzuku and Haxhaj will return to Kosovo in December, when the internship program is over. While they will be better prepared for their career path back in the Balkans, and the province is in better shape than it was five years ago, they will cherish their memories from their time in the states.

And that's as good a feeling as ever.

Three interns at the UMass library left a life of struggles behind in Kosovo to come to the U.S.

UMass researcher shows off work from mine at conference

By Kim Benson
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts graduate student presented her work at the three-day Soils, Sediments, and Water Conference at the UMass Campus Center Oct. 19 in regards to her research of self-cleaning bacteria at a mine in Rowe.

Microbiology student Caryl Becerra's research explores the specific kinds of bacteria that are assisting in the natural cleaning of an abandoned pyrite mine in Rowe. Finding a cheaper, more environmentally friendly way to clean up the mines is important to Becerra.

"Mining occurs in every industrial society, and this is a global problem," Becerra said.

Becerra is interested in both science and the preservation of the environment. She believes that individuals should expand the horizons of other sciences. For example, her concentration is in microbiology, but she finds focusing on the environmental aspect of it more interesting. She hopes others realize that it is imperative for people to "stimulate the environment," which is what she plans to do within her research project.

The Department of Environmental Protection in Massachusetts is also interested in cleaning up the mines due to concerns about the environment. The National Science Foundation has contributed to this research with a $1.59 million dollar grant.

From 1882 through 1910, the Davis Mine was open and running. Workers would mine for pyrites, also known as "fool's gold," which was later processed into sulfuric acid for industries. Since the mine has been closed and abandoned for many years, it has filled with groundwater that leaks into the Davis Mine Brook.

The Davis Mine site research and experimentation shows that natural processes are helping to prevent such leakage into the nearby brook. However, other mines are not so fortunate; the leakage is harmful to the brook's aquatic life and has lowered the PH level of the water. Since the water is becoming more acidic, minerals in the water are dissolving, resulting in an increase of metals.

"This one-two punch of greater acidity and more dissolved minerals can be toxic to aquatic life and harm the resources as a whole," said Becerra.

Scientists can prevent this from occurring, but it is costly and not always effective. What they must do includes covering tailing piles or adding bicarbonate to lower acidity. Scientists hope to find the natural self-cleaning mechanisms that are possibly located in mines.

Becerra works with microbiologist advisor Klaus Nusslein and others who are trying to pinpoint the specific microbial activity to save the brook and aquatic life. She began by collecting sediment and water samples from the site to categorize the bacteria and how it may contribute to the environment, whether positively or negatively. She hypothesizes that adding food to the bacteria and changing the temperature may affect the clean-up.

"Sulfide reducers, by their way of living, are cleaning up the mines," said Becerra.

Research has discovered that iron reducers may also be involved in the self cleaning process. Continuing with her experimentation, Becerra would like to describe the microbial community in detail and give the microbe's labeled sulfate, a radioactive tag to calculate how quickly it is metabolized.

Becerra has been working on this research project at the Davis Mine for one year now. Over the next few months, her goals include comparing the microbial community analysis of acid mine drainage attenuating and generalizing zones.

"Cleaning up sites like these can be very costly," says Becerra. "By understanding how the microbes work at Davis mine to remediate the site, we may be able to give nature a hand at other sites."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2005

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." — Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dress code not a race issue

Jon Brandt

As I'm sitting in my Diversity class last Wednesday, nobody wants to say anything, and for about and hour and a half the room is pretty much silent. Finally, we get to the topic of the dress code in the NBA, and suddenly the room explodes. People are shouting at each other and everyone wants their voice heard. It takes several minutes for the TA to get everything under control, and finally we get back to an enthusiastic debate. Whether you agree or disagree with NBA Commissioner David Stern's decision, you could go on and on arguing about it. While those who argue that it is clearly a racist act have some valid points and argue their cases well, it is simply absurd to call this racism.

For starters, it is widely known that most of the players in the NBA are black, so why would the commissioner want to do something that alienates the majority of the players? There is absolutely no proof that David Stern is doing any of this to punish the players who like to dress up in their own individual styles before and after the game. This is merely to show that the NBA, just like any other organization, is a business.

> If you worked at a multi-million dollar firm in New York City you would be expected to show up to work in a suit, not with big medallions hanging off your neck and one pant leg rolled up.

Let's not fool ourselves. The fight that broke out in Detroit last year between the Pistons, the Pacers and fans hurt the game in a way that will take years to fix. David Stern is putting in this dress code to try and show that this is a business and there are professionals involved. If you worked at a multi-million dollar firm in New York City you would be expected to show up to work in a suit, not with big medallions hanging off your neck and one pant leg rolled up. No matter how many times you try to argue that basketball is just a game, you are wrong. It is a business, just like anything else, and when that fight broke out, it hurt the business. Now the NBA is trying to restore its image, and the first way to do that is by requiring its players to dress like professionals.

If you want to play basketball for a living and make millions of dollars, congratulations — you're just like the millions of other people in this country who would play for scraps just for a chance to get on that court. There is nothing I can't stand more than hearing an overpaid athlete complain that they need to put food on their plate or that they are being treated unfairly.

UMass's own alumnus Marcus Camby was quoted as having said that if he had to wear suits, then the league should give him stipends to do so. I think it's time Camby had a reality check. Stern isn't saying basketball players need to go out and buy the most expensive suits they can find. They don't even need to wear suits all the time. All they need to do is look nice and professional. Wear a turtleneck or a polo shirt. Nobody cares, as long as you distinguish yourself from an amateur.

I've heard some people arguing that this is going to cost the players money because they will lose their endorsements. If they can't wear their Nike shoes after the game, then they could lose hundreds of thousands of dollars. Here's an idea — why don't you try evolving with the times? Endorse an Armani suit. Pose for Men's Warehouse. The truth is nobody cares what you are sponsoring as long as it's something they would consider buying, which is exactly why George Foreman is extremely successful at selling his own grill.

As Derek Cuneo, a sophomore from my class, put it, "It's a professional sport. They get paid to be professional, and we don't want to watch a bunch of amateurs." I think it's time the players stopped whining so much every time they don't get what they want. It seems as though every time there is an issue a player cries racism. I'd like to hear what Billy Hunter, the National Basketball Players Association Union representative, has to say about this. After all, he is a black man, and he agreed to this deal with David Stern. That pretty much takes the wind out of the sails of the whole racism argument.

It sickens me that we live in a country that still has areas in deep poverty and schools with old textbooks, but basketball players make millions of dollars and complain they are getting a raw deal. All they have done by complaining about this is agitate more fans who are already tired of these antics. Somewhere along the line these players forgot what it's all about, and they sold out for some media attention. They sold out their fans, and the sad thing about this is that when they try to buy it back, I don't think they're going to be able to.

Jon Brandt is a Collegian columnist.

Alpacas' place at UMass

Gilad Skolnick

The swans were shipped out by force last year from our campus pond, one of the University of Massachusetts's most devastating blows since the opening of the Sylvan residential halls, and now, perhaps as a replacement, UMass has brought in an odd new animal — alpacas.

UMass Amherst recently received a gift of $500,000 from a generous Vermont family so students can take eight semesters worth of classes on alpacas, what the Incan emperor Sayri Tupaq is rumored to have often called the "new llama." It is pretty obvious that this latest move to establish a Camelid studies program has been pushed by Michael Gargano to compensate for the loss of our campus swans. I have reservations about this, however, and this is not me alone — it has been echoed throughout campus.

Alpacas are rude, ill-behaved animals, not exactly the best influence for UMass, which is struggling enough as it is to shed its ZooMass party school image. These creatures also have an attitude problem and are well known as underachievers. They tend to stay up late, spit, bite, and whine when upset. They aren't good for riding and they tend to give mean looks. Some would say that the reason that they don't have any horns, hooves or claws is because their incessant spitting is so repulsive that it's enough to frighten all. Even Napoleon, the main character in the movie Napoleon Dynamite, did not deem an alpaca worthy of his attention, preferring the much more suave llama.

Yes, I agree that UMass must stay competitive in the ever growing industry of Camelid raising, as we certainly don't want to fall behind other schools as they acquire bigger and bigger herds of guancos, llamas and camels. Yet are Alpacas the right option, and are we not losing our focus on such trusted loyal animals as sheep?

> Yes, I agree that UMass must stay competitive in the ever growing industry of Camelid raising, as we certainly don't want to fall behind other schools as they acquire bigger and bigger herds of guancos, llamas and camels. Yet are Alpacas the right option, and are we not losing our focus on such trusted loyal animals as sheep?

Around campus there has been much panic, as a student who supports the UMass Goat Herding club informed me of her concern regarding the increase in competition to gain attention now that there are alpacas in the area. Turf grass management majors were worried that the alpacas might overgraze on a new lawn they just planted. A history major who was willing to be identified, John M. McMahon, informed me that bringing alpacas to his campus made him very proud to be a student here, yet spoke of concern of the harm this might do to the prestige of a UMass degree. Unlike the swans, people seem skeptical that the alpacas will be visible on campus; if these animals desire to be antisocial; then why should we support them?

There has to be a reason why alpacas are shunned in popular culture; after all, they have not had any movie focus on them for decades. Even "The Emperor's New Groove" featured a llama in the majority of the movie, yet the alpaca was conspicuously absent.

The Incan Empire had many alpacas, and the Incan Empire was conquered. What message does that send about relying on alpacas? Less than two centuries after the Spanish were introduced to the alpaca, their empire began to weaken and they were no longer a great European power.

Introducing alpacas to UMass is a dangerous, risky move, but perhaps Incan Emperor Tupaq was right: the future does lie with alpacas. UMass must keep up with the times rather than stay with convention, and the times are yelling out alpaca. I would not be surprised if a decade from now there are UMass sweaters made from alpaca wool, alpaca meat-filled sandwiches in the Blue Wall, and perhaps an alpaca mascot sidekick to Sam the Minuteman. The truth is that sheep just aren't as hip as they used to be, and goats are so passé.

It's a bold move to introduce this to UMass and the alpaca studies program, but from the animal science majors that I have met, I'm sure that they can handle the alpacas' moody behavior. After all, as Sayri Tupaq very well could have said, "Perhaps if we were all a bit more like the alpaca, we would have a better world."

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist.

Where has the money gone?

David Shenkenberg

UMass has recently strengthened fundraising efforts, as one can see from the large signs around the campus. One thing that schools always need is money. If you asked your father for some cash and then spent it during a wild night on the town, you know what your father would say and you could picture the expression on his face. If your brother-in-law always asked your family for cash, he would not be a family favorite. Somehow, though, schools are different.

Part of the reason for this is the myth of the "break-even institution." In this age, where corporations make lucrative deals with universities, colleges collect from professors' patents, and in some cases, athletics drive piles of green paper into universities, one wonders whether university officials will continue to perpetuate this myth.

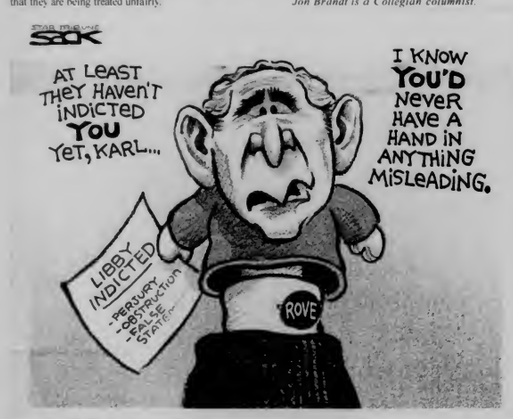
When I listened to the Vice President of Finance at my alma mater, the University of Texas, discuss the need for raising tuition, he referred to the "break-even institution" as a business model. I wonder, if the university were compared to a Fortune 500 company, how this "model" would be viewed by the heads of other corporations. He admitted that Texas football is a multimillion dollar business alone, but somehow the university only breaks even because that is the beauty of the system. I pictured our star athletes flushing sacks of money down 24-karat gold toilets.

> Despite warnings of waning quality as the size of an already huge university increases, administrators see gold in the rising numbers of matriculating students. God forbid the school actually reject some students and send them to lower-ranked schools.

UMass may not have the athletic program of Texas, but it has made money from patents and business deals, which brings up another complaint: too much time is devoted to a simple business deal and less time is spent on other aspects of the campus that need improvement. Consider the recent deal with Microsoft, for instance. I bet it was tough to engineer a deal that will allow Microsoft to increase its global dominance over operating systems and software by increasing its presence on campus. This was an excellent photo-op for the president and other administrators as well. Meanwhile, freshmen biology students are continuing the tradition of reading the amount of absorbed light from the dial of a tank-like machine in lieu of the smaller spectrometers with a computerized display that one would find in a professor's private laboratory.

Whenever we asked, whether I was a TA or a student, professors heading the lab would always state that the lab supplies were "expensive," yet somehow we all know that any of these World War II holdovers could be replaced if one of us asked our little brother to empty his piggy bank after he saved a couple of months' allowance. If I decided to enter Bristol-Myers Squibb as a technician, would I be able to adapt my knowledge of ancient equipment to their state-of-the-art facilities?

I have heard administrators say it is easier to get a large donation for a new building than for school supplies because people like their name in big letters on a new building. Why, then, do schools not offer to spend money on these supplies, which surely do not equal the cost of a building, and put a big spender's name on a polished rock outside or on the Web site banner with the inscription, "for school supplies?" Surely, there is a way to appease the ego of a donor and get the money to things that are not often paid for.



If new buildings are built, they are not built to replace the dilapidated buildings that have been around forever. Asbestos must be removed to keep personal injury lawyers from suing the school, leaks will be plugged and light fixtures will be replaced, but no one will actually replace the whole building until it implodes due to old age. Would you like a specific example? Look at the Morrill Science Center. Actually, look at the decaying, gray shack nearby that has a shiny, new gutter pipe on the side of it. That would be the Marshall Hall Annex.

One source of revenue that universities like ours look to for funding is new students' tuition. Despite warnings of waning quality as the size of an already huge university increases, administrators see gold in the rising numbers of matriculating students. God forbid the school actually reject some students and send them to lower-ranked schools.

However, the expanding size of universities actually hurts their ability to seek funding, because people will want to spend less as universities become less personal and the quality of education decreases. When intimate discussions with experts are reduced to a professor shouting across a 500-person lecture hall and that favorite tree by which one might have read quietly is replaced by a throng of students rushing to class trying to get their degree, with ketchup and hold the mayo, it just seems like an alumnus' charitable donation would be better spent on an RSO with which he has enjoyed more personal time.

When faced with a question of job performance, administrators often fall back on the old, "Shut up, kid, someday you will have a corner office and by that time, you won't want to do anything, either," routine. By that, I mean that they use words like "sustainability" and give a speech that is long on excuses and short on actual initiatives. I challenge the administration of this university and others to limit the size of the campus, fund neglected areas of higher education such as school supplies, and replace buildings that are showing their old age.

David Shenkenberg is a UMass graduate student.

Will Red Sox Nation recover?

Christopher Reardon

Red Sox Nation received a jarring blow when it was announced that the front office could not reach a deal to retain general manager Theo Epstein. Adding insult to injury, it had been announced just hours before by the Boston Globe that the two sides had indeed been able to agree to a new contract for Epstein, who was the first general manager in Red Sox history to lead the team to three straight playoff berths, and of course the first general manager in 86 years to bring his team a World Series title.

So what effect will Epstein's departure really have on this off-season? More than you might think. With Epstein goes a three year relationship (and thus, loyalty) with a few important Sox, namely Kevin Millar and Bill Mueller. A new general manager coming into the situation would be more likely to take a gander at Millar's sub-par 2005 numbers than to consider the effect Millar has in the clubhouse (and his tendency to go on torrid hitting streaks), effectively ending Millar's tenure as a Red Sox.

Meanwhile, any general manager worth his salt would be wrong to ignore Kevin Youkilis, who's waiting in the wings to take over for Mueller at the hot corner, ready to save the team Mueller's contract money for use in acquiring other important free agents. While I can't argue with this logic, I still can't shake the feeling that losing Mueller will turn out to be a huge blow to an already endangered Red Sox offense (more on that later). Mueller is an on-base machine who also happened to be the Sox's second-best clutch hitter in the 2005 season (who could surpass Big Papi in the area?). All he did was bat .526 with the bases loaded, .338 with runners in scoring position and .301 with runners in scoring position and two outs. Youkilis, meanwhile, hit .250, .261 and .100, respectively.

I'm not trying to bash Youkilis. I'm simply pointing out that while a new general manager might be more likely to focus on saving money, Epstein might surprise us all by signing Mueller and using Youkilis as a power-hitting backup for third and first base.

> I'm not trying to bash Youkilis. I'm simply pointing out that while a new general manager might be more likely to focus on saving money, Epstein might surprise us all by signing Mueller and using Youkilis as a power-hitting backup for third and first base.

Epstein's departure may affect the Sox in the long term as well. Considering the fact that the Sox farm system has improved tenfold during Epstein's tenure, I'm worried that a new general manager may not hold valuable minor leaguers like Hanley Ramirez and Dustin Pedroia as sacred as did Epstein.

I am happy that the Sox at least managed to sign Mike Timlin before Epstein's departure, but at the same time I believe they missed a golden opportunity to extend the contract of Terry Francona, the first manager to lead the Red Sox to a World Series title since 1918. Who knows if the fan favorite will be back after his contract expires after the 2006 season?

Of course, these are all problems any major league general manager would have to face, and I may simply be biased toward Epstein because of his success with the team. But let us not forget the work of Theo's predecessor — Dan Duquette was widely considered the worst Sox general manager in decades. This is the guy who said Roger Clemens was in the "twilight of his career" back in 1996. Forgive me for being skeptical of a non-Epstein general manager.

So while all you Yankees and non-sports fans (an equally evil bunch, to be sure) sleep soundly tonight, those of us in Red Sox Nation will be quivering in a corner somewhere, hoping that the Sox front office manages to fix the mess it's gotten itself into. Maybe I'm the only one in the corner, but we're all very concerned.

Christopher Reardon is a UMass student.

We're looking for political cartoonists
Contact us if interested.
editorial@dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2005

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Saga Comes Full Circle

By Michael Deehan
Collegian Staff

"Revenge of the Sith," the final chapter of George Lucas's "Star Wars" saga, was released on DVD earlier this week. The two-disc set contains a flawless presentation of the film, several exciting deleted sequences, and a unique look at the behind-the-scenes process.

The movie was shot using digital cameras, meaning that the DVD transfer is a nearly perfect reproduction of the theatrical film. Every last alien landscape, bright laser blast or CGI spaceship is visually stunning. Audio is encoded using Dolby Digital's 5.1 surround system, the industry standard. A movie like this needs to be heard with the very best of digital clarity, and this soundtrack certainly provides the necessary experience.

In a recent interview with the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, producer Rick McCallum said the "DVD is the last place a filmmaker can really present to those that care enough the original idea" and the filmmaker's intent. The deleted scenes shed some light onto Lucas's epic vision of a galaxy far, far away.

Several of the deleted scenes are a part of the discarded "Rebel Alliance" subplot. Both "A Stirring in the Senate" and "Seeds of Rebellion" revolve around Natalie Portman's character, Senator Amidala. The scenes feature the tragically underused Portman alongside other notable stars Jimmy Smits and Bai Ling. The subplot brings little action to the film, but fans of the series will be pleased to see glimpses of a young Mon Mothma (who first appeared in "Return of the Jedi") and the beginnings of the Rebel Alliance that features so prominently in the original trilogy.

"Grievous Slaughters a Jedi" is an unfinished "animatic" sequence (preliminary special effects not intended for the final film) about the heroes' first encounter with one of the film's main villains. A reminder of just why some sequences are left out of the final product, the scene feels clumsy as it turns from tragedy to comedy in a fairly repulsive fashion.

The most talked about deleted scene is the 30-second clip of Yoda arriving on the planet Dagobah, the setting where he was originally introduced in 1980's "The Empire Strikes Back." The scene is short and sweet, but worth it to any fans of the original films or John Williams's classic score.

The DVD is packed with one full-length documentary and several shorter "mini-docs" about the making of the movie.

"We shot about 3000 hours of documentary footage from the very first day we started twelve years ago," said McCallum.

The centerpiece, of the documentary collection is "Within a Minute," an interesting and genuinely innovative look at what exactly goes into bringing a movie from script to screen. The documentary examines one 49 second sequence from the climactic finale and all the workers, artists and talent that went into creating it. Starting with Lucas's screenplay, it follows set designers, conceptual artists, costume makers, stuntmen and many other crew members' efforts in creating an action scene.

"Virtually every single person that worked on the film had some input into that sequence," said McCallum. Unlike most DVDs, which include a vague overview of the entire production, "Within a Minute" is inventive in its approach and refreshing after years of generic DVD documentaries.

In the short documentary "The Chosen One," the focus is on the transition of Anakin Skywalker into the dreaded Darth Vader. The documentary features interviews with actor Hayden Christensen and writer/director George Lucas, as well as numerous looks behind the scenes showcasing how actor and director approach the character. Christensen discusses his attempt to make Anakin appear more human in an effort to portray Darth Vader as a more tragic figure throughout the original trilogy. It's fascinating to see how an actor approaches the motivation and rationalization for a character the world knows so well as one of the most evil villains in cinema history.

The documentary also takes a look at the make-up effects used to make Christensen appear burnt to a crisp after his final duel with Obi-Wan Kenobi and the impact on the cast and crew when Christensen first donned the classic black Darth Vader armor. At 14 minutes, the documentary is all too brief, but it provides an interesting look into the heads of those who brought the film to life.

The first two web documentaries, "Two Worlds, One Movie" and "One World, Two Movies," detail the very beginning of production. With set builders and model makers starting to prep for filming in Australia, Lucas and company work out of their California headquarters to coordinate the effort. Make-up and hair effects for both Hayden Christensen and Ewan McGregor are featured, as well as the sword training the actors went through to pull off the final battle scene.

In "This Weapon Is Your Life" we see some of the techniques used by model makers to create the assortment of prop weapons seen in the film. Each design starts as a drawing, and upon approval by Lucas is turned into a full-scale prop. Lucas also discusses the significance of guns and lightsabers to the symbolism of the overall story.

"The Creatures of Episode III" exposes the monumental task of bringing the many aliens and beasts of the Star Wars universe to life. The production required an extensive team of makeup artists, animatronics specialists, costume makers and actors. Behind-the-scenes footage of the "creature shop" reveals how the fantastic characters of Episode III were created.

With all six "Star Wars" films now on DVD, "Episode III" takes the fullest advantage of DVD's potential. "Revenge" is the best "Star Wars" movie since 1980, and in DVD is certainly the most enjoyable of any of the previous releases.

A Brief History of the Galaxy

By Duncan Devlin
Collegian Staff

"Star Wars" debuted in 1977, bringing science fiction out of musty novels and old "Star Trek" reruns and into the forefront of American pop culture. The stars themselves were plucked from the sky and brought into the American living rooms. In the thirty years since "Star Wars" was first released, science fiction has become one of the biggest genres in entertainment, producing scores of books and video games, not to mention six of the highest-grossing movies of all time. The whole world pretty much "went geek" in 1977.

For the fans too young to remember, there was not much science fiction in the '70s. The original "Star Trek" had gone off the air ten years prior, and few youngsters ever read the novels of Bradbury and Asimov floating around at that point in time. Just seeing the name "Star Wars" in previews made people know the film would be heaven for those waiting for something to fill the sci-fi void.

When "Star Wars" was released, it introduced a whole new galaxy of entertainment. Space battles, starships, Wookiees, the Force, aliens of all shapes and sizes, intelligent robots, and lightsabers jumped from distant ideas in the back of someone's mind to become the major elements in a genre that would develop into a full-fledged movement within just a couple decades. Realizing the original film on a budget of just three million dollars, George Lucas created many of the most memorable images in American entertainment.

The next six years would see the release of two more films, completing the trilogy. Following the release of "Return of the Jedi" in 1983, "Star Wars" went to sleep. During this nap, the world of special effects, space, and fantasy was cultivated into a fine art. By the mid-90s, as the creation of special effects evolved into a thriving industry, this genre that had once lived on death's doorstep would even have its own TV network. Movies such as "The Fifth Element," "Independence Day," and "Jurassic Park" began pushing the limits of what a special effects team could do (and spend), all because of Lucas's dream.

As the end of the millennium approached, George Lucas got back behind the camera, utilizing all of the technology that had developed in the past twenty years due to the art he had nurtured into existence. He began work on "Star Wars: Episode I," a prequel introducing the origins of Anakin Skywalker, otherwise known as Darth Vader. Legions of fans flocked to theatres, neglecting work, school, and anything else that had arisen in the past eighteen years, for what has some critics hailed as "the most anticipated movie of all time."

As fans packed the theatres after decades of waiting, that most famous line, "A long time ago, in a galaxy far, far away…" once again graced the screen, and "Star Wars" fans around the world were able to sharp in a whole new addition to the saga.

While many hardcore fans of the original films scorn the newer movies, these were in fact responsible for bringing the cult of "Star Wars" to a whole new generation. Parents who remember standing in line for weeks to see the movie for the twelfth time were able to share that same experience and excitement with their children. A generation that grew up taking such visual effects, and in fact the entire genre, for granted, was able to sit in the presence of the creator. All manner of video games, books, and toys have constantly flooded the market in response to overwhelming support by fans and an insatiable desire to expand further into the Star Wars universe.

This past summer marked the sixth and final summer of Star Wars. Just like all of its older brothers had done once upon a time, "Star Wars: Episode III" remained the buzz of the town long into the summer, with a lifespan far surpassing that of any ordinary movie. Costing $113 million to make, setting an opening-day record of $50 million, and taking in $850 million worldwide over the course of three months, "Revenge of the Sith" was hailed by many critics as "possibly the best of the lot," and made Natalie Portman and Ewan McGregor as instantly recognizable as Carrie Fisher and Mark Hamill had been the first time around. Fans were seen all summer reliving the legends of the first films, dressed as Jedi, Sith, and even Yoda, visiting theaters as many as fifteen times for a final glimpse of "Star Wars" on the silver screen.

The world may never again see a saga quite like the Star Wars series. From the first meeting with Darth Vader over Tatooine in 1977 to Anakin's immolation on Mustafar in 2005, the inhabitants of the Star Wars universe have traveled light years together, bringing the rest of entertainment with them for the ride. The characters, worlds, and stories of "Star Wars" have left an indelible mark on the hearts of legions of fans, bringing filmmaking further out of the solar system than it ever intended.

Although Lucas's saga has come to an end, the release of the movies on DVD will allow these films to live on in Americans homes for a lifetime.

Dividing personalities

By Leanni Leake
Collegian Staff

In the not-too-distant future, the leaders of Great Britain are meeting secretly in all-but-forgotten underground bomb shelters. Their country is in a state of chaos, with violence rising and the economy in the midst of a recession. Something drastic has to be done to fix what is happening, but what to do?

Their solution is elegant: the nuclear family is what has been tearing all humans — and more specifically, their country — apart. Forcing people with opposing personalities and interests who share nothing more than blood to live and deal with each other on a regular basis is creating a dysfunctional society.

'Divided Kingdom'
By Rupert Thompson
Knopf

To fix this, the leaders will create four new countries from what is now the United Kingdom. The inhabitants of these countries will not be divided by ethnicity or race or language, but by personality, following the ancient Greek idea of the humors, where everyone's demeanor is determined by the balance of the humors: blood, black bile, yellow bile, and phlegm. Extra blood makes for an optimistic, easy-going personality, described as "sanguine." Black bile makes for inward-looking, "melancholic" people prone to depression. Extra yellow bile gives a person aggression and possessiveness, called a "choleric" personality. And phlegm makes for an empathetic, spiritual person, known as "phlegmatic."

All of the citizens of Great Britain will be watched and classified until a set day (called the Rearrangement), when they will be seized and placed in their new countries. Impenetrable walls will be built, with landmines and barbed-wire and constant surveillance, to keep any kind of contamination from occurring between the countries. Everyone will be brought in for regular testing and questioning, and if their personality is reclassified, they will be transferred to their proper home.

It is in this world that Rupert Thomson's novel "Divided Kingdom" opens. His protagonist is eight-year-old Thomas, separated from his family, classified as Sanguine, and dumped unceremoniously in a new home. Thomas's name is taken — he's renamed Thomas Perry — as are his memories. His previous life is completely erased by the trauma of Rearrangement. The novel follows his life through Rearrangement, being placed with his new family, and finally accepting a position as a government agent not because of his faith in the system, but to protect his foster family's possible transfer to another country as they become more strange.

The setup for the novel — a "1984"-esque dystopia with a much lower chance of ever coming into being than Orwell's terrifying world — is distractingly impossible, even silly. Some readers may have trouble making it through the first few chapters, which (at face value) might foretell a very clumsy revolutionary manifesto. The setting does work, though, unexpectedly, elegantly, and beautifully, supporting a rich and enthralling story.

"Divided Kingdom" is a psychological and emotional tale, rather than the political warning that this genre of writing is often expected to be. In Thomas Perry, we find an incredibly believable, intense person — a man with no past, who doesn't know anything about himself but is out to learn. The separate countries of the new UK act as foils for the different parts of his personality as he makes his way through them, changing and adapting to fit the culture of each.

The theme here may not be political, but it is richly human. Perry finds, of course, that everyone moves though these supposedly rigid states of being constantly through their lives, and that what we are is really determined by what is expected of us, and we expect of ourselves.

Though this theme could very easily be heavy-handed, it is instead exciting, interesting, and well played-out. "Divided Kingdom" is both an exciting tale and a story with high-minded contributions to human thought. At the end of "Divided Kingdom," we find ourselves no closer to answering the universal "Who am I?" but just like Perry, we have a clear idea of who we're not, as well as a clear idea of who the system will try to make us be. Thompson doesn't try to try to tell the reader what to think, or to pretend that a character could believably answer all of his questions perfectly. Instead, we are called on to think, to study, and to question. These are the best gifts that any work of literature can give us, and Thompson accomplishes this very well.

Insomniac Attell enjoys the stand-up life

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

When reading comedian Dave Attell's resume, one cannot help but be impressed by the long list of accomplishments, which range from writing for "Saturday Night Live" to having his own show on Comedy Central, "Insomniac with Dave Attell."

But before all these accomplishments, Attell said he was just a shy sarcastic college student at New York University who wasn't sure what he wanted to do with his life.

"If I didn't succeed with comedy, I would probably be doing something with later hours, like a stripper," Attell joked over the phone during his interview with the Massachusetts Daily Collegian last week.

Luckily for us, Dave Attell found comedy as his direction in life and hasn't looked back since. In 1993 he was hired as a sketch writer for "Saturday Night Live," but left at the end of the 1994 season after he failed to write any segments for the show that were suitable to be aired.

'If I wrote any skits I would still be working there," Attell said.

Following his departure from "Saturday Night Live," Attell provided voiceover work with the Comedy Central cartoon "Dr. Katz."

Slowly, his TV guest appearances started to pile up. During this busy time, Attell continued doing a stand-up routine at clubs in New York and around the country.

In 1997 Attell got to perform a half-hour comedy special on HBO to showcase his stand-up act. From there, his career started to take off.

In 1999 he started contributing segments to "The Daily Show with Jon Stewart." His role for the show was nicknamed "The Ugly American." Attell kept this role until the end of 2002.

By then, he had less free time to contribute to the "Daily Show" because of the success of his own show, "Insomnia with Dave Attell." "Insomnia" started the year before, but by 2002 was becoming quite a hit for Comedy Central and for Attell, who actually does suffer from insomnia.

For those of you who have never watched the show, in each episode Attell would travel around a certain city all night, going from bars to strip clubs to various weird places. Each episode was a different city, and each city had its own characters (not in a fictional sense) for Attell to meet.

Unfortunately, the show is now over except for an occasional special.

"The show was on for four years. That's long enough. I didn't want it to be one of those shows that people said, 'Oh, that show's still on?'" Attell said.

Also, according to Attell fans would start finding out where he was going and hit the bars for a chance to be on TV, which created a sense of phonyism for the show.

With the success of his show, Attell got to be a part of bigger and better comedy tours with Lewis Black, Dane Cook, and the late Mitch Hedberg.

"Lewis can hold his own. I'm trying to cut back, but that doesn't mean we don't have fun," Attell said about the partying after each gig when on tour with Lewis Black.

With "Insomniac" in the can, Attell has more time to work on his stand-up. He says the time on stage is his favorite time of the day, while the worst is the time spent traveling from each venue to the next.

His live performance does not differ much from the act that was in his show.

"My live show is more adult, more raw. It's similar to the guy you see on TV," Attell said.

Fans curious to see this act can see it this Saturday, November 5 at the Comedy Connection in Chicopee. He has two sets that night, and tickets for both are $30. Each show is 21+.

Dave Attell
Hukelau
Chicopee
7 p.m. & 10:30 p.m.
Nov. 5
$30

What to tell about Attell

- Graduated from New York University.
- He was a sketch writer for Saturday Night Live in the early 90s.
- Hosted his own show "Insomniac" on Comedy Central.
- Lives with a sleeping disorder known as insomnia.
- Performed stand-up for a HBO special in 1997.
- In 1999 he worked for "The Daily Show with Jon Stewart."
- Provided voiceovers for Comedy Central's "Dr. Katz."
- Toured with Lewis Black, Dane Cook, and the late Mitch Hedberg.

Stand-up comic Dave Attell will bring his live show, which is reminiscent of his old series "Insomniac" on Comedy Central, to the Hukelau for two sets of laughs this Saturday night.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

The Collegian is opening its doors
and you're invited!

Come down and help yourself to refreshments on the Collegian. This is your chance to learn about the paper, and meet the staff!

Come give your input about the Collegian. We hope to see you there: All voices are welcome!

Tuesday
November 8th
11 am - 4 pm
and
5 pm - 9 pm

T Shirts
with this coupon get across the street from Walmart
$6 each PRINTED!
YOUR DESIGN OR LOGO!
24 MINIMUM, 1 STANDARD COLOR, 1 SIDE SCREEN $20. EXP. 11.31.05
Sunraise
322 Russell Street • Hadley, MA 01035
E-mail. print@sunraiseinc.com
www.sunraiseinc.com
586-7133

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
333 Russell St., Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174
Sale date: 11/3/05 - 11/9/05
not responsible for typographical errors.

Beer

Heineken 24 pk btl $20.99
Miller Lite & Genuine Draft 24 pk cans $14.99
Rolling Rock 24 pk btl $11.99
Leinenkugel's Best 12 pk btl $11.99
Corona & Corona Light 12 pk btl $10.99
Bud & Bud Light 24 pk can $15.99
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl $11.49
Killians Irish Red 12 pk btl $8.99

Liquor

Johnnie Walker Black Scotch 750 ml	$28.99
Crown Royal 750 ml	$21.99
Tanqueray Gin 1 liter	$28.99
Domingo Tequila 1.75 liter	$20.99
Bailey's Irish Cream 750 ml	$19.99
Romana Sambuca 750 ml	$18.99
Jose Cuervo Tequila 750 ml	$16.99
Southern Comfort 750 ml	$15.99
Captain Morgan & Parrot Bay Rum 750 ml	$12.99
Stoli & Stoli Twist 750 ml	$10.99

Wine

Moet Brut Imperial 750 ml	$34.99
Moet Nectar Imperial 750 ml	$32.99
Moet White Star 750 ml	$29.99
Green Point Chardonnay 750 ml	$15.99
Black Box 3 liter	$16.99
Stonegate Napa Valley 750 ml Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot	$15.99
Sebastiani 750 ml Chardonnay, Merlot	$10.99
Yellow Tail 1.5 liter	$9.99
Carlo Rossi 4 liter	$8.99
Fetzhom 1.5 liter	$5.99
B.V. Century Cellars 1.5 liter Chardonnay, Merlot, Cabernet	$8.99

Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm, Sunday 12pm - 11pm

UM storms into UD

FOOTBALL from page 10

said. "I think if we go out and play like we're capable of playing, we should be alright. We put [the loss] behind us Sunday after watching the tape. But no one feels sorry for us that we got beat, so we can't feel sorry for ourselves."

"We're very focused on this game right now," quarterback Liam Coen said. "We haven't really been talking about UNH too much. We know that this is basically like the playoffs from here on out. We've got to win out, so our main focus is beating Delaware."

Though Delaware has been struggling through a sub-par year by its standards, the Hens have still historically had UMass's number, winning 23 of the 27 meetings between the two teams. UMass has lost three straight games at UD Stadium, including a 51-45 triple-overtime loss in 2003, the year Delaware won the national championship.

And the Hens have never lost more that one home game in their previous 11 seasons under coach K.C. Keeler. Hofstra has given the Hens their only loss at home so far this season, by a 10-6 margin on Oct. 8.

"[Delaware] scored 34 points two weeks ago at home [in a 34-28 victory over James Madison]," UMass coach Don Brown said. "They are 20-2 in their last 22 home games. It's no picnic, that is for sure. We are going to have to go in there and play a very solid football game to get a W."

The Fightin' Blue Hens are led on offense by sophomore tailback Omar Cuff, who is second in the Atlantic 10 with 884 rushing yards and leads the conference with 16 total touchdowns, 12 of those coming on the ground.

Due to a heavily depleted receiving corps, Cuff also leads his team with 32 receptions, 339 receiving yards and four receiving touchdowns.

"He has had a really good year so far, and he is the key to their offense," James said. "We have to stop him, first off. He reads holes very well. He is quick and fast. His line helps him out a lot, but he is a talented young man."

The receiving group took its first big hit last spring, when it was announced that senior Justin Long would not return to the team after his appeal stemming from an on-campus incident was denied. Just before the season began, senior David Boler suffered a season-ending knee injury.

And then during the season, seniors Brian Ingram and Joe Bleymaier have been injured, leaving room for four redshirt freshmen getting significant receiving time.

NOTES: Junior receiver Brandon London broke his right hand against UNH, but is expected to play. ... Senior quarterback/wide receiver Tim Day has caught four passes for 36 yards this season. All four of his receptions have been for a first down ... Prior to Saturday's game, eight members being inducted into the Delaware Hall of Fame will be honored. Among the eight are former NFL quarterback Rich Gannon and current Texas Rangers outfielder Kevin Mench.

PROJECTED STARTERS

Offense
QB 12 - Liam Coen, Freshman
RB 5 - Steve Baylark, Junior
FB 14 - Kyle B. Harrington, Sophomore
WR 81 - Brandon London, Junior
TE 44 - Mike Douglas, Senior
LT 67 - Brent Caldwell, Senior
LG 68 - Matt Austin, Sophomore
C 62 - Alex Miller, Junior
RG 73 - David Thompson, Junior
RT 63 - Sean Calicchio, Freshman
WR 9 - Dominique Stewart, Senior

Defense
DE 95 - Keron Williams, Senior
DT 57 - Justin Schweighardt, Senior
NT 55 - John Hatchell, Junior
RE 48 - David Burris, Sophomore
WLB 29 - Brad Anderson, Senior
MLB 51 - Serge Tikum, Senior
SLB 29 - Jason Hatchell, Sophomore
CB 26 - Tracy Belton, Junior
FS 6 - Shannon James, Senior
SS 7 - James Ihedigbo, Junior
CB 2 - Steve Costello, Senior

Special Teams
K 31 Armando Cuko, Freshman
P 13 - Christian Koegel, Junior
KR 3 - R.J. Cobbs, Senior
PR 2 - Steve Costello, Senior

Offense
WR 1 - Kervin Mchaud, Freshman
LT 75 - Mike Byrne, Sophomore
LG 74 - Brian Sims, Senior
C 77 - Jon Herrman, Freshman
RG 67 - Rich Beverly, Sophomore
RT 78 - Rob Bergman, Senior
TE 80 - Justin LaForgia, Senior
WR 17 - Aaron Love, Freshman
WR 9 - Armand Cauthen, Freshman
QB 5 - Sonny Riccio, Senior
RB 28 - Omar Cuff, Sophomore

Defense
LE 52 - Stephen Purkey, Freshman
DT 97 - Bubba Jesperson, Junior
DT 51 - Tom Parks, Senior
RE 11 - Matt Marcorelle, Freshman
OLB 45 - KeiAndre Hepburn, Junior
MLB 44 - John Mulhern, Senior
OLB 55 - Marquez Davis, Sophomore
LCB 15 - Rashaad Woodard, Junior
SS 24 - Jahri Gunthorpe, Freshman
FS 32 - Kyle Campbell, Junior
RCB 2 - Nicos Chavis, Junior

Special Teams
K 16 - Zach Hobby, Freshman
P 26 - Stuart Kenworthy, Freshman
KR 15 - Rashaad Woodard, Junior
PR 17 - Aaron Love, Freshman

Three straight away from home

ROAD TRIP from page 10

"I basically just told [the team] to get into the playoffs, we've got to win out," James said. "[A record of] 8-3 is a maybe, and I don't want to take that chance, nobody does. We win out, there's no conflict."

Up to this point, UMass has taken part in three away games, with a record of 2-1 against those opponents. The first contest of the season, which the Maroon and White won 19-6, took place at Richmond on Sept. 1, and was followed up two weeks later with a game on the road against Colgate on Sept. 10 in Hamilton, N.Y.

That contest against the Raiders was the only road loss for UMass this season, as the team fell 17-14.

After that game, the Minutemen stayed home until Oct. 22, when they beat Maine 35-14 in Orono.

Regardless of its previous away games, UMass's three-game excursion over the next three weeks kicks off in an environment that is known for its unique setting. Delaware Stadium, which is the largest in the A-10 with a seating capacity of 22,000, has a committed fan-base.

"I remember playing there in 2003 for the A-10 championship, and it was just a great atmosphere to play at," James said. "So it's almost like a 1-A game."

A week after facing Delaware, UMass will play a 1-A team at Army, which boasts one of the most hailed playing grounds in its 40,000-seat Michie Stadium. The Minutemen will return to New York a week after that, when they take on Hofstra for the season finale.

Rather than dwell on the upcoming bus trips, the team has made it a point to forget about where it will be in the upcoming weeks and prepare for Saturday's clash.

"I think we have to take it week by week," quarterback Liam Coen said. "If we start talking about going down to Hofstra, we're going to start getting a little annoyed with the fact that we're going to be on the road for three weeks.

"We're going to be on the road a lot. We know we're going to be with each other for a long time, so we just kind of stay mentally focused on the task at hand and not really worry about being on the road that much."

UMass senior defensive end Keron Williams is second on the team with 42 total tackles. He also has 2.5 sacks and one forced fumble.

Dillon not getting rest

INJURIES from page 10

to use Dillon a lot against the Buffalo Bills last Sunday, but fullback Patrick Pass hurt his leg early in the second quarter and Dillon ended up shouldering the workload.

He carried 18 times for 72 yards and scored on a pair of 1-yard runs in the fourth quarter of a 21-16 comeback victory.

"In situations like that, you're really unsure about how you're going to perform, but once I got out there [I was OK]," said Dillon, who didn't play in Denver on Oct. 16. "Believe me, I've been doing this since I was six years old. It's nothing. This is what I do. This is what I get paid to do."

Neither Dillon nor Pass practiced on Wednesday, leaving fullback Heath Evans as the lone back on the field. Evans was just signed a day earlier to replace Amos Zereoue, who was released.

Third-down back Kevin Faulk has been out since hurting his foot Week 3 in Pittsburgh.

Dillon said he hoped to play next week, when the Patriots (4-3) host the Indianapolis Colts (7-0) on Monday night.

"I'm going to do what I can," he said. "That's where I sit right now. I'm going to try to get as healthy as I can and see what happens Monday night."

The Patriots' running game is ranked 28th in the NFL. Dillon has rushed for only 401 yards, leaving him well off his pace of a year ago, when he ran for a franchise-record 1,635 yards.

"Last year is last year," the 31-year-old Dillon said. "I can't bring back last year."

Although the Colts rank only 14th against the run, they haven't allowed a 100-yard rushing game by an opposing player this season and have given up only two rushing touchdowns.

"They've put it together," Dillon said. "They're on a roll. They're tough to stop. We just have to play a perfect game and see what happens."

In last year's 20-3 divisional playoff loss to the Patriots, the Colts' run defense wore down in the second half. New England ran for 210 yards, with Dillon rushing for 144 of those.

While Dillon hasn't recaptured his 2004 form yet, he has improved lately, averaging more than 4.0 yards per carry in each of his last three games. He was below 3.0 yards per carry for the first three weeks of the season.

Dillon also has run for seven touchdowns, including the pair of one-yarders against the Bills. Those scores, which came less than two minutes apart, helped the Patriots rally from a 16-7 deficit.

"That was huge for us," quarterback Tom Brady said. "I'm glad we got him going. I'm glad there were some holes there for him. He was a great spark for our offense."

Associated Press

Previewing the field

FIELD HOCKEY from page 10

One the season, Schwartz set a school record with a goals-against average of 0.73, starting all 21 games for the Spiders. She also recorded a total of six shutouts and allowed just three goals in seven conference games this year.

Home Field Advantage

Holding the No. 2 seed in the tournament, Temple will be hosting the event at Geasey Field, where it plays its home games. The Owls will be making their third straight appearance in the A-10 tournament, and will look to improve on last year, when they were eliminated by Richmond 4-0.

The past two years, the Spiders have knocked the Owls out of the tournament — in the first round last year and in the championship game in 2003. However, if they wish to get revenge this year, it will have to come in the second round on Saturday, as Temple faces third-seed Massachusetts in the first round.

Temple holds the second-best record in the conference at 6-1, with its only loss coming to, of course, Richmond. The Owls started off slow, losing six straight after winning their season opener, but since then they have come alive. The Owls have put up winning streaks of three, four and three, including the final three games of the regular season, and are 10-3 since starting 1-6.

Sneaking In

Rounding out the final four is Saint Joseph's, which will go up against top-seed Richmond in the first round. The Hawks have fallen off recently, and backed into the playoffs, losing their last two games to conference foes Rhode Island and Temple. After beginning the season 7-3 overall, including three straight wins to finish that span, the Hawks have dropped six of their final nine games, finishing under .500 against A-10 opponents.

St. Joe's earned a playoff berth by way of a head-to-head tiebreaker with St. Louis, which also finished the season 3-4 in-conference. The Hawks defeated the Billikens in St. Louis 2-1, allowing them to sneak into the A-10 tournament with the last playoff spot available.

The Minutewomen will have to get through Temple in the first round.

MAKE MONEY
start an internet business
be in college
$$ make money $$
www.more-spending-money.com

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.northamherstmotors.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repairs & Glass Replacement

LONG RADIO
Quality Sales, Service, and Installation
Audio
Video
Sattelite Radio
NAV
Remote Starter
Alarms
Radar Detectors
Lazer Detectors
Performace Parts
30 Russell Street Hadley, Ma 01035 413-584-3259

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

Results you can feel...
without the side effects!
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Participating provider for HMO's student insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, car insurance & most others.
Amherst Family Chiropractic
549-1500

Epstein could 'no longer put heart and soul' in it

By JIMMY GOLEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Outgoing Red Sox general manager Theo Epstein dismissed reports Wednesday that a power struggle with team president Larry Lucchino led him to walk away from the organization this week.

Epstein, 31, whose career in baseball started when Lucchino hired him as an intern with the Baltimore Orioles 14 years ago, reportedly rejected the team's offer of a $4.5 million, three-year extension that would have more than quadrupled his previous salary.

"Larry and I like each other," Epstein said in his first public comments since he shocked Boston fans by walking away from the bargaining table on Monday. "As with any other working relationship, there are complexities, there are ups and downs."

The decision to leave, he said, was a personal one.

"This is a job you have to give your whole heart and soul to," he said. "In the end, after a long period of reflection about myself and the program, I decided I could no longer put my whole heart and soul into it."

Principal owner John Henry noted Lucchino's absence from the afternoon news conference at Fenway Park.

"He's been maligned and blamed for the situation for the last couple of days. I think that's wrong. I think that's inaccurate," he said.

"If you want to place blame for what happened here, I'm responsible," he added. "Never in my wildest dream did I think this was ever going to happen."

Henry praised Epstein for his work during three years as general manager.

"I've never seen anyone work harder than Theo worked to try to make this organization successful," he said.

Media reports have circulated that Epstein left because leaks about the negotiations convinced him there was a breach of trust with mentor Lucchino. But Epstein said Wednesday that the two remained close and that Lucchino gave him wide discretion over baseball decisions.

"If there are reports of a power struggle or meddling on behalf of Larry, that really wasn't the case," Epstein said. "Essentially, I felt like I had pretty much a free hand to run the baseball operation the way I saw fit."

Under Epstein, the Red Sox made the postseason three years in a row for the first time in franchise history, with the obvious highlight being the team's 2004 World Series win, Boston's first in 86 years.

"It was a time in my life I'll always look back on with fond memories," Epstein said.

Epstein's previous three-year deal expired at midnight Tuesday, leaving the team without a GM heading into the offseason. Negotiations with free agents such as center fielder Johnny Damon are on hold, trade talks will have to wait and the business of assembling the 2006 team has been interrupted by the Brookline native's stunning decision to walk away from his dream job with his hometown team.

The Red Sox need to plug holes in the starting rotation and bullpen that led to a first-round playoff sweep by the eventual World Series champion Chicago White Sox. Manny Ramirez and David Wells have reportedly asked to be traded; Epstein's chief assistant, Josh Byrnes, is now the GM in Arizona; the Red Sox trainer was let go; third-base coach Dale Sveum decamped for Milwaukee.

Former Red Sox general manager Theo Epstein will be remembered for dozens of things during the course of his three-year stint in Boston, most notably the team's first World Series win in 86 years (top left). He also signed David Ortiz (top right), traded away Nomar Garciaparra (bottom left) and did not resign Pedro Martinez.

Colts feel more confident this time around against Patriots

By Michael Marot
ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS – Defensive tackle Montae Reagor sees a different Indianapolis Colts team this season.

They're off to a franchise-best 7-0 start, have allowed a league-low 77 points and are scoring an average of nearly 36 points over their past four games. But Reagor doesn't believe it's the impeccable numbers that have given the Colts a new identity heading into New England – it's experience.

"I think we're more seasoned," he said Wednesday, fresh off a five-day break. "I think we've learned to play at different times, in different situations."

Most Colts fans consider Monday night's matchup the game of the year.

Indianapolis has lost six straight to the Patriots (4-3), including the last two years in the playoffs. Two-time MVP Peyton Manning has lost all seven of his games at New England.

A win Monday night would make outsiders think all is well in Indy. Lose, and the questions that have been posed since January, will start all over.

Coach Tony Dungy has insisted since the summer, and especially this week, that a season cannot be dictated by one game, and players seem to have bought into the philosophy.

"I'm not necessarily going to say it's symbolic of anything," linebacker David Thornton said. "A lot of people are building this up more than it should be. This is a new season."

The changes, though, are clear.

The Colts have proven they can run the ball effectively, rely more on short passes and stay patient enough to win games. Manning has even acknowledged he's often changed passing plays to running plays at the line because of what the defense appears willing to give up, and shootouts have become a distant memory.

Defensively, the Colts have made dramatic improvements. They lead the NFL in sacks (26) and rank fourth in the NFL in red zone defense, and only three AFC teams have forced more turnovers than the Colts (16).

They hold a three-game lead over New England in the battle for home-field advantage, and the Patriots are playing with a lineup that has been ravaged by injuries.

"All those factors could help the Colts this week, but then there are those nightmarish memories.

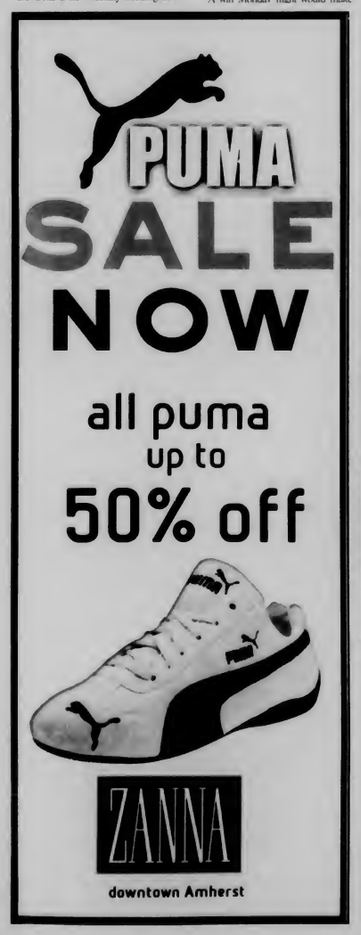
In January, Manning, who set an NFL record with 49 TD passes in 2004, was 27-of-42 for 238 yards with no touchdowns, one interception and a passer rating of 69.3.

In the 2004 season opener, Edgerrin James fumbled twice inside the Patriots 20, Manning threw an interception at the goal line and took a late sack that led to a missed field goal by Mike Vanderjagt, a field goal that would have forced overtime.

In the AFC Championship two years ago, Manning was picked off four times and the Colts had five turnovers.

During the 2003 regular season, the Pats stopped Indianapolis four times at the goal line in the game's final minute to hold on for a win that gave them home-field in the title game.

Those images remain vivid in the Colts' minds.



"You always want to forget about it, but it is in the back of your mind," Reagor said. "They've sent us home the last two years."

Dungy believes that the Colts' new style could create a whole different ballgame.

"We're playing well, No. 1, and No. 2, we've been able to win games a lot of different ways," Dungy said. "You never know how a game is going to transpire, but we think we can win however the game unfolds."

And Reagor is convinced that, win or lose, Indy's newfound approach will lead to a strong second-half run.

The first test comes Monday night against an old nemesis.

costa rica conquest . . .
real world style

Tamarindo Adventure
spectacular beaches & activities!
» 2 nights in San Jose
» 4 nights in Tamarindo
From $296

Manuel Antonio
rainforest adventure!
» 2 nights in San Jose
» 4 nights in Manuel Antonio
From $304

awesome add-ons!
2 days/1 night at Arenal Volcano From $81
2 days/1 night in Monteverde From $90

All prices are land only, based on triple/quad occupancy, and include transfers/shuttle between cities in Costa Rica. Prices subject to change and availability. Taxes and applicable fees not included. CST #1017600-40

STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
U of M Campus Center, Rm 224
(413) 256.1261
STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND

Monday-Friday 7:30-6
Thursday 7:30-8
Saturday 7:30-4

Saturn of Hadley
40 Russell St, Route 9
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 584-6066

SATURN

Our service center repairs all kinds of cars...not just Saturns.

Oil & Filter Change Only $19.99
Includes topping off all fluids, adjusting tire pressures, Check antifreeze for winter protection. FREE wash & vacuum. FREE 27 point inspection.

• Mass State Inspection Station
• Free shuttle service to & from UMASS
• Located directly on bike path & PVTA stop.

No Appointment Needed
10% off mechanical repairs
Late hours on Thursdays

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
CRIMINAL COURT REPORTS — LAWYERS EDITION
SUPREME COURT REPORTS — LAWYERS EDITION
ATTENTION GRADUATING SENIORS
CONSIDERING LAW SCHOOL?
ATTEND BOSTON UNIVERSITY'S PARALEGAL OPEN HOUSE
Learn from legal experts about how paralegal experience can help you:
• Enhance your credentials for law school
• Gain exposure to the legal work environment
• Confirm your decision to pursue a legal career
And, find out how to gain your paralegal certificate in just two weeks in Paralegal Boot Camp.
Tuesday, December 6, 6–8 p.m.
School of Education
2 Sherborn Street, Boston
Wednesday, December 7, 6–8 p.m.
Bay Colony Corporate Center
1050 Winter Street, Suite 1400, Waltham
COURSES START IN EARLY JANUARY
REGISTER TODAY
BOSTON UNIVERSITY

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
Host of Comedy Central's "Insomniac" and from NBC's "Late Night with Conan O'Brien"
DAVE ATTELL
THIS SATURDAY!
NOV. 12TH JOHN VALBY
NOV. 25TH ROBERT SCHIMMEL
DEC. 3RD CHARLIE MURPHY

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS By Comrade X

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

RANDOM CHATTER By Chris Sala

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner

Quote of the Day

"Maybe our mistakes are what make our fate."

—Sex and the City

ACROSS
1 Steer flesh
5 Liberator
10 Adder cousins
14 Counterfeiter
15 State gambling
16 Cogwheel
17 Pronounce indistinctly
18 Ladd and King
19 Furthermore
20 Ras Tafari: Makonnen
23 Grown acorn
24 Old Peruvians
27 Kenneth or Barr
30 Aussie Rod
34 Hanoi holiday
35 Gulf relative
36 Second spin?
37 Levin or Gershwin
38 Battering device
39 Benefactors
40 Manger morsel
41 Flying
42 Luanda's land
43 Chip in chips
44 Holy cow!
45 Packs away
46 Beasts of burden
47 Pigs' pads
49 Garfunkel or Carney
50 Avoids
58 Essence
60 Out in front
61 Appropriate moment
62 New thought
63 "Giant" ranch name
64 Clinches
65 Work for
66 Parts of windows
67 Fires

DOWN
1 Uproarious party
2 Jazz giant Fitzgerald
3 Needle case
4 Friendless
5 Liquor container
6 Part in a play
7 Latin & others
8 Sicilian rumbler
9 "Upside Down" singer
10 Once more
11 Choices
12 Family men
13 Packed-house letters
21 Auditory organ
22 Fathers
25 Make bubbly
26 Ohio and Colorado
27 Drinker's tubes
28 Police servers
29 Forceful cajoler
30 Release
31 Turning light
32 Stringed instruments
33 Poet St. Vincent Millay
36 Go on a tirade
39 Out of fashion
43 Unstable
46 Metric square measure
48 Hawke of "Reality Bites"
49 Robert and Alan
51 Wyatt of the Old West
52 Ostrich cousin
53 Penn or Young
54 Actress Blanchett
55 Costa
56 Portent
57 __ up (adma)
58 __ a la mode
59 Cider-sweet woman?

Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

The Moan and Dove
we'll try to be nicer
if you try to be smarter (thanks)
themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

Route 63 ROADHOUSE — Live Music — Friday Nights 10pm-1am
15 MINUTES FROM CAMPUS ON RT 63
LIVE ENTERTAINMENT
5 NIGHTS A WEEK
FRIDAY 4th & SATURDAY 5th
Catamont 9:30pm
SUNDAY 6th
Acoustic Jam 1pm-?
SUNDAY & THURSDAY
Karaoke/Guitaroke
T N-T Productions 8pm
WEDNESDAY
Open Mic 9:00pm
$5 Pitchers of Bud & Bud Light
The Best New Music Venue in the Valley
www.rt63roadhouse.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Open the top drawer of your desk and you will find a surprise.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Stop studying so much and go buy some glue sticks.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Don't forget to lock your door tonight. It's for your own good.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Make a clever light switch cover instead of studying.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Your backpack is unzipped! Close it before your homework falls out!

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You are all talk and no action. Surprise everyone by doing something daring.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Watch out for squirrels today. They are not your friend.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Buy some cough drops before you are too sick to move.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
I'm sure that review session wasn't very helpful, anyway.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Never use more than two dryer sheets per load.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
This is a good weekend to go skydiving like you've always wanted to.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Your hands are sticky. Put this paper down and go wash them.

New in Town?
Amherst Hairstylists
Caren's Place
You can trust us with your hair.
40 Main St.
Downtown Amherst
(Next to Newbury Comics)
413 253 1200
Mon-Fri 10-6
Sat 10-4
Visa/MC/S
This Ad Will Run Mon & Thurs
•Haircuts & Styling
•Hair Coloring (Free Highlighting Consultation)
•Multi-Color Highlighting
•Body & Facial Waxing
•For Both Men & Women
•Walk Ins Welcome!
Get it done right the first time!
Fall Semester Coupon Specials!
1/2 price facial waxing on Wed through December.
$1 off any service with this ad until 12/05
Only with this coupon
www.arensplace.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Who said Virginity isn't a laughing matter? National Lampoon's Adam & Eve. Opening in theatres November 4th. www.nationallampoon.com/adam&eve She's got it all. He's not getting any. Get Yours!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Looking for GO, Baduke, Weigi Players. New players welcome. Call 339-225-0537. 253-9873

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments, Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Civic DX Good condition CD Many new parts. $1699 obo 413-212-9384

EMPLOYMENT

Part-Time Workers Needed We are looking for part-time assistance with a variety of office and clerical tasks. Preferred candidates will work quickly and accurately and be able to work from 5pm-9pm on days that they work. Pay is $8.00/hour. For consideration, please call (413) 256-0444 for an application or mail resume to: National Evaluation Systems, Inc., Personnel Department, P.O. Box 226, Amherst, MA 01004-0226. Resumes may also be emailed to: personnel@nesinc.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Staffing Now, Inc. Needs Seasonal Workers! We are in need of 2 data entry clerks who are available for temporary assignments. One position is located in S. Deerfield and the hours are M-F from 6AM-2PM. The other is in Holyoke and it is M-F from 2PM-7PM. Both positions are paying $9 and will be starting immediately. Perfect solution to earn some extra $$ before the holidays! Call 413-529-7100 for immediate consideration. Staffing Now, Inc. www.staffing-now.com

Mystery Shoppers get paid to shop! Up to $150 a day. Training provided Call 1-800-690-1273

EMPLOYMENT

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience nees. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Aupair for my daughter, Eleven years old, to share home in Leverett, MA 10 min to UMass. Private room & semi-private bath, share kitchen in exchange for some childcare Call e:413-522-3175 h:413-548-9498

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8.00 Hr. 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location NO SALES! Night & wknd; shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

FURNITURE

Sealy Mattress Set KING $575.00 QUEEN $465.00 FULL $365.00 TWIN $195 Save 50% or more off store prices. For more details call 215-431-9584

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9902

TRAVEL

ACT NOW SPRING BREAKERS Book Early & Save! Free meals parties by 11-7. Lowest prices. Be a rep & TRAVEL FREE! Get the ultimate hookups with STA TRAVEL 413-256-1261

SPRING BREAK FROM $569 BAHAMAS, CANCUN, ACAPULCO, JAMAICA! FREE PARTIES, FREE DRINKS. Sign up early and save. Organize a small group and you travel FREE. Or become a CAMPUS REP and GET PAID COMMISSION on each trip sold. Call today and get started 1-800-GET-SUN-1

TRAVEL

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

WANTED

Pregnant? Bi-lingual Spanish couple waiting to adopt. Love nature, music, and animals. Will share these interests with your baby. Happy to share letters, pictures, and stay in touch. Call Brightside 24/7 and ask about Dawn and John. 1-877-777-7774 license #1465107

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen get back to work

Put UNH loss behind them, move to UD

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

There is a rare air hovering around the Pioneer Valley of late, but it has nothing to do with the sudden welcoming of warm November weather.

It has to do with the Massachusetts football team (6-2 5-1 Atlantic 10), which is coming off only its second loss of the season, its first home loss in its last home game.

Now, the Minutemen are about to embark on a three-week voyage that takes them from Delaware (4-4 1-4 A-10) on Saturday to Army and Hofstra in the following weeks to wrap up the 2005 regular season.

Since the 16-team field for the NCAA Division I-AA Tournament is decided by a panel of human judges, there is no telling what it may take for the Minutemen to qualify for postseason play, but it appears to be a safe bet that UMass will advance into the second season by winning two of its last three games.

And since there has never been an at-large bid given to a team with four losses, the Minutemen cannot afford to just win one of their final three battles.

But even before Army and Hofstra enter anyone's mind in the Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium locker room, the Minutemen are making sure they forget about the loss to UNH and move on with a full head of steam towards the Fightin' Blue Hens, who will be waiting at Delaware Stadium with 22,000-strong in support.

"We've just got to play UMass football and bounce back from last week when we didn't play that well," senior free safety Shannon James

See FOOTBALL on page 7

GAME DAY CENTRAL

No. 8 UMass	Delaware
(6-2 Overall 5-1 Atlantic 10)	(4-4 Overall 1-4 Atlantic 10)
Last Week 34-28 loss to UNH	Last Week 25-15 loss at Maine

Delaware Stadium - Newark, Delaware (22,000)
Kickoff: 1 p.m.

Television: CN8
Radio: UMass Sports Network - WRNX 100.9 FM Holyoke, flagship (Bob Behler: play-by-play; Matt Goldsteyn: color commentary, Mike Marzelli: sidelines)
UMass Student Radio - WMUA 91.1 FM Amherst (Marc Bertrand: play-by-play, Zach Claudio: color commentary)
Series: Delaware leads 23-4

KAREN SCHWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

UMass strong safety James Ihedigbo takes down UNH wide receiver Keith LeVan during Saturday's game between the two teams. UMass must move on after its loss to the Wildcats, and will play Delaware on Saturday.

First of final three on road

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

Throughout the next three weekends, the Massachusetts football team (6-2 5-1 Atlantic 10) will travel outside of the Bay State to cap off the 2005 regular season. Beginning with a trip to Delaware on Saturday, the Minutemen will travel a total of 1,254.23 miles and spend roughly 24 hours on a bus en route to their final three road opponents.

Although the team will journey to West Point, N.Y. to face Army on Nov. 12 and then to Hempstead, N.Y. in a match-up against Hofstra on Nov. 19, the Minutemen are more concerned with the significance of the contests than where they will be played.

"The field is still 100 yards long, two endzones, and there are two goalposts," UMass senior free safety Shannon James said. "We've still got to go out there and play."

After dropping the final 2005 regular season game at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium to conference foe New Hampshire on Saturday, the playoff hopes for UMass truly ride on the upcoming three games. Despite the daunting schedule, the Minutemen are honing in on making the most out of the 2005 season.

See ROAD TRIP on page 7

Eying the A-10 field

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

After a month of Atlantic 10 conference play, only four teams remain, and with the championship weekend looming overhead, it's time to get to know the competitors. In order, the final four are No. 20 Richmond, Temple, Massachusetts and Saint Joseph's, the same seeding as last year's tournament. For the fourth consecutive season, Richmond (13-5 7-0 Atlantic 10) comes in as the top seed in the tournament and will play fourth-seed St. Joe's (10-9 3-4 A-10) on Friday at 4:00 p.m. in Philadelphia. The remaining two teams, Temple (11-9 6-1 A-10) and Massachusetts (7-12 4-3 A-10) will square off at 2:00 p.m. Saturday.

Still Number One

For the fourth consecutive year, Richmond has won the regular season A-10 championship with an undefeated conference record, and once again holds the top seed in the A-10 tournament. Last year, the Spiders won the tournament in Amherst, defeating Temple 3-0 in the first round before knocking off tournament host UMass 3-1. The Spiders earned a spot in the NCAA tournament, but fell to No. 1 North Carolina 3-0 in the first round.

After falling out of the STX NFHCA National Coaches Poll for several weeks, Richmond recently regained a spot in the top-20 rankings by defeating No. 20 Virginia last Wednesday. The Spiders moved into the No. 20 spot to finish the regular season as the only nationally ranked team in the A-10. The team reached its highest spot in the rankings on Sept. 20, when it rose to No. 16 after being unranked the week before.

A big reason for the Spiders' success has been the play of senior goalkeeper Michelle Schwartz. Wearing the rare "00" on her jersey, Schwartz earned A-10 Player of the Week honors for the second time this season.

In the final week of the regular season, Schwartz recorded three straight shutouts, all on the road, including a 9-0 blowout against West Chester, a 1-0 victory over then-ranked Virginia and a 3-0 win over La Salle to close out the regular season.

COLLEGIAN / MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

UMass senior midfielder Patricia Borneo has scored three goals and tallied seven assists this season. UM will play Temple in the first round of the A-10 tourney.

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 7

Famous NYC Marathon runner to watch race from different side

By Fred Lief
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Grete Waitz knew she was feeling sluggish, only she didn't think much of it. After all, she had never been in the hospital and hadn't had a cold in 10 years. A stress fracture from running had been the worst of it.

"Then you go for a blood test, and three hours later I was told I had cancer," she said Wednesday. "It was like the roof was caving in."

Waitz spoke from a restaurant in Central Park just next to the finish line of the New York City Marathon. She won this race nine times. The 52-year-old Norwegian is linked to this romp through the city like no other runner since it was first held in 1970. Waitz will not be running Sunday, watching instead from a car leading the field, no doubt soaking in the cheers that will accompany her and hoping others can draw strength from her ordeal.

"This year is more speeial than ever," Waitz said. "When I was diagnosed in April, I didn't know what to expect. It's heen an unusual summer, to say the least."

Waitz started treatment in May and is still undergoing chemotherapy and radiation. On this day, sitting next to her older brother, she wore a black marathon cap (she says she still has her hair) and a black vest over an orange running shirt.

On the back of the shirt are the words: "Running for Grete Waitz." Among the some 37,000 runners in the race will be a contingent doing just what the slogan says.

Waitz was always lean during her running prime, her face sharply angled, and she looks much the same now despite the chemieal mix trying to attack the disease. She says she is not beset by nausea nor is she especially weak, although her sense of taste vanishes for a few days after treatment.

She had been running 40 miles a week before her diagnosis. Now she sticks to a treadmill, and on this morning (she gets up at 4:30 a.m. or 5 a.m.) covered seven miles at an eight percent incline. She insists she is doing fine but acknowledges there is a "long way to go."

"The doctors are optimistic; I'm optimistic. I'm crossing my fingers," she says, holding up her arms, "I will beat it."

Waitz has one of her sport's most imposing resumes. In addition to her New York triumphs, she won the London Marathon twice (1983, 1986), a world title (1983) and an Olympic silver medal (1984). All the countless miles of road work are now paying dividends in a different sort of test.

"I think being an athlete gives you an advantage," she says. "The physical fitness gives you the mind-set that you cannot quit. All those qualities help you get over it."

The cancer has changed her outlook, shaped her philosophy, sharpened her emotions. She says the little things no longer bother her. If her husband doesn't take out the garbage, well, she knows the world will not spin off course.

"It's changed my whole life," she says. "You go in one person and come out another."

Waitz has been in touch with sports' most famous cancer survivor, Lance Armstrong. She recalled sitting at her computer and being startled when a message popped up from the Tour de France great. Waitz has read his book and says that what he went through is "10 times worse" than what she is facing. They have exchanged e-mails.

"He said, 'You're an athlete, you're a tough lady,'" she says. "'You're going to beat this.'"

Waitz would have preferred not to go public with her condition, but she says that became impossible in her home country beeause of her celebrity. Her doctors in Norway confer with specialists in New York. She has deliberately refrained from saying what kind of cancer she has despite being pressed to do so.

"That's not my personality," she says. "I've always been a private person. ... I'll do that when I cross the finish line and win this race."

Leetch strains MCL

BOSTON (AP) Boston Bruins defenseman Brian Leetch will be out of action for one month because of a knee injury, general manager Mike O'Connell said Wednesday.

Leetch suffered a strained medial collateral ligament in his right knee Tuesday night when he collided with New York Islanders forward Shawn Bates during the second period of the Bruins' 4-3 overtime loss.

Leetch, who walked gingerly after the game wearing a small brace, was examined Wednesday by Dr. Bertram Zarins at Massachusetts General Hospital.

The 37-year-old defenseman, in his first season with the Bruins, had never had a knee injury since entering the NHL in 1988. His first occurred with about three minutes left in the middle period as he and Bates went for the puck, and collided.

Leetch spent his first 17-plus NHL seasons with the New York Rangers. The Bruins signed him to a one-year, $4 million contract this summer.

He has three goals and five assists in 14 games this season. In 1,158 regular-season games — all but 29 with the New York Rangers — Leetch has 245 goals and 759 assists.

Leetch ranks seventh on the career points list among NHL defensemen and sixth among American-born players at any position with 1,004.

Also Wednesday, the Bruins recalled defenseman Milan Jurcina and right wing Eric Nickulas from their American Hockey League affiliate in Providence.

Dillon's Ankle Missing Rest

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. (AP) — With the New England Patriots down to one healthy running back, Corey Dillon's injured ankle might not get much rest.

The Patriots hadn't planned

See INJURIES on page 7

What's THE SCORE

New England's Largest College Daily · Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Friday, November 4, 2005 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXIV Issue 41

'High-Risk' drinking rising within campus

By Megan Daley
Collegian Staff

Discussions about violence and alcohol use at the University of Massachusetts were the focus of yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting.

Associate Director of University Health Services Sally Linowski hosted the first presentation titled, "High Risk Drinking Among UMass Amherst Students." Linowski called this issue "a national concern" and presented several statistics about the effects of alcohol use at UMass.

Linowski also listed consequences of such drinking habits, including regret, blackout, injury, falling behind in school, arguments with friends, missing classes, unplanned sex and unprotected sex. Also discussed, were issues that alcohol use has on other students. Linowski said that students have complained of having to "baby-sit" drunk friends, having trouble sleeping or studying with the noise from drunken students, suffering property damage, unwanted sexual advances and sexual assault.

Linowski went on to discuss several measures taken by the university to combat alcohol use among students, including the implementation of programs such as Brief Alcohol Screening and Intervention for College Students (BASICS.) Linowski also encouraged the Faculty Senate to require students to visit mystudentbody.com, a website that offers a course on alcohol use, calling it "a cost-effective way to educate our students."

Jo-Ann Vanin, the associate vice chancellor for student affairs and dean of students also spoke about one reason for such alcohol problems at UMass. "Our students are now coming to campus with established drinking habits." Vanin also said that this alcohol culture contributed to 80 percent of violence on this campus.

"A clear and consistent policy of enforcement is necessary to combat drugs, alcohol and violence," said Vanin.

Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor agreed with this assessment, calling alcohol issues her "biggest challenge" with which to deal.

Vanin said that the university is also looking to combat drug and alcohol use by coordinating their efforts with those of Hadley, Amherst and UMass police. Residence Life has also met with landlords of large apartment complexes to discuss controlling student alcohol use.

"We're also seeking to involve parents as our partners," said Vanin, referring to the university policy to notify parents of student alcohol use after the second offense.

UMass police have also taken measures to combat drug and alcohol use. They bought a drug-sniffing dog and implemented a cadet program to increase uniform presence on campus.

See SENATE on page 2

ELIZABETH ARISTIZABAL/COLLEGIAN

Sally Linowski, Associate Director of University Health Services, along with SGA President Pavel Pavano expressed concern over the alcohol use of UMass students.

Higgins looks to return for seventh year

Stephanie Horton
Collegian Correspondent

On Tuesday, Nov. 8, Northampton voters will elect either Mayor Mary Clare Higgins, who is seeking re-election, or her challenger, Rick Feldman, as their next mayor.

Mayor Mary Clare Higgins is in her sixth year as mayor of Northampton. While the Daily Hampshire Gazette named Rick Feldman her toughest competition since 1999, the mayor feels that because she is so experienced, she is still the best choice.

"It's a complicated job. I was in city government for six years as a city counselor before I was mayor," said Clare Higgins, "I don't know how I would have dealt with those huge budget cuts had I not been a city counselor or knew how city government worked."

The mayor views dealing with the budget cuts as one of her most important accomplishments as mayor. She explained that over the last six years, she was faced with many budget cut challenges, which she managed to balance successfully.

However, Feldman does not see the last six years as prosperous for Northampton. "I look at the last 6 years as being crisis management," he said.

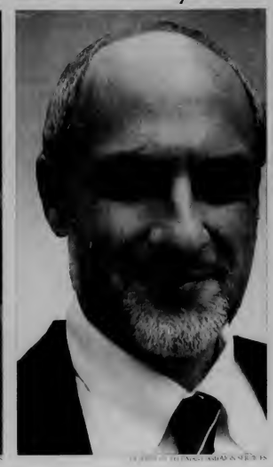
Feldman is focused on making a change in Northampton. His plans for the city include more economic development such as affordable housing and more job opportunities, better planning, making the streets safer and protecting open space for recreational use.

He explains that even though he has a limited political background, he is the best choice for mayor. "I don't feel like the city government has done what it needed to do, and I have the ability and the vision to get things done."

Smith College has plans to expand its engineering school, and many residents, including Feldman, have expressed disapproval of the way the city handled the project.

"I think the city led the residents and city property owners to believe that there was something to negotiate between them and Smith College, and while that was happening, the city was holding somewhat secret negotiations," said Feldman, "So my feeling is that if you're going to do something that involves the public, you should be out there from the beginning giving the public some information, and I don't think the city did that."

On the other hand, Mayor Mary Clare Higgins explains that the residents will not be harmed by this new project.



"By law, Smith College does not have to follow the regular residential zoning requirements. They have chosen to rebuild in that neighborhood and while they have been encouraged to look elsewhere, they're not interested," said Clare Higgins.

She continues with some better news about the project. "The college is going to replace every single housing unit that they take out with new units that are walking distance from downtown," she said.

Mayor Mary Clare Higgins believes that she should be re-elected, because she sees the last six years in Northampton as successful. On the other hand, Feldman plans to take his new vision and apply it to the future.

Mary Claire Higgins, who is seeking re-election, is currently in her six year as mayor of Northampton.

Northampton mayoral candidate, Rick Feldman, is considered to be Higgins toughest opponent since 1999.

Bush's approval ratings continue to plummet

By Tom Raum
Associated Press

WASHINGTON—President Bush's joh approval has fallen to the lowest level of his presidency amid worries over the Iraq war, a fumbled Supreme Court nomination, the indictment of one White House aide and uncertainty about another.

Concerned that the president has lost his footing, some influential Republicans are urging Bush to shake up his staff and bring in new blood.

A new AP-Ipsos poll found Bush's approval rating was at 37 percent, compared with 39 percent a month ago. About 59 percent of those surveyed said they disapproved.

The intensity of disapproval is the strongest to date, with 42 percent now saying they "strongly disapprove" of how Bush is handling his job — twice as many as the 20 percent who said they "strongly approve."

A year after his re-election, Bush's second term has been marred by rising U.S. casualties in Iraq, a failed attempt to restructure Social Seeurity, Hurricane Katrina missteps, rising fuel costs and his foreed withdrawal of the Supreme Court nomination of Harriet Miers.

In a case involving the exposure of a CIA agent married to an Iraq war critie, Vice President Dick Cheney's former aide, I. Lewis "Scooter" Libby, pleaded not guilty on Thursday in federal court to charges of obstruction of justiee, perjury and lying to investigators. The case casts a continuing cloud over Cheney and keeps Bush's closest adviser, Karl Rove, in legal jeopardy.

Republicans are worrying about losing their majorities in Congress in the 2006 elections and hope Bush can reverse his slide.

Several senior Republicans who are close to the White House and Rove say there has been a lot of talk inside and outside the White House about the need for him to leave, but they're picking up no indication from him or his associates that it's going to happen — at least anytime soon.

Neither Bush nor Rove has seemed to get the message, the Republicans say.

Democrats have kept up the attack. "The 2006 midterm elections will be our next opportunity to change the environment of corruption and incompetence in Washington," Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., said Thursday in a fundraising letter to Democrats. Reid has called for Rove's resignation and a "thorough house eleaning" at the White House.

In the AP-Ipsos poll, nearly one in five Republicans disapproved of Bush's handling of his joh, compared with nearly nine in ten Democrats. Nearly seven in ten independents disapproved

President George Bush, shown here in a press conference with Iraq Prime Minister Ibrahim al-Jaafari, has come under intense criticism within the American public, leading to his lowest approval ratings in years.

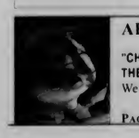
'BEST BUDDIES'

The "Best Buddies Club", one of UMass' newest editions, provides an environment intended for people who are intellectually disabled, giving their members a chance to have a one-on-one friendship with a UMass student.

The Gas Gauge

For the second week in a row, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian's weekly column, "The Gas Gauge" has found the Exxon station on Route 9 in Hadley to hold the lowest price for one gallon of regular gasoline around the University of Massachusetts eampus. Exxon dropped its price 11 cents from last week's recorded cost of $2.44 per gallon.

The Pride and Sunoco stations, located also on Route 9 in Hadley, held the second and third lowest prices with Pride's cost of $2.33 and Sunoco with $2.36.



The Mobil stations located in the Stop & Shop strip on Route 9 and on North Pleasant Street held the fourth and fifth highest prices, with the Shell Station on Route 9 owning the highest price between all of the recorded stations.

$2.33 Exxon, Stop and Shop strip, Route 9, Hadley
$2.35 Pride, Route 9, Hadley
$2.36 Sunoco, Route 9, Amherst
$2.36 Mobil, Stop and Shop strip, Route 9, Amherst
$2.43 Mobil, North Pleasant Street, Amherst
$2.45 Shell, Stop and Shop strip, Route 9, Amherst

—Dan O'Brien

The Exxon station, located on Route 9 in Hadley, held

ARTS & LIVING
"CHICKEN LITTLE" HITS THEATHERS.
We were there to see it first.
Page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION
UMASS STUDENT, VICTIM OF DRUNK DRIVING ACCIDENT, RECOVERS.
Driving while intoxiacted is never the answer.
Page 4

WEATHER
TODAY Cloudy, H66°, L44°
TOMORROW Partly Cloudy, H70°, L49°
SUNDAY Rain, H67°, L44°

SPORTS
TWO ON TAP
UMass hockey will play Providence twice this weekend.
Page 8

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael A. Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Cameron J. Woods
BUSINESS MANAGER Hiruk Shah
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherel Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerrs O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egavian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Matthew O'Rourke
COMICS EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Allison Edles
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
PHOTO EDITOR Kate Sachsenmaier
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
HUMAN RESOURCE Phil Smoller
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Nathan Chomsky
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mackenzie Isler
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Jones
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Daley
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Bellbeau
ASSISTANT PHOTO Elizabeth Caristi
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eric Athas
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Kristen LaCasse

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Michael A. Busack
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Elizabeth Caristi
COPY EDITOR
Ian Jones
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Ginny Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Sean Duram, Jeston Sussman

Campus Perspectives
What do you think about Parking Services?

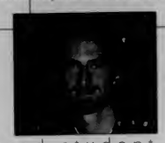
sophomore
Bio Chemistry major

I don't have a car, but I hear they make students park very far from their dorms.

Jennifer Nava

sophomore
Landscaper Architecture major

I think it's wrong to make students park so far from their dorms. They shouldn't allow freshmen to park on campus.



Melinda Pizzi

sophomore
Physics major

I hate parking services. I live in Van Meter and i have to park at the Mullins Center. I get towed all the time.

Kat Clemmey

grad student
Civil Engineering

I have a car but I didn't buy a permit because I'd rather use the bus — it's cheaper and easier.

Aaron Judge

Students sound off over room searches

SENATE from page 1

O'Connor also cited violence as an issue of concern on campus though, she says, statistics show that most violent crime has gone down in the past three years. O'Connor attributes this drop to programs like rape-aggression defense training and implementation of campus crime alerts which have yielded positive results each time they were issued.

Also present at the meeting were dozens of UMass students, hoping to make their voices heard about the possibility of room and bag searches being implemented at the university. Overall, the students at the meeting were against the searches, as was Pavel Payano, the president of the Student Government Association.

Payano is on the committee discussing the possibility of bag and room searches, a fact which, he says, makes him "uncomfortable." Payano agrees that drug and alcohol use are a serious problem that "we must all face together," but says that he thinks there are other ways of doing this rather than searching students' belongings.

Several students also felt that their opinions were not being held in regard by the faculty. One student, who identified herself as Caitlin, said that she preferred educating students about alcohol use rather than subjecting them to searches and encouraged members of the faculty senate to talk to their students about this issue and get feedback from them.

Payano also mentioned a possible panel discussion at an SGA meeting that would be open to students to further investigate and get feedback on the issue of room and bag searches.

Professor Richard Bogartz was pleased with the student turnout, saying "it's enlivening to the faculty

Mass. Mayor, accused of extortion, won't run for second term

By Adam Gorlick
Associated Press

CHICOPEE—Chicopee Mayor Richard Goyette said Thursday he was dropping out of the race for a second term. The decision comes two days after federal authorities charged him with extorting illegal campaign contributions and less than a week before the election.

"The charges against me have placed a cloud not only over my life and that of my family but I fear over the entire city," he said. "I must do what I can to lift that cloud, and withdrawing from my re-election effort is probably the place to start."

They were Goyette's first public remarks since his arrest. He delivered a short statement outside his City Hall office, then went back inside without taking questions. He did not make any comment about the charges.

Two members of the city's Board of Aldermen immediately criticized Goyette for not resigning immediately.

"It's totally inappropriate that he remain in this building," said board President Keith Rattell, who met with Goyette Thursday afternoon and was told by the mayor that he planned to serve out the remainder of his term, which expires in January.

"He should resign immediately," Alderman Bob Zygarowski said. "He cannot run this city."

The city clerk's office has said that it would be too late to take Goyette's name off the ballot in next week's election.

If Goyette were to end up with more votes than his opponent, lawyer Michael Bissonnette, he would be considered the mayor for the next two-year term unless he resigns, said City Clerk Nancy Mulvey. Under that scenario, the president of the Board of Alderman would then be elevated to mayor.

Bissonnette encouraged Chicopee voters to show up at the polls on Election Day to "send a message to the rest of Massachusetts that Chicopee is not a place for corruption."

Goyette, 36, was arrested Tuesday and charged with accepting $5,000 cash contributions from two business owners seeking favors from the city. An FBI surveillance video recorded him allegedly taking the kickbacks from the two men, who cooperated in the investigation.

He was released on personal recognizance, and a grand jury is expected to review the charges.

Chicopee is a working-class city of 50,000 just north of Springfield, and about 90 miles west of Boston.

One witness — identified by investigators as "Concerned Citizen 11" — is the owner of a towing company who said he gave Goyette the money to keep his contract with the city. The man said he made a $2,500 contribution to Goyette's 2003 campaign in hopes of securing the contract, investigators said.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

The Collegian is opening its doors and you're invited!

Come down and help yourself to refreshments on the Collegian. This is your chance to learn about the paper, and meet the staff!

Come give your input about the Collegian. We hope to see you there: All voices are welcome!

Tuesday November 8th
11 am - 4 pm
and
5 pm - 9 pm

The Empress Josephine
UPCOMING EVENTS

George Maynard Woodward and Captain William Lisbeth, The Progress of Josephine published 20 April 1809, etching hand colored, McGill University, Rare books and Special Collections, Folio N° 011

Conversation with Isabella Rossellini
Saturday, November 5
4:00pm
Stirn Auditorium, Amherst College
Discussing her role as Josephine in the film, Napoleon (A&E, 2002)

Film Series begins Thursday, October 20th!
Call 542-2335 for more information or visit us on the web www.amherst.edu/mead

Art & Royal Identity
MEAD ART MUSEUM AMHERST COLLEGE
ON VIEW THROUGH DECEMBER 18TH

GOLD'S GYM AMHERST
10 UNIVERSITY DRIVE
NEW MARKET CENTER PLAZA
413-549-6565
YOGA ~ PILATES ~ SPINNING
Largest Fully Equipped Yoga Studio in The Valley
Over 50 Weekly Scheduled Classes Including:
Body Sculpting, Bootcamp, Cardio Kickboxing, Circuit Training, Women on Weights, Core Strength, Kickbox, Love It & Lose It, Nia, Pump It Up!, Senior Wellness, Sports Conditioning, Stability Ball, Step Strip Aerobics, Ultimate Kickbox, and More!
20% OFF
A PRO SHOP PURCHASE With This Ad

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 2005

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

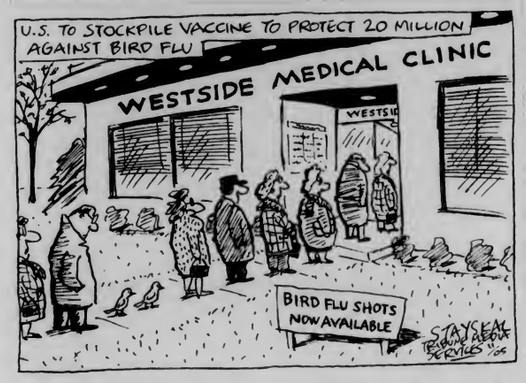
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Don't drink and drive, there are always other options

Imagine yourself walking on the sidewalk late one night coming home from a fun night of dancing at Club Rain. You were the designated driver, so you didn't drink, but you still had a great time with three of your friends. The next thing you know, you wake up in a hospital bed and the nurse tells you that you were hit by a drunk driver. That's what happened to Ciara Tran, a UMass student who was the victim of a hit-and-run on Sept. 24, 2004, reported Jamie Mason of the Collegian.

Year after year, we hear the stories about those who drive drunk and the chaos they create. Too many people think it is OK to drive if they've "only had a couple." Many brag to their friends about how they got "so wasted" the night before. We've all heard tales of our drunk friends smashing into cars, signs or whatever else is on the side of the road and driving away. What happens to those who actually hit a person and then split, you might wonder?

Only three months in jail, 100 hours of community service, a $500 fine and probation for three years. That was the punishment for Heather Winchester, the UMass student who hit Tran with her car and then drove off. Winchester "must also undergo substance abuse counseling, and pay for any of Tran's medical bills not covered by insurance," according to Mason.



How do authorities expect to defer people from drunk driving when the penalty for the hit-and-run of a person is so miniscule? Tran could have died and Winchester still lists "drinkin'" as one of her interests on her profile on facebook.com. Hopefully she doesn't get behind the wheel while intoxicated anymore, but who can say for sure?

UMass is known for its party-hearty students, but where do they draw the line? How many students on campus actually drink and drive and think nothing of it? Students need to realize what the consequences could be for their actions. Innocent people like Tran are injured and killed all the time because a person "over their limit" refused to call a cab instead of driving themselves home.

Picking a designated driver is not that hard, either, since most students go out in groups anyway. We need to realize that one night of going out and refusing to drink is not worse than ending someone's life. Caring about the lives of your friends and fellow human beings is much more important. Yes, peer pressure is difficult to deal with, but if you are secure with yourself and your morals, then it shouldn't be an issue. People won't stop hanging out with you because you're not drinking every time they do. It's not worth the risk to drink and drive. There's enough suffering in the world already. Why not take the necessary precautions to avoid causing it yourself?

Every student here is aware of what could happen once intoxicated and behind the wheel, yet so many still try to drive when they know they shouldn't. There are always other options. Don't be afraid to take the keys from a drunk friend who is trying to drive. How they're getting home should be a priority on everyone's mind. You might save a life.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Daily Collegian staff.

Learning through life

Jennifer Lane

What does it mean to walk on water? Not literally walking on water, as Jesus did in the many tales of his adventures and stories, but what does "walk on water" actually mean?

Earlier this week, I had to read an article about walking on water. The author, Derrick Jensen, was published in Vermont and the article was shown in my health class. The object was to get you thinking about what life means, and what it actually means to walk on water. Walking on water, or W.O.W., can be anything you want it to be, and whether it's miracles, doing the impossible or changing a few small problems or major dilemmas in your life, it's important to you. This got me thinking. Maybe we can all walk on water, and maybe we cannot. Some are, after all, more fortunate than others, right?

George Bush can walk on water. He can put our best friends and best friends' boyfriends, and our loved ones, and brothers and sisters in Iraq. Can these soldiers, the men and women who protect us everyday W.O.W, or are they sinking in the water because George Bush hasn't pulled them out of Iraq yet? George can W.O.W. because he has the power to control when they go and leave, but aren't they saving our lives without us actually seeing them do so, or are they being corrupted by our government? Are they W.O.W.; is George W.O.W? Everyone has his or her own opinions. No matter which way you look at it, they feel they're doing the right thing, and that's what life should be about. It should be about knowing what we want to do, and doing what we need to do.

W.O.W. might be something completely different. It could be as simple as "saving yourself" and realizing you don't want to be a doctor in the emergency room, but you would like to be a psychologist instead. It could be as simple as realizing that you don't know what you would like to do with the rest of your life, but you know you're going to keep learning until you figure it out.

W.O.W. can mean different things to different people. It doesn't have to be a miracle, or something miraculous. It just has to have meaning to you. If you're happy where you're working that could be W.O.W. If you're happiest taking care of your children, that's W.O.W. If you're happiness is brought down because you over extend yourself, you may not be able to W.O.W. the way you want. You may wish you could walk on water, and solve everyone's problems by always saying "yes." Sometimes saying "no" is the best way to W.O.W.

George Bush can walk on water. He can put our best friends and best friends' boyfriends, and our loved ones, and brothers and sisters in Iraq. Can these soldiers, the men and women who protect us everyday W.O.W, or are they sinking in the water because George Bush hasn't pulled them out of Iraq yet?

It could be that it's about furthering yourself. It's great to keep learning through life. It's great to get to listen to my 82-year-old friend Shirley talk about her past, and my four-year-old cousin Benjamin talk about his future. Every moment I turn a corner, I learn something new; as my grandmother always says, "You learn something new every day," and I do, and I have, and I will. Just last week I learned that many Jewish families name their children after someone who has passed away, and you could have rented a wedding dress for two dollars in the early days of World War II. I also found out that Play-Dough doesn't smell good, the new puppy in our family "bites your hands a little, but only sometimes" and that Aunt Brenda has bulldozers in her front yard.

No matter who I talk to I learn something new, and I am able to further myself. Learning isn't always about going to undergraduate school, law school or medical school. Learning has to be about you, and your ability to want to know the truth and to want to know what your world is all about. It's about learning new religions even if you're strong in your faith, and trying sky diving even if it's expensive and intimidating.

In educating yourself you can create small miracles, which will eventually lead to bigger miracles. If Benjamin hadn't told me about the bulldozers in my Aunt Brenda's front yard I may have never known. If Shirley hadn't told me about her life I may not have been interested in learning about a new religion.

You never know where you will find your education, your purpose, your pride or your strength. But someday you'll W.O.W. and breathe deeply because you know you're alive, learning and sharing your happiness with others. If you share and live and love, people will always be with you. Walking on water is only difficult when you're looking down, so keep looking up even when you trip – someone will be there to catch you when you fall.

Jennifer Lane is a Collegian columnist.

Democratic 'politricking'

Gil Jenkins

On Tuesday, Senate Democrats finally "sacked up" as some of us cruder types say. For the first time in my recent memory, if only for one day, a clear, political and moral victory was scored by the beleaguered party. In an unusual and savvy move, Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid (D-Nev.) invoked the little used rule 21 of the Senate, calling for a closed session to debate why the investigation into Bush's manipulation of prewar intelligence had been effectively ignored by the Senate Intelligence Committee. Clearly, the Democrats' move was timed to coincide with the news on Friday that Vice President Cheney's chief of staff, Scooter Libby, had been indicted for lying to a grand jury and obstructing justice in the investigation over a conspiracy to discredit anyone who would challenge the administration's prewar intelligence.

Strategically and politically, this uncharacteristic action proved its obvious brilliance, for it occurred on the same day that Bush was revamping his bird flu fear factor diversionary plan. It also occurred one day after Republicans grabbed headlines with the Supreme Court nomination of Judge Alito. Even with these calculated dog wagging maneuvers by the Republican spin machine, Democrats got creative and set the debate. Kudos to Democrats for this valiant political play, but I'm pessimistic that they'll do it again with consistency.

Before I rant any further on the Democrat's inadequacies, Republicans should be scolded thoroughly as their inadequacies are of paramount importance. As frustrating as the Republican's whining about the Senate closure was, it was also a little amusing to see these power brokers squirm. Sen. Frist, Republican majority leader of the Senate, called the move a "stunt" and a "slap in the face" to the Republicans who control the body.

"The United States Senate has been hijacked by the Democratic leadership," said Frist. "It shows the Democrats use scare tactics. They have no principles, they have no convictions, and they have no ideas." Hmm, a political stunt, Dr. Frist? What do you call incorrectly diagnosing Terri Schiavo's vegetative state during your party's call for emergency legislation to prolong the life of this suffering, brain dead woman? Now that's what I call a slap in the face.

Now, it's a truism that politicians play politics, which is part of their job frankly, but I think more people would prefer it if these political "stunts" were focused on something much more imperative to our country, like, say, assigning accountability for the bloody mess in Iraq.

"The United States Senate has been hijacked by the Democratic leadership," said Frist. "It shows the Democrats use scare tactics. They have no principles, they have no convictions and they have no ideas."

Now I could go on and on about Republican corruption, hypocrisy, tyranny and secrecy, but to be honest it's hard to get a hold on all of it coming out. So let's get back to those marginal Democrats

As recent polls suggest, like many Americans I'm obviously dissatisfied with Republican leadership in government, but conversely I'm not any more confident about Democrats in government. How can this dichotomy exist when Republicans are clearly bankrupting this country's time honored values and standards? I'm not an expert here, but let me offer a few musings. Perhaps when Dr. Frist says something like "Democrats have no conviction," though I cringe to say, he's right on some level.

Moreover, whenever Democrats get organized and score a political point, they do it with the same vulnerable players, the players that lack conviction. Let me elaborate further. While I can certainly appreciate Sen. Reid taking a stand, now it's too late. He lacks the credibility. Reid is a guy who voted for the war like many other Democrats. It will always weaken his point, as it very well should. Being "duped" into war is not much better than lying about it.

Obviously the Democratic Party continues to elevate these lukewarm, poll-watching liberals to positions of relative power. Why are people like Dick Durbin, (the crabby Nazi analogist), Nancy Pelosi (the shrill Californian) and Hillary Clinton (who acts more and more like a neo-con everyday) our Democratic spokespeople? Why can't we see more of the Barak Obamas, Evan Bayhs, Rahm Immanuels and Russ Feingolds? These are guys right out of central casting for the West Wing. They posses the kind of conviction, integrity and passion that Republicans say we lack and Americans wish we had.

The midterm election in 2006 offers a unique chance for Democrats to steer this country away from the abusive leadership we currently have, but they're never going to get to that point by invoking obscure Senate rules every once in a while. Between now and January is a crucial time. If they don't unveil positive progressive policy in this time period, then they've shot themselves in the foot.

Any plan or "contract with America" that Democrats present after the President's State of the Union in January will be viewed as the usual, a tepid response by a group of wimpy liberals.

Let me end with a football analogy here, because baseball analogies are just so trite. Democrats need a more aggressive offensive, not just a contained defense. Moreover, the main offensive weapons on this team, the quarterback, running back and wide receivers, need to be benched and replaced with passionate, talented and capable up-and-comers. I wish Democrats the best; I think America wishes them the best, because we sure need them in these dark days of our country.

Gil Jenkins is a Collegian columnist.

Tourist attraction destroyed

Benjamin Duffy

The bulldozers and demolition crew came at 4:01 a.m., hoping to avoid a scene. Publicity was not desired.

The place is Checkpoint Charlie, in the German capital of Berlin. At one time, it was one of the few gates in the Berlin Wall where citizens could, with the governments' permission, travel between the two sections of the divided city. Until this July, the U.S. Army checkpoint was a museum dedicated to the East-West standoff, and more importantly, a memorial of more than 1,000 crosses to honor those who died under the communist German Democratic Republic (GDR).

Why would Berlin tear down one of its most popular tourist attractions? Chalk it up to an odd alliance between far-left Berlin politicians and a West German bank. The Checkpoint Charlie Museum stood on private property, leased by a bank to the museum caretakers. The bank wanted its land back, and the city government of Berlin was all for it. Normally, such a site would have been designated as a historical site a long time ago and made into public property, but there was no rush to buy Checkpoint Charlie. In fact, the city couldn't wait to get rid of it.

The city council is dominated by the left and far-left German parties, the SPD and PDS. The PDS, for all practical purposes, is the communist party directly descended from the old SED party that once ruled East Germany with an iron fist. Those 1,000 crosses that once stood at the checkpoint were a monument to the victims of a government that many PDS members once served and adored. It's a thorn in their side.

Flying over the Checkpoint is the American flag, something that must have really irked Berlin's communists. The crosses represented the victims of communism, victims that old GDR loyalists don't want remembered.

Of course, you'll never hear it phrased that way. The city government has denied that it has airbrushed out a significant site simply because it offended the politics of angry communists. According to the Berlin Senate for Urban Planning, it was afraid that Berlin was becoming a "Disneyland" version of its former self. Also, they stressed that the GDR dictatorship "cannot be equated with the atrocities of the Third Reich."

Both arguments are almost too silly to debate. Mickey Mouse was conspicuously absent from Checkpoint Charlie. It was a solemn memorial to those who died at the hands of a brutal regime, not a Southern California theme park. No resemblance there, whatsoever.

What does the Third Reich have to do with anything? The statement seems to suggest that honoring the victims of communist oppression would somehow make people forget the victims of national socialist oppression. We can remember both.

Was the GDR as oppressive as Hitler's Germany? Certainly not. Standing beside the Fuehrer himself, the East German dictator-for-life Erich Honecker is a minor villain. Nonetheless, he was a very bad man. After the reunification of Germany, Honecker was tried for high treason and 192 counts of murder. Those were the 192 people who were shot, on his orders, trying to flee over the wall. His trial was never completed. Sick with cancer, Honecker was found unfit for trial and died in Chile in 1994.

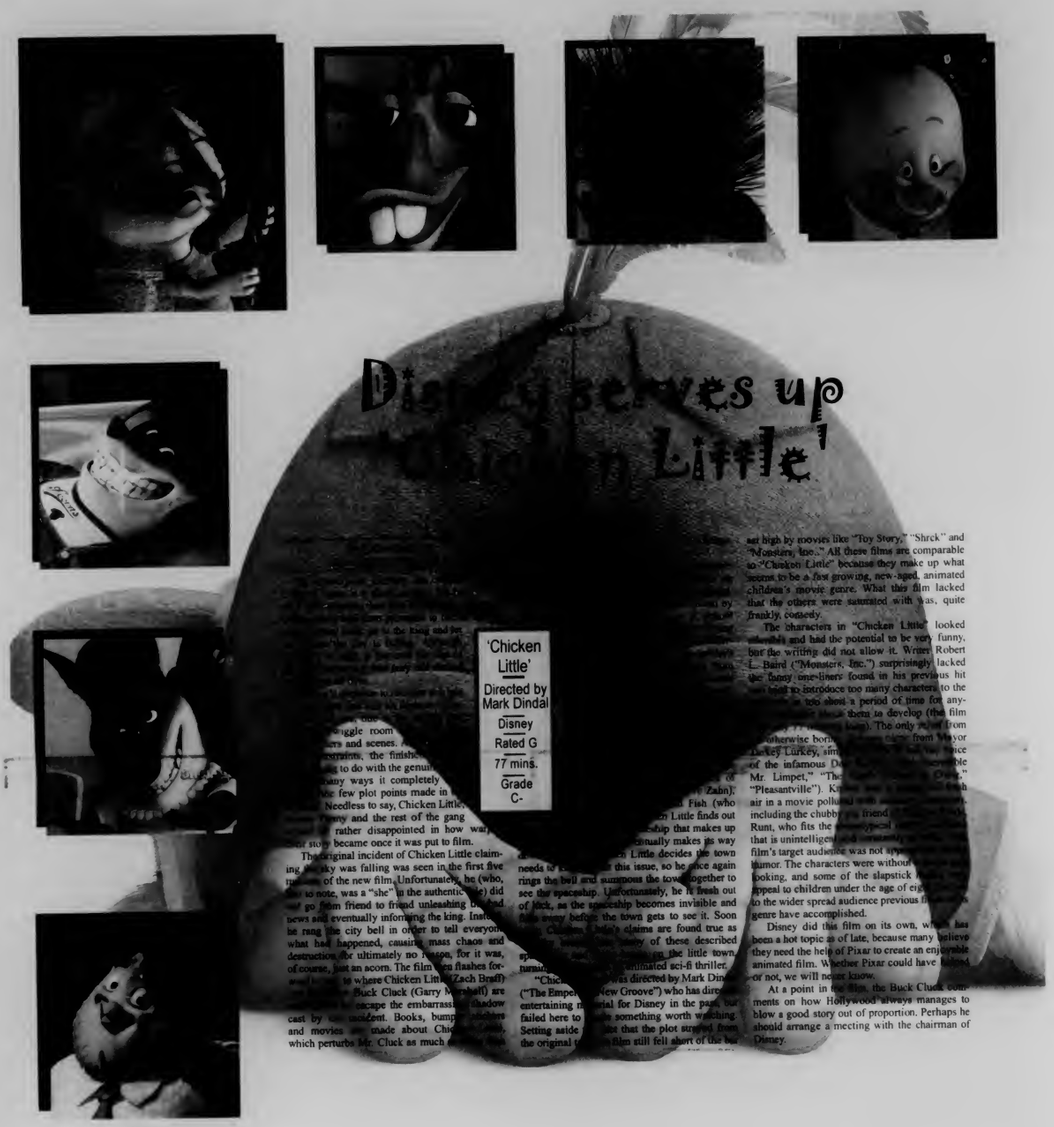
The former GDR had many more victims. Stories of careers sabotaged, families torn apart and people who magically vanished off the street were not unusual. The East German secret police (the Stasi) may have been the most comprehensive domestic intelligence service in the world. They had eyes and ears in every tavern, factory, church and school in the whole country. It is estimated that the Stasi had one informer for every fifty citizens.

Stasi men were avid record keepers. In fact, during the fifty-year lifespan of the organization, the Stasi assembled more files, mostly on its own people, than all recordkeeping in Germany compiled since the Middle Ages. In the last days of the regime, the Stasi went into a file-shredding frenzy, starting with the most sensitive files. When they had burned out more than one hundred shredders, they began to tear up files by hand. There were too many secrets.

The Stasi failed to destroy all, or even most, of its records. Today, East German citizens can read their own files, if they still exist. Questions are answered. Many now know why they didn't get that job, didn't get into that university, were followed by that suspicious black car for six months. Many more are now finding out about what happened to old Uncle Otto who mysteriously died in Stasi custody.

Checkpoint Charlie was destroyed this July, despite protestors and former victims who chained themselves to the crosses. The Germans lost an important artefact of their history. No, it had nothing to do with the "Disney-fication" of Berlin, nor honoring Holocaust victims. These are smokescreens. The real reason that Checkpoint Charlie was destroyed is that some people didn't like what it stood for.

What did it stand for? It reminded us of a certain period of time, the Cold War, and it reminded us of the West's eventual victory in that war. Flying over the Checkpoint is the American flag, something that must have really irked Berlin's communists. The crosses represented the victims of communism, victims that old GDR loyalists don't want remembered.



The Germans have a lot of chapters in their history that they would like to forget. Wisely, they usually choose not to. The German people have worked hard never to forget the victims of the Third Reich. But for some reason, some Germans want the crimes of the GDR forgotten. I hope, for the German people, that they don't let the minority among them black out such an important part of their national history.

Benjamin Duffy is a Collegian columnist currently on exchange in Germany.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 2005 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

COURTESY DISNEY ENTERPRISES

Australian songwriter, Ben Lee brings the Down Under to Noho

By Dave Pessah
Collegian Staff

At the age of 26, Ben Lee is a music industry veteran. Lee began his career in 1993 at age 14 as the front man for teen punk rockers, Noise Addict. Solo at 16 years-old, he has since released five unique albums varying in style from jazz, to acoustics, to electronica.

Born in Sydney, Australia, Lee is constantly shipping himself to overseas venues. On Tuesday, Nov. 8, Northampton's Iron Horse will be his destination.

Lee already has had a career worthy of a VH1 "Behind the Music" special. He received praise from critics, label heads, the Beastie Boys and Sonic Youth as a child prodigy. He also dated Claire Danes when she was the "it" girl. He lost both. He wrote the "breakup" album. He collaborated with Ben Folds and Ben Kweller as (how original) The Bens. Neither gained him back the praise he originally had. He started his own record label, Ten Fingers Records, and began an acting career in independent Australian films. He's back on the up-swing now with his 5th album, "Awake is the New Sleep," to prove that the once boy wonder became the man.

Ben Lee
Iron Horse
Tues. Nov. 8
7 p.m.
$17 at door

"Awake is the New Sleep" is an album "waking up," Lee says. Whatever that means, the songs on the album cover everything from desire to debt collectors. VH1 called it an album of "existential pop songs" and "the strongest album of his career." On "Apple Candy," he's the best friend who doesn't get the girl as he sings, "I want to know what he knows," and "I want to touch what he touched," to her.

"Close I've Come" finds him lamenting that he's still "far away." On songs like "Get Gotten" and "Begin," he seems to have found the girl of his dreams but she hasn't caught on yet, with lyrics like, "I want to get you. So get gotten." Every song is sung with an air of optimism and lightheartedness that differentiates his from many of his singer-songwriter peers. It's in this "no worries" attitude that you can feel his Australian roots.

In Australia, Lee is a local legend. "Awake is the New Sleep" won him three ARIAs – Australian Recording Industry Awards – for Single of the Year ("Catch My Disease"), Best Independent Release (on Ten Fingers Records) and Best Male Artist. Lee has yet to receive this type of notoriety here in states. This tour is his present attempt to attain it.

The Iron Horse crowd should expect many things come Tuesday. Lee tours often, and has been noted as a master of between song banter. He's been known to joke back and forth with crowds in intimate venues (like the Iron Horse) and play covers of the latest hit songs. He also has a wealth of material to draw upon. His five albums have produced such gems as "Cigarettes Will Kill You," "My Guitar" and "Dirty Mind." With more material than most recent bands, who knows what he will play, but it's sure to be good.

COURTESY JEFF KOSE/ROCKPRESS

Australian Ben Lee is the youngest singer/songwriter to make an impression on Australian music. He has just released his album, "Awake Is the New Sleep."

Samus rolls her way to another hit with "Metriod Prime Pinball"

The Game Room
Carlos Cruz

'Metroid Prime Pinball'
Nintendo DS
Publisher: Nintendo
Developer: Fuse Games
Action

In the past few years, we have seen many of Nintendo's most beloved intellectual properties appear in titles outside of their own genres. It all started in the mid-'90s when the Mario gang hopped on to some go-karts in "Super Mario Kart," and that franchise has spawned four sequels. With the release of the Nintendo 64, fans were treated to the now legendary "Super Smash Bros.," a fighting game featuring all the popular Nintendo characters from Mario to Link and from Donkey Kong to Yoshi.

It seems as though Nintendo is diversifying their franchises to appeal to wider audiences, which is a good thing, seeing as Nintendo is in a distant third to its competitors in the video game wars. No one is saying that any of these attempts have been bad. In fact, most Nintendo spin-off games have sold quite well because of the cartoonish nature of the Nintendo roster. But not all of the usual Nintendo players are cartoony. Link from "The Legend of Zelda" makes appearances in the "Smash Bros." games as does Samus Aran from the "Metroid" series. This is expected of them, because the game is a fighter and they are worriers.

Could a virtual pinball game featuring everyone's favorite bounty hunter be any good? Yes and thank God it is, because Metroid fans' patience is wearing thin for the release of the eagerly anticipated Nintendo DS game: "Metroid Prime Hunters." It is about time we got to see Samus on the DS in something besides a stupid demo.

Now the concept of "Metroid" as a pinball game sounds silly, but the people at Fuse have managed to make an enjoyable game out of an otherwise silly idea. "Metroid Prime Pinball" hasn't been released yet, but the Game Room got a hold of a full copy for review and was very impressed with the product. The game takes all the familiar settings and characters from "Metroid Prime" and implements them into a pinball world. All the maps from "Metroid Prime" have been converted into gorgeous looking pinball tables with tons of hidden passageways and minigames.

You begin with two playable tables and unlock more as you complete certain tasks at each table. The tasks are things like slamming into the occasional Metroid that wonders onto the screen or accomplishing minigames that you uncover by activating certain objects or discovering hidden pathways. The games include things like destroying wave after wave of enemy creatures or collecting certain items that may be lying across the table. One neat minigame that "Metroid" fans would love is the climbing mini-game, which is a tribute to the climbing feature in the 8 and 16-bit versions of the game. You activate the game by uncovering a passage that leads you to the climbing screen in which Samus unrolls herself, and you have to make her jump from wall to wall by hitting the corresponding L and R buttons.

Another way of unlocking new areas is by defeating bosses. Many of the memorable bosses from "Metroid Prime" make appearances in this game, so keep an eye out for your favorite one.

Now, listen up, this game is hard. You should expect to be frustrated many times over. This is a pinball game, so chance and luck are big factors as to your success in this game. The tilt feature can help you even the odds, though. This feature requires you to physically move the table when you notice your Morph Ball Samus getting close to danger. You move the table by dragging your thumb across the bottom screen in the direction you want the ball to go. This is only a small shift in motion, but it can get you out of tight spot.

The game also features wireless multiplayer, but seeing as the game hasn't been released and the Game Room only got one copy, it wasn't able to be reviewed.

"Metroid Prime Pinball" also comes with a rumble pack for your DS. Take that, PSP. It isn't exactly the greatest rumble ever, but it definitely adds to the fun. It is just a Game Boy Advance cartridge that you put into the corresponding slot. There is no servo inside that vibrates. All it does emit a really low pitch sound that kind of vibrates the system. So far, it only works with "Metroid Prime Pinball," but hopefully more developers will incorporate it to other games.

"Metroid Prime Pinball" is a very fun game that deserves some of your time, especially if you are a fan of the franchise, but even if you aren't, it is a pretty original pinball game. Pick this game up if you have the chance. As for Nintendo, finish "Metroid Prime Hunters" already.

Above is Samus Aran from "Metroid Prime." The new "Metroid Prime Pinball" combines characters from "Metroid Prime" and the pinball world into one challenging game.

Medeski, Martin and Wood explode before your very eyes

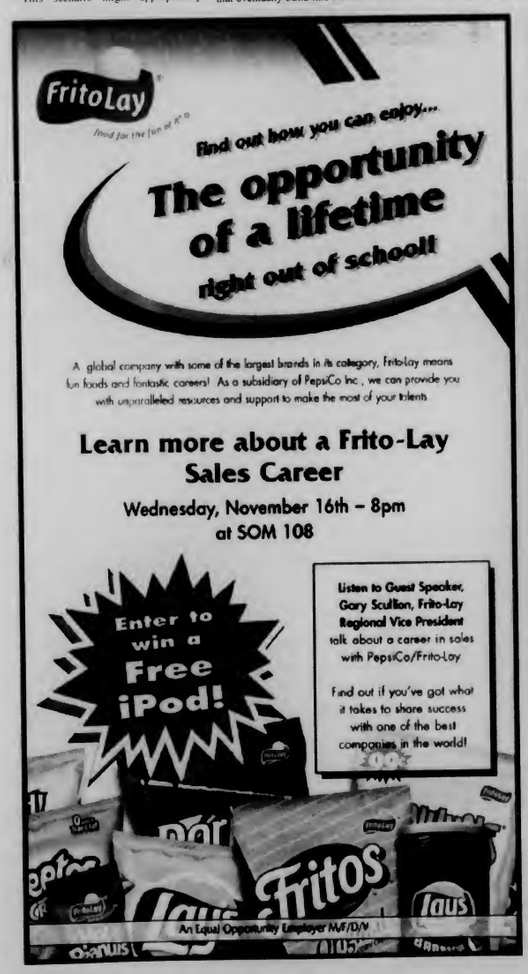
By Nicholas Brown
Collegian Staff

Close your eyes and imagine that during a cool summer's eve you might find yourself looking upon a bridge that rests oh so precariously above Funky Town, and all is quiet. You can hear the subtle sounds of a community making its way towards the ambient embrace of slumber. Then, all of a sudden, you can hear a train roaring down the tracks and it is clearly picking up speed. The train reaches the bridge, it derails and the ensuing chaos somehow results in the illegitimate love child of cosmic funk and the ethereal soundscapes of jazz.

This scenario might appropriately describe the birth of Medeski, Martin and Wood. For those less inclined to imagine ridiculous images randomly associated with music, Medeski, Martin and Wood, otherwise known as MMW, are enthusiastically navigating unknown territory in the world of "un-jazz."

Medeski, Martin & Wood
Pearl Street
Sat. Nov. 5
8:30 p.m.
$25 at door

What MMW does that really sets them apart from the league of ordinary bands is explode. They don't always come on stage and blast the audience with a barrage of sounds. Sometimes they do. Sometimes they creep into your head with mellow, jazzy beats and whimsical melodies that eventually build into a sonic leviathan. Then, at the drop of a hat, they fall back into something resembling that dream you had last night where you could walk through walls.



The band is comprised of three extremely unique characters. John Medeski tickles the ivories like jazz masters of old with the eerie flare of an outspoken poet, while Billy Martin drops funky jazz beats on, around and in between every note with frightening precision and Chris Wood slinks around the double bass like a burglar on the prowl.

Exploding onto the scene in the early '90s, MMW have broken countless rules in search of something completely new yet eerily familiar. Born out of the subterranean New York jazz scene, they all knew something special was going one warm summer night in '91 when they first jammed together.

The sounds of Medeski, Martin and Wood are picturesque. The tri-toned textures are always colorful, exploring dynamic interplay in a similar fashion to the way Van Gogh paints. Van Gogh's images are always familiar, but have a dreamlike quality that makes them almost more real than our waking life.

Every member of the band represents a cornerstone of this very unique and harmonic cosmic burp. Everyone shines, sometimes together, sometimes individually, but never apart. They listen to each other, very intently, keeping their music refreshingly responsive and genuinely inspired. Medeski, Martin and Wood have established themselves honestly. Never stagnant, these guys will keep any music aficionado delighted.

This Saturday, Medeski, Martin and Wood will blast their way into Northampton at Pearl Street for an evening of funky treats that will leave every mouth watering and booty shaken for weeks to come. If you're not already familiar with these guys, you now have the chance to witness something miraculous. If you miss out, you will be doing yourself a disservice.

Two on tap for UM

HOCKEY from page 8

much maligned area of the game for the Minutemen over the last two weeks, as they have failed to convert on their last 18 attempts.

As a result, Cahoon is tinkering with his two extra-man units.

The first line will feature defensemen Mike Kostka, who scored UMass' lone goal last weekend, and Mark Matheson playing the point up top, and forwards Matt Anderson, P.J. Fenton and Chris Capraro – who has showcased several flashes of highlight material early on – rotating down low.

The second line will start its attack from the blue line, where forward Stephen Werner and defenseman Marvin Degon will be stationed. For now, Cahoon has forwards Matt Burto and Alex Berry playing near the crease, among another winger.

"We've broken up the first unit and combined it into two units to try to get more compatibility," Cahoon said. "We're not being productive so we've got to approach it a little differently."

The other side of the special teams could make or break this weekend for either team.

Providence's power play has accumulated nearly one-third of its total offense this season, picking up six of the team's 19 goals. The UMass penalty kill, completely revamped by new assistant coach Red Gendron, has nullified 25 of its opponents' 28 power play opportunities (an .893 clip) and even picked up a shorthanded goal.

KARIN WEIN/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore defenseman Mike Kostka will look to take down Providence this weekend. UMass will play Providence tonight and Saturday night as well.

"We're going to have to continue doing what we've been doing," Cahoon said. "Apply a lot of pressure, seal off passing lanes that they like to use and try to restrict the zone entry to a greater degree than maybe they would like so they have less time to set up the power play."

Atlantic 10 competition stiff

A-10 from page 8

reached its highest spot in the rankings on Sept. 20 when it rose to No. 16 after being unranked the week before.

A big reason for the Spiders' success has been the play of senior goalkeeper Michelle Schwartz. Wearing the rare 00 on her jersey, Schwartz earned A-10 Player of the Week honors for the second time this season.

In the final week of the regular season, Schwartz recorded three straight shutouts, all on the road, including a 9-0 blowout against West Chester, a 1-0 victory over then ranked Virginia and a 3-0 win over La Salle to close out the regular season and clinch the top seed in the A-10.

On the season, Schwartz set a school record with a 0.73 goals against average, starting all 21 games for the Spiders. She also recorded a total of six shutouts, and allowed just three goals in seven conference games this year.

HOME FIELD ADVANTAGE

Holding the No. 2 seed in the tournament, Temple will be hosting the event at Geasey Field, where it plays its home games. The Owls will be making their third straight appearance in the A-10 tournament, and will look to improve on last year, when they were eliminated by Richmond 4-0.

The past two years, the Spiders have knocked the Owls out of the tournament, in the first round last year and in the championship game in 2003. However, if they wish to get revenge this year, it will have to come in the second round on Saturday, as Temple faces No. 3 Massachusetts in the first round.

Temple holds the second best record in the conference at 6-1 with its only loss coming to, of course, Richmond. The Owls started off slow, losing six straight after winning their season opener, but since then they have come alive. The Owls have put up win streaks of three, four and three, including the final three games of the regular season, and are 10-3 since starting 1-6. They will look to carry that momentum into the A-10 tournament this weekend.

SNEAKING IN

Rounding out the final four is Saint Joseph's, which will go up against top seed Richmond in the first round. The Hawks have fallen off recently, and backed into the playoffs, losing their last two games to conference foes Rhode Island and Temple. After beginning the season 7-3 overall, including three straight wins to finish that span, the Hawks have dropped six of their final nine games, finishing under .500 against A-10 opponents.

St. Joe's earned a playoff berth by way of a head-to-head tie breaker with St. Louis, who also finished the season 3-4 in-conference. The Hawks defeated the Billikens in St. Louis 2-1, allowing them to sneak into the A-10 tournament with the last playoff spot available.

Season on the line for UMass

SOCCER from page 8

to happen is not…it can happen because anything can happen, but I think the odds are in our favor that Temple will split and so will Charlotte and if that happens then we'll move ahead of them."

It is a monstrous obstacle for the Minutemen to overcome. And even if they end up tied for the last spot, the A-10 has installed new rules this year involving tie breakers. In past years, the winner of a tie breaker was determined by head-to-head competition. But under the new rules, the winner of a tie breaker has to have the best record against the common opponents of the two teams. So even if the Minutemen tie La Salle, or any other team for that matter, in the last spot, their record against other opponents would determine who gets in and who goes home.

It is a complicated situation, and Koch and company are trying to stay focused on Fordham and St. Bonaventure. They have a great record against both teams in recent years, as the Minutemen haven't lost to Fordham since 1998, going 6-0 in their last six meetings. UMass has been as impressive against the Bonnies in the all-time series, with a 13-2 record.

It is safe to say that the season is on the line this weekend for the men's soccer team. It has done well to get to this position: to be contending for a playoff berth after a roller-coaster season and a rough start against conference opponents. The Minutemen haven't lost in their last four games, and with a couple of wins this weekend they will have done all they can down the stretch.

It's Fordham tonight then the Bonnies on Sunday and, according to Koch, his team "really can't think about anything else."

Minutewomen prepare for tourney

F. HOCKEY from page 8

back to the A-10 championship game for the second year in a row, and if they can pull off a win against Temple, they will face the winner of No. 1 seed Richmond and No. 4 seed Saint Joseph's.

Although the Minutewomen are 6-3 all-time against the Owls in A-10 tournament play, coach Shea is staying focused solely on Temple, and is not looking forward to see who they could play in the finals, if they advance.

"We know what we have to do," Shea said. "We have already played these teams. We know what they all have to offer. Our emphasis and our emotions have to go into playing this game. We are right where we want to be as a team, and we control our own destiny. We are playing for a championship. It is about us playing Temple, and it is about us executing our game plan and performing at our highest level."

Exhibition game will be a test

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team will play an exhibition game against Simon Fraser University tonight at 7 p.m. at the Mullins Center. It will be the first and only exhibition game that UMass will play before opening up its season on the road against Delaware on Friday, Nov. 18.

While tonight's game is only an exhibition, UMass coach Marnie Dacko knows that it will be a chance for her team to get ready for the regular season.

"It serves as a barometer as to where we are and what we need to work on," Dacko said. "It is a game in which we will see where we really stand. It will be a learning tool. Hopefully we can come out and execute our game-plan, but it will really be an opportunity for everybody to get some game legs, and get rid of those game jitters."

The Minutewomen have four starters returning, and while three-quarters of their scoring from last season is still here, the Maroon and White will be a team to be reckoned with.

UMass looks to have a successful season in 2005-06, as it has been predicted to finish sixth in the new-look 14-team Atlantic 10 Conference. For some, the success has already started. Sophomore Pam Rosanio was named to the A-10 Preseason All-Conference Second Team yesterday. Rosanio made a big splash on the team last season and was named to the A-10 All-Rookie team.

Tonight's game will not be a walk in the park for the Minutewomen as they face a Simon Fraser team that has won 46 of their last 47 games. That is not a misprint. The Clan had won 45 consecutive games until they lost to Thompson Rivers University on Saturday. Simon Fraser is the defending CIS National Champions.

It is two weeks until the Minutewomen's season opener, but senior Katie Nelson knows that tonight's game is against a very good team from Canada, and will serve as a stepping stone for the whole team.

"It is an important game," Nelson said. "We are trying to get off on the right foot. It is going to be a good opportunity to see where we are this early in the season. We can look to see what we can improve on, and work on it in the next two weeks."

Maroon and White seek repeat

By Joey White
Collegian Staff

After coming off of a victory to start the season last weekend, the Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team looks to repeat on Sunday as it travels to Southern Connecticut State University. Last weekend, the Owls defeated Springfield College 125-112.

Last year the Minutemen defeated the Owls 189-106, led by Dylan Smith who is long gone now due to graduation. This year, the Maroon and White will have to look somewhere else to guide them to a victory over the Owls.

"Nothing is an automatic 'W,' they're a quality team with a quality coach," UMass coach Russ Yarworth said. "We have to apply the things we've worked on in practice."

One of those things that Yarworth is referring to is the relay take-offs. Last weekend against Stony Brook, the Minutemen finished second, fourth and fifth in the 200-yard medley relay and first, fourth and fifth in the 400-yard free relay. Yarworth felt that they were a little slow.

Although Yarworth felt that they were sluggish on the relay take-offs, he still believes that they "did really well against Stony Brook" and looks at this meet the same way he looked at last weekend's meet, and that is to get his swimmers used to competing.

"You always expect captains to be the leaders," Yarworth said. "They have definitely led the team."

This is definitely true about junior Greg Chartier, who was appointed with the captain title this season. Chartier earned a first place showing in the 500-yard free, 200-yard individual medley, and was on the relay team in the 400-yard free relay.

The Minutemen will be without freshman Andy Berthaume this weekend due to a knee injury, and junior captain Jake Hogue is questionable.

The Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team is also coming off of a victory last weekend against Stony Brook and will also be traveling to Southern Connecticut State University on Sunday. The Owls came in second out of three teams last weekend at Central Connecticut State University.

The Minutewomen beat the Owls in their meeting last season in Amherst 171.50 to 122.50. Last year the Maroon and White were led by now seniors Aimee Bourassa, Kelly Hoffrage, Melissa Stango and now junior Nicole LeBarge; each of them won two events. This year they have even more help with freshmen like Taryn Prout and Christa Narus.

"We don't look at it as an easy win," UMass coach Bob Newcomb said. "I think we're a different team and stronger [than last year]. I think we'll come away with a win."

Newcomb added that he plans on having a lot of people swimming different meets and that each meet they're going to try different things to get to the best fit for February. Even though he was very impressed with his swimmers' performances last week, he still feels he needs better swims and better performances.

"I think we have some great individuals on team," Newcomb said. "Taryn's been a great influence on the program. She has the ability to swim many different things, and it's great that she can come in and do what she does.

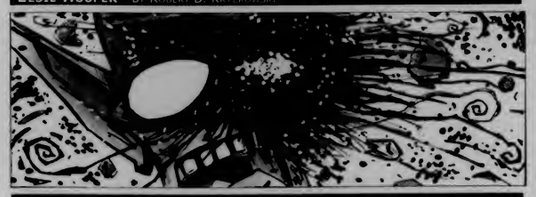
CINEMARK
The Best Seat
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 11/4 thru Thursday 11/10
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com

Harry Potter Tickets are Now On Sale!	Elizabethtown (PG13) 1:25 4:30 7:15 10:00
Jarhead (R) 1:15 4:20 7:10 10:00*	The Fog (PG13) 4:45 10:15
Chicken Little(G) 1:10 1:55 4:00 4:35 6:45 7:35 8:50 9:40*	The Wallace and Gromit Movie(G) 1:35 3:55 6:45 9:05
The Legend of Zorro (PG) 1:00 4:05 7:20 10:10*	In Her Shoes (PG13) 1:05 4:15 7:10 10:05
Saw 2 (R) 2:00 4:50 7:40 10:10	* no passes or supersavers
The Weatherman (R) 1:40 4:25 7:00 9:30*	Now Hiring-Nights, Weekends, Holidays
Prime (PG-13) 1:30 4:35 7:15 9:50*	Senior Show 11/10 - Prime @ 10am
North Country (R) 1:20 4:10 7:05 9:55	Friday Night Rewind—Nov 4th Batman--Midnight
Doom (R) 1:50 7:25

* NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Times & showtimes available at cinemark.com

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
Host of Comedy Central's "Insomniac" and from NBC's "Late Night with Conan O'Brien"
DAVE ATTELL
THIS SATURDAY!

NOV. 12TH JOHN VALBY
NOV. 25TH ROBERT SCHIMMEL
DEC. 3RD CHARLIE MURPHY



PARADISE OF INDIA RESTAURANT
Lunch Buffet all you can eat!
Saturday and Sunday only
87 Main St. Amherst, MA, 01002
(413) 256-1067

Regency Hair Stylists
"Get a new look for fall"
$ 5.00 OFF a haircut
Monday - Thursday
Bring this ad
and your Student ID.
Call for an appointment or stop by the salon
253 - 9526
189 N. Pleasant St
Amherst, MA 01002

LABRAT By Richard Martell

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Kryzkowski

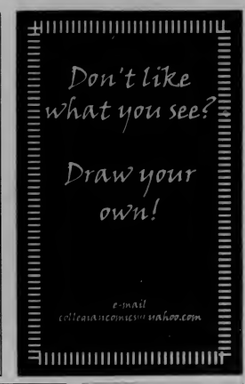
RANDOM CHATTER By Chris Sala

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

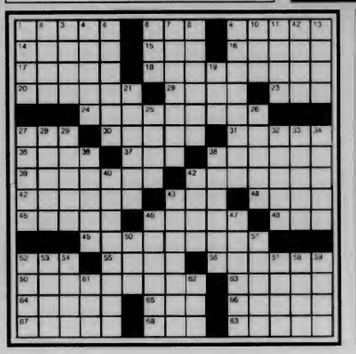
A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"They stole the love from our lives to put the sex on the radio."



—Thursday



ACROSS
1 Where "Lost" can be found
6 Bearded antelope
9 Canadian leaf
14 Native New Zealander
15 Tokyo carriage
16 Non-blood relation
17 Trojan War epic
18 Significant event
20 Rebel
22 Day-care charges
23 For each
24 Canine in pain?
27 Possessed
30 Emma Peel's partner
31 Feeling of dread
35 Lighted word
37 Ben's river
38 Modernize
39 Turkish inns
41 Blenrutaled
42 Sumptuous
43 Dog doc
44 Monopoly card
45 Map on a map
46 "Magic Man" rockers
48 Towel off
49 Act of leaving
52 Salt Lake City hrs.
55 Deliver a diatribe
56 California motto
60 Translucent paper
63 Belongings transporter
64 Craze
65 Self-esteem
66 Skillful
67 Short period
68 Reel's partner
69 Tree houses?

DOWN
1 In the thick of
2 Barn bundle
3 Hair arrangement
4 Characteristic
5 MTV play
6 Exercise site
7 Thumbs down on both
8 Remove software
9 Disfigure
10 Social insect
11 Fall into a chair
12 Lover's path
13 Water pitcher
19 & more
21 Swivel
25 Afternoon affairs
26 All over
27 "The Chronicles" 28 Choppers
29 Clock faces
32 Goggled
33 Bovine raised for beef
34 Roosevelt nickname
36 Used a level
38 Fictitious
40 Outer
41 Act as an usher
43 Dizziness
46 Yearn
47 Writer Capote
50 __ de deux
51 Eat away
52 PTA members
53 Button alternative
54 Silverware prong
57 Holiday forerunners
58 Retained
59 Well-practiced skills
61 Slick liquid
62 Head dip

Find today's answers online

www.dailycollegian.com

Submit your comic!
e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Breakfast is only the most important meal if you wake up in time to eat it.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your goal for the weekend is to avoid the library at all costs.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You will see a really cute puppy sometime today.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Eat some carrots today. They are good for your eyes.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You will look wicked hot at that party tonight.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will completely forget about a really important homework assignment.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Crack open a window. Your room smells really bad.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You definitely got those sunglasses just in time.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You will be sad on Monday morning when you have to go to class again

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You have wasted entirely too much Kleenex in the last few days.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Stop wasting so much cream cheese! You will never use that much.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Your favorite person in the world will call you this weekend.

★ Submit your comic ★
e-mail
collegiancomcis@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Looking for GO, Baduke, Weigi Players. New players welcome. Call 339-225-0537, 253-9873

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments, Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Civic DX Good condition CD Many new parts. $1699 obo 413-212-9384

EMPLOYMENT

Mystery Shoppers get paid to shop! Up to $150 a day. Training provided Call 1-800-690-1273

EMPLOYMENT

Aupair for my daughter, Eleven years old, to share home in Leverett, MA 10 min to UMass. Private room & semi-private bath, share kitchen in exchange for some childcare Call c:413-522-3175 h:413-548-9498

Spring 2006 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary and training provided. Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

EMPLOYMENT

Part-Time Workers Needed We are looking for part-time assistance with a variety of office and clerical tasks. Preferred candidates will work quickly and accurately and be able to work from 5pm-9pm on days that they work. Pay is $8.00/hour. For consideration, please call (413) 256-0444 for an application or mail resume to: National Evaluation Systems, Inc., Personnel Department, P.O. Box 226, Amherst, MA 01004-0226. Resumes may also be emailed to: personnel@nesinc.com.

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8.00 Hr. 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location – NO

EMPLOYMENT

SALES! Night & wknd; shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

Staffing Now, Inc. Needs Seasonal Workers! We are in need of 2 data entry clerks who are available for temporary assignments. One position is located in S. Deerfield and the hours are M-F from 6AM-2PM. The other is in Holyoke and it is M-F from 2PM-7PM. Both positions are paying $9 and will be starting immediately. Perfect solution to earn some extra $$ before the holidays! Call 413-529-7100 for immediate consideration. Staffing Now, Inc. www.staffingnow.com

FURNITURE

Sealy Mattress Set KING $575.00 QUEEN $465.00 FULL $365.00 TWIN $195 Save 50% or more off store prices. For more details call 215-431-9584

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

If you see Katie Kourian today, be sure to wish her a HAPPY 21ST BIRTHDAY!! Hope your day is special and memorable. Much love, your hockey team

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

SERVICES

Legal Questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK – Early Booking Specials – FREE Meals & Drinks - $50 Deposit – 800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

ACT NOW – SPRING BREAKERS Book Early & Save! Free meals parties by 11/7 Lowest prices. Be a rep & TRAVEL FREE! Get the ultimate hookups with STA TRAVEL 413-256-1261.

TRAVEL

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code: 31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

WANTED

Pregnant? Bilingual Spanish couple waiting to adopt. Love nature, music, and animals. Will share these interests with your baby. Happy to share letters, pictures, and stay in touch. Call Brightside 24-7 and ask about Dawn and John 1-877-777-7774 license #1465107

Collegian Classifieds! Call 545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen go for two

UMass will play in both Amherst and Providence this weekend

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

Among a collection of pictures hanging on the wall of Massachusetts hockey team head coach Don Cahoon's office is one of the 1983 Sports Festival Team. Cahoon stands there, fully clad in his coaching garb behind his players, one of whom is Tim Army.

The two share a connection longer than just that, though, as Cahoon recruited Army to play for Boston University. Army decided to spurn the Terriers in favor of Providence College, where he spent his time playing for Lou Lamoriello, who the Hockey East championship trophy is currently named after.

Cahoon and Army, who still remain friends, will add a new chapter to their storied history together this weekend, as UMass (1-4-0 0-2-0 Hockey East) and Providence (3-3-0 3-1-0 HEA) – led by first-year coach Army – set for a home-and-home series, which will kick off at 7 p.m. tonight at PC's Schneider Arena before shifting to Amherst tomorrow at the same time.

"We go back a long ways, and I have the ultimate respect for Timmy as a young person who developed into a great player and is in the midst of a terrific coaching career," Cahoon said.

Though one weekend can never truly make or break an entire season, especially one involving a 34-game schedule, this one is pretty important for the Minutemen if they don't want to fall behind the pack early on in the Hockey East standings.

And after not seeing positive results while playing well in both home losses to New Hampshire and Maine last weekend, the young UMass squad will face another test against Providence, which has gotten off to a hot start in the league and currently resides in first place with six points early on.

The mood around the Maroon and White locker room is one filled with optimism because the team knows it has the talent to succeed, but there is a steady mix of frustration after not being able to capitalize on the plethora of scoring opportunities it created last weekend.

"It's frustrating to some extent, but the anticipation of overcoming that is greater than the frustration," Cahoon said. "We've just got to stay positive and keep working. We've still got some struggles to get through and have a long way to come back. I just hope we keep from digging ourselves too big of a hole too early.

"We've got a pretty good idea of what we might be, and we're working towards that end. We just need to finish some plays, score some goals and execute the power play, and we could be a dramatically different club right now."

The power play has been a

See HOCKEY on page 6

KAREN WINCHUR / COLLEGIAN

Freshman goalie Jon Quick and the UMass hockey team will face Providence twice this weekend. Quick, who has played in two games this season, has accounted for 58 saves in 2005.

UM searching for playoff spot

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team (6-9-2 2-3-2 Atlantic 10) began the conference season with three straight losses to Rhode Island, Saint Louis and Duquesne. But after a four-game unbeaten streak it now finds itself in the middle of a battle for the sixth and final playoff spot.

Here are the standings as they are right now:

5. Fordham Charlotte: 2-2-30
6. La Salle: 3-3-2
7. Saint Bonaventure/Temple: 3-3-1
8. Massachusetts/ Xavier: 2-3-2

The only teams in the A-10 that are safe are Rhode Island (5-2-0 A-10), Dayton (4-1-2 A-10), Saint Louis (5-1-1 A-10) and Duquesne (6-1-0 A-10).

UMass is playing Fordham tonight and St. Bonaventure on Sunday, and will have a tough time making the playoffs without winning both games.

"I'm still not sure if you can find another word in Webster's Dictionary that will underline 'must,'" UMass coach Sam Koch said. "And it's not just this game on Friday. We win [against Fordham], it comes down to one game season on Sunday [against St. Bonaventure]."

Rhode Island might have as much to do with the Minutemen's playoff hopes as anything. URI plays both Fordham and the Bonnies this weekend, and can turn the tide if the Rams can win both games.

Temple and St. Bonaventure will have to drop a game this weekend (taking for granted that UMass wins both) if the Minutemen are to have a chance at sneaking into the playoffs. La Salle is playing George Washington on Sunday, and GW will have to win that game in order for the Minutemen to overtake La Salle.

So the last few games are filled with 'ifs', and a lot of scoreboard-watching around the league, because with just one loss the standings could shift and a team that no one expected could be playing the No. 1 seed in the first round.

Koch, however, knows not to get caught up in the hysteria – that none of it will matter to his team unless they come away with two victories this weekend. The coach broke the playoff situation last night.

"The bottom line is: you can have everybody do everything else but if we don't do our job it doesn't mean anything," Koch said. "The great thing is that, for all the other things that need to happen with us winning, there really aren't too many things. I think the two key games are what Charlotte does in their two games.

"If they upset St. Louis and Duquesne, that puts them ahead of us, and if Temple wins both their games against Xavier and Dayton, then that puts them ahead of us. And I don't think, even if we win both of our games, that we would be able to catch [Duquense and Saint Louis]. But I think for that

See SOCCER on page 6

KAREN WINCHUR / COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Douglas Rappaport and the UMass soccer team have two games this weekend. Rappaport has collected three points during 17 starts this season.

Cook an impact player

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

When you go to a Massachusetts men's soccer game at Rudd Field, there are a couple of things that might stand out. There's the bright blue port-o-potties, the clean-cut grass, the air-horn that's blown during every substitution and there's Kenny Cook.

The 6-foot-5-inch sophomore defenseman is the most vocal player on the team, and will make sure that his fellow defensemen know where the attacking forwards are. With scraggly hair, a voice that carries across a soccer field and a 6-foot-5-inch frame, he is not hard to spot.

"I certainly feel he's a voice that you hear in the back," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "[It's] a voice of confidence, and he's one player that definitely speaks up. There's no question that Kenny [Cook is] the voice back there."

And his game demands attention too. As a defenseman, he is second on the team in scoring this season behind sophomore Matty Lemire, and has been active on the offensive end since the beginning of the season.

"Did we expect him to be the second leading scorer on the team? No," UMass coach Sam Koch conceded. "Are we surprised? Not really because our set pieces are so dangerous, and he makes them dangerous with his size, and he's a hard person for other teams to stop.

"And he's been able to get on the end of some great cross-services on the set pieces. And when you have great service and you have a guy that's a big body, you have to score some goals. So I'm not really surprised, definitely pleased, but did I predict it? No."

His first goal came against the Navy Midshipmen on Sep. 18 in a 2-0 victory, and he scored goals in back-to-back games against Boston University (Sep. 28) and Siena (Oct. 1).

Cook is most effective during set plays either from outside the 18-yard box or on corner kicks. When he is given time to get down the field (it is hard to get to the opposing goal on breakaways because he trails the play) Cook will set up in the middle of the goal box and wait for a crossing pass or a corner kick.

Because of his height, he is able to get to balls that some forwards may not be able to reach. So he has a tremendous impact on balls in the air that are around the net. If he doesn't score he can head the ball to a nearby teammate.

"All on set pieces from the flanks, whether it's corner kicks or throw-in plays, any service from the flank area, he's a dangerous target for the opponents," Koch said. "It's very hard to stop him because of his size and there aren't too many people that are 6-foot-5." So he's been very effective in that regard."

Against Rhode Island on Oct. 9, the game was scoreless until the 83rd minute, when a ball thrown in by freshman Nick Kelly found Cook, who headed it straight back into the middle of the goal box, where Lemire was waiting to put it home. Whether he's setting up a teammate or scoring on his own, Kenny Cook has been an impact player on the offensive end for the Minutemen this season.

Atlantic 10 tournament on tap

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

It came down to the last regular season game against Rhode Island. The Massachusetts field hockey team clinched a spot in the Atlantic 10 tournament for the 16th time in its 17 year history, thanks to a game-winning goal by freshman Mary Shea with 8:17 remaining in regulation on Sunday.

The Minutewomen (7-12 4-3 A-10) have reached their first goal of getting into the conference tournament, and they will battle for the A-10 championship this weekend in Philadelphia.

The No. 3 seed UMass will face off against the No. 2 seed Temple (11-9 6-1 A-10) this afternoon at 2 p.m. at Geasey Field in the first round of the A-10 tournament.

Although the Owls will have home field advantage for the tournament, UMass coach Patty Shea believes her team can come out on top if they capitalize on their scoring chances and keep the pressure on the Temple defense.

"We match up really well," Shea said. "It is going to come down to who takes advantage of their opportunities, and who wants to attack and sustain the momentum of the game."

The Minutewomen lost to the Owls in overtime on Oct. 23, and they will look to revenge that loss against a very experienced Temple team.

The Owls have eight seniors on their roster, but the one player that UMass will have to get past in order to advance is freshman goalkeeper Erin Hanshue. Hanshue was second in the A-10 in shutouts with five on the season, and sported 1.65 goals against average in 19 games, earning herself All-Rookie team honors.

UMass goes into the A-10 tournament this weekend with much enthusiasm, especially after finding out that several players of their own have been rewarded for their performances both on and off the field.

Shea was named the A-10 Rookie of the Week on Monday, after scoring her third goal of the season and giving the Minutewomen a spot in the A-10 tournament. She was surprised that she was given the award, but she knows what lies ahead, and how important this weekend is.

"There is a lot more pressure on these games," Shea said. "But we have to go into it like it is just any other game and just play our normal game. We are going to do well because we have revenge against them now, since we lost to them in overtime in the regular season. We did not bring our A-game last time, and we have a lot more to show against them this time."

Shea was not the only freshman to receive an award this week, however. Erin Parker and Katelyn Orlando were named to the All-Rookie team on Thursday after distinguishing themselves as major players in the Minutewoman offense during the regular season. Parker and Orlando each finished the regular season tied for second on the team in points with 12.

A few of the Minutewoman veterans were rewarded as well on Thursday, beginning with senior Jaime Bawden being named the A-10 Field Hockey Student-Athlete of the Year and a first-team All-Conference pick. She was also an Academic All-Conference selection. Bawden has scored in four out of the last five games, and has 11 points on the season. It is also the third time in four years that Bawden has been selected as an All-Conference pick.

Senior Patricia Borneo was also a first-team All-Conference pick. It is her first All-Conference selection as she led the Minutewomen in points with 13 on the season. Also recognized was senior Katelyn Woolfrey. Woolfrey received her first All-Conference bid and her second Academic All-Conference selection.

While all these awards are nice to have, UMass will have to put their personal achievements aside for the time being if they want to defeat a Temple team that has won seven of its last eight games. The Owls are coming into the A-10 tournament with a three game winning streak, and will be looking to add another win to their 8-6 record at home this year.

UMass has the most wins in A-10 tournament play with a 23-7 all-time record. The Minutewomen will look to get

See F. HOCKEY on page 6

A look at the conference elites

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

After a month of Atlantic 10 conference play, only four teams remain, and with the championship weekend looming overhead, it's time to get to know the competitors. In order, the final four are No. 20 Richmond, Temple, Massachusetts and Saint Joseph's — the same seeding as last year's tournament. For the fourth consecutive season, Richmond (13-5 7-0 A-10) comes in as the top seed in the tournament and will play fourth seed St. Joe's (10-9 3-4 A-10) on Friday at 4 p.m. in Philadelphia. The remaining two teams, Temple (11-9 6-1 A-10) and Massachusetts (7-12 4-3 A-10), will square off at 2 p.m. on Saturday.

Still Number One

For the fourth consecutive year, Richmond has won the regular season A-10 championship with an undefeated conference record, and once again holds the top seed in the A-10 tournament. Last year the Spiders won the tournament in Amherst, defeating Temple 3-0 in the first round before knocking off tournament host UMass 3-1. The Spiders earned a spot in the NCAA tournament, but fell to No. 1 North Carolina 3-0 in the first round.

After falling out of the STX/NFHCA National Coaches poll for several weeks, Richmond recently regained a spot in the top 20 rankings by defeating No. 20 Virginia last Wednesday. The Spiders moved into the No. 20 spot to finish the regular season as the only nationally ranked team in the A-10. The team

See A-10 on page 6

New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Monday, November 7, 2005 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXIV Issue 42

Students raise awareness for earthquake relief

By Mike Sances
Collegian Staff

Alarmed at what they see as a lack of attention given to this month's earthquake in northern Pakistan and India, a small group of UMass graduate students have been working to raise awareness and funds for the survivors of the disaster.

They are Sofia Checa, a graduate student in sociology; Swati Birla, in public health; and Peter Manolakos, in resource economics. So far, their efforts have consisted of contacting student groups on campus, circulating a statement among local e-mail lists and asking local businesses to set up donation centers.

"I'm not even sure that people know that there has been a disaster and what the scale of the disaster is," said Birla, who was born in India.

The graduate students said they often receive e-mails thanking them for letting people know where donations can be made.

Measuring 7.6 on the Richter scale, the earthquake on Oct. 8 left an estimated 79,000 dead and 3 million homeless. Last week, United Nations secretary, General Kofi Annan said that the quake's aftermath "almost defies our darkest imagination."

Jan Egeland, the UN's under secretary for human rights, said the earthquake was worse than last year's tsunami.

With an especially harsh winter predicted to begin in the next three weeks, international aid organizations are in a race against time, and signs of frustration and despair are beginning to show, Egeland said that relief workers have been forced to resort to amputating limbs rather than wait for more adequate relief to arrive. "We needed the money yesterday," Egeland said at a

See RELIEF on page 3

Amherst residents gather in protest of new Wal-Mart

By John Fenuccio
Collegian Staff

Concerned residents of the Pioneer Valley convened on Amherst Common Saturday to protest plans to build a new Wal-Mart "SuperCenter" at Hadley's Hampshire Mall.

Local residents as well as guest speakers gathered to raise awareness of the negative impacts the proposed expansion would have on the Pioneer Valley. Plans include constructing a Home-Depot, Lowe's, and relocating an expanded version of the existing Wal-Mart.

With heavy traffic already a major problem in on Route 9 in Hadley, the addition of two major commercial chains would make commutes substantially slower.

"According to even the developers' own estimates, the combined effects of the Lowe's, Home-Depot, and Wal-Mart Supercenter projects will add 45,000 new car trips every single day, nearly doubling the existing traffic," said the campaign's Executive Director of Policy Development, Aron Goldman.

With the commute through Hadley already sluggish, Goldman added, "If you already consider Route 9 a traffic-choked eye sore, just wait."

"The traffic is already too slow. I can't imagine the thought of it doubling" said UMass senior nursing major Jess Brouillette.

Traffic is only one of the many problems the expansion will cause, according to protestors. The plan is set to pave over 52 acres of land including wetlands and farmland.

Portions of the existing Bison Farm have been sold off to make room for the proposed Lowe's.

Opponents say they are already worried about how Wal-Mart treats its employees. While the nation's largest discount chain currently employs more workers than any other major corporation, people are worried about the impact of Wal-Mart's influence on those people and the economy.

"One thing that's very troubling is that they're setting the standard for how you treat employees," said State Representative Ellen Story (D-Amherst) who attended the event. "It's a $285 billion corporation, they have more employees than anyone in the world."

The average Wal-Mart associate earns $14,000 per year and the average female associate earns from 5 to 15 percent less than that.

"What's troubling is that people have to say they're used to being paid Wal-Mart wages, and then they say they have to shop there because they can't get it cheaper [anywhere else]. It's a cycle," said Story.

The question Goldman looked to address at the rally was, "Low prices at what cost?"

While Target and Wal-Mart are already a part of Hadley, and with the addition of such chains as Dick's Sporting Goods and Best Buy in the last year, Goldman's message was loud and clear. "We think enough is enough." A message reinforced by the presence of political figures in attendance

See WALMART on page 3

Numerous Amherst residents gathered in the Amherst Common yesterday to protest plans to bulid a new Wal-Mart "SuperCenter" at Hadley's Hampshire Mall.

Senator Kerry meets with young Democrats

By Emily Moses
Collegian Correspondent

MEDFORD — Massachusetts Senator John Kerry began the 2006 grassroots campaign for in-state Democrats by meeting with college Democrats yesterday in Paige Hall at Tufts University.

Ninety college students from universities around Massachusetts squeezed into the small hall to hear Kerry speak about the importance of their volunteer work with the Massachusetts Democratic Party in the last presidential election.

"You have no idea what a difference you made," Kerry said to the students.

Kerry began by highlighting the strong points of the presidential election in 2004 and stated a strong confidence in winning the Senate elections in 2006.

"I won 10 million more votes than any Democratic presidential nominee ever," he said in regards to the 2004 presidential election versus current President George W. Bush.

He was met with applause when he mentioned, "It's a sad time for our country," in reference to President Bush's policies.

Kerry believes other nations depend on the United States to make a difference and that under President Bush's control, other countries do not have that support.

Kerry hopes a Democratic majority in the U.S. Senate will help the country to "make sense of the despair and frustration" the nation now has.

He encouraged young Democrats to convince more of their friends to fight for the Democratic cause, and to also involve younger teenagers so that they are more aware of the issues when it comes time for them to go to the voting booths.

He remained confident that there will be a Democratic majority in the Senate in 2006.

Kerry said "reality and truth are values that define us as a nation" and that the country needs truth now more than ever before. He referenced the war in Iraq as the main truth the American people need to hear.

"The presence of troops in Iraq are part of the problem. Success will not depend on how long we

See RELIEF on page 3

MEGAN MCCARTHY / COLLEGIAN

Massachusetts Senator John Kerry, began his 2006 grassroots campaign in Tufts Univeristy yesterday, encouraging all young democrats to remain active and vocal in political affairs.

Trauma centers not prepared for next disaster

By Mike Stobbe
Associated Press

ATLANTA — At this city's main trauma hospital, lines of waiting patients clog the hallways — even on slow days.

Doctors say they probably couldn't handle a major plane crash or any other incident with more than 20 or 30 severe injuries.

"It's a struggle to meet the nightly demand of 911 calls," said Dr. Arthur Kellermann, an ER physician at the hospital, Grady Memorial.

"But somehow we're supposed to deal with a terrorist bombing? Or a new strain of influenza?"

Trauma centers and emergency departments similarly are strained in many U.S. cities, experts say.

"Trauma systems are never more than a couple of minor incidents from being overwhelmed," said Larry Gage, president of the National Association of Public Hospitals and Health Systems.

Hurricane Katrina destroyed New Orleans' only trauma center. A few years ago, funding problems nearly closed primary trauma centers in Detroit and Los Angeles, and more than a dozen other U.S. hospitals have phased-down or shuttered their trauma units since.

That trend, along with a growing U.S. population, is making it harder for many hospitals to quickly and adequately handle severe emergencies.

"Across the country, the level of crowding at emergency departments has reached levels that are unprecedented in America's history," said Dr. Kathleen Clem, chief of emergency medicine at Duke University Medical Center.

Trauma and emergency care is a money loser, serving many patients without health insurance. It's also expensive to maintain a round-the-clock staff of specialized surgeons and trauma-care medical workers.

In Atlanta, hospitals often pay subspecialists around $1,000 per day to take calls for trauma care.

For those reasons, many hospitals have gotten out of trauma care, increasing the load on those that have stayed in that business, industry experts say.

Grady Memorial is Atlanta's primary emergency care center, with about 200,000 visits a year, and it's been getting busier.

Patient volumes have been increasing more than 5 percent a year at the 953-bed hospital, driven by a variety of factors including an expanding city population and the closing of trauma centers near Atlanta.

As at other hospitals, Grady's 100 intensive care unit beds are often completely filled, meaning dozens of gunshot patients at a time have to wait in the ER for a bed to open upstairs. That, along with a heavy flow of new cases, doesn't allow much room for dealing with a multi-trauma incident.

Grady is expecting a loss of between $9 million and $10 million this year, and would need more government funding to expand its ICU and emergency capabilities, said Dr. Leon Haley Jr., the hospital's chief of emergency medicine.

In New Orleans, the situation is unusual in that hurricane flooding — not scarce funding — closed the region's trauma center. But some ER doctors say that, even before the floods, they expected problems getting the center reop

See TRAUMA on page 3

Former detective hits the books at UMass

University of Massachusetts Professor Mary Carey's news-writing and reporting class was assigned a project that required students to write an in-depth profile to be published as a class. Working with the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, this is what students produced, a feature report about the life of UMass student and former Boston College detective, Shawn de Jong.

Shawn de Jong is turning in her badge and gun for a new weapon of choice — ball point pen.

After over 15 years as a detective, de Jong recently decided to leave behind her job and go back to school as a UMass student, following her dreams of becoming a writer.

A journalism and political science double-major at UMass, de Jong says she is excited to begin a new career. Though journalism may seem like a departure for a former detective, considering the occasionally icy relationship between journalists and law enforcement agencies, De Jong says, however, that the progression came very naturally.

"I've always loved to write," de Jong said. "As a cop you always have to listen to stories. I want to write these people's stories for them," she added.

The middle child of five, de Jong says she fell in to work as a police officer, first as a civilian officer in her hometown of Wilmington, N.C. Even her own parents did not approve of their daughter's choice of profession.

"They weren't happy when I became an officer," de Jong said. "They were glad when I got out."

As a police officer, de Jong experienced her share of disturbing and difficult cases. She said candidly that it was difficult to work on an incident in which she had to arrest her former partner for trading pieces of police evidence to support a cocaine habit.

"It was about doing the best I could for other people," she said about her decision to join the police force. "They have lives outside of crime, too," de Jong said.

De Jong said it was often extremely difficult to distance herself from her job. She said after working on some more strenuous cases, such as child pornography crimes, or the investigation of a double rape, it was hard to go home and forget about it.

"I didn't sleep a night," de Jong said.

Today, de Jong is focusing on new goals, and a new career.

"I actually think I might like to write a detective novel," she admitted with some hesitance. She says she admires the work of author Robert Parker.

As she embarks on her new career, de Jong says she isn't looking back. Although she enjoyed her time as a detective, she says she is not planning on wearing the badge any time soon.

"It's the best job I've ever had and I would not wish it upon anyone."

– Special to the Collegian, Finnigan Hanson, Sylvia Huang, Jeffrey Horowitz, Gregory Hurren, Heather Jakub, Allison Medoff, Kenneth Mulligan, Christopher Reardon, Natsuki Takahashi, Sytse Tenwolde and Alexander Valdez contributed to this report.

After 15 years as a detective, Shawn de Jong decided to return to school to pursue a career in writing.

ARTS & LIVING
WAR FILM OFFERS INSIGHT
'Jarhead' avoids action clichés and instead offers capable acting and powerful drama.
PAGE 5

EDITORIAL/OPINION
FLU PANDEMIC CAUSES PANIC AMONG STUDENTS
Should we get flu shots even though others need them more?
PAGE 4

WEATHER
TODAY Partly Cloudy, H59
TONIGHT Mostly Clear, L39
TOMORROW Sunny, H62°, L30

SPORTS
MINUTEMEN FLY OVER BLUE HENS
UMass football thrashed Delaware 35-7, despite previous meetings.
PAGE 10

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael A. Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Cameron J. Woods
BUSINESS MANAGER Hirak Shah
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherri Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerry O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egasian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Matthew O'Rourke
COPY EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Allison Edles
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
PHOTO EDITOR Kate Sachsenmaier
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
HUMAN RESOURCE Phil Smoller
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Nathan Chomsky
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mackenzie Issler
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Jones
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Dales
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Bellisseau
ASSISTANT PHOTO Elizabeth Caristi
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eric Athas
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Kristen LaCasse

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS COMMENCEMENT SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS AN INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING AND ADVERTISING REVENUE SUPPORTED PAPER. IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1947, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED SINCE ITS FOUNDING IN 1890. THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PRINTED AT THE SPRINGFIELD PUBLISHING AND PRINTING CO., INC. WEEKDAYS DURING THE SCHOOL YEAR AT 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Michael A. Busack
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Kate Sachsenmaier
COPY EDITOR
Dan O'Brien
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Melinda Natal
PRODUCTION STAFF
Jenny Mercado, Jackie Ronan

Tornado rips through southern Indiana, kills at least 21

By DEANNA MARTIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

EVANSVILLE, Ky. — A tornado tore across western Kentucky and Indiana early Sunday, killing at least 21 people as it cut through a mobile home park and obliterated trailers and houses as residents slept.

The tornado, estimated to have winds of at least 158 mph, hit a horse track near Henderson, Ky., then jumped the Ohio River into Indiana around 2 a.m.

"It was just a real loud roar. It didn't seem like it lasted over 45 seconds to a minute, then it was calm again," said Steve Gaiser, who lives near the Eastbrook Mobile Home Park in Evansville.

At least 17 people were killed in the mobile home park, according to Eric Williams of the Vanderburgh County Sheriff's Department.

More people were believed to still be trapped in the debris, and National Guard units were called in to help with search-and-recovery efforts. At least 200 people were injured during the storm.

"They were in trailer homes, homes that were just torn apart by the storm, so they're just now getting in there trying to find people," said deputy Vanderburgh county coroner Annie Groves. "It's just terrible."

Rescuers on the scene since 2 a.m. reported seeing children wandering the area looking for their parents and parents searching for missing children. Children's bicycles and other toys were strewn amid the debris of aluminum siding, mattresses, chairs and insulation.

Four other people were confirmed dead in neighboring Warrick County, east of Evansville, where the Ohio River city of Newburgh was hit. No deaths were immediately reported in Kentucky.

The storm reduced homes to splinters and scattered debris across the countryside. Entire blocks of buildings were nothing but rubble.

Indiana homeland security spokeswoman Pam Bright said about 100 of the 350 or so homes in at the Evansville mobile home park were destroyed and 125 others were damaged.

Larry and Christie Brown rode out the storm inside their mobile home.

Man, it was more than words can say," Larry Brown said. "We opened the door and there wasn't anything sitting there."

Chad Bennett, assistant fire chief in Newburgh, told CNN that sirens sounded, but most people didn't hear them because it happened in the middle of the night.

The tornado developed in a line of thunderstorms that rolled rapidly eastward across the Ohio Valley. The National Weather Service had posted severe thunderstorm warnings for sections of northern Ohio.

Ryan Presley, a weather service meteorologist in Paducah, Ky., said a single tornado touched down near Smith Mills in western Kentucky and cut a 15- to 20-mile swath through Indiana's Vanderburgh and Warrick counties.

The tornado appears to have been an F3, with winds ranging from 158 mph to 206 mph, and may have been even stronger, Presley said.

Warrick County Sheriff Marvin Heilman said the victims included a woman who was eight months' pregnant, her husband and a young child in the rural town of Degonia Springs. A teenage girl was also killed near Boonville, and her father was critically injured, he said.

Tim Martin, 42, was at his parents' mobile home when the tornado struck. The three were awakened by the wind, which picked up the home and moved it halfway into the neighbor's yard.

He and his parents escaped unharmed, but they heard several neighbors calling for help. A neighboring mobile home was overturned, he said, and another appeared to have been obliterated.

"All I could see was debris," he said. "I thought it was a bad dream."

Patty Ellerbusch, 53, said she and her husband were in bed at their hilltop home in Newburgh when a relative called and warned them of the tornado. They heard a low roar and ran for the basement.

She made it downstairs, but her husband did not. He was blasted with shattered drywall, wood and other debris as the tornado shredded the home's roof.

"He was running down the hallway, and it knocked him down and ripped his glasses off. He said it felt like being in a wind tunnel," she said. The storm stripped the roof off most of the couple's home, destroyed their barn and left surrounding trees shorn of limbs.

Bright said it was the deadliest tornado in Indiana since April 3, 1974, when an outbreak of several tornadoes killed 47 people and destroyed 2,069 homes.

The Ellis Park racetrack, between Evansville and Henderson, Ky., had significant damage to barns, the grandstand and other buildings, said Paul Kuerzi, the track's vice president and general manager.

Kuerzi said some people working at the track suffered minor injuries.

"It appears at this point that three horses have died from injuries suffered in storm. It's too early to know if any other horses were injured," Kuerzi said in a statement on the track Web site. About 150 horses in training were stabled at the track.

Mike Roeder, a spokesman for utility company Vectren, said 25,000 homes were without power, mostly in Warrick County. There also were reports of natural gas leaks.

Karen Elmendork picks up debris in front of her home in Newburgh, Ind., in the aftermath of the tornado that ripped across southwestern Indiana and northern Kentucky.

Democrats defend request for prewar intelligence

By DOUGLASS K. DANIEL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A government document raises doubts about claims al-Qaida members received training for biological and chemical weapons in Iraq, as Senate Democrats on Sunday defended their push for a report on how the Bush administration handled prewar intelligence.

Democrats forced the Senate into an unusual closed session last week as they sought assurances the Intelligence Committee would complete an investigation of intelligence about Iraq before the U.S.-led invasion in March 2003.

Republicans said the session was a stunt and that the report, after nearly two years, was nearly complete. They did agree to appoint a bipartisan task force to review the committee's progress and report by Nov. 14.

"We cannot have a government which is going to manipulate intelligence information. We've got to get to the bottom of it," Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Newly declassified portions of a document from the Defense Intelligence Agency showed that the administration was alerted that an al-Qaida member in U.S. custody probably was lying about links between the terrorist organization and Saddam Hussein's Iraq.

The document from February 2002 showed that the agency questioned the reliability of al-Qaida senior military trainer Ibn al-Shaykh al-Libi. He could not name any Iraqis involved in the effort or identify any chemical or biological materials or cite where the training was taking place, the report said.

The DIA concluded that al-Libi probably was deliberately misleading the interrogators, and he recanted the statements in January 2004, according to the document made public by Sen. Carl Levin, top Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee.

"In other words, he's an entirely unreliable individual upon whom the White House was placing substantial intelligence trust," said Sen. Jay Rockefeller, a member of the Intelligence Committee.

"And that is a classic example of a lack of accountability to the American people," Rockefeller, D-W.Va., told CNN's "Late Edition."

Levin said in a statement that the declassified DIA material which he had requested from the agency indicates that the administration's use of prewar intelligence was misleading and deceptive.

Levin said President Bush, Secretary of State Colin Powell and intelligence and diplomatic officials cited, months after the information from the defense agency in February 2002, chemical and biological training by Iraq as they gathered support for the war.

"This newly declassified information provides additional, dramatic evidence that the administrations prewar statements were deceptive," Levin said. "More than a year before Secretary Powell included that charge in his presentation to the United Nations, the DIA had said it believed the detainee's claims were bogus."

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

The Collegian is opening its doors
and you're invited!

Come down and help yourself to refreshments on the Collegian. This is your chance to learn about the paper, and meet the staff!

Come give your input about the Collegian. We hope to see you there: All voices are welcome!

Tuesday
November 8th
11 am - 4 pm
and
5 pm - 9 pm

Despite woes, Bush makes marks with Fed and court nominee

By TOM RAUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Seizing on a rare alignment of opportunities, President Bush has moved swiftly in recent weeks to project his influence into the future and over the lives of nearly all Americans.

His appointment of a Fed chairman to succeed the venerable Alan Greenspan and the filling of two Supreme Court vacancies carry the potential to affect people's lives more directly than most of the heated policy debates in Congress.

At stake are social and economic issues vital to everyone: from abortion to religion, to when the police can pull you over and how much you will pay for certain loans, to the timing of the next recession.

In short order, Bush put his mark on two powerful entities over which presidents and Congress have infrequent authority, the nation's highest court and its central bank. It comes despite a host of woes on other fronts.

Every president should get a chance to name or reappoint a Fed chairman.

"But Supreme Court appointments are a matter of geriatrics and luck," said Henry J. Aaron, a Brookings Institution scholar.

It is rare for a president to be able to name a Fed chairman and two Supreme Court justices within a span of a few months.

Justices get lifetime appointments. Fed members get 14-year appointments, although the chairmanship is up every four years.

If confirmed by the Senate, Ben Bernanke, now the top White House economist, will take over the reins of the economy from Greenspan at the end of January. Greenspan was first appointed as chairman by President Reagan in 1987.

Bush's selection of conservative judge Samuel Alito to fill the retiring Sandra Day O'Connor's seat rounds out Bush's court picks — not counting the president's brief and doomed effort to put White House counsel Harriet Miers on the court.

Alito, if confirmed, would join Bush's other recent appointment, Chief Justice John Roberts. In naming two conservatives, Bush seized on an opportunity to move the court to the right.

Any such shift could show up early next year. What has often been a 5-4 court, with O'Connor frequently joining liberals, could become a 5-4 court with a conservative bent. That could be crucial on contentious issues as abortion, religion and capital punishment.

While the Supreme Court has gotten the most attention, the Fed chairmanship also is crucial — and the opening comes at a delicate time for the economy.

The Fed sets short-term interest rates and oversees the banking system. The Fed can regulate the amount of money available, pumping more cash into the economy when things slow down and withdrawing money from the system when the economy overheats. It can easily trigger a recession by doing too much or too little.

Greenspan has raised short-term interest rates 12 times over the past 18 months to keep inflation at bay. He has been widely credited with doing a good job during his long tenure.

But danger signs are flashing. Bernanke takes over with consumer price inflation climbing at an annual rate of 4.7 percent, the highest annual rise since 1991. Home prices are soaring in certain markets and energy prices are elevated.

Supreme Court Associate Justice samuel Alito, meets with reporter after his conferenece with with Senator John Cornyn, R-TX, on Capitol Hill, Thursday.

Mass. anti-smoking program gasping for breath

By STEVE LEBLANC
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Massachusetts may be awash in money reaped from the tobacco industry but its anti-smoking program, once a model for the nation, is gasping for breath.

Since 1992, Massachusetts has approved three cigarette taxes, including one 25-cent-per-pack increase designed specifically to pay for a tough new anti-smoking campaign. The state also receives hundreds of millions each year from a landmark 1998 settlement with the tobacco industry — an expected total of about $8 billion over 25 years.

All told, the state pulls in about $700 million annually in tobacco-related funds.

At the same time, the state's commitment to anti-smoking programs has tumbled from $48 million in 2002 to a scant $4.2 million in the current fiscal year.

During the peak years, the state used the tobacco-related funds to pay for graphic anti-smoking television advertisements designed to illustrate the health risks of smoking. Smoking rates started to decline, especially among pregnant women, and the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention used Massachusetts as a yardstick to measure other states.

Then the state's economy fell off a cliff and the anti-smoking program was gutted.

By 2004, the American Lung Association had given the state an "F" for tobacco prevention spending.

"It's almost like we had developed a vaccine to prevent a leading cause of death in Massachusetts and left it on a shelf," said Diane Pickles, executive director of Tobacco Free Mass. "We know how to solve the problem but we're not doing it."

Anti-smoking activists say they can see the fallout from those cuts in rising smoking rates among young people. Since the budget cuts of 2002, illegal sales of tobacco products to minors have nearly doubled, according to the Department of Public Health's Tobacco Control Program.

Now there's another effort under way to spend the money coming into the state from the tobacco settlement on something other than anti-smoking programs.

A new health care initiative approved by the House would tap the state's entire annual tobacco settlement payment of about $255 million to help expand insurance coverage for nearly all the roughly half-million Massachusetts residents who now lack it.

Due to Massachusetts $3 billion budget deficit, the states' antismoking program was cut significantly. The cuts, are in hopes of resulting in the provision of health insurance to the majority of Massachusetts residents.

The initiative puts the anti-smoking activists in a political bind. They support the drive to provide health insurance to as many Massachusetts residents as possible, but say the state shouldn't shirk its responsibility to fund smoking cessation programs.

They're not looking for the whole $700 million. Under guidelines from the Centers for Disease Control, a state the size of Massachusetts could run a respectable anti-smoking program for a minimum of about $35 million.

"We're thrilled with the House's health reform plan because it increases access for cancer patients, but we are also mindful that the funds were meant for anti-smoking programs," said Jennifer Cruickshank, spokeswoman for the American Cancer Society's New England Division.

Activists also give the House credit for pushing a plan to give people on Medicaid access to tobacco cessation programs.

John McDonough, executive director of Health Care for All which has lobbied for expanding health insurance coverage, defended the House bill. He said the money from the tobacco settlement was intended to help reimburse the state for the cost of caring for people with smoking-related diseases.

"Using these funds to expand access to affordable health care is consistent with the premise behind the tobacco settlement," he said.

The cuts to the state's anti-smoking programs were unfortunate but unavoidable given a looming $3 billion budget deficit at the time, according to Kimberly Haberlin, a spokeswoman for House Speaker Salvatore DiMasi, D-Boston.

Lawmakers hope to restore some of the anti-smoking money, but make no apologies for using the tobacco settlement money to expand health care, she said.

"It's certainly justified to use these moneys to pay for health care programs," she said. "I don't think it's deviating from the intent of the program."

Anti-smoking activists are pinning their hopes on a bill designed to breath new life back into the state's smoking cessation programs by increasing spending closer to the $35 million level.

The bill is making its way through the Legislature, and activists are hoping it picks up enough support to win approval.

"It's a minuscule amount of the total pie," Pickles said. "It's a very small slice."

New Orleans hospital remains in struggle credited this fall.

TRAUMA from page 1

Charity Hospital, once one of the nation's largest hospitals, was home to New Orleans' only top-level trauma center, with staffing and equipment to handle the most complex emergency injuries. The hospital was getting 160,000 emergency and trauma visits a year.

But 650-bed Charity was irreparably damaged by floodwaters after Hurricane Katrina. Since then, most of the city's trauma and emergency cases have been handled in U.S. Navy ships, temporary combat hospital tents, and in four civilian hospitals that have managed to restore at least some of their services.

But the ships left weeks ago. And the combat hospital tents, which are currently the city's main trauma center, are scheduled to pack up later this month.

"It's going to be a major problem," said Helen Ruiz, director of the emergency department at Touro Infirmary, the only downtown hospital ER currently open.

Charity's parent organization, the Louisiana State University Health Care Services Division, is trying to lease a hospital and re-establish a trauma center. But it's also struggling to cover bills.

"We are a bus crash away from complete and total disaster," said Donald Smithburg, chief executive of the LSU hospital organization.

But the story is different in Detroit. Officials at Detroit Receiving Hospital, the Motor City's long-standing chief trauma center, said their center is on solid footing right now and has been able to handle multiple-trauma incidents pretty well.

But it's a turnaround, they say, from the situation two years ago, when budget shortfalls spurred rumors that the trauma center would have to close. An infusion of state money saved the day, said Dr. James Tyburski.

Dr. Arthur Kellerman, an ER physician at Grady Memorial Hospital, believes that trauma centers are not prepared to handle a oncoming disaster.

Residents plan to take protest to Wal-Mart

WALMART from page 1

as well as the crowd.

Members from the nearby Peace Pagoda in Leverett attended the protest and offered an opening prayer. Sister Clare, a Monk from the Peace Pagoda said, "This is a wonderfully healthy and incredibly important initiative. It needs all the support it gets."

Saturday's protest is the beginning of a series of events, which will take place throughout the year and will include a screening of the new "Sprawlmart" film, a documentary that puts Wal-Mart in a negative light.

Goldman also unveiled the campaign's "next big step" plans for a major rally to be held at Wal-Mart's doorstep on Nov. 19.

At Wal-Mart's current expansion rate of 200 new stores in the United States every year members of campaign "Stop Sprawlmart," whose Web site is stopsprawlmart.org, are asking for any type of support.

The campaign announced plans to advertise on the PVTA transit system for the entire year. However, they can only currently afford three months

Kerry encourages 'Grassroots' campaigning stay, the Iraqis will say 'we're going to let them stay as long as we want," said Kerry. "I think that's wrong. It's time for Iraqis to police Iraqis, it's time for Iraqi's to stand up to Iraq."

KERRY from page 1

Kerry then emphasized education, saying that "53 percent of high school students in the United States do not graduate high school." China and India are racing further ahead in education and technology fields and that this calls for a new national educational plan, he said.

Kerry says he wants to fix intelligence in the country; he wants good foreign policy and believes America needs to be less dependant on Saudi oil.

During the question and answer session, an Emerson College student asked Kerry what main party initiatives the Democratic grassroots organization should be focusing on. The five issues Kerry stated were energy, healthcare, fiscal spending, educational funding and homeland security. All of these, Kerry said, the student Democrats should be aware of and voice their awareness to other young citizens.

He also shared encouraging words to the grassroots volunteers.

"I've seen the civil rights movement, the women's and environmental movements, and it was grassroots that succeeded in changing things," said Kerry.

Kerry concluded by giving the students a little lesson in politics.

"All politics is a reaction to felt needs. You need to get people to feel the need. Our job is to make sure the right felt need is taken into consideration."

UMass students share concern over lack of U.S. aid in earthquake relief efforts press conference.

RELIEF from page 1

According to the international relief group Oxfam, only 30 percent of the $550 million requested by the UN for relief has been provided. In contrast, eighty percent of the aid requested for last December's tsunami was funded within ten days.

The charity is naming names: it says the governments of Belgium, France, Austria, Finland, Greece, Portugal and Spain have yet to donate a single penny to the relief efforts, compared to poorer nations, such as Chile, who have contributed.

And while the United States government has given $10.8 million — second only to Britain — the group says this is still far below the "fair share" relative to the overall size of the US economy.

Aid organizations fear that a combination of factors, including the harsh winter, the threat of disease, and the aftershocks that have continued to shake Pakistan since the quake struck may ultimately double the number of dead.

Their concern is shared by the UMass students.

"The UN in the past two weeks has practically been begging the international community to give more aid because they need, I think the latest I read, 2.3 million people will need shelter and food to survive the winter," said Checa, who is originally from Pakistan. "And with the money that the UN has right now they can only provide for 500,000 people for two months.

"I guess it's very depressing because some areas have had up to 2,000 aftershocks since the earthquake. It's been different in different areas but some of the aftershocks have been in the scale of five on the Richter scale. They're still going on, there was one yesterday. They don't have enough tents so many people are still living out in the open. They are high in the mountains where the temperature at night is below freezing these days. Things are really bad and I guess that's what moved us to try to do something," Checa said.

For more information on the relief efforts at UMass, contact Sofia Checa by e-mail at schecara@umass.edu, Swati Birla at swatibirla@yahoo.co.uk or Peter Manolakov at ptmanolakov@hotmail.com

Lawmakers concerned over use of Patriot Act

By HOPE YEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Lawmakers expressed concern Sunday that the FBI was aggressively pushing the powers of the anti-terrorist USA Patriot Act to access private phone and financial records of ordinary people.

"We should be looking at that very closely," said Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., who is a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee. "It appears to me that this is, if not abused, being close to abused."

Sen. Chuck Hagel, R-Neb., a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee, agreed, saying the government's expanded power highlights the risks of balancing national security against individual rights.

"It does point up how dangerous this can be," said Hagel, who appeared with Biden on ABC's "This Week."

Under the Patriot Act, the FBI issues more than 30,000 national security letters allowing the investigations each year, a hundredfold increase over historic norms, The Washington Post reported Sunday, quoting unnamed government sources.

The security letters, which were first used in the 1970s, allow access to people's phone and e-mail records, as well as financial data and the Internet sites they surf. The 2001 Patriot Act removed the requirement that the records sought be those of someone under suspicion.

As a result, FBI agents can review the digital records of a citizen as long as the bureau can certify that the person's records are "relevant" to a terrorist investigation.

Calling the recent growth in the number of letters a "stunner," Biden said, "Thirty thousand seems like an awful, awful stretch to me."

Justice Department spokesman Brian Roehrkasse said Sunday that he could not immediately confirm or dispute the 30,000 figure, but he said the power to use the security letters was justified.

"The Department of Justice inspector general in August 2005 found no civil rights violations with respect to the Patriot Act," he said.

Issued by the FBI without review by a judge, the letters are used to obtain electronic records from "electronic communications service providers." Such providers include Internet service companies but also universities, public interest organizations and almost all libraries, because most provide access to the Internet.

Last September in an ACLU lawsuit, a federal judge in New York struck down this provision as unconstitutional on grounds that it restrains free speech and bars or deters judicial challenges to government searches.

Senator Jesse Helms, right (R-NC) and Joseph Biden (D-DEL) attend a joint press conference at the U.S. Senate, Thursday.

That ruling has been suspended pending an appeal to the New York-based 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. In a hearing last week the court suggested it might require the government to permit libraries, major corporations and other groups to challenge FBI demands for records.

The Patriot Act provision involving national security letters was enacted permanently in 2001, so it was not part of Congress' debate last summer over extending some Patriot Act provisions.

As the Dec. 31 deadline has approached for Congress to renew provisions of the act, the House and Senate have voted to make noncompliance with a national security letter a criminal offense.

The ACLU did not immediately return a phone call seeking comment Sunday.

MAYO CLINIC
SUMMER III
FOR JUNIOR NURSING STUDENTS

We invite you to explore the Summer III Student Nursing Experience with Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota. This program is for junior year students of a four-year baccalaureate nursing program. Summer III begins in early June and lasts for 10 weeks. Summer III is a paid, supervised nursing program exposing the student to a broad range of direct and indirect patient care settings on inpatient and surgical units.

Since 1997, Mayo Clinic Nursing in Rochester has been a recipient of the Magnet Hospital Recognition Status for Excellence in Nursing Service by the American Nurses Credentialing Center.

For more information about the Summer III program, please visit our website or contact:

Mayo Clinic
Human Resources, OE 4
200 1st Street SW, Rochester, MN 55905
ph 800 562 7984
e-mail summer3@mayo.edu

Application Deadline: January 15, 2006

www.mayoclinic.org/summer3-rst

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 2005

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The panic that drives us

Allison Edles

Panic is something we, as human beings, have become so good at. In fact, we have perfected this behavior and turned it into a very popular art form. Sure, there are funny panics and legitimate panics. Regardless, this is one emotion that keeps on gaining momentum. In fact, with the flu season upon us and the increasing threat and paranoia surrounding the bird flu, it's a safe bet that we'll be seeing a lot of unnecessary and humorous panicking going on ... especially from people who should know better.

The University of Massachusetts has taken its proper precautions in order to prevent the spread of influenza. On Oct. 26, University Health Services held its Campus Center Open Flu Clinic and "administered 850 doses of flu vaccine in seven hours," which they proudly and prominently displayed on their Web site. While UMass is a college campus and the majority of people on campus are not only students, but healthy adults, there is certainly reason to believe that elderly and infant patients also correctly received their flu inoculations at this "clinic."

However, for the bulk of UMass' population, there is no reason for any of us to receive a flu shot unless you fall into one of the following: are a child younger than four years of age; an adult age 65 and older (about 90 percent of the deaths caused by flu occur in this age group); a woman who will be in their second or third trimester of pregnancy during the flu season; a person who has chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), other lung diseases or heart failure; or a person who has a medical condition (such as acquired immunodeficiency syndrome [AIDS]) or are using a medication that impairs the immune system (compiled from WebMD.com).

> As college students, we put so much poison in our bodies and still manage to repeat the behavior weekend after weekend that a few strands of a virus shouldn't be enough to scare us into a panic. After all, we are not the ones that are in most need of the vaccine.

The flu vaccine is always in short supply. For example, the CVS on University Drive in Amherst has a sign posted in the pharmacy window saying that their flu drive was cancelled due to insufficient vaccine supplies. "We apologize for the inconvenience." As college students, we put so much poison in our bodies and still manage to repeat the behavior weekend after weekend that a few strands of a virus shouldn't be enough to scare us into a panic. After all, we are not the ones that are in most need of the vaccine.

This is all one giant reverberation of last year. However now, the only difference is that UHS is being proactive rather than reactive. On their Web site they state, "Already this fall UHS has administered over 1,400 doses of vaccine." This is quite a sad statement because those are 1,400 doses of flu vaccine that could have gone to patients who would actually benefit from them because they are at a higher risk to catch it to begin with. But, once again, panic set in and angry letters and phone calls from parents must have been flying. Therefore, we won't have adequate temperature control in Bartlett Hall or asbestos-free buildings on campus, but we'll have plenty of flu vaccine for all those non-at risk people who would better weather the sickness than most of the residents in Amherst.

In the end, we can't really blame UHS for complying with the panic. After all, if there's one thing this university does well it's covering their rears after a storm hits. Anyone remember the Red Sox riots? However, this behavior is very similar to that of a worried parent whose child was hurt by walking into a sharp corner. Consequently, that parent has gone and safety-proofed every single sharp corner in that entire house because, after all, they were the responsible ones.

So, in an effort to safety-proof UMass, we all have access to a flu shot. Now, if we only had access to other things such as working washing machines and dryers in the dorms, hot food in the Dining Commons and quality on-campus healthcare services then we would all be getting our money's worth.

On a campus of this size and with the amount of bodies circulating around, it is almost certain that when you hear of a class being cancelled because the professor is out with the flu, there will be a widespread panic. There already is that mentality of "Don't touch me, I don't want to get sick" if you're around a friend who has a sore throat. "It's strep throat, don't come near me." The amazing ability we all have to jump to conclusions and overanalyze the situation is what always leads us to panic. But in the end, where would we be without our paranoia? Probably lying in bed with a box of tissues, getting high off of cough syrup.

Allison Edles is a Collegian editor.

Racial isolation on campus

Shauna Staveley

All too often we allow racism to go unchallenged. We simply brush it off as an isolated incident and never attempt to understand the underlying motivation for the hatred. Racism, one of the most poignant issues in our country, seems to be an issue most students at UMass only discuss in their classrooms. True progress cannot come from the top down, so we cannot wait and hope the powerful institutions do all the work for us. If we do not start engaging people different from ourselves, outside the classroom, we will never make positive changes on this campus.

I'm going to take you through an experience that inspired this piece of writing. I was invited to a party on Friday by a friend of mine. We are both white females. The person that invited us to the party was a white male. After getting together a small group, we left for this party. It was supposed to be a good one: a keg with a DJ. Sounds like a typical and fun Friday night at UMass, right? Wrong.

We arrived at the party and we quickly noticed we were the only white people there, and everyone was staring at us. A female laughed at us, questioned my friend about who he knew at the party (he knew a couple people), then approached me and tried to make me pay a cover charge that nobody else had to pay. Keep in mind, we found out the party was free from the person who invited us.

> I decided we should wait it out, because it may have just been a few people giving us a hard time, and since we were invited we should be welcome at the house. Wrong again. When I tried to dance after minding my business by the wall for about an hour, the entire room stopped and stared. Finally, we left.

I decided we should wait it out, because it may have just been a few people giving us a hard time, and since we were invited we should be welcome at the house. Wrong again. When I tried to dance after minding my business by the wall for about an hour, the entire room stopped and stared. Finally, we left.

The problem with experiencing hatred is that people typically react in two ways: they hate themselves, or they loathe someone else. I am not going to fall into this trap. The key to learning from this experience is to try and understand the mindset of those who are acting out against you. This is the only thing that can bring true positive change.

I think the same discrimination may have happened to those that treated me the way they did on Friday. I truly feel that the people were passing hatred onto me that was passed onto them by negative experiences in the past. It could have been at UMass, or it could have been throughout their lives. Regardless, I feel that there was a reason behind the behavior: they probably have been in my shoes, many times.

This saddens me to see beautiful people do such ugly things because they allow hatred to spread until they condemn an entire group. This happens to people of every color and creed, and it does not strengthen a person; it makes them weak and destroys their heart. If people could only see that passing on the hate displayed against you is simply empowering those who hated you in the first place, we could all learn to empower ourselves instead and eliminate the cycle of ignorance and hate. In the words of the great author James Baldwin, "Hatred, which could destroy so much, never failed to destroy the man who hated and this was an immutable law."

Another thing I've noticed at UMass-Amherst is that there's a bit of isolation between races. Granted, I've seen times where everyone gets along fine. However, I've also seen situations where white people and non-white people do not even associate with each other; in classrooms, in meetings, in dorm areas and in dining halls.

Some would call this racial unity. That could be the explanation. But when groups of people become so ethnocentric that they allow assumptions and stereotypes to completely cloud their judgment of people they've never met, we are just building walls between each other that are almost impossible to break down. There is no progress in that.

Has anyone asked themselves why there are so many instances of racial isolation on this campus? It happens with every skin color, so no single group is to blame. Solidarity should not mean disdain, skepticism and hatred of those outside a group. I repeat: no progress is made when dislike is promoted instead of understanding.

We should all try and learn about the cultures around us. When we ignore the obvious separations, we are to blame. Everyone should take it upon themselves to talk about why race seems to be such a dividing factor on our campus, or any campus in this country, and put effort in destroying the tension that is lying under the surface seemingly on a daily basis. We should at least try to start the change within our student population. Ignorance is not bliss, and hatred accomplishes nothing.

Shauna Staveley is a UMass student

The Collegian is looking for political cartoonists
editorial@dailycollegian.com

Tools at their disposal

Matt Giancola

A number of weeks ago, I wrote about Captain Ian Fishback's and Sen. John McCain's struggle to get the federal government to abolish the practice of torture on unconvicted detainees. Column space is limited and I had a few potential subjects to tackle. Indeed, there are dozens of important topics to discuss in today's world, but none more important than how we as a country treat other people. I wish to inform you of the status of the legislation to abolish torture, and to go deeper into the reasons as to why we must not allow torture to continue.

After the McCain amendment was added to the bill, it was passed by the Senate by a margin of 90-9 votes. A similar bill was passed in the House. A conference committee was created to make compromises in order to craft one bill out of the two. Interestingly, some of the nine senators that voted against the McCain amendment are on the committee.

The vice president has been trying to squash the amendment. His efforts appear to be working. Not only is Cheney supporting a rejection of the amendment, but he wishes to place language that would specifically allow the military to abuse prisoners. This is not only a moral problem, but a legal one as well. Abusing detainees violates the U.N. Declaration of Human Rights, the Geneva Conventions, and the U.N. Convention Against Torture. It would place us in a precarious situation with our allies, who also believe in human rights. The executive wants no restrictions to its authority to fight the war. Dissent and compromise are out of the question. Secretary Rumsfeld and Cheney have been waiting for years to get their hands on the Middle East, and they aren't about to let some punk from Arizona who just so happened to have been tortured once himself get in the way.

In a statement to a closed meeting with Republicans, Cheney cited that he is not in favor of torture, but that the CIA and other agencies must have all the tools at their disposal. This came a few days before Lawrence Wilkerson, former chief of staff to then Secretary of State, Colin Powell, said, "It was clear to me there that there was a visible audit trail from the vice president's office through the secretary of defense down to the commanders in the field." The vice president knew what was going on from the beginning; he just decided not to call it torture.

> Secretary Rumsfeld and Cheney have been waiting for years to get their hands on the Middle East, and they aren't about to let some punk from Arizona who just so happened to have been tortured once himself

In some ways, I can see where the vice president and the right are coming from. They are ruled by their fear; they have let it take over everything they have ever learned about what it means to be an American. We all get scared. When others wish us harm, we fear for our future. Fear is a powerful political tool and Dick Cheney is using it quite well on Capitol Hill.

But let us take solace in the fact that America survives terrors and dangers not through fear, but through another tool – hope. Franklin told us that there was nothing to be scared of in Adolf Hitler, and that we had everything to hope for in a post war world. Abraham told us that though the war was long, a future of freedom and prosperity was in store. Franklin and Abraham didn't dodge America's problems with the tactics used by their foes; they attacked them with the ideals of ours.

There are times when our hearts become filled with rage and we want nothing more than to be violent, when 19 murderers decide to kill a few thousand people, when a kid straps a bomb to himself because he thinks that doing so will gain his entry into everlasting heaven. I am not asking for their sympathy. I am not asking for their demands to be met. I am, however, asking us to stand up and confront our enemy with what we believe. Let that be our weapon in winning over those who hate us.

Vice President Cheney and Secretary Rumsfeld wish to single handedly alter my country's values. To quote another American who was similarly irate, "Have you no decency? At long last sir, have you no decency?" It is we who must restore the nation's decency, not him. Only then can our beliefs be realized. It all begins with the passage of Amendment #1977.

Matt Giancola is a Collegian columnist.

The real cost of a six-pack

Christopher Eckel

The Massachusetts Legislature recently passed "Melanie's Law," a bill that seeks to strengthen the range of actions that can be taken against repeat offenders of driving while intoxicated. The bill is named after a young girl who was killed when she was struck by a car driven by a repeat offender. The impetus for passing the law came from family members of this girl so tragically cut down. Among other things, the bill calls for longer prison terms, a quicker process for stripping the offender's license and an interlock system that would disengage the car if the driver blew a certain blood alcohol content level.

At a place like UMass, and at a time when driving while intoxicated seems to be on the rise, the question must be asked: "Why don't all cars have such a system?" If the technology exists, it should be incorporated into every new car that is rolling out of the factory. The arguments against such an idea seem to be that the consumer wouldn't want to put up with the burden of having to blow every time he/she starts the car, and that the automobile industry potentially would lose some money.

> Piloting a two-ton hunk of metal around at high speeds requires skill and competence, and although some might question that those exist in Massachusetts drivers, there is no denying that in order to drive, one must pass a series of tests designed to protect the

As for the consumer, we must remember that driving is a privilege, not a right. Piloting a two-ton hunk of metal around at high speeds requires skill and competence, and although some might question that those exist in Massachusetts drivers, there is no denying that in order to drive, one must pass a series of tests designed to protect the driver and others on the road. Why not add one more? In order to access most privileges in life, you have to prove you are worthy to do so. Driving should be no exception to that rule. If you don't want to blow, just call a taxi or walk.

It seems the car business is a pretty profitable one. How many companies can you name in the automobile industry that have been around for quite some time? With the exception of the new wave of Asian imports, most car brands have been in business since before we were all born. There's a good reason for that sustained profitability, of course: people see an automobile as a necessity, so there will always be a market for well-made cars. Car companies can surely afford to install a device and then mark up the price of the car slightly to compensate for it. I wouldn't mind seeing the federal government pass legislation requiring such a device on all new cars; if the major automakers don't like it, they can take their business elsewhere.

This isn't some Orwellian argument for the government being able to monitor citizens' lives. There's no need for a feedback system, merely for a high BAC to impede starting the car. UMass students are all responsible adults, ideally speaking, but we all mess up once in a while. And that's the fact of the matter. As a society, we often deride people who are convicted of a DUI; they get called all sorts of names and often have a very difficult time securing a job. The truth of the matter, of course, is that most people convicted of a DUI are just like us: they went to a party, had a drink or two, and made a poor decision. Did they put other people's lives and properties in danger while doing so? Undoubtedly, and if it comes to pass that you get behind a wheel when you shouldn't, you should pay the price. Responsibility for one's actions is one of the main tenets of our legal system.

But shouldn't the entire system be based upon proactive strategies, rather than reactive ones? Isn't the entire point of the new law to try and prevent further travesties by taking irresponsible drivers off the road? If saving lives is the real focus of this law, then the best way we can do so is to prevent drunk-driving in the first place. You can't become a repeat offender if you never initially drive drunk. People generally deserve a second chance, particularly when it comes to instances of poor judgment. Wouldn't you rather realize you got a second chance after having to walk home from the Moan and Dove than realizing it while spending the night (or longer) in jail?

Christopher Eckel is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 2005

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACTING REPLACES ACTION IN 'JARHEAD'

BY RICH LOMBARD
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

It has been almost twenty years since a film has tried to tackle the mental aspect of war. In 1987, Stanley Kubrick accomplished it with "Full Metal Jacket." Before that, the 1970s brought us both "Apocalypse Now" and "Deer Hunter." All three of these films opened everyday citizens' eyes to how deranged the minds of soldiers become as witnesses of violence and chaos seen only in times of war. Sam Mendes ("American Beauty," "Road to Perdition") has continued to have success as a director of feature presentations by adding his new film, "Jarhead," to this list of psychological war thrillers.

Based on the novel "Jarhead," the film retells experiences of the Gulf War through author and former Marine Anthony Swofford. Jake Gyllenhaal ("October Sky," "Bubble Boy," "Donnie Darko") plays Swofford, a young dreamer who like most Marines has the desire to defend his country by mutilating the enemy. Unfortunately for Swofford and the rest of the 500,000 troops based on the ground during the Gulf War, the enemy was virtually non-existent. The real conflict was more political than anything else, leaving the troops with a desperate feeling of uselessness and boredom that caused the mental breakdowns seen in the film.

Due to the lack of force conflict, the film had nearly no battle scenes which (for obvious reasons) are common to war films. This was nice to see. As cool as a "Saving Private Ryan" film is, the footage of explosions and people dying have become rather stock and have seemed to reach a plateau. Instead, Mendes focused more on mental assaults being made in the minds of the soldiers through the lack of the fighting and boundless amount of time spent in the desert.

"Jarhead"
Directed by Sam Mendes
Starring Jake Gyllanhal, Jamie Foxx
Universal Pictures
Rated R
123 mins.
Grade B+

At the same time, Mendes resists from making any obvious political statements about whether this war, or war itself, is right or wrong. This would be an easy statement to make given the circumstances of this particular conflict. What Mendes does instead is show that chaos and violence are not the only things that make war a psychological mess. The anticipation and potential energy being built as soldiers wait to fight can fill the void that the lack of it creates.

Jack Gyllenhaal provided an amazing performance as Swofford. His character begins as a young whippersnapper with dreams of going to war, becoming a hero and coming home to his girlfriend. Quickly, he finds these ideals to be unrealistic due to his separation from society for such a prolonged period of time. His life outside of the war falls apart as his girlfriend begins seeing someone else. This is a common thread through many of the troops, and begins to build anger inside of them towards the war.

This anger is distributed between the enemy whom they cannot see and each other and causes a desire to fight and feel as though they are there for a reason. Through this process, Gyllenhaal shows tremendous acting ability by making the transformation from a boy with idealistic views to a man with serious internal conflict without the aid of battle.

Jamie Foxx plays Staff Sgt. Sykes in the film and gives a decent performance as the hardnosed officer we've seen hundreds of times before. There was nothing noteworthy about his performance besides a brief dialogue with Jake Gyllenhaal towards the end of the film which was both heartwarming and badass at the same time.

Overall, the film was very well done. It was shot very well and the acting was topnotch. The story was very interesting even though it was about a group of soldiers sitting around for months on end. The lack of gunshots, fire and blood was not missed as it was replaced with better, less often seen acting and self-conflicts.

COURTESY SAFRAN ARTS CONT

NIFF offers independent films for independent minds

BY MORGAN-ANN ROUSSEAU
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The 11th Annual Northampton Independent Film Festival will be held Nov. 9 to 11, showcasing a dynamic array of nearly 100 domestic and international films that range from comedy to drama, short pieces and more.

"This year's festival promises to be the biggest and brightest festival yet. I am thankful to the city of Northampton, the filmmakers and volunteers who make this an extraordinary event," said festival director David Leo.

The festival is one of the premier cultural events sponsored in Northampton, and has helped earn the city its distinction as being one of the premiere small arts towns. NIFF is considered one of the top of its kind in the Northeast, and is planning to carry on its tradition with this year's event.

On Wednesday, the festival kicks off with a reception from 5:30 to 7 p.m. at the Northampton Center for the Arts. At the event, members of the community will have a chance to meet with actors, directors and producers.

Program director Charlie Burke said that the film selection process is very involved. "Every film is screened and scored by at least three people. It takes thousands of hours to do this. Once we have screened all the films it takes another month to put together a program," said Burke.

After a gruelling selection process, the jury sorted through roughly 500 submissions from all around the world. NIFF directors said that they were looking for films that are interesting, pair well with other films in a particular category, and draw an intrigued audience.

After the reception, actor and director Tim Daly is opening the festival with his directorial debut of a quirky drama, "Hereth," at the Academy of Music. The film is about a young Vermont widow (Vinessa Shaw) who seems to be handling the death of her husband a year ago gracefully, until her grief begins to erode away her well-adjusted façade. Tickets for the opening night reception and screening are available for $10, with each event requiring a separate admission.

On Thursday, the festival will feature a screening of "Edge of America" by director Chris Eyre at 7:30 p.m. at the Academy of Music. Based on a true story, a black educator ("NYPD Blue's" James McDaniel) takes a job teaching high school English at the Three Nations Reservation, and is coaxed into coaching the girls' basketball team.

Keep your eyes open for "The Hole Story," which will be screened on Friday night at 6:30 p.m. The comedy is directed Alex Parovsky's first feature length film. The film follows one man's desperate effort to solve a small town's mystery, which ultimately leads to his maniacal breakdown.

Several members of the film's small crew went to school in the Amherst area, including the director of photography Robert Henry (UMass, Amherst), cameraman and animator Brian Spinks (Hampshire College) and the post-production supervisor, Trinidad Rodriquez (UMass, Amherst).

"The story and characters of this comedy are very much geared towards a smart college audience, so I feel your readership will get a kick out of this most unusual film," said Parovsky.

Friday also features a showing of "Favela Rising" at 7 p.m. at the Academy of Music. Northampton natives Jeff Zimbalist and Matt Mochary produced and directed the documentary that follows a man and a movement, a city divided and a Brazilian settlement united. Through hip-hop music, street rhythms and Afro-Brazilian dance, the film features counteraction of the violent oppression enforced by teenage drug armies and sustained by corrupt police.

This year the festival is screening a risque film titled "Kissing on the Mouth," a film made by college students about sex and relationships. It's playing

See FILM on page 6

Kate Winterich and Kevin Pittman play co-lovers Ellen and Chris in Joe Swanberg's "Kissing on the Mouth," a provocative film about sex and relationships that will be shown at NIFF on Friday.

Festival showcases independents

FILM from page 5

Friday at 9:30 p.m. in the Academy of Music.

"The film is explicit and very sexual yet the filmmakers have told their story in a way that has not been done on film before. As a result it stays with you," Burke said. The director and actors are flying in from Chicago for a question and answer panel after the event.

Saturday exhibits several documentaries. Among them is "Visioning Tibet," shown at 2 p.m. in Graham Hall. The film chronicles the passion of humanitarian award-winning doctor Marc Lieberman and his mission to end preventable blindness in Tibet by 2020. We'll also see "Vieques: Worth Every Bit of Struggle" at 4 p.m. in Graham Hall. The film documents the David and Goliath struggle of the island Vieques, Puerto Rico, whose people stood up to the world's most powerful military and won through peaceful means.

A compilation of films titled "The Best of the Boston Underground Film Festival" features adult content. No one under 18 will be admitted without a parent or guardian. This event takes place at 8:45 p.m. in Seelye Hall on Saturday.

For those of you interested in behind-the-scene aspects, Saturday will also feature a pair of free panels on filmmaking. At 11:30 a.m. in Seelye Hall, there will be a discussion of Marketing and Distribution. At 4 p.m., there will be a panel discussion on "The Elements of Sound."

Fourteen-year-old Actress Zoe Weizenbaum of Amherst will help host a showing of the film "Missing in America" at 4:30 p.m on Sunday at the Academy of Music. The young actress was discovered by Steven Spielberg, and the film is her hometown-area feature film debut. Directed by Gabrielle Savage Dockterman, "Missing in America" is a poignant and timely drama. "Missing in America" is about a reclusive, irritable former Vietnam hero (Danny Glover) who lives in the deep rainforest of the Pacific Northwest. After he receives a visit from an ailing ex-platoon mate, he must care for his old-friend's spirited, half-Vietnamese daughter played by Weizenbaum. She will talk about her sudden stardom and "Missing in America" during a question and answer panel after the screening.

Independent film events like NIFF exhibit original film styles and novel film making techniques that aren't embraced by mainstream movie studios and audiences. NIFF selected these films because they demonstrate quality, innovation, and independence in both form and content, in order to carry on its exploration, examination, and celebration of independent filmmaking.

Those who feel compelled and moved by the pointed originality of Independent film will find NIFF offers an excellent exposure of unique and diverse artistic works that promise to inspire and intrigue.

Events like this keep an artistic community like Northampton buzzing with artistic affluence. The writers and directors of independent films are striving to translate day-to-day life, manipulate it into an artistic form and then display their interpretations to a thoughtful, individual audience.

All of NIFF's films are showcased at the Northampton Academy of Music, Smith College, Calvin Theatre, Graham Hall, Media Arts Cinema, the Northampton Center for the Arts, Seelye Hall, Silk Road Café and Stoddard Hall.

Tickets are $8 for general admission, $7 for students and seniors, $10 for the opening night party and $10 for the opening night screening. All festival passes are available online at ticketweb.com for $125. For ticket information, call the Northampton Independent Film Festival office at 413-582-1832.

Streep is 'Prime' for comedy

By Jake Morth
Collegian Staff

Meryl Streep has made the transition into comedy. After playing it dramatic for so long, she took the role in "Lemony Snicket's a Series of Unfortunate Events." Her eccentricities there were humorous. Here, though, the task is more difficult. She has to play a normal character and make us laugh. Following the lead of other dramatic actors who have branched off into comedy, such as Robert Deniro, Streep, always an ambitious risk-taker, is no stranger to challenge.

"Prime"
Directed by Ben Younger
Starring Uma Thurman Meryl Streep
Universal Pictures
Rated PG-13
105 mins.
Grade C

In "Prime," Streep plays Lisa, a Jewish mother and therapist, who believes "religion is paramount in a person's life." One of her patients, Raffi (Uma Thurman), is a gentile. Raffi has just signed the divorce papers to get her ex, Frances, out of her life. She's ready for love again, but the man she meets and kisses on their first date is her therapist's son. Naturally, the religion problem comes into play and Streep wants the relationship to end as soon as possible.

The son's name is Dave (Bryan Greenberg), and when he tells his mother he's dating a gentile, she tells him the relationship can't possibly go anywhere because of the clash of religions. Then, in a session with Raffi, the truth becomes apparent to Lisa. Her son's girlfriend is her patient. Should she continue with the therapy? She consults her own therapist about it and decides that it's just a fling and she'll stick with Raffi in the hopes that the relationship will fizzle out.

The basic story concept is funny, but as you might have guessed there's a limit to how far this plug is going to take us. Streep's gulps, uncomfortable nods and distressed comments when Raffi talks about her sex life are good for laughs. There are some lines that are very simple and humorless, but thanks to Streep's expert deliveries come across as very funny. But soon enough, the plug gets old.

As if sensing our boredom, the screenwriter, Ben Younger (who is also the director) lets the cat out of the bag. He does so much earlier than one would expect. Streep tells Raffi the truth. We can breath easy. He's not going to try to make us laugh at the plug for another 45 minutes. Instead, it turns into a cliché romantic comedy with nothing going for it. One of their conflicts is about age. Raffi is thirty-seven and Dave is twenty-three. Then, Dave offends Raffi's boss. Even worse, he sleeps with someone when they break up. Of course, there's the scene where Raffi finds out about the affair and storms out. Then there's the conflict where Raffi wants a baby and Dave is still a kid. The film even has to resort to what is becoming the most overused scene in movies – the hiding someone in the closet scene.

If all of this sounds terribly boring, insipid and uninspired, it's because it is. On the plus side, however, the main laughs in the film come from Streep and there's a good deal of them. The one quibble that her performance calls to mind is that she appears far more intelligent and complex than her narrow-minded character. It's hard to buy the idea that Streep, who wears a new-age healer-type necklace in one scene, is really so old-fashioned in how she governs her son's life.

To add insult to injury, the ending is totally unsatisfying. Everything the film has been building towards is suddenly thrown out along with our hopes in favor of some kind of meaningless statement. Despite all its flaws, however, Prime is fun and not in the least bit annoying. The combined acting talents of Streep, Thurman and Greenberg are enough to carry the film. It's an average comedy, and its original premise wears thin quickly until it dissolves into something we've all seen many times before.

SOURCE
(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England
Compiled by Monica Gleberman

MondayNovember7

Six of one half dozen of the other: The Photographs and Paintings of Thomas Ratte" opening reception will begin at 4 p.m. in the Student Union Art Gallery. This event will last until Nov. 11.

Internship Information Session will be available in Goodell at 3 p.m. All students thinking about taking advantage of a co-op or internship opportunity should attend this orientation and learn about the process from staff and students who know the ropes.

TuesdayNovember8

Full-Time MBA Open House will be in Isenberg School of Management from 9:30 a.m. until 12:30 p.m. Learn more about the MBA Program at the Isenberg School of Management, ranked #4 for Best Professors and #6 for Overall Academic Experience.

"Woman Directors: Iran-New Asian Cinema" will begin at 7 p.m. in Isenberg School of Management. With exquisite artistry, one of Iran's leading contemporary filmmakers, Samira Makhmalbaf, directs two films with protagonists who are educators.

A recital by William Hite, tenor, with Craig Smith at the piano will be at the Fine Arts Center starting at 8 p.m. The recital will feature Schubert's Song Cycle, "Die schone Müllenn, Op. 25, D.795" ("The Fair Maid of the Mill"), set to poems by Wilhelm Muller. For more information call the FAC at 545-2511.

WednesdayNovember9

Tai Chi and Kung Fu at UMass in Boyden Gym from 6 p.m. – 9 p.m. The UMass Inner Arts Club sponsors in-depth training and workshops in Yang and Chen style Tai Chi, Pa Kua Chang and Wu Chi Kung Fu.

Chi will be performing at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Back by popular demand. This show sold-out two seasons ago and had the audience on the edge of their seats and their jaws on the floor the entire time. For more information call the FAC at 545-2511.

"The Inventions of Leonardo da Vinci" will be shown in the Herter Art Gallery. This exhibition is comprised of sixteen models that were created by the engineers at IBM Corporation, with a view to reconstructing as accurately as possible some of the visionary ideas for machines and mechanical devices originally contained in the sketchbooks of Leonardo. For more information visit umass.edu/art.

ThursdayNovember10

Talk on "Public Versus Private Knowledge" featuring Sam Bowles, who will speak at Montague Book Mill from 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. The Center for Popular Economics invites you to a presentation on public versus private knowledge in the information age. For more information and directions visit www.umass.edu.

The Who's "Tommy" will begin at 8 p.m. in the Bowker Auditorium. The UMass Theatre Guild presents the rock sensation that documents the transformation of a deaf, dumb and blind boy into the Pinball Wizard. For more information visit umass.edu/rso/guild.

Drag Ball will be in the Campus Center Auditorium from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Come dance to a DJ and watch local drag kings and queens compete.

Women's Ice Hockey vs. UConn will be in the Mullins Center. The Minutewomen face off against the UConn Huskies at the Mullins Center Ice Rink. For more information visit www.umass.edu.

Sketch 22, UMass's sketch comedy group, will be giving a free performance at 8 p.m. in Herter 231. Come join them for a night of exciting sketch comedy.

FridayNovember11

Keith Urban in concert at the Mullins Center. The concert will begin at 7:30 p.m. One of country's hottest new stars, the Grammy nominated and Academy of Country Music winning Keith Urban rolls into the Mullins Center for a night of unparalleled entertainment.

RANE and Adam Ezra Group will be performing at 10 p.m. Tickets start at $8. For more information visit iheg.com.

SaturdayNovemberr12

Cape Verdean Cultural Night 2005 will be in the Campus Center Auditorium from 7 p.m. – 2 a.m. The theme of the night is "Global Connection" in honor of all the Cape Verdeens all around the world that are forced to emigrate due to lack of opportunities in Cape Verde.

Men's Hockey vs. Boston University at the Mullins Center. The game begins at 7 p.m. Men's Hockey will take on Boston University at the Mullins Center.

Hapkido Seminar with Grandmaster Labodycz, head of the American Hapkido Association, will be in the Boyden Gym. The seminar begins at 1 p.m. Seminar in the Korean self-defense art by America's ranking Hapkido Grandmaster.

Matthew Herbert will perform at 10 p.m. at the Basement. Admission is free. For more information visit iheg.com.

SundayNovember13

Infinity Brass will be performing at the Bezanson Recital Hall. UMass Amherst's faculty brass quintet presents a concert in Bezanson Hall. The concert begins at 8 p.m. For more information call the FAC at 545-2511.

Steve Forbert and Ray Manson will perform at the Iron Horse Music Hall starting at 7 p.m. Tickets start at $15. For more information visit iheg.com.

PINUP

KEITH URBAN
Grammy nominated and Academy of Country Music award winning artist Keith Urban will perform at the Mullins Center at 7:30 p.m. on Friday.

students.usecreditwisely.com
A website designed to help make credit work for you, not against you.
It includes tips on budgeting, saving and avoiding credit pitfalls.
Because the more you know about credit now, the less painful your financial future will be.
Visit us today.
students.usecreditwisely.com much better than students.humanteatsubjectsforcash.com.
citi
Live richly.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repairs & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.northamherstmotors.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

break from the ordinary
Acapulco
7 nights at El Presidente
$899
Cancun
7 nights at Dos Playas
$749
Negril
7 nights at Fun Holiday Beach Resort
$769
U of M Campus Center: Rm 224
(413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND

COME TO THE OPEN HOUSE ON TUES. AND GET INFO ABOUT ARTS & LIVING

UM season kicks off

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team suited up and hit the Mullins Center floor on Friday night for the first time this season in an exhibition game against Simon Fraser University, a team that has won 46 out of its last 47 games.

But SFU was missing some key post players, and UMass coach Marnie Ducko knew that the UMass inside game would prevail.

"They're really playing without their post players so they're minus post-play," Ducko said. "They're running a five-out offense and they stick the three very well, so it was a great game for UMass to play."

Ducko wants her team to utilize the fast break and get some easy baskets this season, but her team on Friday looked big and strong, scoring inside at will and getting most of its points off of post play and set offenses.

"I was thrilled with the assists," Ducko said. "I was thrilled with the shooting percentage. I certainly do try to teach scoring off of the passes and that's what we were doing."

Sophomore Kate Mills scored a game-high 22 points in 26 minutes of action. Most of her points came around the basket, as she showed a natural ability to score around the basket. Mills has a lethal touch from the outside, as her coach and fellow players will admit, but Ducko wants her to rebound and stay in the paint this year to help trigger the Minutewoman fast break.

SFU was accustomed to winning, but the Minutewomen handled it easily, taking a 10-6 lead a few minutes into the game, sustaining and building that lead throughout the remainder of the contest.

Senior Ashley Sharpton scored the first bucket of the game off of the tap, taking junior Tamara Tatham's tap and taking it all the way to the basket for the quick score. Mills scored six of the first 10 points for the Minutewomen, as they made a concerted effort to dump the ball inside to Mills, T. Tatham and sophomore Whitney Macdonald.

The Simon Fraser offense was dormant in the first half and the absence of their big people was evident. It took 14 threes in the first half alone and only three went in. The rest clanged off the rim into the hands of Mills, who quickly passed it ahead to redshirt senior Katie Nelson running down the floor.

UMass took a 39-25 lead into the half, but came out sluggish in the second, at one point scoring just six points in nine minutes of play. The threes that weren't falling in the first half were dropping in the second for SFU, as Minutewomen defenders were getting caught on screens and not contesting shots.

"In the second half we started holding the ball," Ducko said. "Now whether we were trying to just to press – you know, 'I have to get my points in', I don't know."

UMass' set offenses were not as effective in the second half, with no moving off of the ball, too much dribbling and a lot standing around. But the Minutewomen have just under two weeks to iron out these early kinks before opening the regular season at Delaware on Nov. 18, and their play in the first half gave Ducko a foundation to build upon.

Minutewomen fall to Richmond in A-10 championship game

F. HOCKEY from page 10

From there the first half was owned by Richmond, which tallied another five goals, and led 5-0 at the half. The Minutewomen were simply outmatched in the first half, getting out-shot 22-0 and giving up six penalty corners. Malatesta had five points in the first half alone, with a pair of goals following the assist. Shannon Taylor also had two goals in the opening period.

"We were not as poised as we needed to be in some [aspects] of the game," UMass coach Patty Shea said. "We made a couple of mistakes and Richmond took advantage of them [early in the game]."

The Minutewomen fell too far behind to make any kind of a comeback in the second half.

"When you get down 1-0, 2-0 in a championship game, [you] have dug a big hole for yourself," Shea said.

UMass' only shot in the game came at 40:22 in the second half on a pass from sophomore Kara Murphy to junior Gina Sanders. Murphy caught Richmond goalie Michelle Schwartz out of position and centered the ball to Sanders, who scored the easy goal.

Richmond would answer with a third goal from Taylor, who finished with six points on four shots, shooting the ball past senior goalkeeper Heather Ryan, who came into the game late to replace Letourneau.

The game ended at 7-1, marking Richmond's fourth consecutive A-10 championship. UMass will be the runner-up for the second year in a row.

"I was proud of how our team did in the second half," Shea said. "We never stopped playing, even after falling behind [by six goals]."

The Minutewomen had just three seniors on the roster for the 2005 season. Midfielder Patricia Borneo and backs Jaime Bawden and Katelyn Woolfrey played their final game as Minutewomen Saturday at Geasey Field.

The trio combined for 29 points on the season with eight goals and 13 assists. Coach Shea says their presence will be missed.

"You can't replace their personalities and the leadership they brought to the team," Shea said of the three seniors.

After the championship game, the All-Tournament team was announced. Jaime Bawden was the only recipient of the award for UMass. Despite making it to the championship game, the Minutewomen had only one player earn the honor, while Temple had two players on the team, and St. Joe's had three.

Richmond Senior Allie Howard received Most Outstanding Player honors.

UMass grabs a playoff bid

SOCCER from page 10

of the situation. He only knew his team had to win. His seniors knew it too; senior captain Oral Bullen and senior Ernie Billlittier hadn't been to the tournament since their freshman year, and they let the team know how much it would mean to them if they made it in their final season.

"I was very proud of the leaders," Koch said. "Oral [Bullen] and Ernie [Billittier] came forward at the end, stepping forward and being good players to follow. Oral was great yesterday, Ernie, at times when we lost our focus, he's been able to come back and bring the team back to the joh at hand, which wouldn't have happened last year."

The intensity of the Saint Bonaventure game was somewhat overshadowed by the horrible weather conditions.

There were two lightning delays during the game, and players were slipping all over the field trying to get their footing. The only goal of the game was in the 11th minute when Billittier sent a crossing pass near the Bonnies' net. A Saint Bonaventure defender jumped to try and deflect the hall away from the net but ended up scoring on his own goal.

After the first goal the Minutemen were dominating play, but at about six minutes until halftime the first of the delays was called, and Koch believes it took away some of the momentum from his team.

"In the first half we controlled the tempo and I thought we were in control of what was going on," Koch said. "And then they had the first lightning stop and we sat for like 40 minutes, which I think really took a lot of the momentum away. And I was really proud of the fact that the last six minutes that we finally did go on the field to finish the first half, we did well.

"And then we had a short halftime and then they started the second half, and you could tell that we'd lost some of the momentum, and they put us under pressure. But I thought there were spurts where we took control, hut there were definitely spurts where they were putting us under pressure."

UMass was confronted with a two-game road trip and a shot at the playoffs that depended as much upon what other A-10 teams did in the last few weeks as it did on its own performance. But the Minutemen put two wins in the books, one in double overtime fashion against Fordham and another in the wind and mud against the Bonnies.

They defied the odds, coming back from a devastating loss against Rhode Island (their first round opponent next weekend) and three-game losing streak to start the conference season.

On the hus ride after the game last night, Koch tried to convey his elation while helping the bus driver find the nearest hotel.

"I don't think I could he prouder," Koch said. "This has not been an easy season. It has not been an easy year for these guys. They've all hung together. They've stayed focused on the job they've had to do."

Now the joh is Rhode Island, in the first round of the Atlantic 10 tournament.

At Ernst & Young we know each employee is integral to the strength of the firm.

Every individual matters. That's why we've created an environment that's conducive to personal and professional growth and success. At Ernst & Young, we're offering an opportunity to learn from some of the best talent in the industry. Look for us on campus if you'd like to connect, or visit us on the Web at ey.com/us/careers.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2005

Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

UM win defies history

FOOTBALL from page 10

line and meandered their way down the field for a 17-play, 81-yard drive that took up 7:35. With the 36 penalty yards, the offense actually gained 119 yards on the long scoring drive that was capped off with Coen's three-yard rushing touchdown.

"I think I might have put my coaching life on the line there because if we certainly, didn't get [the fourth-down conversion], obviously, that would have been an opportunity to second-guess me," Brown said. "As I tell these guys all the time; no risk, no reward.

"I just felt like we needed to make a statement. One, I had the confidence we could make it a foot. And two, I just felt like we needed to make a statement. I did not want to give the ball up. I wanted to try to give our guys a chance to get into a flow because the penalties were killing us."

Ahead 7-0, UMass was facing a fourth-and-three at the Delaware 23-yard line. Coen was rolling to his right and saw tight end Ian Jorgensen wide open in front of him streaking to the end zone, but Jorgensen – in the game following starter Mike Douglas' right ankle sprain – dropped the pass at the three-yard line, giving the ball back to Delaware.

Two possessions later, the Minutemen used another long drive, this time using 11 plays for 76 yards, to push the lead to 13-0 with 50 seconds remaining in the first half. After Coen connected on three passes for 50 yards, Baylark rushed the ball four straight times, the last one being a one-yard score up the middle.

On Delaware's next offensive play, quarterback Sonny Riccio tried throwing a home run ball off his back foot down the left side, but the pass was badly underthrown to cornerback Tracy Belton, who camped underneath the ball and followed a convoy of blockers led by defensive end Kenon Williams into the endzone. The 45-yard interception return also signified Riccio's first interception in a span of 134 pass attempts.

"He threw it short, and my eyes lit up. I just ran down the sideline and was determined to get in there," Belton said.

Coen then hit Rancher on a slant pattern for the two-point conversion following kicker Armando Cuko's missed extra point after UMass' previous touchdown, and the score was 21-0 with 30 seconds to play in the opening half.

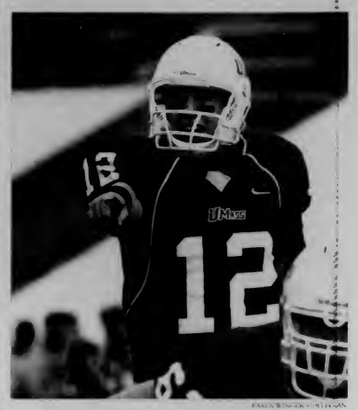
"Obviously, we have the big drop for a wide open touchdown, and you just wonder if something like that is going to come back and haunt you," Brown said. "I thought Tracy's big play took the pressure off [the dropped touchdown] because I knew [Delaware] was going to take a run at us in the second half.

"I thought that gave us enough cushion where it might change their flow a little bit and get them out of the zone, zone-option, that kind of flow where they would have to throw it to beat us. And quite frankly, we didn't think they could throw it to beat us."

The UMass scoring attack didn't take too long to strike again in the second half. After the pair of long scoring drives, Coen wasted no time on the team's second possession of the third quarter.

Rancher ran a post across the middle and flew past defensive back Kyle Campbell. Coen hung in the pocket long enough to heave the ball downfield to Rancher while taking a hit, and the sophomore wideout did the rest, dashing past Campbell to the right sideline all the way to the endzone for an 84-yard touchdown, marking the second longest passing touchdown in UMass history.

"I saw the safety turn his hips, so I knew that if Rasheed wasn't going to catch it, no one would," Coen said. "I didn't see him catch it at all. I just threw it and felt it had a good shot. I was just sitting there on my back. It wasn't a big hit or anything. He kind of got me after the play. I was just watching him, hoping he got into the endzone."



Delaware chipped into the 28-0 lead when Riccio found Armand Cauthen for a 20-yard touchdown with 5:32 to play in the third quarter, but UMass tailback put the game away and closed out the scoring when he scampered for nine yards to the right side for a nine-yard touchdown midway through the fourth quarter.

NOTES: The last time Delaware had lost this badly at home was a 55-14 shellacking by Arkansas State in the 1986 NCAA Quarterfinals. It was quarterback Rich Gannon's last game for the Blue Hens. Ironically, Gannon was on the field prior to the game because he and seven other athletes were inducted into the Delaware Hall of Fame.

KAREN WINGER/COLLEGIAN

Senior tailback R.J. Cobbs registered 66 yards of total offense on Saturday. Cobbs is UMass' second-leading rusher in 2005, with 310 yards and five touchdowns.

KAREN WINGER/COLLEGIAN

Liam Coen recorded the second-longest passing touchdown in UMass history on Saturday, completing an 84-yard bomb to receiver Rasheed Rancher.

Playoff hunt will be down to the wire are tied for the No. 1 spot in the A-10. The down to the wire finish against Hofstra sets up UNH for two home contests with Iona and Maine, both of which have records under the .500 mark.

PLAYOFFS from page 10

In the A-10 South division, the Richmond Spiders, which lost to the Minutemen 19-6 in the season-opener, have found themselves with a 6-3 overall record and a 5-1 in-conference record.

After trouncing VMI 38-3 on Saturday, the Spiders clinched at least a share of the division title. If Richmond is able to hold on and beat Towson and William and Mary over the next two weeks, it will find itself in the playoffs.

After losing to James Madison 30-29, William and Mary's playoff hopes are slim, as it would have had to win its final three contests to solidify a slot.

The Wildcats and the Minutemen have both made appearances in the tournament over the past two years. UMass was knocked off by Colgate 19-7 in the opening round of the 2003 playoffs, while UNH made it to the quarterfinals in 2004, before being thrashed by Montana 47-17.

UMass shut out in weekend series

HOCKEY from page 10

however, the puck bounced up and over Quick's left shoulder and into the net putting the Minutemen to bed.

The game started out on a very good note for the Maroon and White as the scoreboard at the end of the first period read UMass: 2, Providence: 1.

For the first goal of the game senior Marvin Degon notched his third power play goal of the season and ended a UMass power play drought of 0-18.

Degon collected a pass at the point and squeaked a shot past the left skate of Friars' goalie Tyler Sims at the 3:00 mark. Assists on the play were awarded to sophomore Matt Burto and senior Stephen Werner.

UMass then doubled its advantage nine minutes later during the 12th minute of play. Sophomore P.J. Fenton notched his first goal of the season on a beautiful move right in front of Sims.

Junior Chris Capraro was skating up the right side of the ice with the puck when he spotted Fenton alone on left side. Fenton took the puck and deked Sims to get him to one side of the net. With the goalie off balance, Fenton brought the puck back to his right side and hit the open side of the net.

With just four minutes left in the first the Friars got one goal back and then tied the game at the 11:36 mark of the second. McDonald cut UMass' lead in half by beating Quick. Providence's second score came on their first of two shorthanded goals on the weekend. Dino Stamoulis took a pass from Torry Gjada and beat Quick five-hole knot the score at two apiece.

Overall on the night Quick faced an amazing 53 shots on the night compared to just 31 from the Minutemen. His 49 saves are career high for the rookie.

Saturday night's first star of the game was awarded to the man who notched the winning goal for the Friars, Cody Wild. The defenseman rocketed a wrist shot from beyond the left play-off dot that sailed over UMass senior Gabe Winer's right shoulder. The puck was untouched at it made its way into the net.

"I think Gabe would like to have a shot from outside the dot that far back," Cahoon said. "I would suspect he was in the [crease] somewhere and he needs to be out of the [crease] and taking that angle away."

UMass then pulled Winer with 45 seconds remaining in the game but could not get the tying goal in the net despite the extra attacker on the ice.

Coming out of the gate on Saturday, neither team seemed to be on top of its game. The first period saw a lot of penalties (five) and a lot of sloppy hockey and Providence's second of their two shorthanded goals on the weekend.

With the Friars' Nate Meyers in the penalty box for boarding it looked like the Minutemen may have been able to take advantage, but it was not to be. Gajda intercepted a pass and as soon as he saw this Zancanaro raced up the ice. Gajda slid the pass to Zancanaro who found himself one-on-one with Winer and shot the puck by the goalie and into the net.

Depth helps swim teams

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

"Leave it to depth to pave the way for the Massachusetts swimmers and divers in the early-on.

Fielding as many as four swimmers in some events yesterday afternoon at Southern Connecticut State's Hutchinson Natatorium, the Maroon and White made it a clean sweep of the SCSU Owls. The men won 170-130 thanks to a sweep of the final four events, while the women cruised to an easy 177-112 defeat.

Heading into the last four events of the afternoon, the Minutemen held a slim one-point lead over the Owls. Enter quality depth, as coach Russ Yarworth's crew shifted gears and took 10 of the last 12 top-3 spots, winning each event, to capture the victory in the end.

"We were kind of flat at the start," Yarworth said. "They [the Owls] were finishing their races and we weren't. We're a very deep team, and that showed up today and helped us make a run at them."

The Minutemen were fueled by another terrific outing on the diving board in sophomore R.J. Rappe, who helped wrap up the late-fought victory. The Minnesota native first won the one-meter dive with 240.38 points, just two points ahead of SCSU's second-place finisher John Wood (238.88).

Following a 1-2-3 sweep in the 100-yard butterfly by Nate Bromage, Tristan Partridge, and third-place tiers Mike Cordes and Mike Herald, Rappe took to the three-meter dive. In that third-to-last event, Rappe narrowed by Wood again, this time on a ten-point margin (273.68 – 263.63).

"R.J. Rappe was very significant in these kinds of meets," Yarworth said. "It's nice to know we have a real nice chance [to win] with him on board. [Diving coach] Mandy [Hixon] has done real nice in coaching up these divers. It's nice to know we're not going to get swept in diving."

While the Owls won a few key events early-on against the Minutewomen, depth once kicked in and overtook the lead easily.

Once again, a strong showing by freshmen was put to work, as diver Karen Upperco played counterpart to Rappe's performance. She, too, won both the one-meter and three-meter dives, but by larger margins. She defeated Ali Bronson in the one-meter by a score of 236.25 – 217.50, and then dominated the three-meter dives with nearly a 40-point advantage over teammate Melissa Pond. Upperco tallied 267.68 points to Pond's 229.73.

"She looks solid," women's coach Bob Newcomb said. "I know by talking with Mandy she still doesn't have a list of full dives. She's working on them all, and she looked pretty solid today."

Freshman Christa Narus followed up her recent string of wins with another solid performance, leading the Minutewomen as the only swimmer to win three events on the day. A solid butterfly swimmer, she took home the 100 and 200-yard butterfly. She was also in a relay team with Taryn Prout, Melissa Stango and Nicole LeBarge that took first in the 200-yard medley relay – the first event of the day – with a total time of 1:52.97.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
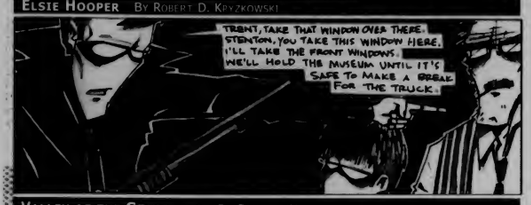
REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2006
The WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST
will be offered on:
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8 @ 6:30pm in CHEN227
This test is a pre-requisite for enrollemnt in Engliwrit 112/113, College Writing.
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.

Regency Hair Stylists
"Get a new look for fall"
$ 5.00 OFF a haircut
Monday - Thursday
Bring this ad
and your Student ID.
Call for an appointment or stop by the salon
253 - 9526
189 N. Pleasant St
Amherst, MA 01002

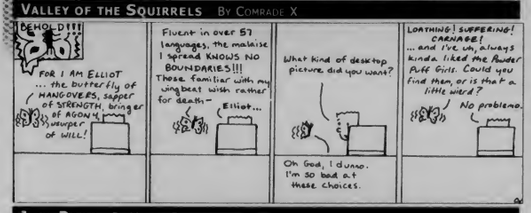
STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

Monday-Friday 7:30-6
Thursday 7:30-8
Saturday 7:30-4
SATURN
Saturn of Hadley
40 Russell St, Route 9
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 584-6066
Our service center repairs all kinds of cars...not just Saturns.
Oil & Filter Change Only $19.99
Includes topping off all fluids, adjusting tire pressures, Check antifreeze for winter protection.
FREE wash & vacuum. FREE 27 point inspection.
• Mass State Inspection Station
• Free shuttle service to & from UMASS
• Located directly on bike path & PVTA stop.
No Appointment Needed
10% off mechanical repairs
Late hours on Thursdays



BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
WANT A HOT JOB?
Learn to be a Professional Bartender!
Classes Starting Now!
Boston Bartenders School
218 Memorial Avenue • West Springfield
1-800-357-3210
www.bostonbartender.com

ROADHOUSE C•A•F•E
"WHERE BAY ROAD MEETS ROUTE 9"
The Roadhouse Cafe features
· Organic fruits and vegetables
· Healthy and nutritious homemade meals
· Custom-baked cakes
A Healthy Place To Eat!
Mention this ad and receive $1.00 off a breakfast special!
Sit by our cozy fire, enjoy great food, relax, and catch up on some reading. We are happy to serve you. The sky's the limit!
OPEN: Monday-Friday 6 to noon; Sat.-Sun. 7 to 2 p.m.
BELCHERTOWN, MA • 323-6175



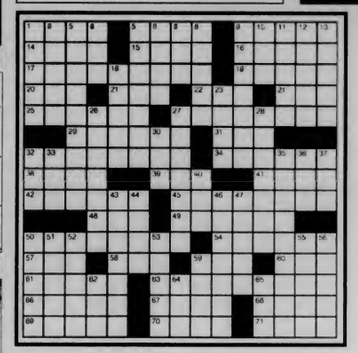
LABRAT By Richard Marteeny

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Krzkowski

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS By Comrade X

JACK DOGG By Xavier Rhodes

THE ZOO By Gabe Strine



Quote of the Day

"If you don't laugh at yourself, life's gonna seem a whole lot longer than you'd like."
—Garden State

Submit your comic!
e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You will drop your soap in the shower and slip on it.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You will have a terrible week, but a terrific weekend.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You will run into someone you met over the weekend.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You will forget to eat all day and consequently have a gigantic dinner.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You will have a celebrity encounter today.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Watch what you say to your roommate today, he or she is having issues.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Your grandmother will call you and wish you a belated Happy Halloween.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
If you can't sleep tonight, try eating some turkey.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your headache will go away after a good night's sleep.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Your parents will call and tell you that they won big money playing Keno.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If your neighbors ask you for a stapler, refuse them one.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Someone will notice your hair today and wink at you.

New in Town?
Amherst Hairstylists
Caren's Place
You can trust us with your hair.
40 Main St.
Downtown Amherst
(Rear of Newbury Condos)
413 253 1200
Mon-Fri 10-6
Sat 10-4
Visa/MC/S
This Ad Will Run Mon & Thurs
•Haircuts & Styling
•Hair Coloring (Free Highlighting Consultation)
•Multi-Color Highlighting
•Body & Facial Waxing
•for Both Men & Women
•Walk-Ins Welcome!
Get it done right the first time!
Fall Semester Coupon Specials!
1/2 price facial waxing on Wed through December.
$1 off any service with this ad until 12/05
Only with this coupon
www.carensplace.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Looking for GO, Baduke, Weigi Players. New players welcome. Call 339-225-0537. 253-9873

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments, Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Civic DX Good condition CD Many new parts. $1699 obo 413-212-9384

EMPLOYMENT

Mystery Shoppers get paid to shop! Up to $150 a day. Training provided Call 1-800-690-1273

Looking to be a Legal Assistant? Spring 2006 Internship applications are available at the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients while earning 12 undergraduate credits. Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

EMPLOYMENT

Part-Time Workers Needed We are looking for part-time assistance with a variety of office and clerical tasks. Preferred candidates will work quickly and accurately and be able to work from 5pm-9pm on days that they work. Pay is $8.00/hour. For consideration, please call (413) 256-0444 for an application or mail resume to: National Evaluation Systems, Inc., Personnel Department, P.O. Box 226, Amherst, MA 01004-0226. Resumes may also be emailed to: personnel@nesinc.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Aupair for my daughter, Eleven years old, to share home in Leverett, MA 10 min to UMass. Private room & semi-private bath, share kitchen in exchange for some childcare Call c:413-522-3175 h:413-548-9498

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8.00 Hr. 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location – NO SALES! Night & wknd; shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

EMPLOYMENT

Staffing Now, Inc. Needed Seasonal Workers! We are in need of 2 data entry clerks who are available for temporary assignments. One position is located in S. Deerfield and the hours are M-F from 6AM-2PM. The other is in Holyoke and it is M-F from 2PM-7PM. Both positions are paying $9 and will be starting immediately. Perfect solution to earn some extra $$ before the holidays! Call 413-529-7100 for immediate consideration. Staffing Now, Inc. www.staffingnow.com

FURNITURE

Sealy Mattress Set KING $575.00 QUEEN $465.00 FULL $365.00 TWIN $195 Save 50% or more off store prices. For more details call 215-431-9584

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

SPRING BREAK – Early Booking Specials – FREE Meals & Drinks - $50 Deposit – 800-234-7007 www.endless-summertours.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen fly past Blue Hens

UMass prevails against Delaware

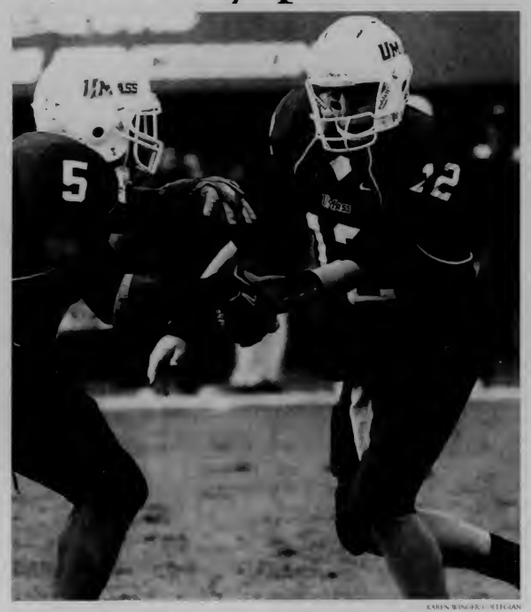
By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

NEWARK, Del. — Forget the loss last week. Ignore the triple-overtime loss two years ago and the 4-23 all-time record against the Blue Hens. Don't mind UD coach K.C. Keeler's 25-3 career mark at Delaware Stadium and the fact that those three losses came by a combined 11 points or even that he has never lost a home game by more than four points.

Because when the game clock read 15:00 at the start of the first quarter, the Massachusetts football team started with a score of zero the same way the Delaware's team did.

And when 11 Minutemen (7-2 6-1 Atlantic 10) lined up against 11 Fightin' Blue Hens (4-5 1-5 A-10) for each play on Saturday, the results were resounding, and none of them agreed with what history had previously dictated, as UMass dropped Delaware 35-7 in front of a sell-out crowd of 22,078 on Saturday.

From the opening play, when UMass strong safety James Ihedigbo leveled Blue Hen receiver Justin LaForgia to force an incompletion, to quarterback Liam Coen's missile to Rasheed Rancher for an 84-yard scoring strike, to Jason Hill's interception of UD backup quarterback Ryan Carty's pass at the end of the game, the Minutemen continued to punch Delaware in the mouth over and over again.



UMASS	35
DELAWARE	7

"It was just a great win for our football team, and it was a team win," UMass coach Don Brown said. "Both sides of the ball were excellent, and special teams were solid. I just felt good about our guys and the way we handled this very difficult environment."

The Minutemen used a second consecutive brilliant performance by Coen, who completed 21-of-26 passes for 318 yards, one passing touchdown and one rushing score, and Steve Baylark led the rushing attack with 109 yards and one endzone visit.

UMass' first offensive possession was unlike any other the team had seen all season. The Minutemen overcame four penalties, converted on fourth-and-one from their own 28-yard

See FOOTBALL on page 8

KAREN WINGROVE / COLLEGIAN

Quarterback Liam Coen and tailback Steve Baylark combined for a total of 462 total yards and two touchdowns during the Minutemen's 35-7 win over Delaware on Saturday.

A-10 playoff race is in full gear

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

The I-AA NCAA playoff race for the Massachusetts football team (7-2 6-1 Atlantic 10) and the rest of the A-10 contenders will come down to the final two weeks of the 2005 regular season. After UMass routed Delaware 35-7 at Delaware Stadium and New Hampshire (8-1 6-1 A-10) won a dramatic 29-26 decision at Hofstra on Saturday, the tug-of-war match for the conference title is still between the Wildcats and the Minutemen, with UNH getting the tiebreaker.

Following the Minutemen's 28-point win over the Blue Hens on Saturday, the Wildcats were still in a dog-fight with the Hofstra Pride. After UNH took the lead 29-26 with 6:40 remaining in the game, Hofstra looked as though it was going to be on top again, as the offense drove to the UNH 2-yard line. A fumble by Hofstra tailback Kareem Huggins gave the Wildcats the ball, and consequently, the ballgame.

Hofstra, which was fighting to stay alive in the playoff hunt, had to win the final three contests on its schedule to get into postseason play.

If UNH had lost to the Pride, UMass would have taken sole possession of the A-10, and a possible home playoff game, with wins at Army and Hofstra.

The Wildcats now control their own destiny, and in order to remain in the playoff-hunt, UMass must stay strong on the road.

The Minutemen will travel to Army, a division I-A team, on Saturday and then will cap off their season with a trip to Hofstra. In order to make the playoffs, UMass would have to win one of the next two games, and a victory in both contests gives the Maroon and White a chance at earning a seed.

Since UNH beat UMass on Oct. 29, the Wildcats get the edge if both teams win out and

See PLAYOFFS on page 8

UM falls in weekend series

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

The power play woes continued for the Massachusetts hockey team this weekend as they were swept in a home-and-home series with the Providence Friars.

Friday night in Providence the Friars (5-3 5-1 Hockey East) were able to come from behind and take the game 4-2 before 2,700 fans at Schneider Arena. On Saturday in front of 4,357 at Mullins Center, the Minutemen (1-6 0-4 HEA) made a bid for a third period comeback of their own but that was halted by Providence, which went on to win 4-2.

On the weekend the Maroon and White was a mere 1-10 with the man advantage. Also, on those 10 attempts, UMass only managed to get eight shots on net. That's only a little more than one shot per power play.

This isn't just a recent problem for the boys from Amherst. They have been struggling with the power play all year. So far in the early going they are 4-41 in power plays. Their .098 percent gives them the worst man advantage in all of HEA.

"I think the biggest culprit of our team in terms of winning and losing right now is power play," UMass coach Don Cahoon said after Saturday's loss. "We've given it a lot of attention and we've really tried to think of ways we can tweak it. We'll go to work on that because if the power play doesn't find itself it's going to be very difficult for us to overcome that negative."

PC	4
UMASS	2
PC	3
UMASS	2

The big blow to Minutemen on Friday night came with just 4:50 left in the game when freshman Chris Davis was given a five minute major penalty for hitting from behind. Davis was also ejected from the game for his penalty, a common call these days in college hockey on penalties for hitting from behind.

The penalty put UMass down a man for the remainder of regulation with the score tied 2-2. Providence junior Zach Zancanaro cashed in on the opportunity and notched the game winning goal with just under four minutes to go in regulation.

"I don't know if it hurt us mentally. It's never a good time to take a penalty," Cahoon said of the penalty in the final five minutes of play. "It's pretty tough to close a 2-2 tie out with a five minute major."

Providence then added their fourth and final goal of the game just two minutes later. Chase Watson, of the Friars, dished the puck to teammate Torry Gajda who got a shot off on UMass goalie Jon Quick, who made the initial save on the shot. Then,

See HOCKEY on page 8

KAREN WINGROVE / COLLEGIAN

Freshman Cory Quirk and the UMass hockey team were swept by Providence during the team's home-and-home series this weekend. Quirk has a total of two points off of 10 shots so far this season.

Maroon and White clinch tourney spot

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

It has been a tumultuous season for the Massachusetts men's soccer team. It has been plagued by injuries, losing streaks and last-minute losses. But this weekend provided the stage for dramatic redemption, as the Minutemen swept two games from conference opponents Fordham and Saint Bonaventure to clinch an Atlantic 10 tournament berth for the first time in three years.

UMASS	1
BONNIES	0
UMASS	1
FORDHAM	0

"[The team is] very excited and tired," a relieved UMass coach Sam Koch said yesterday. "We're pretty exhausted. It's been a really hard trip and we're tired right now. We're looking forward to getting home."

UMass entered last weekend with a slim chance at reaching the A-10 tournament, needing to win both games on the road against tough conference opponents in order to just have a shot at making it.

It was a daunting task but the Minutemen pulled it off, winning both games – one under some adverse weather conditions.

"The tough thing was, the footing was really difficult, so people were slipping and sliding," Koch said. "[Goalkeeper] Zach [Simmons] slipped a couple times, which made sort of an interesting situation. [Sophomore] Kenny Cook slipped a couple of times, which made it difficult for ourselves, so it got to the point where the weather had a huge effect on just the quality of the game. It wasn't a great game to watch, because there wasn't a lot of nice plays and development, because no one could really stand up. It was muddy."

The Minutemen won both games 1-0, and after Friday's win over Fordham traveled to Saint Bonaventure in a five-way tie for fifth place in the A-10.

The top six teams in the conference go to the playoffs, and with Saint Louis, Duquesne, Rhode Island and George Washington locking up playoff spots, the final two were up for grabs between Temple, Saint Bonaventure, UMass, Charlotte and Fordham.

Koch never knew the details

See SOCCER on page 7

Season over for Minutewomen

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

After a thrilling upset Friday at Geasey field, the Massachusetts field hockey team fell to the top seed Richmond in the Atlantic 10 tournament championship. UMass defeated Temple in the opening round Friday in overtime, 2-1, but then fell hard to defending A-10 champion Richmond. With the loss, the season is over for the Minutewomen who will finish with an 8-13 overall record, and 5-4 against A-10 opponents.

Friday the team opened the tournament against host Temple (11-10 6-2 A-10) in a battle of the No. 2 and 3 seeds. Temple got out to an early lead with a goal by senior Melissa Fritze from junior Megan Hannahoe at 3:28. The Minutewomen responded quickly with a goal by A-10 rookie of the week Mary Shea. The freshman scored on an unassisted goal at 11:02.

UMASS	2
TEMPLE	1
RICHMOND	7
UMASS	10

The first half would end in a 1-1 tie, and so would the second half. Going into overtime, the Owls had out-shot the Minutewomen 12-5 throughout regulation. That changed in the extra period, as UMass had five shots to Temple's one. Two of those shots came from freshman Erin Parker who beat Temple goalie Erin Hanshue, not once, but twice in the extra frame.

The first one bounced off the post, allowing the game to continue. The second, on a long feed from senior and All Tournament member Jaime Bawden to Shea, was passed across the circle to Parker, who put it in the net. Shea finished the game with three points on one goal and one assist to go with Parker's goal.

Top seeded Richmond (15-5 9-0 A-10) defeated Saint Joseph's 3-1 in the late game Friday, assuring a rematch of last year's A-10 championship on Saturday.

The Spiders jumped out early with a barrage of shots on UMass goalie Becky Letourneau, who made two early stops on a pair of penalty corners. However, the third reached the net at 3:06 into the game on a shot by Richmond's Heather Wrublesky, assisted by Alex Malatesta.

See F HOCKEY on page 7

What THE SCOR

New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Tuesday, November 8, 2005 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXVI Issue 43

Funding concerns expressed

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

Top Student Government Association officials from the University of Massachusetts have expressed concern over the possibility of losing control over registered student organization funds.

Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano has requested that the Center for Student Development have a bigger hand in where and how funding for RSOs is spent.

According to SGA Speaker Sean Bliss, Gargano's vision includes RSOs conducting bigger, more frequent events with a "more professional program approach to them."

With the hope that the SGA spends more of the enormous surplus generated by student fees, Gargano wants these new implications to be handled by the Center for Student Development, which is run by a professional staff.

Bliss agrees that the SGA and the Center for Student Development should do a lot more to support and encourage RSO programming and the development of new events on campus for the student body, but disagrees that these things need to be done professionally.

"Allowing the Center for Student Development to control these matters defeats the purpose of having RSOs and a student government. It even

See SGA on page 2

Students voice complaints about Parking Services

By Katie Huston
Collegian Staff

Fed up with long paystation lines in the lot behind Admissions that had made her late for class one too many times, Vicky resorted to drastic measures.

"At one point I ended up leaving a note on my car with a couple bucks saying, 'Look, I don't have time for this, I have to run to class,'" said the senior theater major, who declined to give her last name.

Vicky returned an hour later to find a citation on her car.

The lack of additional paystations — the machines recently installed in two lots on campus to replace parking meters — is only one in a long line of student parking-related grievances. Other complaints include unreasonable prices, unpainted and unpaved "yellow lots," poor lighting, lack of police presence, unfair ticketing and towing and difficulty finding spots.

For students without parking permits, paying for metered spots is a huge cash drain. Students pay 25 cents for every 15 minutes they're parked — a rate equal to parking fees in parts of downtown Boston.

"If they charged Amherst residents that in town, they would flip out," said Vicky. "It's just really unreasonable."

Students with permits also face steep prices. Commuters pay $235 for green lot stickers.

Students who live on campus aren't immune to high prices, either. A sticker for a purple lot costs $195 a year, and yellow lot stickers are $155.

The yellow lot behind the Mullins Center, pictured above, is unpaved and has unmarked parking spaces. The condition of the yellow lots is one issue that students have complained about.

Shannon Heneghan, a junior English and dance major, who parked in yellow lot 13 her freshman year, said her route from the Orchard Hill Residential Area to the lot behind Admissions is unsafe, poorly lit and lacking a crosswalk.

"If you're going to spend close to $200 to park somewhere, you shouldn't get hit by a car getting there," said Heneghan.

Junior Emma Lang raised the same concern.

"A lot of people drive on the basis that they feel more comfortable and feel safe, but if you have to walk by yourself for ten minutes at 2 a.m., that sort of eliminates that benefit," Lang said.

"It's one thing to walk across campus where there can be people at night. It's another thing to walk from one of the faraway lots, where there's no one," she said.

Lang said she had to park in yellow lot 13 last year and the lack of lighting along East Pleasant Street made her uncomfortable at night. When she got in late, she would park her car in the purple lot in Orchard Hill, which is located closer to the dorms, and wake up before towing began at 7 a.m. to move her car — a practice mirrored by several other women.

"I wasn't the only girl who was doing this. We'd be in our pajamas, in our winter coats, going to move our cars because we'd gotten in too late and didn't feel comfortable walking back," Lang said. "It seems like if I was going to assault someone, that's where I would go."

Parking Services Manager Michael Brennan said that the university's Physical Plant is responsible for lighting and crosswalks, which fall outside of Parking Service's jurisdiction.

Brennan also pointed out alternate transportation options offered by Parking Services, which include bus routes and ride share programs.

Lang agrees that if students relied more heavily on public transportation, some campus parking problems would improve. However, she said buses do not

See PARKING on page 2

Unidentified man crashes into telephone pole

HADLEY — An unidentified college-aged male was slightly injured last night after he crashed his SUV into a telephone pole on a road behind Wal-Mart.

Hadley police responded to the accident at approximately 8:15 p.m. on South Maple St. The male's Ford Explorer was found heavily damaged once it came to rest on the Norwottuck Bicycle Trail, which runs beside the Wal-Mart.

The air bags in the Explorer were deflated, the hood was popped up, and a large piece of the telephone pole was stuck underneath the vehicle.

The entire telephone pole was snapped off of its base after the accident, with the exception of the top, which was only held together by electrical wires.

Eyewitnesses on the scene told police officers that the injured male was their friend. They speculated that the man may have intentionally slammed his car into the pole.

The injured man was transferred to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton to be treated for his injuries. His condition was unknown as of press time.

—Dan O'Brien

Third Ford Explorer, driven by an unidentified, college-aged man, crashed into a telephone pole yesterday. The pole was severely damaged, but the man was only slightly injured.

Candidates scramble for last-minute votes

By Michael Kunzelman
Associated Press

BOSTON — Boston Mayor Thomas Menino and his challenger, Maura Hennigan, crisscrossed the city Sunday in an eleventh-hour hunt for undecided voters.

Both are trying to make history on Tuesday. Menino, if he wins a fourth term and serves out the full four years, would hold the title of the city's longest serving mayor. Hennigan would become the first woman elected mayor of Boston.

A recent Suffolk University poll gives Menino a 30-point lead heading into Election Day, with 14 percent of voters undecided, but the incumbent mayor insists he is not taking his re-election for granted.

"This sounds like a cliche, but it's true. The only poll that counts is at 8:05 on Tuesday night," he said during a stop at the West Roxbury Pub, where he spoke at a fund-raiser for a women's homeless shelter.

Hennigan, a longtime city councilor, also downplays the poll's prediction of a landslide.

"We get a wonderful response wherever we go," she said. "I have no idea who they're talking to for these polls."

In a room filled with supporters, Menino could relax at the fund-raiser and take a break from campaign rhetoric. Before breakfast, he chatted with a supporter who asked him what he plans to read on a postelection vacation in Montreal.

"I read Grisham books," he said. "I always bring a Grisham book with me."

Later in the morning, a translator helped Hennigan make her campaign pitch to a Spanish-speaking audience at a church in Boston's Jamaica Plain neighborhood.

When an audience member asked her about youth violence, she thanked the woman with a "muchas gracias, senora" and outlined her proposals for extended school days and more after-school programs.

"Our middle school and high school students get out of school with no structure in their environment," she said. "It is an open invitation for trouble."

Hennigan has attacked Menino's record on issues including schools, affordable housing and public safety.

"It is so important that we have new leadership in our city," she said.

With only one televised debate and a joint radio appearance, Hennigan has had few chances to challenge Menino in person.

The radio meeting may have provided the testiest exchange of the campaign. Hennigan accused Menino of not doing enough to prevent the death of Victoria Snelgrove, a college student who was fatally shot by police firing pepper-spray pellet guns to quell a raucous postgame celebration near Fenway Park during the 2004 playoffs.

At the time, Menino responded by saying Snelgrove's death should be "off-limits" and accused his opponent of insensitivity, but he since has softened his tone.

"The first thing we did was apologize," he said. "A mistake was made, and we changed the (police) procedures that took place that evening."

Menino, whose opponent four years ago captured only 23 percent of the vote, brushed aside the notion that this has been one of the most bruising campaigns of his career.

"Contentious? Not for me," he said. "I've been talking about the future, talking about how we move the city forward."

Fatality reported as French rioting spreads

By Angela Doland
Associated Press

PARIS — Rioting by French youths spread to 300 towns overnight and a 61-year-old man hurt in the violence died of his wounds, the first fatality in 11 days of unrest that has shocked the country, police said Monday.

As urban unrest was reported in neighboring Belgium and Germany, the French government faced growing criticism for its inability to stop the violence, despite massive police deployment and continued calls for calm. One riot-hit town in suburban Paris said it was preparing to enforce a curfew. Governments worldwide urged their citizens to be careful in France.

President Jacques Chirac, in private comments more conciliatory than his warnings Sunday that rioters would be caught and punished, acknowledged that France has failed to integrate the French-born children of Arab and black African immigrants in poor suburbs who have been participating in the violence, according to Latvian President Vaira Vike-Freiberga, who met with the French leader on Monday.

She said Chirac "deplored the fact that in these neighborhoods there is a ghettoization of youths of African or North African origin" and recognized "the incapacity of French society to fully accept them."

Chirac said unemployment runs as high as 40 percent in some suburban neighborhoods, four times the national rate of just under 10 percent, Vike-Freiberga said.

On Sunday night, vandals burned more than 1,400 vehicles, and clashes around the country left 36 police injured, setting a new high for overnight arson and violence since rioting started last month, national police chief Michel Gaudin told a news conference.

Attacks overnight Sunday to Monday were reported in 274 towns and police made 395 arrests, Gaudin said. The Justice Ministry said Monday that 27 people had been convicted in fast-track trials since the beginning of the unrest.

Australia, Britain, Germany and Japan advised their citizens to exercise care in France, joining the United States, Russia and at least a half dozen other countries in warning tourists to stay away from violence-hit areas.

French Foreign Minister Philippe Douste-Blazy sought to reassure his European counterparts about visiting his country.

see FRENCH on page 2

French Interior Minister, Nicolas Sarkozy, addresses police officers and Evreux Mayor and President of the National Assembly Jean-Louis Debre, left, yesterday following the eleventh night of rioting.

ARTS & LIVING
NEW MUSIC TUESDAYS CONTINUE
Nirvana and Franz Ferdinand put out new albums.
PAGE 5

EDITORIAL/OPINION
TORTURE DEBATE
One columnist examines the current political debate surrounding the issue of torture.
PAGE 4

WEATHER
TODAY Partly cloudy, 1161
TONIGHT Partly cloudy, 131
TOMORROW Showers, 1150 , 130

SPORTS
FALLEN EAGLE
Philadelphia has shut down outspoken wide receiver Terrell Owens for the season.
PAGE 8

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Cameron J. Woods
BUSINESS MANAGER Hirak Shah
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherol Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerry O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egavian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Matthew O'Rourke
COPIES EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Allison Edles
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
PHOTO EDITOR Kate Sachsenmaier
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
HUMAN RESOURCE Phil Sweller
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Nathan Chomsky
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mackenzie Issler
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Jones
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Dales
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Belliveau
ASSISTANT PHOTO Elizabeth Caristi
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eric Athas
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Kristen LaCasse

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS FALL/SPRING SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1902, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1918 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HOLDS BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Cameron J. Woods
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Julie Teece
COPY EDITOR
Katie Huston
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Belanger
PRODUCTION STAFF
Jesse Sussman, Tiffany VanLangen

SGA expresses its concerns over RSOs defeats the purpose of having a Center for Student Development," said Bliss.

SGA from page 1

"We shouldn't take control or money from the student's hands. We shouldn't take the potential for vision and creativity away from students," said Bliss. "We should encourage and allow students to flourish and max their potential within RSOs and the student government with the assistance of the Center for Student Development."

The SGA has responded by searching for input on new and creative ways to spend the surplus. SGA is asking students for suggestions and has invited students to sit in on a Senate meeting to tell senators how they want money to be spent.

According to Shawn Robinson, head of the Ways and Means Committee, the SGA is planning to hold an open meeting on December 4 that invites students to attend and suggest new ideas for SGA spending. The meeting would also invite RSOs to give their input on the pros and cons of last year's RSOs allocations.

"This is just the beginning. As we get more into budget season we will do more things like that," said Robinson. "We want the average student to give their say in how money is spent."

Robinson cited one example of student participation creating results in the Student-Readership program.

"That program is something that serves everyone. Anyone who is on this campus knows that part of their $81 goes towards the distribution of the New York Times throughout campus," said Robinson. "We understand this is a major university, but doing the small things like this really has an effect on student life."

Bliss agrees that bigger, more frequent RSO events is something that student want to see more of, but does not want to alienate smaller RSOs that run smaller events.

"We fear that some of the Vice Chancellor's suggestions would make RSO events monotonous, taking away some of the unique aspects of student life," said Bliss.

Bliss fears that even though a decision to hand the powers to the Center for Student Development would be wildly unpopular within the student government, Gargano would implement his vision even without their approval.

"Gargano has set a precedent within the last year that he is going to do whatever he wants to do with or without the approval of the SGA," said Bliss. "Changes like taking over the offices of African Amercian Lationo Native American affairs (ALANA), taking over commuter services — nobody wanted or approved these changes and he approves them anyway."

According to Bliss, Gargano has implied that if SGA bylaws are not changed to fit his vision of what the bylaws should be, that he will "change them" himself.

French rioting spreads in cities telling them at a meeting in Brussels that "France is not a dangerous country. France is still a country where one can go."

FRENCH from page 1

The victim was identified as Jean-Jacques Le Chenadec, a retired auto industry worker who died after being beaten by an attacker. He was trying to extinguish a trash can fire Friday at his housing project in the northeastern suburb of Stains when an attacker caught him by surprise and beat him into a coma, police said.

In the Paris suburban town of Ramcy, the mayor was preparing to enact a nighttime curfew expected to go into force Monday or Tuesday, said one of his top aides.

Apparent copycat attacks spread outside France for the first time, with five cars torched outside Brussels' main train station, police in the Belgian capital said.

German police were investigating whether the overnight burning of five cars early Monday in Moabit, a Berlin neighborhood with a large Turkish immigrant population, was a copycat crime.

The mayhem started as an outburst of anger in suburban Paris housing projects and has fanned out nationwide among disaffected youths, mostly of Muslim or African origin, to become France's worst civil unrest in more than a decade.

Parking lots cause complaints

PARKING from page 1

run often enough, especially to and from the yellow lots.

"I would've had to wait an hour for the bus, if the bus was still running... I didn't feel comfortable even sitting in my car. Parking lots are not known for their safety," she said, adding that calling a police escort also takes too long.

Lang also complained about the absence of clearly marked parking spaces in yellow lot 13.

"The idea that they would have a parking lot with no lines and then tow people for parking where they're not supposed to park seems completely illogical to me," Lang said.

Lang's car was towed because she was not technically in a parking spot.

"I apparently was touching the grass, even though I've definitely seen people park there before," she said.

Brennan has not yet responded to the Daily Collegian's questions about what Parking Services is doing to improve conditions in the yellow lots.

Students have also been unable to find spots in lots they have paid for. When sophomore Danny Green couldn't find a spot in the Orchard Hill purple lots, he pulled up in front of his dorm to drop a few bags off in his room before going to class and returned to find a $40 ticket.

"I put my hazards on and everything. I've seen people parked there for literally almost a day, and it's never been a problem," he said. "It wasn't my fault, because I paid for a parking permit for a lot with no spaces."

Brennan acknowledged that lack of spaces is a common issue.

"Everybody believes we oversell lots, and that's part of the problem," said Brennan. "We've basically sold one permit for one space."

Heneghan also criticized Parking Services for being closed on the first weekend of the fall semester, when most students moved into their dorm rooms. She said cars were towed from the purple lots near Orchard Hill, despite a policy that anyone can park in those lots from 5 p.m. on Friday to 7 a.m. on Monday.

"They were starting to tow people at midnight and one in the morning. People woke up to find cars towed," she said. "Parking Services isn't open but they're still towing. I think that's a pretty big deal."

Brennan said that the vigilant enforcement policy is driven by lack of space. "I have to create the space for you, the customer," he said. "When we go in and we find illegals, we have no other choice but to ticket and tow them."

He also said that construction on campus has cut down on available parking.

"We work so hard to get everybody closer to the dorms, but the new dormitory construction knocks them out again," he said.

Lot 27 and much of Lot 44 near the Sylvan Residential Area have been eliminated by construction of the new North Residential Area, forcing more people into yellow lot 13.

Brennan said Parking Services would love to offer convenient parking to every student, but lack of available space prevents that goal.

"We agree — students live here 24-7. This is their home. We would love to get out of these yellow lots, but we don't have enough purples for everybody."

Brennan also criticized the Parking Services employee who was pictured parked in a handicapped spot in a Daily Collegian article last Wednesday.

"We completely agree — it was completely incorrect and unprofessional for us to ever park in a handicapped parking spot," he said. "I think they were just trying to do something really quick, but that's still not right."

JULIE TEECE/COLLEGIAN

The yellow lot, pictured above, has many ruts and potholes, especially after rain or snow. The potholes in the student parking lots are a source of complaints for students.

HAVING TROUBLE SEARCHING FOR A JOB?

Learn about the online database at the POWER JOB SEARCHING WORKSHOP

TODAY! TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8TH
7 PM
CALIPARI ROOM, DUBOIS LIBRARY

Maximize your web searches for that dream job or internship!

Learn the "mechanics" of submitting your resume online and get advice on the recruiting process!

phone: 413-545-2224
fax: 413-545-4426
www.umass.edu/careers
CareerServices
Career Services Office
UMass Amherst
511 Goodell Building
a division of Student Affairs & Campus Life

Campus to Career PROGRAMS
Expanding knowledge beyond the classroom
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Networking...
It's All WHO You Know.

Learn how to identify contacts and leverage relationships to build your career.

Tuesday, November 15, 2005
4:00 p.m. - Memorial Hall

WITH ALUMNI GUEST SPEAKERS

Eric Friedberg '90
Eric is a founding partner at Cohen-Friedberg Associates (CFA), a marketing firm specializing in traditional, retail specific and online promotions for national and regional clients such as Gorton's, Jolly Time Popcorn, Pizza Hut and Dunkin' Donuts. Prior to CFA, he founded UniverCity Newspaper and UniverCity.com. He also developed one of the first Fantasy Sports challenges.

Patrick Hadley '90
Patrick founded Hadley Media, a diversified media and marketing services firm located in New York City that works with Fortune 500 companies to connect their brands with consumers. He first gained experience in sales and marketing as representative for Van Den Berg Foods, a division of Unilever, and also with Becton Dickenson.

FREE PIZZA • FREE SODA

To register for this FREE event, visit the Alumni Association website at www.UMassAlumni.com/students.

For more information contact Melanie Corbeil, Associate Director for Student and Alumni Programs at 545-9705 or mcorbeil@admin.umass.edu

iPods have become the new class lecture substitutes

KRT

A Tokyo customer examines a new iPod. iPods are popular among college students, who have recently started to use them in academia to download notes from missed class lectures.

By Jodi S. Cohen
The Daily Aztec (San Diego U.)

SAN DIEGO — When Purdue University senior Marcos Kohler skipped physics class to attend a concert in Chicago, he didn't have to borrow a classmate's notes to catch up.

Instead, he connected his silver iPod to a computer, downloaded the lecture, and from the comfort of a campus coffee shop, listened to the two-hour discussion on particle physics.

"It recreates the entire class experience," said Kohler, 22, who missed another lecture at the West Lafayette, Ind. campus when he overslept for the 1:30 p.m. class. A videoconference class would be even better, he said, but "to go from paper printouts to audio, this is a step in the right direction."

It's a step that a small but growing number of professors are trying. By turning class lectures into podcasts – free audio shows that students can download to their iPods or other portable players – students can skip the lecture hall but still hear the lecture. Supporters said podcasts help students who miss a class or want to review the material, while professors get points for being flexible and using the latest, hippest gadget.

More traditional academics fear that by listening to lectures on the run, students will miss out on learning that can only happen when students and instructors come together.

Professors have posted lecture notes, PowerPoint slides and other written class material online for years, but instructors only recently began testing the best uses of the popular audio technology.

At Drexel University in Philadelphia, a chemistry professor assigns podcasted lectures, recorded last semester, for homework and then uses class time to review problems. At the University of Michigan, lectures can be automatically delivered to dentistry students' computers or portable devices.

And at the University of Hawaii, hundreds of students in a computer science class are required to show up at a lecture hall only twice a semester – for the midterm and final. Instead of a textbook, they purchase a small iPod at the bookstore, though most students already have one, the course professor said. Universities have found other ways to test podcasting, using it to publicize campus news and broadcast Sunday mass.

The California Institute of Technology admissions office recently released an 11-minute podcast for prospective students that leaves listeners with the impression that the school is nerdy, in a hip kind of way.

Rick Bishoff, admissions director at CalTech, said a podcast is a perfect way to grab the attention of busy high school seniors. "I want high school students to listen and imagine, 'that is a community I want to be part of.' Or say, 'that doesn't sound like any place that I want to be a part of.'"

At a recent national conference for admissions counselors, TwigPod Productions, a Pasadena, Calif.-based marketing company that produced the CalTech podcast, pitched the idea to other colleges. The podcasts cost between $5,000 and $7,500, depending on their complexity.

Some universities, such as Purdue and North Carolina's Duke University, have university-wide programs that make it easy for professors to become podcasters.

Purdue this fall introduced a podcasting service called BoilerCast that records and downloads lectures to the school Web site at professors' requests. About 60 professors are using the service, and their students can access the lectures as soon as 10 minutes after class.

Since Aug. 22, when the program began, the Web site has had more than 34,000 downloads, Michael Gay, Purdue's manager of broadcast networks and services said.

Erica Carlson, one professor podcasting her lectures, said attendance in her 22-student seminar class on thermal and statistical physics hasn't declined.

Carlson downloads her lectures to iTunes as well as the Purdue site. After she was featured on the home page of the iTunes Web site, the number of subscribers to her podcast shot up to 750 from 100. A college history major e-mailed to say he enjoyed her lectures, as did an engineer who graduated from college years ago.

"When I saw the subscribership shoot up to 750, I started getting nervous. I love an audience, but an audience of 750 that I can't read or get feedback from is intimidating," Carlson said.

For the 600 students in David Nickles' two computer science classes at the University of Hawaii, there are no traditional lectures. Nickles records lectures from his office and students listen to them on the bus, on the beach or in their dorm rooms.

In his orientation podcast, after an introductory drumbeat, he explains the unconventional style. "We will be taking lecture out of the lecture hall and putting it into your pocket," he said. "This approach will open up your schedule in that you will have the lecture with you all the time. When you have time to listen to lecture, you listen to it."

In a throwback to the old ways, he shows up at a lecture hall once a week to hold optional review sessions.

About half the students join him for extra credit.

police

Four fights reported Sunday

Friday November 4

On Friday morning, there was a case of credit card larceny at Amherst Motel 52. The police arrived at 408 Northampton Rd. 52 at 10:45 a.m.

On Friday evening, the Amherst police assisted the Amherst Fire Department with a situation of a woman having trouble breathing. The police arrived at 93 Cross Brook Dr. at 5:40 p.m.

Saturday November 5

Early Saturday morning, there was a liquor law violation at the corner of Hobart St. and North Pleasant St. The police arrived at 1039 North Pleasant St. at 12:37 a.m. James Matthew Hopkins, 20, of Maynard, and Benjamin Anderson, 20, of Belmont, NH, were both arrested. Both were charged with underage possession of liquor and having an open container of alcohol.

Later that morning, there was a noise complaint from the Jones Properties Limited Partnership. The police arrived at 28 Kellogg Ave. at 1:11 a.m. Kevin P. O'Grady, 21, of Amherst, Samuel A. Spagnuolo, 20, of Wycoff, NJ, and Neil H. Friedman, 20, of Fairlawn, NJ, were arrested and charged with creating unlawful noise.

Later that morning, there was a liquor law violation at the corner of Sunset St. and Fearing St. The police arrived at Sunset Ave. at 1:29 a.m. Theodore John Connelly, 20, of Granby, CT, Tina Mascadrelli, 18, of Westfield, Alyssa Christine Casey, 18, of Westfield, and Todd Robert Kennedy, 20, of Georgetown, MA, were arrested and charged with underage possession of alcohol.

Sunday November 6

On Sunday morning, four fights were reported within two hours. The first fight was on 630 Main St. The police arrived at 12:10 a.m. The fight dispersed once the police arrived.

The second fight was on the corner of Triangle St. and East Pleasant St. The police arrived at 75 East Pleasant St. at 1:10 a.m. Four men were summoned to court for disorderly conduct.

The third fight was at 26 Allen St. The police arrived at 1:36 a.m. The fight dispersed after the police arrived. Someone was struck in the face by an unknown assailant.

The last fight was between two females in front of the Douglas Funeral Home. The police arrived at 87 North Pleasant St. at 1:49 a.m. Carley M. Desilier, 20, of Southbridge, and Linda L. Lopes, 21, of Amherst were arrested. Both charged with disorderly conduct.

—Arika Seri

President Bush declares: 'We do not torture.'

By Deb Riechmann
Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — President Bush on Monday defended U.S. interrogation practices and called the treatment of terrorism suspects lawful. "We do not torture," Bush declared in response to reports of secret CIA prisons overseas.

Bush supported an effort spearheaded by Vice President Dick Cheney to block or modify a proposed Senate-passed ban on torture.

"We're working with Congress to make sure that as we go forward, we make it possible, more possible, to do our job," Bush said. "There's an enemy that lurks and plots and plans and wants to hurt America again. And so, you bet we will aggressively pursue them. But we will do so under the law."

Cheney is seeking to persuade Congress to exempt the Central Intelligence Agency from the proposed torture ban if one is passed by both chambers.

Bush spoke at a news conference with Panamanian President Martin Torrijos on the same day the U.S. Supreme Court agreed to consider a challenge to the administration's military tribunals for foreign terror suspects.

In a case entailing a major test of the government's wartime powers, justices will decide whether Osama bin Laden's former driver can be tried for war crimes before military officers in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Since the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks, U.S. military forces have held hundreds of suspects at known installations outside the United States, including at the Guantanamo Bay naval base.

Bush was asked about reports that the CIA was separately maintaining secret prisons in eastern Europe and Asia to interrogate al-Qaida suspects and demands by the International Red Cross for access to them.

Without confirming or denying the existence of such prisons, Bush said, "Our country is at war, and our government has the obligation to protect the American people."

He pointedly noted that Congress shares that responsibility with the administration.

"We are finding terrorists and bringing them to justice. We are gathering information about where the terrorists may be hiding. We are trying to disrupt their plots and plans. Anything we do to that end in this effort, any activity we conduct, is within the law. We do not torture," Bush said.

The European Union is investigating reports of the CIA prisons. The story was first reported by The Washington Post.

In Washington, Senate Democrats pressed for the creation of an independent commission to investigate detainee abuse. They hope to attach the proposal to a defense bill the Senate is considering this week.

"We need a 9/11-type commission to restore credibility to this nation," said Sen. Carl Levin of Michigan, the senior Democrat on the Armed Services Committee.

Committee Chairman John Warner R-Va., called the commission unnecessary. "Responsibility and accountability have been assessed," Warner said.

Motion Picture Association of America pursues Web sites

By Kelly Myers
The Lariat (Baylor U.)

WACO, Texas — Members of the Motion Picture Association of America are warning students to be cautious of a number of Web sites that claim to contain legal music and movie downloads, when in reality, the sites don't have permission for the distribution of the material.

"Students should be aware that there are bad actors online who are falsely luring people into illegal activity," said Dan Glickman, chairman and CEO of the MPAA, in a press release. "We are working to make sure these Web sites can't continue this type of false advertising and encouragement of illegal activity."

The MPAA has filed lawsuits against at least six Web sites, including downloadshield.com, full-movie-downloads.com, mp3eternity.com, moviesadvance.com, thedownloadplace.com and easy-downloadcenter.com.

"There are legal ways to download movies online," Glickman said. "We won't tolerate this scam premised on the illegal swapping of valuable movie content."

Not only are the download sites illegal, but the owners are making money on them. Site owners charge fees ranging from $20 to $40 in exchange for downloads.

The Web sites also contain claims of access to an unlimited number of legally downloadable movies or music.

But the sites are actually connecting users to peer-to-peer networks that contain pirated copies of the music or movies they're trying to download.

Such downloads can be punished by fines that range from $30,000 to $150,000 per download.

And if criminal action is involved, violators could spend up to five years in jail.

According to the MPAA Web site, piracy is theft committed through various means, but most commonly the Internet.

"Stealing is stealing," Houston junior Kevin Nguyen said. "It doesn't matter if you think these companies can afford the profit loss. You're still taking something that isn't yours."

In order to help students avoid similar schemes, the MPAA Web site includes safety tips.

According to the site, students should watch for titles that are yet to be released on DVD, remember they get the quality they pay for, read the labels carefully and rely on legitimate Web services.

"When you download files from peer-to-peer services, it's the same thing as inviting strangers to access your private information," said Kristina Eclevia, a junior from Hillsboro, Ore. "That's just a risk I'm not willing to take."

Students are encouraged to contact the MPAA if they suspect pirate activity.

The MPAA suggested downloading from legal sites such as CinemaNow, MovieFlix and Music United.

UMASS
Ski 'N Board Club
The 38th Annual GREAT UMASS SKI SALE
50-70% off all new equipment
November 17th 11-8
November 18th 11-8
November 19th 11-6
In The Student Union Ballroom on the UMass Amherst Campus
434 Student Union | 545-3437
skiclub@stuaf.umass.edu
http://www.umass.edu/rso/skiclub

Get Frosted!
FROST YOUR OWN CUPCAKES
Wednesday, Nov. 9, 2005
From 5 to 8 pm in All DC's

One of our most popular specials!

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst

Choose from:
CUPCAKES
chocolate, white, vegan white
FROSTINGS
vanilla, fudge, peanut butter, German chocolate
TOPPINGS
rainbow jimmies, chopped cherries, mini chocolate chips, cinnamon hearts, Oreo topping, mini marshmallows

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 2005

"I may not agree with what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Amoral arguments on torture

This column is part one of a two part series.

Mike Sances

On Oct. 5, a group of 90 concerned Americans gathered in Washington to protest the Bush administration's open-ended guidelines for the treatment of alleged terrorists, the very same policies that paved the road to Abu Ghraib and the abuses at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Radical nuts from the fringe left? Not exactly. All 90 were U.S. senators, including 46 Republicans, and their "protest" was registered on the floor of the Senate, in an amendment to a military spending bill. The provision, which would explicitly ban "cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment" of detainees received renewed support this Friday in a unanimous voice vote.

The chief sponsor is Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.), once a prisoner of war himself and a prospective presidential candidate for 2008. McCain explained on Fox News Sunday that such treatment, aside from severely damaging the country's standing in the court of world public opinion, doesn't even succeed in producing reliable information.

> Torture is not wrong because it makes us look bad, or because it doesn't work or because one party is for or against it. It's wrong because it's flat-out disgusting, barbaric behavior that demeans the abuser as much as the abused.

McCain's view on the matter, while amoral, was shared by the arch-conservative John Ashcroft, who, according to Sen. Herb Kohl (D-Wis.), "doesn't really believe in torture, in the sense that it doesn't produce anything of value. He has said that on the record" (though I can't find it anywhere). Ashcroft's successor, Alberto Gonzalez, was widely labeled a "moderate" during his confirmation hearings in January. Does Gonzalez agree with Ashcroft?

"Sir, I don't have a way of reaching a conclusion on that. All I know is that the president has said we're not going to torture under any circumstances."

Well, this man is clearly a psychopath. Perhaps we should take solace in the fact that Gonzalez wasn't one of the president's Supreme Court nominees — you know, because he's so moderate. Thank God that we have been handed from above the indisputably qualified Samuel Alito (elite-o?), a "strict constructionist" if there ever was one.

Thank God because we can be sure that, as someone opposed to the idea of the Constitution as a "living document," Alito will have to interpret the Supremacy Clause literally. The Supremacy Clause, you'll remember, is the term for Article VI, which explicitly declares that "all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land." That would include the Geneva Conventions, of course, which Senator McCain's amendment simply reiterates.

And we can be more than certain that, as a good Republican constructionist, Alito will be bound by the War Crimes Act of 1996, passed by Newt Gingrich's House of Representatives, which states that breaches of the Geneva Conventions are punishable by death.

We would be certain of these things, that is, if politics wasn't such a swamp of hypocrisy that simple principles like "strict constructionism" are absolutely laughable in practice.

Anyway, let's return to the adjective, "amoral." Because that's the manner in which the Congressional discussions on treatment of detainees are conducted. Torture is not wrong because it makes us look bad, or because it doesn't work, or because one party is for or against it. It's wrong because it's flat-out disgusting, barbaric behavior that demeans the abuser as much as the abused. In the words of Jonathan Schell of the Nation Institute, "Torture is wrong because it inflicts unspeakable pain upon the body of a fellow human being who is entirely at our mercy." Anyone is innocent who lacks the capacity to defend themselves, and thus merits our respect and care. We dirty ourselves by ignoring this basic moral tenet in our conversations on the treatment of detainees.

But there's an even bigger issue lurking in the background, and that's the president's ability to detain persons indefinitely without charge, what Winston Churchill called (two years after the Luftwaffe was bombing London, and before the war was even over, no less) "the foundation of all totalitarian government, whether Nazi or Communist."

So pronounced is the lack of arguments for torture that we naturally ask, "Why then do things like Abu Ghraib happen?" That's easy. For the same reason we invaded Iraq: for the same reason anything ever happens in any country: because of our consent. And so the reason the White House has gotten away with torture is because nobody cares, and because those who do care feel powerless.

Churchill's insight, which is nothing more than a reaffirmation of the right to due process found in the American Bill of Rights, has come to pass in numerous cases in the past four years. Next week, I'll run through some of the most egregious cases we know of, but that are not widely known, and talk more about the prospects for ending the brutal treatment that we both pay for with our taxes and support through our silence.

Part two of this column series will appear in the Nov. 15 issue of the Daily Collegian.

Mike Sances is a Collegian columnist.

Personnel issues in White House

David B. Lawrence

George W. Bush has gotten himself in a bit of trouble lately.

Well that might not be fair to say, it hasn't been Bush specifically, but people in his administration, who have gotten him into so many ugly-looking spats of late. Vice President Dick Cheney's top aide, Lewis Libby, was the individual handed an indictment last week. It was Supreme Court nominee Harriet Meier's bumbling through meetings with top senators that led to her premature withdrawal (though Bush could have anticipated much of the Right's criticism of the choice), and it has been Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfield standing by as the Guantanomo Bay situation (now putting the White House at odds with a McCain anti-torture amendment) has deteriorated into a public-perception disaster. Bush appointed the unqualified Michael Brown as director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), but it was Brown who demonstrated impressive levels of incompetence in his mishandling of relief efforts in the wake of Hurricane Katrina.

Contrast the situation with the presidential crisis that was ongoing eight years ago – the impeachment of President Bill Clinton. The blame for Clinton's troubles rested squarely on his own shoulders. Though the political severity of his actions was argued, no one disputed the fact that it was Clinton who was in that office with Monica Lewinsky, and that it was Clinton who repeatedly lied about that offense. Bush's quandary can be traced to several places and figures within his administration, and thus blame (and the public's wrath) can potentially be lifted from Bush's shoulders. However if Bush fails to wiggle out of this his legacy could be of a failed administration, more regrettable than the Clinton legacy of a failed marriage.

> Bush's quandary can be traced to several places and figures within his administration, and thus blame (and the public's wrath) can potentially be lifted from Bush's shoulders. However if Bush fails to wiggle out of this his legacy could be of a failed administration, more regrettable than the Clinton legacy of a failed marriage.

Bush's personnel problems started somewhere in Iraq. Gross intelligence failures told him that Saddam Hussein's Iraq had extensive development programs for weapons of mass destruction. Hussein's own unwillingness to comply with U.N. weapons inspectors further supported the notion that he did in fact have something up his sleeve.

Bush trusted the intelligence reports he was given, and passed them on to the American people as justification for attacking Iraq. It is now clear that the intelligence was wrong, and Bush has paid the price. Because he believed intelligence operatives' threat assessments and felt that he should act quickly and decisively, he lost the trust of many Americans when those assessments proved wrong.

Under the Patriot Act, prisoners suspected of terrorism can be held without being formally charged. The primary prison holding these suspects, the Guantanomo Bay facility, was the center of a major scandal several years ago when photos of detainees being brutalized and dehumanized by soldiers were released to the media.

Since then the Guantanomo facility has been the subject of much international criticism and the foundation for complaints of the Bush administration's human rights policies. As Defense Secretary, Donald Rumsfield is in charge of what goes on in the facility, and to some degree its public perception. His cold calculated response to global criticisms has done little to ease a negative public perception of the facility.

Bush's most obvious personnel mistake was choosing Michael Brown as director of FEMA. Brown was completely unqualified; his only prior management experience was as director of an Arabian horse association. With Brown at the helm, FEMA responded disastrously poorly to Hurricane Katrina. The result was further suffering and devastation in New Orleans and the surrounding areas. Brown was quickly uncovered as an incompetent crony and resigned from his position.

Recently the indictment of a member of Vice President Dick Cheney's staff, Lewis Libby, has cast further doubt on the personnel that Bush has surrounded himself in Washington. Though Bush himself is not a target of the ongoing investigation, the presence of criminal activity at high levels in his administration reflects very poorly on him.

As a reaction to the Libby indictment, Bush has ordered that his staff take a refresher course in ethics, literally. A memo from Bush to his staff has ordered them all to take time for the class in the next few weeks. It's a seemingly naive move. Worried about members of his staff indicted for obstruction of justice, Bush orders his staff to read up on ethics?

But Bush is demonstrating some political savvy with the move. By ordering his staff to take the ethics course, he distances himself from the investigation and the people involved. He is reaffirming that it is his organization that has made mistakes, not him. If President Bush can convince the American people of that, he may yet survive this storm.

David B. Lawrence is a Collegian columnist

Protesters win at Summit

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz

The 2005 Summit of the Americas brought together two groups to discuss democratic governance, poverty and employment in the hemisphere. Predictably, the only topic under any real consideration was free trade. Two blocs emerged over the issue: one consisting of 29 countries in favor of the Free Trade Area of the Americas (FTAA) and one made up of five countries opposed. Venezuela joined the Mercosur countries, Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay, in disapproving Washington's plan for a free trade area stretching from Alaska to Argentina.

The summit saw no winners, however, as a tepidly worded resolution to continue discussing trade meant all sides failed to achieve their goals: the United States, Mexico and Panama failed to pass FTAA, Venezuela failed to bury FTAA and the Mercosur countries failed to get the United States and Canada to reduce their agricultural subsidies as a requisite for free trade.

Though Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez trumpets his burial of FTAA, it seems likely that 2006 will see progress for the free trade regime. U.S. agricultural subsidies are already under serious attack as an impediment to the Doha Round at the WTO and could be forced to give ground in the coming year. This would assuage concerns in Brasilia and Buenos Aires about engaging FTAA, and, pending the outcome of electoral contests in Bolivia, Ecuador and Nicaragua, only Cuba and Venezuela would remain left out.

> Without a doubt, the protesters stole the show. Not only in Mar del Plata but also in Buenos Aires and cities around South America, large manifestations sent a resounding message to American leaders: no to FTAA.

And while debate in the plenary sessions of the heads of state was reportedly heated, the real action was in the streets where the agenda was set as a radical questioning of current globalization trends and a critique of hemispheric free trade. The impassioned masses made their collective voice heard in decisive rejection of hemispheric free trade and Washington consensus economics.

Standing aside soccer great Diego Maradona and Bolivian presidential hopeful Evo Morales, President Chavez rallied the crowd against the North American agenda at the summit. The protests, which at times turned into riots, provided Argentine president and summit host Nestor Kirchner with ample grounds to publicly blame U.S.-backed economic policies for his country's ills.

Without a doubt, the protesters stole the show. Not only in Mar del Plata but also in Buenos Aires and cities around South America, large manifestations sent a resounding message to American leaders: no to FTAA. These were the largest and most violent protests at a Summit of the Americas to date, and they could play a galvanizing role on the grass-roots level in countries around Latin America whose populations are against free trade but whose leaders are mostly on the fence.

Such a hot button issue will likely mobilize electoral bases in tough presidential contests in the coming year. Evo Morales will certainly use his appearance in Mar del Plata to drum up support from Bolivia's large indigenous population whose support he generally commands but most of whom do not vote. In anticipation of Nicaraguan elections, Daniel Ortega will gain a palpable new form of U.S. imperialism to harp against and to attack President Enrique Bolaños for backing.

In the United States, the passionate display of opposition put a human face to Latin American poverty back on the map. Looking desperately for answers, Wolf Blitzer asked dozens of consultants and invitees about the reasons for the rioting. While failing to explore the unfair conditions of "free" trade, even CNN noted that it causes increased wealth inequalities and social frustration in Latin America. Numerous commentators cited Mexico's increased social unrest, massive recession in the mid-'90s and GDP growth of one-half the historic rate since the passage of NAFTA over a decade ago.

Yet the most likely outcome of the protests will be a redoubled interest at the Organization of American States (OAS) for buckling down and writing a serious Inter-American Social Charter to accompany the Democratic Charter. Secretary-General Jose Miguel Insulza must recognize the call for socio-economic fairness alongside civic-political equality.

President Chavez has long pointed to the Social Charter as necessary for taking the OAS serious in the region, and now he will likely be joined by the Mercosur governments. Even governments backing FTAA may throw their weight behind the idea in hope of satisfying some of the concerns of opposed governments. If one group was a winner at the 2005 Summit of the Americas, it was the one in the streets with ski masks and red flags.

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

FLU SHOTS MORE THAN NECESSARY

After reading Allison Edles's column on the University Health Services Flu Shot Clinic, I was outraged at the attitudes she exhibited. As one of those "generally healthy college students" she so lovingly wrote about, I too believe there is too much emphasis put on getting annual flu shots. However, as the daughter of a woman whose multiple sclerosis is so advanced that she is wheelchair-bound at 49, I have been choosing to get flu shots since I was 15, regardless of my personal doubts as to their usefulness. Who is to know whether or not the one year I decide not to get one, if it will mean hospitalization or further paralysis for her? Sometimes we "college kids" must put the interests of others above our own shallow ones.

I was aghast at the assumptions (usually incorrect) exhibited in the column. My fiancé (who I live with) has Type 1 diabetes. Meaning, if he gets sick, major damage will be done to his vital organs. Meaning, we both got shots at the UHS Clinic, and the insinuation that only people with diseases like AIDS deserve flu shots is abhorrent.

Secondly, the clinic was not free. Each inoculation cost $15, the same as any clinic not offered at UMass. The University possesses much of the population of Amherst and its surrounding towns, so offering it here makes it accessible for many chronic, elderly and pregnant people. If the author is so upset at cold food in the DCs or the inability of UMass to correctly heat buildings, then she should do something about it in those departments, because everyone pays thousands of dollars for those services. No one except those getting the flu shot paid anything for this clinic. In the future, more research should be done before arguing that there are no people on this campus who needed or deserved this necessary and important service from UHS.

Eileen Billings
UMass student

JOURNALISTIC INACCURACIES

This letter is to correct several points of error that appeared in the Nov. 3 front-page article, "SGA gives funds for litigation service." This article, while informative on certain issues relevant to the student body, does itself a disservice by misrepresenting basic facts pertaining to the matter.

The article states that the Student Legal Services Office "had been allowed to represent students continually in the past few years, but they were stripped of their powers by Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life, Michael Gargano, after director of SLSO, Chuck DeMare (sic), sued UMass on behalf of a student, ending in a lawsuit that produced a multi-million dollar settlement."

While I'm well aware that some members of the student body at large have a vendetta against Gargano, (perhaps with good reason) blaming him for something that happened 16 years before he arrived on campus is pushing the envelope a bit. The SLSO lost the power to sue and defend students in criminal matters in 1986, after a multi-million dollar lawsuit, and Gargano rolled into town in 2002. I'm pretty sure on this one he isn't at fault. Factual inaccuracies in an opinion article are excusable, but on the lead story in the news section I expected a little more research on the matter.

The article further misrepresents the SLSO's role in the following paragraph when it states that students "already supported with legal advice by student legal services will now be given the use of a qualified lawyer specially fit to meet their needs." This seems to imply that qualified lawyers (like the three on staff at the SLSO) were previously unavailable to the general population. The article perpetuates a common misconception that because the SLSO cannot defend in criminal cases, that they cannot litigate other matters, which is just not true. The SLSO litigates cases related to divorce proceedings, personal injury claims, debt collection, landlord/tenant disputes, consumer protection claims and discrimination, just to name a few.

The article raises valid issues about the funding endorsed by the SGA, and correctly highlights the benefits such a resource would be to the student population. It makes great points about the responsibility of the University to provide for student's defense in criminal matters, especially when students can otherwise not afford private counsel. But the article falls sadly short of the mark elsewhere. Such misleading journalism could be avoided in this, and any other matter, by taking the time to research the news story you are reporting on.

Tim Clarke
UMass student

Interested in writing for Ed/Op??

email:

editorial@dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 2005

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Reznor and his renovated band hit the stage in Boston

By Bill Donovan
Collegian Staff

Industrial-rock revolutionary, Trent Reznor was beginning to resemble his dark and electronic-guitar beats; dwelling in the shadows filled with the introspective, self-hating sentiments of his lyrics. Yet after a six-year hiatus, Reznor emerged; fully-recovered from drug and alcohol abuse.

With a revamped Nine Inch Nails, featuring new members and a buffed-up sound showcased on "With Teeth," released in May; the band will tear up the stage with stoner-rock psychedelia misfits, Queens of the Stone Age and openers Death From Above 1979 Tuesday, Nov. 8 at 7 p.m. at TD Banknorth Garden (formerly the FleetCenter.) Tickets range from $39.50-49.50.

Reznor gained attention with 1994's "The Downward Spiral," a raw-look into the agonized-mind of its creator. Songs like "Closer" and "March of The Pigs" range of sound included rank guitar-noise pushed over keyboard-blips and Reznor's ragged-voice. NIN differentiated itself from the riff-rock of Seattle Grunge. Much controversy erupted over the use of the "Closer" video on MTV, the cable channel claimed it unfit to be shown to the public, removing ominous scenes and cutting its provocative chorus. With the rising-popularity of the album, filmmakers requested Reznor to produce the soundtracks to such gloomy-films as "Natural Born Killers," "Seven" and "Lost Highway." With world-wide admiration of the band, the frontman hurried to release "The Fragile," a two-disc set in 1999. After this, Reznor disappeared; withdrawing himself from the world and beginning his spiral into years of drugs and alcohol.

Nine Inch Nails
TD Banknorth Garden
Tues. Nov. 8
7 p.m.
$39.50-$49.50

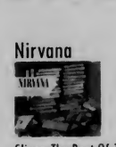
The new record possesses more of a live-recording sense to it, helped by the ferocious and rapid drumming of Foo Fighters helm and former Nirvana drummer Dave Grohl. On the track "You Know What You Are?" Grohl creates a storm of beats amongst Reznor's primal-yelling. Much like his work on Queens of the Stone Age's "Songs for the Deaf," he is at peak-form when behind a kit.

Other songs deal with similar themes from Reznor's previous efforts, paranoia, dissent and outrage. A piece like "The Hand That Feeds," is a shout at the current administration in the White House. It is both an inquiry and request for social-activism in bringing about change. "What if this whole crusade's a charade. And behind it all there's a price to be paid for the blood, which we dine. Justified in the name of the holy and the divine." On "All The Love In The World," Reznor sings in a dull-tone, speaking of traveling in a group not being able to express himself. He mopes, "No one's heard a single word I've said. They don't sound as good outside my head. Looks as though the past is here to stay. I've become a million miles away." In the background, a saddened-piano melody dwells like Reznor uttering the morose words.

Queens of the Stone Age have had a bit of a bumpy-road to recovery as well in their musical-journeys. After the success of "Songs for The Deaf," conflict arose in the band during its tours of the album. Bassist Nick Oliveri was fired by lead singer/guitarist Joshua Homme after repeats run-ins with the law and drug-use. The Sabbath-esque band put out "Lullabies To Paralyze" in March with new band-mates like NIN. Drummer Joey Castillo has played with Danzig and Eagles of Death Metal, and guitarist Troy Van Leeuwen from A Perfect Circle appears on "Lullabies" as well. Currently, the band plans on releasing its CD/DVD "Over The Years And Through The Woods," a collection of live recordings and b-sides on November 22.

The Canadian two-piece Death From Above 1979 use drums, bass, and synthesizers in bringing about their aural-message. For example, the song "If We Don't Make It, We'll Fake It" is a nod to Stooges-era punk. The song's edginess shifts into a joyous, synthesized dance towards the end, making the piece sound almost bi-polar. Their new record, "Romance Bloody Romance" comes out November 22.

COURTESY MUSICWORLD.COM



Trent Reznor's band, Nine Inch Nails, is joined by Queens of the Stone Age and Death Alwve 1979 on tour.

New Music Tuesdays

A 'Sliver' of Nirvana

Nirvana

6/10

Sliver: The Best Of The Box
Geffen Records

Last fall, after over 10 years of waiting and anticipation, a Nirvana box set was finally released. The set, "With The Lights Out," contained three discs and one DVD of exhaustively put together Nirvana b-sides, rarities, demos and unreleased songs. While the set was the type of package that die-hard fans had been praying for, it did not have as strong an impact on the large number of casual Nirvana fans. Of course that was exactly the point of the box set. Unfortunately, a band such as Nirvana, a legacy that hasn't been able to create new material in over a decade, is subject to being squeezed for all they're worth. "Sliver: The Best Of The Box" is the latest example and, like many posthumous compilations, it is more then a little frustrating. Targeted at those weary of throwing down a large chunk of cash on a box set, "Sliver" pares the 61 tracks down to 19 and as a mixed blessing to the die-hards, throws in three previously unreleased recordings.

While the biggest complaints about any compilation such as this stem from the fact that any individual listener would probably pick a different 19 tracks, "Sliver" does get it right for the most part. From some of the best unreleased songs like "Clean Up Before She Comes," "Opinion" and the haunting "Do Re Mi," an acoustic demo that stands as one of Kurt Cobain's last recordings, to demos of Nirvana standards like "Rape Me" and "About A Girl," the compilation does a good job of exemplifying what the box set is all about. However these tracks are simply so good that it proves exactly what is wrong with "Sliver." With The Lights Out" is the definitive post-Nirvana collection, something no fan should be without, which makes "Sliver" inherently unnecessary.

However what is likely to hook a lot of buyers is those controversial three unreleased tracks. When "With The Lights Out" was released fans rejoiced but, like any good cult, complained that many recordings were left out. The three new tracks on "Sliver" should have been saved for a future release of even more unreleased Nirvana tracks rather then used to bait buyers. The pre-Nirvana demo of "Spank Thru" is one of the most interesting documents available but begs the question of when fans will get to hear the rest of the Fecal Matter tape that sourced this version. The alternate version of "Sappy", one of Nirvana's best songs, is a good find but it doesn't stand up to the original. The final new track, a boom box demo of "Come As You," is exhilarating, breathing new life into a song everyone has heard a million times – similar to the "Smells Like Teen Spirit" demo that is also on this compilation – and serves as a reminder of what a great song it is.

"Sliver" is a difficult release to gauge – it's hard to argue with 22 excellent tracks by one of the greatest bands of all time - but "With The Lights Out" is simply better, both in terms of quality and quantity. The three new songs are great finds but the obvious cash-grab is sure to cause bitterness within the Nirvana community. Anyone that will enjoy "Sliver" will be kicking themselves for not just buying the box set.

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

COURTESY MARK SELIGER

Franz Ferdinand

8.3/10

You Could Have It So Much Better
Domino Records

Whoever said you can't dance to rock and roll is wrong — or they just never listened to the band Franz Ferdinand.

If you ignore the fact they originally sounded just like Modest Mouse, their self-titled release was one of last year's best albums.

Sure, it went flat after a couple listens, but that was last year.

This year, their follow-up is different — different in a good way. Franz Ferdinand is back with a new album, "You Could Have It So Much Better."

The new album has a lot more substance then their self-titled debut. It's more complete and less likely to go flat after a couple listens.

The overall sound is very danceable, but not because there are dance beats throughout the album. Instead, the guitar loops with the drum beats to create an infectious sound that makes you want to get up and move.

The danceable sound never leaves the album throughout its 41 minutes. Even during the slower songs of the album, one can find the drum beats.

The slowest song, "I Learnt Put Your Boots On," sounds like it could have been stolen from The Snake The Cross The Crown's latest album — which could also lead to the argument that it sounds like The Beatles. Nonetheless, the song is beautiful and enjoyable.

Another argument concerning this release is that Franz Ferdinand ditched their indie art world for the pop world. Who cares, either way you can't have it much better when it comes to "You Could Have It So Much Better." There is no sophomore slump heard while listening to this album which is quite something since its two albums in two years. Like that the rest of the pop world who doesn't write their own songs or writes them over too long of a period of time

Franz Ferdinand is 'Better' second time around

COURTESY DOMINO RECORDS

The rest of the pop world should learn from Franz Ferdinand to evolve, but only enough without losing your original message and to be create music quickly to reach the shelves before the world forgets about you and labels you a one hit wonder.

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

MORE NEW MUSIC ON THE NEXT PAGE

New Music Tuesdays

"Music can name the unnameable and communicate the unknowable." - Leonard Bernstein

Week of 11/8 to 11/14

Sonic Youth

9.5/10

Goo
Geffen Records

1990 was a scary year for alternative rock. Back when alternative actually meant something, Sonic Youth was the nation's finest purveyors of something known as college rock and they had just signed with a major label.

15 years later, Sonic Youth is still making brilliant, ground-breaking music for Geffen Records; it has since become unquestionable that an indie-band can sign a major label contract and retain its credibility. Sonic Youth never made it big on MTV or mainstream radio, but the label still allowed them to do what they wanted, setting a precedent that, while not always followed, has allowed for some of the best music in recent years to get heard by a larger audience.

Of course the real lesson of 1990 was that it doesn't matter what label an album comes out on, it's the music that matters. Sonic Youth's new CD "Goo" is an exceptional slab of music, a natural progression from "Daydream Nation" that pulled no punches and never played it safe. "Goo" has been spoken about infinitely, which is exactly what warrants this double-disc reissue, but still not enough can be said. From the opening build and subsequent explosion of "Dirty Boots" to the Kim Gordon/Chuck D duet "Kool Thing" to "Mote," one of Lee Ranaldo's best songs and the closing epic "Titanium Expose," Goo is an incredible album that sounds better then ever thanks to the remastering job.

However, the meat of any good deluxe edition is the bonus tracks and Goo's supplemental material stands up the original album. The centerpiece is 11 eight-track demos that form a complete alternate version of "Goo" (substituting the excellent feedback frenzy "Scooter + Jinx" for the fantastic, unreleased "Lee #2"). Songs run different lengths and contain new parts and structure, mixes highlight different elements and some songs get completely altered by the tones and sounds that weave in and out of these demos, even the track order makes for an exciting new listen.

Fans weary of cheap-but-identical sounding demos that pass for extras have no reason to fear; the quality and caliber of these recordings are of the highest echelon and are as invigorating as the released album itself. The other extras include "Goo"-era b-sides and outtakes, including a cover of the Beach Boys' "I Know There's An Answer" and an interview track that finds Thurston Moore discussing songs via beat poetry. All this, combined with extensive liner notes, make it clear that a lot of time was put into this reissue.

Goo is a seminal album, for both the band and the music world, by one of the most important, interesting, and consistently great rock bands of the past 25 years, and this deluxe edition makes that clear. Sonic Youth fans already know that this is a must-buy, but this is a collection that anyone interested in independent-minded, forward-thinking, art-rock needs to have.

Rob Dickinson

6/10

Fresh Wine for the Horses
Sanctuary Records

The Catherine Wheel spent their nearly decade-long career just bubbling under the surface of the mainstream, but their lush post-shoegaze style not only made them one of the better bands of the '90s but also one of the most influential – with hard rock chops that influenced alternative acts and a sensitive side with a big sound that certainly helped Coldplay form their sound. The band sadly parted ways in 2000 and now front man Rob Dickinson has finally emerged with his first solo offering, "Fresh Wine for the Horses."

The good news is that Dickinson, a great songwriter, vocalist and guitarist, is back after a long hiatus. The bad news is that "Fresh Wine…" suffers from first-solo-album-from-accomplished-artist syndrome. Dickinson still has his talents but takes less risks, focusing more on himself as a singer/songwriter type. Songs like "My Name Is Love" and "Intelligent People" have the feel of big stadium rockers but lack the thrilling feeling that The Catherine Wheel's best songs brought with them. A lot of the songs feel slightly bored with themselves and solid, but slightly formulaic, production and heavy use of strings only serves to blend the tracks together more. The first half of the album is comprised of soothing arena-ballads that aren't bad, but simply not up to the high standards that Dickinson has set for himself.

Fortunately the album picks up at the halfway point. A trio of songs, "Handsome," "Bathe Away" and "The Storm" breathe life into the album right as it begins to become complacent. "Handsome" and "The Storm" are adrenaline-packed anthems; the latter is somewhat of a Catherine Wheel reunion, featuring all the members that appeared on the bands last album. "Bathe Away" works around tight strings and a menacing drum beat, with Dickinson lamenting, "There's nothing sweet to eat." "Bad Beauty" is a stripped-down ballad that works beautifully. The closing track, "Towering and Flowering," also features The Catherine Wheel line up and also touches upon the majesty of the band's work – unfortunately the album closes with an unlisted reprise of "The Mutineer," a Warren Zevon cover and one of the album's weaker songs.

"Fresh Wine For The Horses" feels like the solo debut it is; personal, introspective, and sincere. It contains the elements of Dickinson's best work but unfortunately only a few songs stack up to them, which makes for a pleasant, but not wholly satisfying, listen. "Fresh Wine…" could prove to be an important step in Dickinson's career but it's hard to tell what direction he will go from here – of course that's what always made The Catherine Wheel so interesting.

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

Lawless Element

6.6/10

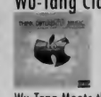
Soundvision: In Stereo
Babygrande Records

Forget everything you know from today's rap and hip-hop and go back to the mid 1990s. It was a time when rap was different, a time when gangsta was only circulating on underground mix tapes.

Once you get over that fact, Lawless Element, a Detroit duo consisting of Kavi "Magnif" Tapsico and his cousin Alfred "Griot" Austin makes more sense. Magnif and Griot recently released their debut album, a dream come true for the duo who's been dreaming of becoming the next big thing in the hip hop world since they were in the first grade.

Lawless Element definitely is full of today's most interesting beats. For example, if you listen to track three, "The Shining," the words flow tight, but the beats sound like a wacky guitar solo with a beat machine.

This is just partially what Lawless Element is all about. They take sounds like ones that they heard growing up, but won't change for new trends. They often create beats with cut-up drum machine beats with piano samples.



The rhymes of the album definitely aren't what stall the album at the brink of success. In fact the rhymes are decent, they don't get political or too ditty which is a major success. But unfortunately the boring beats cannot be forgotten about even if it is what they are all about.

The best rhymes of the album can be heard on track six "Represent Motown." This song is by far the most political by making shots at the Iraq war and the oil business.

Throughout the album guest vocals can be heard on the album. Some of the vocals are Melanie Rutherford, J. Dilla, Phat Kat and Big Tone. With these guest spots, the albums rhymes have a good amount of various flow. Rutherford for example does not rap, but more or less sings similar to R&B.

Lawless Element have talent, this is after all their first album. If they forget about their obsession with the mid 90's and catch up with the rest of the rap and hip hop world of today they would be doing much better then they are now.

Wu-Tang Clan

8/10

Wu-Tang Meets the Indie Culture
Babygrande Records

Next week marks the one year anniversary of the death of rapper Ol' Dirty Bastard from the Wu-Tang Clan. Ironically, or maybe it's just good marketing, Wu-Tang recently released a new album "Think Differently Music: Wu-Tang Meets The Indie Culture."

"Think Differently Music: Wu-Tang Meets The Indie Culture" continues to the Wu Tang tradition of going above and beyond the typical rap culture. But, this time it is only with Wu Tang producers and MC's of the underground doing the work: creating rhymes over beats that Wu Tang never got to use.

RZA, GZA, U-God and Dreddy Krueger are all heard rapping throughout the album. It was an amazing feat by executive producer Dreddy Krueger to get GZA and Ras Kass to collaborate together on the album.

Kass is one of the younger MC's that made an appearance, in his case two, on the album. Some of the other MC's were Aire, Aesop Rock and Vordul Mega.

The beats are strong on the album, but what can you expect when an album has the Wu-Tang symbol on it even though it is mocking the Apple computers emblem at the same time.

Also in the album is a tribute to the fallen members, mostly ODB, but the samples heard as well as the MC's rapping it's obvious its really a tribute to all fallen members of the clan over the years. This track is all samples and mixes and posses no new rhymes, but that's what finds this tribute so emotionally touching and well produced.

The biggest surprise on the album is the use of director and punk rocker Jim Jarmach as the narrator of two infomercial tracks. Jarmach is only heard for 45 seconds during each track, but his inclusion is definitely a shocker even though the theme of the album is thinking different.

The best part of the album is the lyrical themes. Unlike the typical rap of today the MC's on this album cover wide variety of topics in their rhymes like Lawless Element they rhyme about the Bush administration, but unlike Lawless Element these rhymes are all intelligently written and they know it too.

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

Arts is hiring for the Spring semester. apply in person at the Collegian. We are located in the Campus Center basement.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
- a grade dispute?
- teacher, roomate or job concerns?
- billing problems?
- harassment?
- ...or any other University related problems?

THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)

students, faculty, and staff are all welcome

823 Campus Center

Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.

telephone: 413-545-0867
fax: 413-545-9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
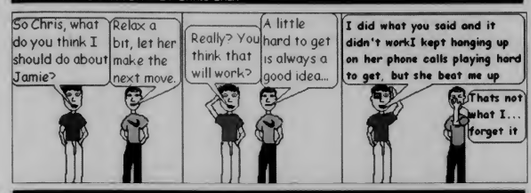
REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2006
The WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST
will be offered on:
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8 @ 6:30pm in CHEN227
This test is a pre-requisite for enrollemnt in Engliwrit 112/113, College Writing.
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.



Brave New Films Presents
WAL*MART
THE HIGH COST OF LOW PRICE
Monday, November 14, 2005
7:00 p.m.
Campus Center 168C
University of Massachusetts Amherst
The average pay for a Wal-Mart sales associate is $1,000 below the poverty line for a family of three. Wal-Mart is the subject of the largest class action lawsuit in history by current and former female employees who were paid and promoted at significantly lower rates than their male co-workers. For every new Supercenter that Wal-Mart opens, two local supermarkets will close. If Wal-Mart were an independent nation, it would be China's eighth-largest trading partner. Wal-Mart workers top Medicaid rolls in at least 16 states. Two recent lawsuits by minority employees and customers have brought to light a disturbing pattern of racial discrimination by Wal-Mart.
...Facts from www.walmartwatch.com - check it out
Sponsored by: Women's Studies Program, Labor Center, GEO (Graduate Employee Organization), Professional Staff Union, MSP (Massachusetts Society of Professors), University Staff Association, AFSCME Local 1776, UMass Amherst VOX: Students for Choice
This screening was funded and supported by the folks at Walmartwatch (www.walmartwatch.com). For more information about them, please see their website. For information about the screening, please contact Linda Hillenbrand at 413.545.1932
Websites to check out www.wakeupwalmart.com
www.hadleyneighbors.org (local site)
www.stopwalmart.org (Pioneer Valley site)

Enter for a chance to win a
$1000 Zanna Shopping Spree!
Tuesday, November 8 Saturday, November 12
Anniversary Sale.
$1000 Zanna Shopping Spree! All week
Big Sales. Bargains.
5 DAYS ONLY!
www.zanna.com

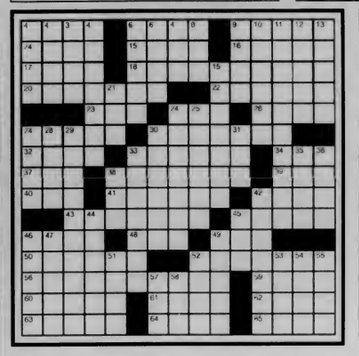
Labrat By Richard Martelly

Random Chatter By Chris Sala

Paul By Billy O'Keefe

The Family Monster By Josh Shalek

A College Girl Named Joe By Aaron Warner



Quote of the Day

"And these days, I wish I was six again."

—John Mayer

ACROSS
1 Coach or Pole
5 Metal waste
9 Support crew
14 Old sod
15 Domesticate
16 Windshield cleaner
17 Med sch. subj.
18 Lump in the throat?
20 Chooses
22 Presses on
23 Fish eggs
24 Artist Vermeer
26 Whip stroke
27 Fragment
30 Pair of drums
32 Property claim
33 Prevented from speaking
34 Junot Fortas
37 & so forth
38 Swim
39 Forward end
40 Tiny
41 Tree knots
42 Lotion ingredient
43 Hoop, Taos and Zuni
45 Consecrate
48 Solidifies
49 Mel of Cooperstown
49 Sedan or coupe
50 Lasting shock
52 Deprive by death
56 Not inclined to lend fault
59 Operatic melody
60 Jazz improviser Davis
61 Make dirty
62 Caribou or moose
63 Jury members
64 Lorre in eight films
65 Open wide
DOWN
1 Adriatic or Aegean
2 Type of dancing
3 Inland sea
4 Old hand
5 Any one of the fifty
6 Bovs
7 Dns. org
8 Precious stone
9 Did the butterfly
10 Bend the elbow regularly
11 Able to be packed
12 Cuts down
13 Reinvigorated
19 Choir members
21 NYPD member
24 Slow, steady running pace
25 Anaheim nine
27 Killed violently
28 Quote as an authority
29 Container
30 Volcanic rock
31 Lyric poem
33 Small, armed vessel
35 Relatives of raspberries
36 Rams' mates
38 Ripen
42 Unexpectedly early
44 Loan shark
45 Musical trma ural
46 Perplex
47 Pyle or Kovacs
49 Pablo Casals instrument
51 Fail to hit
52 Lura
53 District
54 Mental attitude
55 Merit
57 Dictinne
58 Talk baby talk
Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP
NEW!! Wireless Internet
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
November Special!
$1.50 PBR Bottles; Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 a pitcher
Tonight: • TRIVIA NIGHT!
Wed. • Cold Duck Complex
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments

Submit your comic!
e-mail
collegiancomcis@yahoo.com

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You will fall into a gigantic pile of leaves on your way to class.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Stop eating so many Swedish fish and buy your neighbors some more candy.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Find a phone book and find a new hairdresser STAT.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
That cologne smells horrible. Stop wearing it or you will soon have no friends.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Make sure you have plenty of Scotch tape.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Eat some brussels sprouts today and make your mother proud.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will totally ace that test you have tomorrow.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Today will not be a fun day. Get some coffee.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Don't worry, Friday will be here soon enough.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You really need to get a calender. You're the only person still thinking it's October.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If you go to the library today, avoid the elevators.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You have a serious problem with Domino's pizza.

★ Submit your comic ★
e-mail
collegiancomcis@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Looking for GO, Baduke, Weigi Players. New players welcome. Call 339-225-0537. 253-9873

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments, Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

EMPLOYMENT

Aupair for my daughter, Eleven years old, to share home in Leverett, MA 10 min to UMass. Private room & semi-private bath, share kitchen in exchange for some childcare Call c:413-522-3175 h:413-548-9498

EMPLOYMENT

Part-Time Workers Needed We are looking for part-time assistance with a variety of office and clerical tasks. Preferred candidates will work quickly and accurately and be able to work from 5pm-9pm on days that they work. Pay is $8.00/hour. For consideration, please call (413) 256-0444 for an application or mail resume to: National Evaluation Systems, Inc., Personnel Department, P.O. Box 226, Amherst, MA 01004-0226. Resumes may also be emailed to: personnel@nesinc.com.

EMPLOYMENT

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8.00 Hr. 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location – NO SALES! Night & wknd; shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

Mystery Shoppers get paid to shop! Up to $150 a day. Training provided Call 1-800-690-1273

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience nees. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

EMPLOYMENT

Looking to be a Legal Assistant? Spring 2006 Internship applications are available at the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients while earning 12 undergraduate credits. Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

FURNITURE

Sealy Mattress Set KING $575.00 QUEEN $465.00 FULL $365.00 TWIN $195 Save 50% or more off store prices. For more details call 215-431-9584

SERVICES

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Did you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK FROM $569 BAHAMAS, CANCUN, ACAPULCO, JAMAICA! FREE PARTIES, FREE DRINKS. Sign up early and save. Organize a small group and you travel FREE. Or become a CAMPUS REP & GET PAID COMMISSION on each trip sold. Call today and get started 1-800-GET-SUN-1.

SPRING BREAK – Early Booking Specials – FREE Meals & Drinks - $50 Deposit – 800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

ACT NOW – SPRING BREAKERS Book early & Save! Free meals/parties by 11/7. Lowest prices. Be a rep & TRAVEL FREE! Get the ultimate hook-ups with STA TRAVEL 413-256-1261.

Collegian Advertising:
8:30am-3:30pm
 545-3500 **

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

No. 5 UMass at Army Saturday. Recap and Preview

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Owens done for the season

By Rob Maaddi
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Terrell Owens can take his touchdowns and dance somewhere else.

The tempestuous star receiver won't return to the Philadelphia Eagles this season – or probably ever – "a result of a large number of situations that accumulated over a long period of time," coach Andy Reid said Monday.

Owens was suspended for Sunday night's 17-10 loss at Washington, and will remain suspended for three more games. After that, the Eagles plan to deactivate him for the rest of the season.

Reid said the outspoken player "had been warned repeatedly about the consequences of his actions."

"We gave Terrell every opportunity to avoid this outcome," he said.

Owens was suspended Saturday, two days after he said the Eagles showed "a lack of class" for not publicly recognizing his 100th career touchdown catch in a game on Oct. 23. In the same interview with ESPN.com on Thursday, Owens said the Eagles would be better off with Green Bay's Brett Favre at quarterback instead of Donovan McNabb.

Owens also was involved in a fight last week with former Eagles defensive end Hugh Douglas, who remains with the team as its "ambassador."

"The league has been notified by the players' union that they will be grieving our right to take that action," Reid said, "therefore there is nothing more that I can say at this point."

Owens' agent, Drew Rosenhaus, refused to comment. Owens' relationship with the Eagles took a drastic turn after he fired longtime agent David Joseph, hired Rosenhaus and demanded a new contract just one season into the seven-year, $48.97 million deal he signed when he came to Philadelphia in March 2004.

Owens is scheduled to earn $3.25 million this season, meaning the four-game suspension would cost him almost $800,000.

The Eagles will have to pay Owens nearly $1 million to stay home the final five games.

Owens will either be traded or released after the season. He is due to receive a $5 million roster bonus in March 2006, so the Eagles will decide his fate before then.

Owens made more than $9 million last season, when he helped lead Philadelphia to the Super Bowl.

Two years ago, the Tampa Bay Buccaneers decided they'd had enough of Keyshawn Johnson and did something similar.

After Johnson criticized coach Jon Gruden, the Super Bowl champion Bucs deactivated the star receiver and sent him home for the final six games with pay.

The Eagles are 4-4 this season. And McNabb, who feuded with Owens throughout the summer and has been a constant target of his criticism, finally took a stand in the matter, saying the team might be "better off" without Owens.

"Obviously it is tough losing a guy of his caliber, his ability, but I think we might be better off," McNabb said after throwing an interception that sealed the loss to Washington.

"I think what we did tonight, we showed that we played well together. I think we also showed that when given the opportunity, guys can make plays for us. We're 4-4. We're not 1-7. I think that's the way to look at it. For the guys in the locker room, we win together and we lose together," he said.

Asked to elaborate on how the team could be better off without its top receiver, McNabb emphasized the remaining players are united with the same goal of winning.

"Nothing against him and his attitude. It's just that when you get out there on the field, it's about playing together," McNabb said. "I think we all played with a lot of attitude and a lot of adrenaline. Guys played well together. It was unfortunate that we didn't win this game, but I think it may be a steppingstone for us to move forward."

Rookie Reggie Brown filled in for Owens against Washington and caught five passes for 94 yards, including a 56-yard TD reception. But the Eagles' offense continued to struggle and couldn't score the tying touchdown with three shots from the Redskins 7 in the final minutes.

The Eagles are 17-5 with Owens, including a 24-21 loss to New England in the Super Bowl. In that game, Owens had nine catches for 122 yards after defying his doctor's advice and playing 6 1/2 weeks after ankle surgery.

The Philadelphia Eagles have shut down Terrell Owens for the season because of the wide receiver's continued off-field distractions.

They're 2-1 without him in games that matter, winning twice in the NFC playoffs.

Owens was set to earn base salaries of $770,000 in 2006, $5.5 million in 2007, $6.5 million in 2008, $7.5 million in 2009, and $8.5 million in 2010.

This was the second time Owens has been suspended during his controversial 10-year career. In 2000, he was suspended one game by San Francisco coach Steve Mariucci following his infamous touchdown celebrations on the Dallas Cowboys' famed star logo at the center of Texas Stadium.

Owens clashed with management this summer and earned a one-week exile from training camp after a heated dispute with Reid that followed a shouting match with offensive coordinator Brad Childress.

Owens forced a trade to the Eagles last year after eight seasons with the 49ers and invigorated the offense with his superior skills. He had 77 catches for 1,200 yards and 14 TDs in 14 games, helping the Eagles to a 13-1 start and nine victories by double-digit margins.

The bad blood between Owens and McNabb began after Owens went down with a severely sprained ankle and broken leg in Week 15 against Dallas. Owens was upset that McNabb and other players said the Eagles could reach the Super Bowl without him, which they did.

Soon after Philadelphia lost to the Patriots, Owens took his first shot at McNabb, suggesting the five-time Pro Bowl quarterback was tired in the fourth quarter of the loss.

McNabb responded harshly and the two didn't speak for a prolonged period in training camp. They eventually reconciled their relationship and performed well together on the field. Owens has 47 catches for 763 yards and six TDs this season.

However, Owens continued to throw verbal jabs at McNabb during his weekly radio show or whenever he granted interviews.

Rose Jr. pleads guilty to distributing steroid

By John Jerome
Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. – Pete Rose Jr., the son of baseball's all-time hits leader, pleaded guilty Monday to charges that he distributed GBL, a drug sometimes sold as a steroid alternative, to his minor league teammates.

The 35-year-old Rose appeared before a federal judge and said nothing but "yes, sir" when asked if he understood the charges and plea.

Rose could be sentenced to 21 to 24 months in federal prison and fined up to $1 million under terms of his deal with prosecutors, Assistant U.S. Attorney Paul O'Brien said. The sentencing hearing is set for Feb. 20.

"This is a tragedy. Any one who knows this young man knows he is a very, very fine young man," Rose's attorney, Jeffrey Brody, said outside the courthouse. "The use of this stuff is common. It's used as a sleep aid by many people in sports. And he got caught in a time warp because it was legal up to 2000. He came forward and immediately confessed and accepted responsibility."

Brody and Rose declined to answer questions from reporters before driving away.

The Drug Enforcement Administration said Rose's arrest was part of a larger investigation into a major GBL trafficking organization. Rose surrendered to authorities shortly before entering his plea.

The indictment said Rose admitted he received GBL from a person in Tennessee while a member of the Chattanooga Lookouts, the Double-A affiliate of the Cincinnati Reds.

He also said he supplied half the players on that team with the drug. Rose said his teammates would take GBL to "wind down" after games, DEA spokesman Rusty Payne said.

Lookouts assistant general manager John Maedel said Rose was on the Chattanooga roster in 1997, 2001 and 2002, and the team is aware of the story.

"We don't know anything about it and can't comment," he said.

Reds spokesman Rob Butcher added: "We do not comment on active law enforcement investigations."

According to evidence presented to Judge Robert Echols, Rose began purchasing GBL in July 2001, receiving about five cases from July 2001 to May 2002. Rose told investigators he was using it as a sleep aid because he had been having trouble with some knee injuries. Rose also admitted to selling the drug.

GBL, or gamma butyrolactone, is sold under the counter at retailers and gyms with claims to build muscle, improve physical performance, enhance sex, reduce stress and induce sleep. When taken orally, GBL is converted to the "date-rape" drug GHB, or gamma hydroxybutyrate.

Rose Jr. has not been involved with the Reds' organization since playing nine games in the minors in 2002. He played most of his career in the minors but made it to the majors for 11 games with the Reds in 1997. Last season he played for the Long Island Ducks of the independent Atlantic League.

Pete Rose Sr. holds the major league record of 4,256 hits. He agreed to a lifetime ban from baseball in 1989 following an investigation that he bet on games; after 14 years of denying it, he admitted in his autobiography that he bet on Reds games while managing them in the late 1980s.

Rose Sr. served a five-month sentence in federal prison in 1990 and 1991 for filing false tax returns by not declaring income he received from signing autographs, memorabilia sales and gambling.

The GBL investigation began in 1999 and has included one of the largest seizures of GBL in U.S. history.

DEA agents seized about 280 gallons of GBL from a storage unit in Murfreesboro in January 2004. Further investigation revealed that Murfreesboro resident Bruce Michael Wayne was a nationwide distributor of the drug.

The DEA learned Wayne was supplying Rose Jr. with the drug and that Rose was distributing it to teammates, Payne said.

Wayne was arrested by DEA agents in January 2004 and pleaded guilty to conspiracy to distribute GBL and money laundering charges. But Wayne failed to appear for sentencing and is a fugitive.

Duke back at top of rankings

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press

Duke is back at No. 1 in The Associated Press' preseason college basketball poll while defending champion North Carolina failed to even make the Top 25.

Kansas, the preseason No. 1 last year and another regular in the poll, also was not among those teams ranked Monday.

The Blue Devils were a runaway choice for No. 1, the sixth time they have started the season atop the rankings.

North Carolina becomes the first defending national champion not to be in the preseason poll the next season since Kansas in 1988-89. The Tar Heels lost their top seven scorers from last season, three to graduation and four underclassmen as NBA lottery draft picks.

Bolstered by the return of All-America guard J.J. Redick and all-conference center Shelden Williams from a team that went 27-6 and reached the third round of the NCAA tournament, Duke received 61 first-place ballots and 1,785 points from the 72-member national media panel.

Texas, which has four double-figure scorers back from a 20-11 that was beaten by Nevada in the NCAA's opening round, was second with six first-place votes and 1,652 points. It matches the highest ranking in school history.

Duke and Texas meet Dec. 10 in East Rutherford, N.J.

Kansas had been in the preseason poll every year since 1991-92, being out of the top 10 only three times. North Carolina was in all but one of the last 20 preseason polls, only three of the rankings out of the top 10.

The Blue Devils had a seven-year run of at least one week at No. 1 snapped last season, reaching as high as second.

"I do expect us to be the best team in America," Redick said. "I expect that every year. That is just the confidence and mentality that we have to have."

Connecticut, which will play without suspended point guard Marcus Williams until Jan. 3, was third followed by Michigan State, which had four first-place votes, and Villanova, which was No. 1 on one ballot.

All-America guard J.J. Redick and the Duke Blue Devils were voted No. 1 in The Associated Press' preseason poll.

Oklahoma was sixth and Louisville, which moved from Conference USA to the Big East, was seventh. Gonzaga, Kentucky and Arizona rounded out the top 10.

Boston College, which left the Big East for the Atlantic Coast Conference, was 11th followed by Memphis, Stanford, West Virginia, Alabama, Syracuse, Illinois, Wake Forest, UCLA and Iowa.

The last five ranked teams were George Washington, Nevada, Indiana, Maryland and Iowa State.

The preseason poll started with the 1961-62 season. UCLA has the most No. 1 rankings with eight, followed by Duke's six and North Carolina's five.

The Blue Devils have been ranked for 167 consecutive polls, dating to the preseason poll of 1996-97 season. Kansas had the second-longest streak but the Jayhawks are out of the rankings for the first time since the preseason poll of 2000-01, a span of 93 polls.

Kentucky now has the second-longest active streak at 80, dating to Feb. 12, 2001.

The record streak for consecutive polls is 221 by UCLA from the preseason poll of 1966-67 through Jan. 8, 1980.

Texas was ranked No. 2 for one week in December 2002.

"We don't talk about it," coach Rick Barnes said of the lofty ranking. "I think it's a compliment to our program and these players. But we realize it's preseason."

The Big East leads the conferences with five ranked teams – Connecticut, Villanova, Louisville, West Virginia and Syracuse – the first three in the top seven.

Street and Howard win awards

By Mike Fitzpatrick
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Huston Street became the second consecutive AL Rookie of the Year from the Oakland Athletics, and Philadelphia Phillies first baseman Ryan Howard won the NL award Monday.

Street, who took over as Oakland's closer in May, got 15 of 28 first-place votes in balloting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America and finished with 97 points. New York Yankees second baseman Robinson Cano came in second with 57 points, followed by Tampa Bay designated hitter Jonny Gomes with 39.

A's shortstop Bobby Crosby was the 2004 winner.

Howard replaced injured star Jim Thome and led all rookies with 22 home runs. He received 19 of 32 first-place votes and 109 points to beat out Houston Astros outfielder Willy Taveras, who got 78 points. Atlanta Braves right fielder Jeff Francouer was third with 60.

Street, the son of former Texas quarterback James Street, who led the Longhorns to a national title in 1969, became Oakland's closer when Octavio Dotel went down with an injury. The 22-year-old righty went 5-1 with 23 saves and a 1.72 ERA – second among AL closers to New York's Mariano Rivera.

Oakland Athletics closer Huston Street was named the American League Rookie of the Year yesterday. Street's 1.72 ERA was second among AL closers.

Street had 72 strikeouts in 78 1-3 innings, and opposing hitters batted only .194 against him.

Howard had been a highly touted slugger in the minors for years, but his path to the majors appeared blocked until back and elbow injuries sidelined Thome.

Howard took advantage of his opportunity to play regularly, batting .288 with 63 RBIs in 88 games. He had 11 homers and 27 RBIs in September and October, helping Philadelphia come within one game of a wild-card berth.

He is the fourth Phillies player to win the award, joining Scott Rolen, Dick Allen and Jack Sanford.

Street is the fifth Oakland player honored, joining Crosby, Ben Grieve, Walt Weiss, Mark McGwire and Jose Canseco.

What's THE SCORE?

New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Wednesday, November 9, 2005 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXIV Issue 44

Panel starts out 'Week on War'

By Christina Baron
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts-based group Students Against the War kicked off its "Week on War" yesterday by hosting an on-campus panel discussion about the war in Iraq.

The panel was called, "The War at UMass: the Effects of War At Home," and was held in the Herter auditorium.

A variety of university staff and students made up the panel, which included UMass sociology Professor Dan Clawson; Dale Melcher, a UMass Labor Extension Coordinator; Justin Jackson, a UMass History graduate student; Bill Newman, an ACLU lawyer; and Jon Zagami, a UMass student veteran.

"The war affects students because it diverts money from UMass and into the war; UMass students are serving in the war; and the tightening of civil liberties around the war affects our freedom of speech on campus," said Stephanie Luce, a member of the Anti-War Coalition who helped organize the event in a recent email.

"There are many soldiers among us," said Zagami, who served in Kuwait and then Iraq from Feb. 2003 until April 2004. "You come across them everyday and don't even know it," he said.

Zagami talked about the difficultes of returning to civilian life and how "coming to school was another speed bump" that he had to overcome.

The hardest thing, according to Zagami, is not knowing where he will be next semester, since his unit has been told to be prepared to return to war.

To the military, says Zagami, "education doesn't matter... They say, 'Pack your stuff. Get home. Get ready. You're going.'"

Zagami said that he does not support the war

See PANEL on page 2

Protesters camp out to protest impending bill

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

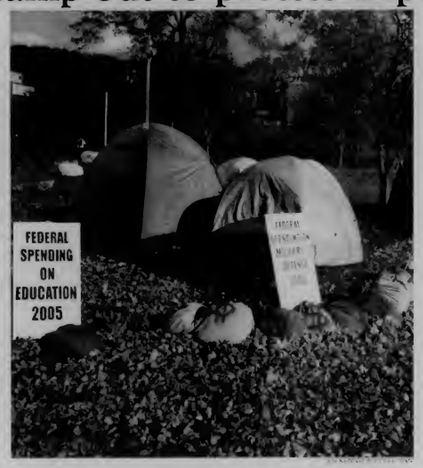
With a landmark bill that would dramatically affect the majority of college students across the country just days away from a deciding vote in the United States House of Representatives, concerned area college students have camped out on the University of Massachusetts campus in protest of the already enormous tuition costs.

Aimed at reining in federal spending, saving some $54 billion, the Budget Reconciliation bill would cut food stamp funding, allow drilling for oil in Alaska, increase the cost of student loans and lacks a $1 billion program for dairy farmers.

The Senate plan cuts spending, but raises fees and premiums to save the government roughly $72 billion from 2006 through 2010.

However, roughly $37 billion in new grants for students, higher Medicare payments to doctors, health care and aid to students affected by Hurricane Katrina, and a new program to provide Medicaid to AIDS victims bring net savings in the bill to roughly $35 billion.

The largest single piece of the plan would reduce federal subsidies for student loans.



The bill would raise student loan interest rates while capping yields for the lenders. Interest payments beyond those minimum lender yields would be returned to the federal government.

The House Budget Committee bill follows the Senate's proposal, but is proposing lower interest rates for students.

If passed by Congress, the bill would cut nearly $9 billion from student loan programs and would be the largest student aid cut in history.

The proposal also includes $844 million in food stamp cuts for the poor while tightening some eligibility requirements and cutting programs related to child support and child welfare.

In addition, provisions of the bill would allow drilling in part of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. But the bill's fate is in doubt because two dozen House Republicans have objected to the drilling.

Area college students and other residents of Pioneer Valley camp out on the Student Union lawn to demonstrate the declining accessibility of public and higher education.

Drilling in Alaska, in theory, would allow the government to add $1 billion in spending to the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program, or LIHEAP, which provides money to low income families and seniors struggling to pay heating bills. The program is currently budgeted for $2.1 billion, and the House bill would add another $1 billion to that amount.

The proposed cuts would have a powerful effect on the majority of UMass students.

According to a Senate Task Force on public education in March 2005, Massachusetts currently ranks 47th in the nation compared to other states for per capita spending on higher education. The cost of attendance for in-state students has increased 50 percent in the past five years, from $10,107 in 1999 to $15,197 in 2004-05.

The report also states that Massachusetts is the only state that is spending less on public higher education than it was spending ten years ago. Massachusetts was also home to the largest decrease in state funding for public education: a 32.6 percent reduction, adjusted for inflation, between 2001 and 2004.

Mike Stuppia, UMass graduate student, has his own share of concerns related to the proposed bill.

"I'm struggling to afford to go to college already," said Stuppia. "If my grants get cut, it's unlikely I'll be able to [continue] attending here."

"If this bill passes, there is no way I'll be able to afford college and pay for my car," said Justin Sarro, a senior English major.

The creators of the Web site freehighered.org have concocted an alternative plan to help ease the woes of the American deficit. According to the Web site, the federal government could fund tuition and fees at all public colleges and universities by rolling back President Bush's proposed estate tax repeal. Tuition and fees at two-and four-year public institutions in 2001 totaled approximately $32 billion; if the federal government eliminated the tax cut for the top one percent of earner in America, it would save about $82.4 billion a year.

The Web site also claims that corporate tax loopholes passed by Congress in 2002 lost $170 billion in 2003-04, more than enough to fund public education.

The Senate passed its version of the budget bill on Nov. 3. The House now must approve the budget before President Bush can sign it into law.

Area college students and other residents of Pioneer Valley camped out on the Student Union lawn to demonstrate the declining accessibility of public and higher education, a decline that would only increase with the approval of the Budget Reconciliation.

One of the displays outside the tents illustrated the wide gap between federal spending on education and spending on military and defense.

Daniel Bender, a member of Free Higher

See BUDGET on page 2

Anti-racist gives speech about diversity issues

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

Tim Wise, renowned anti-racist activist, spoke in the Campus Center auditorium of the University Massachusetts last night, examining racism within American business and in higher education.

Wise was brought to the university by the Office of ALANA (African, Latin, Asian/Pacific Islander, Native American) Affairs, an agency that deals with minority issues on campus.

"Tim Wise brings a perspective that is rarely seen on this predominantly white campus," said Nelson Acosta, the director of the Office of ALANA affairs. "A white person who recognizes the privilege conferred on him by his skin, and who speaks out against it."

Wise's lecture, titled "Beyond 'Diversity': Challenging Racism in an Age of Backlash," hit upon numerous aspects of racism within the American public, ranging from affirmative action to the treatment of the predominantly black hurricane victims.

Wise examined the lawsuit of a University of Michigan student that sued the school because her application was rejected in favor of 80 minority students who had lower grades and test scores.

"What that girl never mentioned was there were 1,100 white students that held lower grades and test scores that were also passed over her," said Wise. "Why did she single out 80 students when there were 1,100 white students in the same situation?"

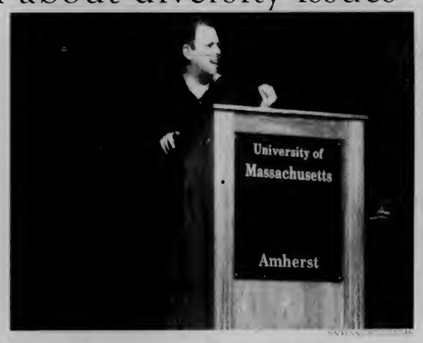
Wise proclaimed that administrations in higher education and daily institutions need to go beyond their "misuse of diversity" as it originally conceived.

"Much of the reason institutions are labeled 'Diversity Lacking' is because these institutions are indeed lacking," said Wise. "In fact the entire paradigm under which those conversations under which those conversations are held is lacking."

"You cannot fight injustice without raising your voice," said Wise. "But if you raise your voice, you (minorities) become the problem. This overarching cultural lore is what's stifling the ability of institutions to actually challenge injustice."

He continued his lecture by examining the similar problems that schools run into when becoming "more diverse".

"There are indeed schools that don't mind admitting some 'people of color', but they still don't want too many. They want the 'right kind of color'," said Wise. "They want you have enough money to shop at the right retail store. But if you don't have enough money to shop at the right stores, and if you don't dress the way we want you to dress and talk the way we want you to talk, then that's not the person of color that we want."



Wise also explained that companies trying to become more diverse consequently put the entire "spotlight" on minorities, increasing the stigma of racial differences of, as Wise labeled them, "the others".

Wise also examined how a nation of increasing diversity can have regions that are still becoming less diverse.

"86 percent of whites live in suburban areas with almost no people of color around them," said Wise. "That doesn't just happen. Who lives where and who doesn't, who works where and who doesn't, who goes to what school and who doesn't reflects that institutional minorities policies and practices of the community or institution."

Wise even criticized UMass' admissions policy.

"This school used to have a lot more black and brown faces in it," said Wise. "Decisions were made to deliberately alter the practices policies procedure restricting the students of color by at least 50 percent."

Tim Wise was brought to the Student Union by the Office of ALANA Affairs last night to make a speech about concerns and issues of diversity on college campuses.

Saddam's defense shot and killed

By Bassem Mroue
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Gunmen in a speeding car killed a defense lawyer in the Saddam Hussein trial and wounded another Tuesday, raising doubts about whether the prosecution of the ousted leader can proceed amid the insurgency and domestic turmoil.

The assassination of Adel al-Zubeidi, who was representing former Vice President Taha Yassin Ramadan, in a predominantly Sunni Arab neighborhood in Baghdad was the second attack targeting the defense team since the trial began less than a month ago.

Laith Kubba, a spokesman for Prime Minister Ibrahim al-Jaafari, condemned the attack and said Saddam's followers could be behind the killings to sabotage the case.

Saddam's main lawyer, Khalil al-Dulaimi, blamed the Shiite-dominated government for the attack, telling Al-Jazeera TV the shooting was carried out by "an armed group using government vehicles."

"The aim of these organized attacks is to scare Arab and foreign lawyers," al-Dulaimi said. "We call upon the international community, especially the secretary-general of the United Nations, to send an investigative committee because the situation is unbearable."

Al-Dulaimi urged the trial be moved to a neutral country and he said defense lawyers do not recognize the session's next date, Nov. 28.

Al-Dulaimi's call was echoed by Richard Goldstone, the first prosecutor at the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, who suggested the trial be moved to another Arab country "where there is security."

"I don't understand how you can have a fair trial in this atmosphere of insecurity, with bombs going off," Goldstone told The Associated Press by telephone.

On Oct. 20, Saadoun al-Janabi, the lawyer for co-defendant Awad al-Bandar, was abducted from his office by 10 masked gunmen, a day after the trial's first session. Al-Janabi's body was found nearby hours later, shot twice in the head.

Kubba said the defense lawyers had been asked to move into the heavily guarded Green Zone area in Baghdad for their own protection even before al-Janabi's killing and again afterward, but they refused.

"We see that those who benefit are the people who want to block the work of the court and don't want it to convene" on schedule, Kubba said. "We know that Saddam and his followers are ready to do anything when it comes in their interest and to block the work of the court."

He promised the government "will do all it can to protect the people."

See SADDAM on page 2

France declares state of emergency; riots continue

By John Leicester
Associated Press

PARIS — The French government declared a state of emergency Tuesday after nearly two weeks of rioting, and the prime minister said the nation faced a "moment of truth."

The extraordinary security measures, to begin Wednesday and valid for 12 days, clear the way for curfews to try to halt the country's worst civil unrest since the student uprisings of 1968.

Prime Minister Dominique de Villepin, tacitly acknowledging that France has failed to live up to its egalitarian ideals, reached out to the heavily immigrant suburbs where the rioting began. He said France must make a priority of working against the discrimination that feeds the frustration of youths made to feel that they do not belong in France.

"The effectiveness of our integration model is in question," the prime minister told parliament. He called the riots "a warning" and "an appeal."

Despite his conciliatory tone, Villepin said riot police faced "determined individuals, structured gangs, organized criminality," and that restoring order "will take time." Rioters have been using mobile phone text messages and the Internet to organize arson attacks, said police, who arrested two teenage bloggers accused of inciting other youths to riot.

"We must be lucid: The Republic is at a moment of truth," Villepin said.

Lawmakers at the impassioned parliamentary debate also spoke frankly about France's failings. But criticism of the government extended well beyond the country's borders.

Images of French teenagers from north and west African immigrant families pelting riot police with stones and gasoline bombs – reminiscent of Palestinian youths attacking Israeli patrols – have struck chords in the Muslim world.

The Egyptian daily Al-Massaie referred to the riots as "the intefadeh of the poor." Arabic satellite networks have given lead coverage to the mayhem, with regular live reports. Newspapers have followed the story on inside pages, calling it a "nightmare" and a "war of the suburbs."

Arson attacks, rioting and other unrest have spread from the suburbs to hundreds of cities and towns, though acts of violence were down somewhat Monday night from

Hundreds of cars, which were all burnt during the riots in Paris suburbs, were gathered and stacked in Grigny, near Paris, yesterday.

See FRANCE on page 3

ARTS & LIVING

HALLOWEEN AT VEGOOSE

The Vegoose Music Festival in Las Vegas had something for all kinds of music lovers.

PAGE 6

EDITORIAL/OPINION

THE BATTLE RAGES ON

With all the animosity between the students and Parking Services, where's the administration?

PAGE 4

WEATHER

TODAY Partly Cloudy, H48°, L41°
TONIGHT Rain, H41°, L16°
TOMORROW Partly Cloudy, H28°, L9°

SPORTS

COEN HONORED

Quarterback Liam Coen was recently given the Golden Helmet Award.

PAGE 10

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael A. Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Cameron J. Woods
BUSINESS MANAGER Hirak Shah
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherel Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerrs O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egavian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Matthew O'Rourke
COMICS EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Allison Edles
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
PHOTO EDITOR Kate Sachsenmaier
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
HUMAN RESOURCE Phil Smollet
ASSISTANT OPERATION Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Nathan Chomsky
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mackenzie Isaler
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Jones
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Dales
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Belliveau
ASSISTANT PHOTO Elizabeth Caristi
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eric Athas
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Kristen LaCasse

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOR SALE IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALGIE. THE 1904 AND THE COLLEGE SIDEAR IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN IS NOT AFFILIATED WITH THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS. SPACE IS SOLD SEPARATELY FROM THE NEWSROOM. FOR MORE INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Michael A. Busack
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Jen Kennedy
COPY EDITOR
Dan O'Brien
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Matthew Fox, Allie Mamone

Think you're a good writer?

Prove it.
Write for News.
Contact News at www.news@dailycollegian.com

Saddam Hussein's defense lawyers shot; one killed

SADDAM from page 1

White House press secretary Scott McClellan said it was important for the trial to be conducted in a safe environment.

"That's an important priority, to make sure that you have the security environment in place for those trials to proceed and for witnesses to be able to participate in the trial as well in a secure way," McClellan said. "We've got to work to make sure that the security is in place for those trials to proceed in a fair and impartial and safe way."

Saddam and seven others have been charged with the 1982 killings of Shiite villagers in Dujail, a town north of Baghdad, following an assassination attempt. The trial was suspended until later this month to allow the defense to prepare its case.

Police Lt. Khalid Hassan said the two lawyers were driving through the Adil neighborhood Tuesday when three masked gunmen in an Opel pulled alongside and sprayed the car with automatic weapons fire.

Al-Zubeidi, who also represented former Baath Party official Abdullah Kazim Ruwayyid, was killed. Thamir al-Khuzaie, who represents Saddam's half brother, co-defendant Barazan Ibrahim, was wounded.

Chief prosecutor Jaafar al-Mousawi expressed regret for the attack against "our colleagues in the judiciary" and said the court would do everything possible "to arrange security for the lawyers."

"God willing, this incident will not affect the coming session," he said.

Sarah Leah Whitson, Middle East director of Human Rights Watch, said it shows that the Iraqi government needs "to reassess whether the conditions guaranteeing rights of every defendant exist."

"It is clear that whatever the government is doing is not working and is not adequate," she said. "They have to go back and figure out how to create conditions necessary for a fair trial, above all the safety of the defense team."

Elsewhere, the U.S. military said Marines killed five insurgents trying to plant explosives and captured 10 others Monday in the western city of Ramadi as American forces stepped up their campaign against deadly roadside bombs. Such bombs killed at least seven Iraqi security troops Tuesday.

Four Americans died Monday in a suicide car bombing in southwestern Baghdad, the military said. A civilian translator also was killed.

The deaths of the Americans brought to 2,054 the number of U.S. military personnel who have died since the war started in 2003, according to an AP count.

Following al-Janabi's death, members of the defense team said they had suspended further dealings with the special court until their safety is guaranteed.

KRT

Former Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, pictured above, is currently on trial. However, his defense lawyers were recently shot and one was killed.

Budget bill threatens to cut student aid

BUDGET from page 1

Education, claimed that $0.04 of every tax dollar goes towards education while $0.39 goes to military and defense spending.

"Education is given $1.00 to every $9.75 that is given to military spending," said Bender, senior Political Science major at UMass.

"We are trying to address the crisis of higher education. Clearly the crisis is that there is unequal access to the public education."

The UMass Student Government Association passed a resolution voicing its opposition to the pending Budget Reconciliation Bill, calling for UMass President Jack Wilson, Chancellor John V. Lombardi, and the rest of UMass administrative body to lend their support towards the opposition of the bill.

"Passing this resolution was very important to us to do as a representative body," said SGA President Pavel Payano. "The passage of the Budget Reconciliation Bill threatens the ability of many students to afford college."

"The representative student body made a pretty strong statement about its feelings towards college affordability," said Gabriel Munitz-Alessio, secretary of University Policy in the SGA. "Cuts in student aid threaten the diversity of our campus. People know this, and they have showed that they are willing to speak out against it."

"The loss of such aid, and consequently the ability to go to college, is not only a tragedy for those who have student loans, but has a negative effect on the entire university community," said Payano.

According to the "Dow Jones Newswires," the White House has already threatened to veto the Senate bill, complaining of proposed cuts to price supports for insurance companies offering preferred provider plans (PPO) to Medicare beneficiaries.

Under the Senate bill, proposed payment cuts to Medicare PPO plans would save the government $12 billion over the next five years. The White House argues that the higher PPO payments are needed to entice insurers to enter the Medicare market.

Panel of speakers discuss effects of war on students or what he was sent to do, but he does support the U.S. troops that are at war now. The thing that disgusts him most, he said, is the way that he and fellow veterans have been treated since they returned.

PANEL from page 1

Newman focused on the affect the war has had on academic and other general freedoms. He said he believes that "our First Amendment rights have been clothed by our current situation." He pointed to the Patriot Act as the reason why civil liberties are being traded for enhanced security.

"We are at risk of a loss of freedom, which is unprecedented," Newman said. "The ambiguous, unintelligible language [of the Patriot Act] gives enforcers[wide discretion ...and takes authority from the courts and gives it to the executive branch."

Clawson's presentation focused on the financial implications of the Iraq War for UMass. Overall, the government has spent $250 billion on the war and Massachusetts has contributed $7.1 billion to that sum, he said.

During this time the UMass budget was cut by 25 percent. Even though some of the cuts have been revoked, says Clawson, the budget is still $7 million less than it was in 2001 and the tuition and fees have been raised.

According to Clawson, the $2.4 billion that Massachusetts has spent on the war each year is equivalent to 15 years of free tuition and fees for all university students. However, he said that this is not the main reason why we should end the war. "The main reason is because it is immoral, costing peoples' lives, and polarizing the Iraqi people," Clawson said. "This war does not have to go on any longer than we want it."

Melcher also touched on the financial implications, noting the "link between the lack of money available to make the campus function and the obscene amount of money going to the Iraq War." There have been many staff cuts and depletion of services all because of a "misdirection of resources," she said.

Zagami said that he had also seen the consequences of the war expenses, since the gap was growing between what his GI Bill covered and the UMass tuition bill.

Jackson, who opened the discussion, said that the university does have a role in the "empire" of our government because of the military research conducted on campus. This year, UMass has 51 research grants totaling $9.9 million dollars in fields such as biology, engineering, exercise science, finance and operations management, and math.

Jackson said that the US is acting as an "empire" by taking a lot from the world that doesn't belong to it. He said that he believes that the war in Iraq is a crime and, because of the research grants on campus, there are war crimes on this campus.

The "Week on War" is a weeklong event sponsored and organized by the Anti-War Coalition, the Students Against the War, and other groups on campus with the hope to increase awareness and get students talking.

"I would hope that [students] demand that their legislators redirect money spent on the war and the defense budget toward real needs at home, like lower tuition and fees at UMass; reconstruction from Hurricane Katrina; improved disaster preparedness; and universal health care," Luce said.

Put your life in drive.

Register at www.fordcollegehq.com for a chance to win a new 2006 Ford Fusion, and other cool prizes instantly.

05 college student purchase program
www.fordcollegehq.com

THE COLLEGIAN IS HIRING FOR NEW POSITIONS IN THE NEWSROOM!

COME DOWN TODAY AND APPLY!

~ OR ~

CALL 545-3500

Blogs are becoming useful

By Jessamyn Ebra
The Stanford Daily (Stanford)

STANFORD, Calif. — Since the late 1990s, online journaling — also called "blogging" or "web logging" — has redefined the way people keep journals and record ideas.

As time passes, blogging has proven itself as a unique and innovative mode of communication. With its format of posts organized from most to least recent, blogs offer readers the ability to comment on and even discuss a variety of subjects, from everyday frustrations to breaking news scandals.

But blogging has been denounced by some as merely another way to spread gossip and melodrama among teens.

"I think online journals defeat the purpose of physically speaking to someone in a society where discussion is already a dying art," says freshman Zach Nevin.

Technorati, a Web site that tracks thousands of blogs and links, begs to differ.

"Blogs are a fluid, dynamic medium, more akin to a 'conversation' than to a library, ... which is how the Web has often been described in the past," according to Technorati's Web site, www.technorati.com.

For many, blogging is more than a simple online diary. Rather, it represents a revolutionary method of information sharing.

"A new Web log is created every 7.4 seconds," according to Technorati's site. "Bloggers — people who write Web logs — update their Web logs regularly. There are about 275,000 posts daily."

People blog for a plethora of reasons.

"Over the summer, my sister was in India while I was in New Haven, Conn.," says Stanford University freshman Emily Grewal. "It was too expensive to call every day, but we are really close and wanted to stay in touch, so we started a blog. It is a great way to give updates on the important events in your life."

And freshman Tracy Chou says she blogs to procrastinate, to practice Chinese on her Chinese Xanga and to improve her writing skills.

Some also say they believe a blog can become an educational forum.

"While blogging is not well-respected now, I think it has the potential to grow into a robust avenue for [academic] information exchange," says freshman Adam Cole.

Statistics show depression prevalent among students

By Ashleigh Wheeler, Anna Jesson and Brodie Downs
Oklahoma Daily U. (U. Oklahoma)

NORMAN, Okla. — Sara Brooks has a dilemma on her hands. In the midst of her senior year, the photography student has to choose between finding a job or applying to graduate school.

Brooks said that since being advised for her final semester of college a month ago, she has become a lot more concerned about her future.

"I ask myself, 'Where do I go in life? Should I stay at home in Oklahoma or should I take some time and travel?'" Brooks said.

She said she's so busy between school and work that she really tries not to worry about it.

"I work 20 hours a week as an archivist at The Brett Weston Archives in Oklahoma City and five to 10 hours a week archiving for the Emilio Amero project at the OU school of art," Brooks said. "And I'm a full-time student."

Worries that college-age students, like Brooks, have about their future regarding finances, employment and relationships have been termed a "quarter -life crisis" by Alexandra Robbins, New York Times bestselling author. Robbins writes that the "quarter-life crisis" is a growing social problem among this age group.

John Waldeck, psychologist and Rappahannock Rapidan Community Services board member in Culpeper, Va., said he believes that the "quarter-life crisis" can be detrimental to an individual's mental and physical health.

"It's during these years that someone will begin to ask themselves questions like, 'What will I be doing one year from now? Will I be able to provide for my family? Is this really what I want to be doing the rest of my life?'" Waldeck said.

The average number of jobs a person has from ages 18 to 32 is up to 8.6, according to quarterlifecrisis.biz, a statistic that illustrates the employment insecurities this age group has.

Waldeck said most of all, the thought of finally being out on your own financially can be troublesome, given that 65 percent of 2005 college seniors surveyed said they planned on living with their parents after graduation, according to quarterlifecrisis.biz. This number has increased 50 percent since the 1970s.

"Some college students think that they're already out on their own; they live in their own house hours from their parents," Waldeck said. "But then all of the sudden, before graduation, reality sets in and they begin to worry about really making it on their own."

Waldeck said it's the type of stress that an individual can experience during the "quarter-life crisis" that can cause mental health issues.

"When you experience stress at a transitional age like your early twenties, it can hit a little harder than experiencing stress at a non-transitional age," he said. "We're all different genetically and depression, anxiety and schizophrenia are mental illnesses that are already in us. It just takes some kind of trigger to make us react."

He said a trigger, in some cases, is stress.

Waldeck referred to the "transitional age" as a time when students are growing up or emotional strain in life is considered normal or expected.

"When someone is really stressed and is on the fence, simply being in a transitional part of life can push them over. And by being pushed over, I mean they can fall into a case of depression," he said.

In 1996, Prevention magazine printed a survey showing that almost 75 percent of the population surveyed felt "really stressed" at least one day out of the week. Two-thirds of those said they felt similarly more than twice a week. But the same survey in 1983 showed that 55 percent felt stress once a week.

Natalie Shafir, political science junior, said thinking about her future is "nerve-wracking and overwhelming."

"When I think about school I stress out because teachers don't seem to take into account how many other classes I'm taking," Shafir said. "I'm striving to get nothing less than an 'A,' because I want to do my best, and if I don't make the 'A' I feel really let down and depressed."

Shafir said she worries about what she needs to do now to be successful in the future.

"I ask myself questions like, 'Will my degree be sufficient to meet the requirements (of my employer)? Will I be able to like what I am doing when I get a job? What if what I really want to do doesn't have anything to do with my major?'" she said.

Shafir said if her degree doesn't get her a job that she really wants, she'll apply to law school.

Heidi Holeman, graduate supervisor for OU's Psychology Counseling Clinic, said there are two common scenarios for stressed individuals who develop a mental illness.

"Some students will go through school and graduate, get their degree and expect life to come easy," she said. "When they finally realize that paying for insurance is expensive and finding a job and housing is difficult, they can hit a wall. Sometimes that wall will lead to depression and in an extreme case, schizophrenia."

KRT

Ann Corlaris, 22, has withdrawn from the University of Michigan until she can get her depression under control. Statistics show that many other college students are also dealing with depression.

"Some students may be incredibly stressed during school. They'll work extremely hard and by pushing themselves so hard to be perfect, can experience anxiety problems," she said.

Holeman said neither of those cases are certain, but if someone is genetically prone to become depressed or develop anxiety problems, stress is a possible trigger.

Vince Falsarella, OU alumnus and McNeil Pharmaceuticals representative, said his senior year caused him stress, but not as much as the level of stress he experienced after graduation.

"It's kind of understood that after high school you go to college, and after college you find a job, but I have friends that looked for a job for months after graduating," Falsarella said.

Similar to most colleges and universities, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has a guide to manage stress on their Center for Healthy Student Behaviors Web site. The Web site says stress is good to an extent, but can be a problem.

"For instance, your body recognizing and reacting to an oncoming car helps you stay alive. However, it is when we remain in this heightened adaptive state that our bodies can experience adverse physical, mental, and emotional effects. Thus, it is essential to realize when your body is telling you that your life is too stressful," according to the site.

Waldeck said college students can also fall into depression when they stop taking anti-depressants — a common trend for freshmen upon arrival to college.

"Occasionally, students will leave home and feel that the reason they were depressed left them when they left home," Waldeck said. "But when they head off to school, they leave their problems and think that they don't need their medication or counseling."

Jay Kinnard, pharmacist, said when he fills a prescription for an anti-depressant, he counsels his customers about taking the medication.

"I tell (my customers) how important it is to stay on the medication and to make sure they communicate with their physician," Kinnard said. He said it's important that they know the chemical imbalance is nothing to be ashamed of.

Jennifer Bosson, assistant psychology professor, said taking medication helps in dealing with a chemical imbalance, but counseling plays an equal role. Lauren Rhodes, OU alumna, said she would exercise with her dog and work on art projects when she began to feel pessimistic about her future.

Although Rhodes said she didn't become clinically depressed, she said the process of finding employment after graduation was disheartening.

French rioting continues

FRANCE from page 1

the previous evening.

In the first reports of violence Tuesday night, a clash broke out between youths who threw gasoline bombs and police who retaliated with tear gas, LCI television said.

The 50-year-old state-of-emergency law that President Jacques Chirac invoked was originally drawn up to quell unrest in Algeria during its war of independence from France and was last used in December 1984 by the Socialist government of President Francois Mitterrand against rioting in the French Pacific Ocean territory of New Caledonia.

That Chirac took such steps was a measure both of the gravity of the crisis and of his sorely tested government's determination to restore control.

"France is wounded. It does not recognize itself in these devastated streets and neighborhoods, in this outburst of hatred and of violence that vandalizes and kills," Villepin said. "The return to order is the absolute priority."

Under the emergency laws, police — with 8,000 officers deployed and 1,500 reservists called up as reinforcements — could be empowered in areas where curfews are imposed to put troublemakers under house arrest, ban or limit the movement of people and vehicles, confiscate weapons and close public spaces where gangs gather, Villepin said.

The Interior Ministry said local officials were deciding whether curfew measures were needed in their areas. The Justice Ministry said curfew violators could face up to two months imprisonment and a $4,400 fine. Minors face one month imprisonment.

The northern French city of Amiens and the central city of Orleans said they planned curfews for minors under age 16, who must be accompanied by adults at night. Amiens also planned to forbid the sale of gasoline in cans to minors.

The widespread violence has already led France to begin fast-track trials, with 106 adults and 33 minors so far sentenced to prison or detention centers.

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
THIS SATURDAY!
"Dr. Dirty" Returns!
Back by Popular Demand!
JOHN VALBY
NOV. 25TH
Tickets On Sale!
Star of the HBO special "Robert Schimmel: Unprotected"
ROBERT SCHIMMEL
DEC. 3RD
CHARLIE MURPHY & FRIENDS TOUR
Tickets On Sale!

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
• a grade dispute?
• teacher, roomate or lab concerns?
• billing problems?
• harassment?
• ...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
telephone: 413-545-0867
fax: 413-545-9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

COMIC BOOKS
MAIN VEIN COMICS
COLLECTIBLES & CREEPY STUFF
74 FEDERAL ST, GREENFIELD, MA
(413) 773-7775
MAINVEINCOMICS@AOL.COM
NEW & BACK ISSUES, TRADES, TOYS, & MORE
THROUGH THE MAIL SUBSCRIPTIONS AVAILABLE FOR COLLEGE STUDENTS!

Get Frosted!
FROST YOUR OWN CUPCAKES
Wednesday, Nov. 9, 2005
From 5 to 8 pm in All DC's
One of our most popular specials!
DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst
Choose from:
CUPCAKES
chocolate, white, vegan white
FROSTINGS
vanilla, fudge, peanut butter, German chocolate
TOPPINGS
rainbow jimmies, chopped cherries, mini chocolate chips, cinnamon hearts, Oreo topping, mini marshmallows

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 2005

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Parking Services vs. students Where's the administration?

The students are fed up, and rightly so. The University of Massachusetts Parking Services has fallen under heavy fire this past week with student complaints voiced on the front page of the Daily Collegian. What has made the situation worse is the lack of response to student questions and concerns on behalf of Parking Services. Parking Services Manager Michael Brennan did his best to provide explanations as to why the relationship between students and the department are so shaky, but it wasn't enough. In the midst of all the complaints and intracampus quarreling, where is the administration?

This is a state funded university and with all the money going into it, we still have difficulties in making parking easy and accessible for full-time students. As it feels right now, Parking Services has a hold over the students which it chooses to either tighten or loosen based on how the wind blows that day. The horror stories that appeared in the Collegian tell of the unfairness and injustice done to students when very few other options were presented to them in terms of parking. Having a car on campus can be very convenient, but not when you have to worry about having your car towed or ticketed.

The yellow lots on campus are deplorable. If this is the administration's best way of solving the overflow of on-campus vehicles, then there needs to be some more serious thought put into the matter. We are one of the lucky universities in this country that allow freshman to have cars on campus. However, at the risk of allowing them their vehicles, they and other students are left with unsafe conditions not only for their cars, but for themselves. The administration needs to stop keeping quiet and address student concerns. If students feel so unsafe on campus as to willingly risk getting their cars either ticketed or towed, something is seriously wrong with this university.

In the article that appeared in the Nov. 8 issue of the Daily Collegian, Brennan addressed the issue of poor lighting and crosswalks, saying "the university's Physical Plant is responsible ..., which fall outside of Parking Services' jurisdiction." A statement like this reveals the terrible capacity in which the different departments within the university work together. There's nothing like passing the buck when blame is involved. It's time this university started working together to help benefit the students it was intended for instead of trying to punish them.

Students cannot continue to live and learn on this campus in fear of receiving an expensive citation or being towed. The administration needs to step up, put on the big boy clothes and do their part to settle this animosity between the university and students. As it stands right now, the students are grievously unhappy with the way Parking Services is conducting itself and the parking conditions they're subjected to. The response to these complaints has been overwhelmingly lax. If this university is going to continue to be the university for the students, then action needs to be taken now.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board

Avoid a Wal-Mart future

We start college with complacency or ambition, not despair. We expect to have fun, to learn, to get a degree. Ultimately, we seek an ideal career, or at least one that earns us enough money to marry and to raise a family. We have goals, however distant or indistinct they may appear now. But what happens when your goal is unachievable? When you fail to get your ideal job, or drop out of medical school? When the company fires you or goes bankrupt? If you have to, you settle for something less, and try to live with it.

Andrew Freeman

Some of us will undoubtedly end up in dead-end jobs, in draining, demanding work that barely pays the bills. The occupations that we hold as college students may become the type of work that some of us do forever. Increasingly, one company is setting the standard for this service work — Wal-Mart.

Wal-Mart is, according to its Web site, firmly rooted in "ethical values." An excellent sense of these values comes across in an internal memo the company released to the New York Times several weeks ago. The subject of the memorandum was employee benefits, namely the company's rising healthcare costs. Wal-Mart's ethics practically bleed from the pages of the memo.

Much of the cost increases, according to the memo, result from an increasingly old workforce, workers sicker than the national average and inefficient use of healthcare. In the last case, workers rely on emergency rooms, rather than doctors' visits, presumably because they are reluctant to visit a doctor early on when sick. This kind of behavior results from poverty — employees want to avoid trips to the doctor unless necessary, to preserve their limited funds. The memo's authors acknowledge this, noting that this behavior is "most evident among our low-income associates." The average yearly wage of a Wal-Mart sales clerk is around $14,000, below the federal poverty line for a family of three.

The rising costs of healthcare, however, are not caused by low wages, according to the memo. Instead, the problem is largely the employees themselves. Older employees and those who are obese are singled out as "high utilizers" who cost the company by using its health insurance. The memo's authors declaim that the "least healthy, least productive" employees are happier with their benefits and make greater use of them. Worst of all, these employees are more likely to stay with Wal-Mart. An employee with seven years of tenure is, according to the memo, no more productive and 55 percent more expensive than one who had only worked at Wal-Mart for a year.

One might think that the company ought to reward employees who stay with it for so long. However, these loyal employees are, to Wal-Mart, a revenue drain. Husbands and wives are also undesirable, since "spouses" are the "most expensive" group under the health plan, with the company paying more "per spouse than per associate."

So what is the solution to Wal-Mart's malaise? The memo proposes many actions, such as decreasing the maximum life insurance payout to $12,000, making more people work part-time so they would receive fewer benefits, cutting subsidization of spouses and cutting money from the profit-sharing program. The retirement program would be changed from a flat contribution to one in which the company would match the employee's contribution. Similarly, health savings accounts would be set up for employees to save for health costs. Both of these programs are problematic, as employees living from paycheck to paycheck are unable to save their meager funds for the future.

A final goal outlined in the memo is to change benefits and the workplace to draw in "healthier, more productive" employees. This is accomplished by ensuring that all jobs require physical labor, such as gathering carts, offering discounts on healthy foods and providing benefits for "healthy" employees. Additionally, such changes would "dissuade unhealthy people" from working at Wal-Mart.

Wal-Mart's response to rising benefit costs is to blame the sick and the old, the poor, disadvantaged people whose desperation has led them to work there. Its solution is to further cut their benefits. Its "ethical values" are callousness and cruelty and its success furthers these values throughout society. The suffering of Wal-Mart's workers may seem distant, but some of us will end up there, and all of us should be concerned.

Andrew Freeman is a Collegian columnist.

Poker: the downfall of a social life

While war, national disasters, economic instability and educational inequality all besmirch our nation's reputation, none of those will bring this country to its knees harder and faster than poker. What started off as a game, usually the focal point to some sort of ritualistic guy's night, has grown to become a national obsession. I cannot think of anything more pathetic.

Nick Belanger

Poker is often subject to criticism by those morally opposed to gambling. While morally I see nothing wrong with gambling, I find it an irresponsible waste of time and money, both of which are hard to come by for a typical student.

I think it happened last year. Every night a certain group of individuals would assemble in the Butterfield lounge; they would play games of hold'em every night for hours. I watched my friends become so consumed with the game that it became the only thing they could talk about. So it was the only thing I heard.

Addiction continued in the fall, after a long summer without a fix my poker playing buddies were jonezing for a quickie. With crisp five dollar bills ready to go they embarked on yet another semester of late nights and more tales of epic pocket pairs and bad beats.

Poker is often subject to criticism by those morally opposed to gambling. While morally I see nothing wrong with gambling, I find it an irresponsible waste of time and money, both of which are hard to come by for a typical student. Hours spent posting blinds, bluffing and going all in, are hours away from the books. I also guarantee taking up a part time job in place of poker will provide a more consistent means of income. For every success story of college students making sacks full of money at the poker table, there are 10 stories of students going broke tossing chips into the pot.

I don't know quite when America fell in love with poker, and no one really is to blame. Overnight groups of friends started dealing cards, breaking out cheap plastic chips and having a good time playing a little hold'em. Soon the games got a little more serious, friends became opponents and those cheap plastic chips were upgraded to expensive clay casino style chips. The stakes of the games went up, and all of a sudden everyone and their mother were playing poker.

Soon America got online, and the stakes went up yet again. All of a sudden countless individuals are punching in credit card numbers online to partake in online poker. Now anyone with a couple of bucks and a computer can get online and blow their savings trying to double up at a high stakes table.

"Since its establishment in the late 1990s, poker has become one of the fastest growing segments of the online gaming market, growing from estimated revenues of $92 million in 2002 to $365 million in 2003 and $1,048 million in 2004," stated an article that appeared on PartyGaming.com, "In 2004, online poker generated approximately 13 percent of global online gaming market revenue, an increase of 100 percent from 2003."

The online poker industry has erupted, especially among college students. The allure of being able to go online and make a few quick bucks has led to numerous students burning more cash then the Bush administration.

More than 500 UMass students list poker as an interest on facebook.com, and there are eight groups dedicated to the game. Poker is here, gambling is here and the ramifications are real. Once upon a time gambling only took place in casinos, but now the same opportunities that exist on the floor of the most spectacular casinos are present in a dingy dorm room so long as OIT hasn't shut your Internet off.

Perhaps regulations should exist barring online gambling; after all gambling is illegal. It's logical that these Web sites should have stricter restrictions placed on them; they are making huge sums of money and are left virtually un-scrutinized and unregulated.

Adding to America's love affair with poker is the constant television coverage that tournaments receive. ESPN broadcasts the world series of poker annually, NESN hosted a Boston/New York tournament and just about every other cable network covers poker in some manner. Celebrity poker is becoming popular, leaving me to ponder … who could possibly care how Jason Alexander plays a straight draw against Joey Fatone?

All of a sudden professional poker players are being treated like actual athletes. They're becoming famous for playing poker; they are sponsored, paid and expected to perform. I can't think of a bigger group of anti-social nerds than that of professional poker players, and anyone who dares to call poker a sport is just as pathetic as the game itself.

Poker is a waste of time; a fad that with time, will pass. And for those college students with serious aspirations to become professional poker players, enjoy your parents basement for the next decade.

Nick Belanger is a Collegian staff member.

Put your clothes back on

Last week, Amherst residents were privileged to witness the "Naked Anti-Bush Demonstration": a "grassroots effort by people in the Five College area to stand up against the policies of President Bush's administration," according to Dan O'Brien's front page article on Nov. 3.

Sanam Hakim

What exactly are you demonstrating by getting naked in the middle of Amherst? Are you drawing attention to yourselves in hopes that people will become aware of your cause and march with you in protest? If so, getting naked is not the way to do it.

Although I can find over a dozen problems with this demonstration, I will highlight three, that I not only view as problems, but as contributors to public ridicule of two of the most beneficial and progressive movements in our country: feminism and education.

One of the speakers from Mt. Holyoke College claimed women are particularly outraged that the Bush administration has taken their rights away. What exactly are you demonstrating by getting naked in the middle of Amherst? Are you drawing attention to yourselves in hopes that people will become aware of your cause and march with you in protest? If so, getting naked is not the way to do it.

The purpose of having a cause is to spread it and move towards change. Public nudity doesn't do either. Write a piece of literary journalism and publish it; circulate your message throughout the United States. Write for your local newspaper, your college newspaper. Run for office and show the nation that women are fully capable of being elected and holding high government positions. Spend your naked time working on your campaign.

By getting naked in the center of town, you are accomplishing absolutely nothing at the end of the day, aside from getting strange looks and a few parents covering children's eyes. Furthermore, you are making a mockery of feminism: one of the most progressive women's rights movements in our country. When people laugh at me for calling myself a feminist or when self respecting women do not want to be identified as feminists, it is solely because of the negative stereotypes associated with it. These stereotypes are developed by our media and don't focus on women who have done great things for our nation and reflect feminism in a positive light, but people like you, who lie naked in the center of town in the name of feminism.

A second major backlash of this demonstration is the fact that not only college students skipped class to "protest," but high school students were encouraged to do so as well. It is undeniable that society evolves and changes. We evolve in style, in interests, in music, in education and in technology, to name a few. Perhaps it's time to re-examine protesting as it applies to contemporary America.

Rallying in the center of town, then getting naked in protest of the government, is not the way to get things done in this country. Our country responds to education and education is the answer. Lying naked in protest cannot even come close to the benefits of an education. Go back to your high school classroom, graduate and go to college, get a masters in Social Justice, then tour the country and give talks to college students. Encourage them to become educated.

Instead of organizing a grassroots campaign to strip and protest, organize a grassroots campaign to elect decent people to government positions, or better yet, run for government yourself. Go to law school and learn our legal system; instill change from within. Inspire people. Education will strengthen your arguments, increase your resources and strengthen your ability to move this nation towards change. Nudity and mindless protesting will not. Put your clothes back on and go to class.

This brings me to my third point. Not a single aspect of this demonstration makes any sense. First of all, instead of chanting "We want Bush out," why don't you chant, "We want ____ in"? Think about it — who would take Bush's place? At this point, it would probably be another guy just like him. Spelling out "No W" does absolutely nothing. While Bush is not even close to my ideal president, I understand the reality of the situation. The only way this cycle of Christian white male presidents will end is when new, more progressive people become educated, unified and rise to positions of power within our country. Second of all, one of the "naked protestors" said that she got naked because "this war is B.S." If that was the message behind your protest, wouldn't it have made more sense to spell out "No Bush" in actual bullshit instead of naked bodies?

Education is the route to progress in today's society. I admire the passion in the protestors, but I think this passion is being used in an extremely negative way. It's taking students away from classrooms, scaring women away from feminism and taking away the legitimacy of educated and well-planned protests by people actually wearing clothes. I believe this passion should be invested in the larger cause of unifying our nation towards progress, which can only come with education. The only way bad leaders will go away is if good leaders replace them. Direct your passion toward your education and look for these good leaders and new answers. That is a cause worth fighting for.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sophomores have housing rights

I remember sophomore year like it was yesterday. No longer wide-eyed and bushy tailed, I returned to classes and campus triumphantly from the year before, an older college student but also one more learned in the ways of how college worked, especially a large state institution. I did not come to the University of Massachusetts until my junior year, so my sophomore year return was to a large, state school very much like this one, but not this one. Returning as a sophomore, I felt that I was well acquainted with my school, and that my school should have been well acquainted with me.

Mike Anmuth

In a university such as UMass where space in on-campus housing is both extremely limited and extremely in demand, there should not be an on-campus housing requirement for students in their sophomore year.

I place all of this information on the table to say that sophomores come to their school with a renewed fervor and a renewed sense of being, but also they possess knowledge and friendships that they acquired in their first year. In a university such as UMass where space in on-campus housing is both extremely in demand and extremely limited, there should not be an on-campus housing requirement for students in their sophomore year.

This requirement places students in housing they may not prefer, or with roommates they may not prefer or "on-campus" but in reality off-campus, such as the situation with students living in the Howard Johnson on Route 9. One can argue that a certain percentage of students will want to move off campus after their freshman year, and this requirement prevents students from doing just that. Students who want to live on campus should be allowed to do so, as is the current system for juniors and seniors with on-campus housing, but sophomores should be given the choice to live off campus if they desire.

Proponents of this sophomore year housing requirement would argue that these students foster better friendships, get more involved with the university and have a better experience by being required to live in the dorms. I do not disagree that all of these notions are true, and that students who live on-campus undoubtedly get a fuller experience than those who live off-campus. By the time I was a sophomore, my university told me that there was no on-campus housing available, so staying off-campus was my only option.

If I had gone to this university all four years, I would have been subjected to living on-campus for my sophomore year, required to have a meal plan for that year and probably would be living a whole different life than I am today. However, I will make the argument that while living on-campus does create a sense of community, assuming one is happy with their housing selection, it may not create any more or any less spirit for the college one attends. Suffice to say, if someone is satisfied with one's school, living on campus is not going to change that satisfaction; the same can be said about dissatisfaction.

Although I am sure it seems I vacillate between being for the housing policy based on the social and institutional advantages it gives these students and being against the policy as it limits the choices of these students, one may form an opinion in either direction. This policy, if repealed, would allow sophomores to move off campus, but at what expense socially? If kept in place, the problem with the housing shortage that has been experienced this semester may continue to grow, if the influx of students grows each year. Overall, this policy helps some students and hurts some students, but many students are affected by its implications.

It is important to note that I have not surveyed the sophomore class to see if they would prefer to live off campus. It is also important to note that if one had a reason deemed acceptable to the Housing Assignment Office, one may file a Housing Exemption Request and live off campus their sophomore year, if approved. I cannot say whether this policy is acceptable to all, acceptable to some or acceptable to none. What I can relate is that I was a sophomore a couple of years ago, and after living with roommates for my freshman year, I enjoyed the choice and experience of living off campus. This choice, I feel, should be available to sophomores, as by their second year, they are familiar with the university and its procedures.

Mike Anmuth is a Collegian columnist.

Growing through delegation

I spent this last weekend in Philadelphia at the University of Pennsylvania Model United Nations (MUN) conference. MUN is basically college students pretending to be U.N. delegates and discussing issues like refugees, diseases, poverty, disarmament, etc. while representing different countries. I have been doing MUN for three years now and have attended several conferences in the United States, as well as in Austria, Turkey and Greece.

Asif Khan

Yes, maybe a lot of us play hard, but we also work very hard. I can speak on mine and my partner's behalves that we did pretty well in committee and co-wrote one of the first resolutions, as well as championed the "African cause" throughout. In the evenings we shopped, ate great food and hung out with other people from committee.

My partner and I were representing Tanzania in a committee which mainly discussed internally displaced people in Africa. These conferences serve as excellent practice for future politicians, lawyers and teachers. Lots of people make a lot of contacts as well; many students who attend them will be in important political positions in the future. I have made a lot of good friends at these conferences. A lot of times people recruit for internships and jobs at the U.N. and other international organizations.

However, politics do not only play a role during committee sessions, but also extend to the relationship between the different schools who attend these conferences. There is a lot of "this school only hangs out with these schools and cannot talk to that one." The large majority of schools represented are private as transport, hotel and delegate fees can amount to a lot of money for one weekend.

Most students, especially those who attend state schools cannot afford a $500 trip. We are very fortunate that the Political Science department at UMass pays for most of the trip and all we pay is $40 for gas. The International Relations Club at UMass sends delegates to most of the conferences on the east coast every semester. We are regulars at the conferences at Yale, UPenn, Mt. Holyoke, McGill and UVA. JNU is the only other state school which is a regular.

After committee you see a completely different side of people at the social activities in bars and clubs. In the words of one of the guys on the UMass delegation, "People get pretty down and dirty!" It is always funny seeing the delegates who were completely serious through out the whole committee session arguing for rights of internally displaced people dancing on top of the bar the same night. I do not blame them though, arguing all day for your adopted country policies can get pretty stressful.

What caught my interest this time and prompted me to follow up my two part on public vs. private schools are some incidents that happened during the course of the weekend. A lot of times there were incidents where people from UMass got snubbed by other people only because they were from UMass. Granted we have this reputation of a big, party school but that does not mean every single student is going to drink all day and not do anything that is productive.

Yes, maybe a lot of us play hard, but we also work very hard. I can speak on mine and my partner's behalves that we did pretty well in committee and co-wrote one of the first resolutions, as well as championed the "African cause" throughout. In the evenings we shopped, ate great food and hung out with other people from committee.

A lot of the comments people from other schools passed while in our rooms were quite disturbing. Especially when they were in our rooms, drinking alcohol we bought. One girl from a nearby private school commented on one of our delegates' accent saying he sounded ignorant solely on the basis of how he talks. Some people would walk away or start comparing their highly funded programs to ours when they would find out we were from UMass.

One thing I find a bit discriminatory about these conferences is that everyone must wear "western business attire." That is ironic for a United Nations conference, as diversity should be encouraged in all senses at such an event, clothing included. Another thing I do not appreciate is that the "Big 5" countries, Russia, U.K., U.S.A., France and China, which are the most important in these conferences for obvious reasons are always given to the same schools in every conference, the schools being Harvard, Yale, UPenn, West Point and the University of Chicago. Having such influential country assignments they almost always win best delegate awards.

At the end of the weekend, all criticisms aside, what remains with me and I am sure with most other delegates is new friendships, great debates, increased knowledge about world affairs and a great weekend in general. Even though you will not get to sleep much I recommend everyone with a slight interest in world affairs and/or debating to definitely attend one. It is without a doubt one of the best things I have done in my college career. For more information about the team at UMass go to www.umassirc.org.

Asif Khan is a Collegian columnist

Capitalism and public welfare

Officials and journalists often use words or phrases without giving sufficient thought to their denotative meaning. Deviating from these definitions in the public realm leads to misinterpretation, which impedes the process in finding solutions to public welfare issues.

Greg Collins

The misuse of the phrase "public welfare" downgrades the significant role that the private sector plays in promoting the common good and how free market economic systems allow such acts to be completed efficiently.

Every Tuesday my community service group plays bingo and cards with residents at an elderly home. I get great satisfaction interacting with these people, many of whom were rejected by other nursing homes due to the severity of their illnesses. This act is not associated with the term "public welfare" to the extent that government transfer payments are, yet community service is as meaningful to the public welfare as the latter.

According to "Webster's Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language," the definition of "welfare" is "well-being." "Public" means "of, pertaining to, or affecting a population or a community as a whole." There are many ways to affect the well-being of a community besides arbitrarily distributing goods through public programs. The misuse of the phrase "public welfare" downgrades the significant role that the private sector plays in promoting the common good and how free market economic systems allow such acts to be completed efficiently.

Capitalism, rather than communism or socialism, provides the most flexible environment through which citizens are able to contribute to the public good by enabling individuals to develop businesses that respond directly to their constituents' needs. The politicized controversy throughout the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina clouded the fact that many private businesses, including Wal-Mart, rushed necessary supplies and goods to Louisiana before FEMA and President Bush directly confronted the issue due to bureaucratic snafus.

Competitive free market capitalism allows all businesses – large or small – to expediently direct supplies to areas that are in desperate need of goods. Wal-Mart's act exemplified the freedom through which businesses and individuals are able to identify and solve problems that achieve quick and effective results pertaining to the public good in contrast to the red tape of centralized institutions which retard this process.

Too often the goal of improving the well-being of the community is left to the legislative brand, which frequently is beholden to special interests in conflict with the goal of representing constituents. Under a more regulated economy, businesses would not have the freedom to allocate funds, especially in emergency situations like Katrina. The mainstream media did not sufficiently focus on the assistance of private businesses during the Katrina aftermath, even though such business contributions to specific causes are honorable and morally motivated.

Economist Adam Smith praised the virtues of capitalism in "The Wealth of Nations." Since capitalism is often disassociated with the term, he is not considered someone who was concerned with "public welfare," but Smith was one of the most generous philanthropists of his time. Much like Wal-Mart, he was able to purposefully direct assets to places and people in need.

Currently, eBay founder Pierre Omidyar is donating $100 million to a Tufts University program that will give out loans to aspiring entrepreneurs in poverty stricken areas in Southeast Asia. Critics of capitalism downgrade the hard work of the private sector to bring about social improvement, yet it is ignorant to deny the positive impact that the individual initiatives of Smith, Wal-Mart and Omidyar have had or will have on the public welfare.

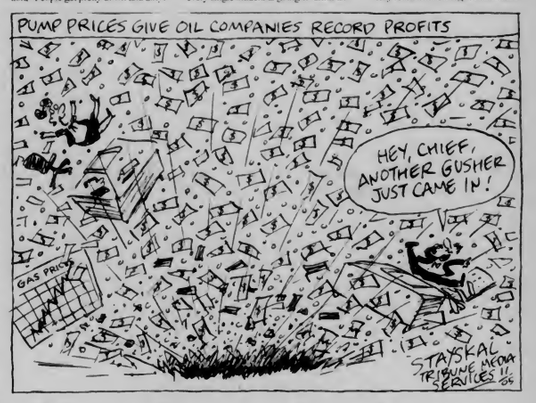
The least desirable environment to improve the general welfare of the community and state would be under socialist economic policies. John Stuart Mill said, "…The great majority of things are worse done by the intervention of government than the individuals most interested in the matter would do them if left to themselves." Businesses succeed because they provide goods or services that are in demand. Unlike government, they are directly influenced by the "common folk" who ultimately determine their success and failure, not "big business" themselves.

Businesses may be exclusively focused on creating profit, yet in doing they are providing these goods and services to people who are in need of products or assistance. Socialism prohibits businesses from both the former, thereby disallowing capitalists to generate wealth, and the latter, thereby preventing essential services and goods to reach the community quickly. The paradox remains that while the different purposes of government welfare programs and businesses are to improve the public well-being and to make money, respectively, the latter results in achieving the goal of the former more effectively than the public welfare policies do themselves.

Sharing one's time with the elderly is not as glamorous as announcing new federal entitlement programs, but it is one of the highest forms of public welfare that can be achieved under a capitalist system. Federal and state welfare policies, in theory, are supposed to benefit chiefly the recipient of the handouts. More importantly, community service through the private sector benefits both the beneficiary and the one performing the service.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR



THE EVILS OF WAL-MART

I applaud the Daily Collegian's recent detailed coverage of the local protest against the expansion of Wal-Mart, especially the article by John Fenuccio that ran on Nov. 7. However I feel that there is additional support for his argument that should be included.

For example, while the article does include mention that protestors are "worried about how Wal-Mart treats its employees," and hints at sexism in wages, there is little additional detail. A piece of information which might have proven more shocking, and would be relevant in conjunction with Fenuccio's claim that "the average Wal-Mart associate earns $14,000 per year" would be the fact that this wage is $1,000 below the poverty level for a family of three, and that Wal-Mart actually encourages its employees to enroll in public assistance programs, costing taxpayers $2.5 billion in 2004 alone (as outlined in the 2004 report by the Democratic Staff of the Committee on Education and the Workforce).

Finally, the inclusion of some areas in which people opposed to Wal-Mart can find support and information, including Web sites such as wakeupwalmart.com. By including more specifics about the impact of Wal-Mart on employees, small businesses, traffic and the environment, more people will become aware of the increasing problems caused by Wal-Mart, and hopefully will choose to get involved.

Katrina Cessna
UMass student

New Abercrombie slogans, t-shirts have gone too far

Oh, poor Abercrombie & Fitch, what have you done this time? For the fourth time in four years, you've managed to get people angry for such trivial reasons ... a perfect four-peat that makes the athletic successes of the Los Angeles Lakers pale in comparison. And why? I have no idea. After all, I'm sure your intentions were pure, with no motive for profit whatsoever, wanting simply to bring a new trend to America's youth.

Matthew Lee

Sure, there are those who say that these shirts are inappropriate for wearing to certain places, such as school, and that wearing one may be sending a negative message about oneself . . . it's fine to disrespect women as long as these T-shirts are "very popular," right?

These days, people just seem to get all riled up at you for no reason at all. I mean, what real cause do they have? Sure, in April 2002, there was a series of t-shirts that negatively portrayed and mocked Asian culture, leading to protests, and yes, one of the shirts that was protested read: "Wong Brother Laundry Service — Two Wongs Can Make it White" and included caricatures of two men with slanted eyes and conical hats, but still? What's all the fuss about? There couldn't possibly be any, oh — racism involved, because A&F would never have any tolerance for racism or discrimination of any form, right?

So I suppose when you agreed to pay $40 million to settle a class-action federal lawsuit filed by black, Hispanic and Asian employees and job applicants who accused the company of promoting whites at the expense of minorities, it wasn't an admission of guilt at all, and that your use of the phrase "good-looking" to refer to an overall Caucasian look was simply a mistake. At least the settlement will make sure you promote diversity and prevent discrimination, right? Especially since Abercrombie & Fitch Chief Executive Officer Mike Jeffries has said: "We have, and always have had, no tolerance for discrimination," as reported by CNN.

So I suppose this intolerance for discrimination, but a certain readiness to accept what you see as a good joke is what explains your new line of t-shirts, the ones that have been the reason behind a call for a nationwide boycott of your stores. What shirts? Oh, the ones being marketed to teenage girls bearing slogans printed across the chest such as "Give me something to scream about," "I had a nightmare I was a brunette," "I'd look great on you" and "Who needs brains when you have these" (with the slogan printed, of course, across the chest).

Sure, there are those who say that these shirts are inappropriate for wearing to certain places, such as school, and that wearing one may be sending a negative message about oneself. And yes, some psychologists have said that shirts can be mentally detrimental for teen girls, many of whom already struggle with self-image issues. But it's fine to disrespect women as long as these T-shirts are "very popular," right?

Popular enough, anyway, that your company reported a 31 percent jump in its October same-store sales, in spite of a national boycott (or "girl-cott" as the organizers would have it). I mean, ethics, good taste, even your company's word — none of these matter as long as your bottom line benefits, right? That's the American way, after all, sell your soul for cash, and then lie to cover it up.

That's what you've always done, first with the line of shirts that negatively portrayed and mocked Asian culture and now with these t-shirts, which negatively portray and mock women. Always a denial, always an evasion — the closest A&F has ever come to an admission of guilt is a brief statement that it recognizes "that the shirts in question, while meant to be humorous, might be troubling to some." And yes, while you have agreed to pull some of the shirts from the shelves, the damage is done.

This time, Abercrombie & Fitch, you have gone too far. People from teenage girls to Illinois State Sen. Steve Rauschenberger, a Republican who would normally support big business, think that your t-shirts are "offensive" and "degrading." The game is up, you den of racist, sexist, greedy capitalists. It's not all about the Benjamins, the Jacksons, the Jeffersons, Monroes or the Washingtons. It's not about money, period. It's about the way companies such as yours have made it acceptable to be completely offensive to different groups you think will not protest, using them for your own gain at the expense of everyone.

To use a famous quote by Joseph N. Welch that ended an era, "Have you no sense of decency, sir, at long last? Have you left no sense of decency?"

By Matthew Lee written for the Daily Trojan at the University of Southern California

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 2005 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Styles collide in Vegas

BY IAN JONES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Over Halloween weekend (not Vegas' (actually, it's in Henderson, Nev., some 15 minutes from the Strip) Sam Boyd Stadium – home of the University of Nevada Las Vegas Rebels – was taken over by the Vegoose Music Festival, an event that combined the jamband/indie-rock atmosphere of Coachella and Bonnaroo with the decadence of Sin City. As Flaming Lips front man Wayne Coyne pointed out, it was a bizarre mixture, but it worked.

Walking through the parking lot on the first day, one would be excused in thinking they were at a Grateful Dead concert. Vendors selling everything from tie-dyed shirts featuring Jerry Garcia's face to colored glass drug paraphernalia were scattered throughout the lot, and one vendor was even selling such themed food items as "Phil-afel" (named after Phil Lesh of the Dead, who played the Double Down stage on day one.)

The first band to play was Steel Train, who had been through Northampton on Oct. 22 opening for State Radio. They put on an admirable show, and played very well, but the crowd they attracted was no indication of what was to come later.

Impressive names in indie-rock, such as Spoon, Devendra Barhart and Sleater-Kinney, played on both days, and each drew large audiences, as did jambands such as Umphrey's McGee and Southern rockers Gov't Mule and North Mississippi Allstars. As each day progressed, it became harder and harder to get close to any of the stages.

Blackalicious played in the hip-hop oriented Clubs Tent, and drew a crowd so large that part of the tent's wall had to be taken down to allow more people to watch. Turning around, one could also see the Decemberists' set on the Snake Eyes stage, featuring Petra Haden (former Rentals and that dog. member and daughter of jazz bassist Charlie Haden) tearing it up on violin. The rest of the band put on an equally memorable performance, playing many of their more popular songs and, at one point, asking the crowd to help by screaming like they were being swallowed by a whale. Toward the end of their set, the crowd assembled at the Clubs Tent for Atmosphere's performance started mingling with the Decemberists' crowd, showing just how many people had shown up since Steel Train went on.

Of course, it wouldn't be Halloween without costumes, and both the crowd and bands were more than willing to dress up. Outfits ranged from "sexy" versions of various things to more traditional fare like vampires and maniacal doctors. If those costumes weren't enough, there was also the Impersonator's Lounge, which featured performances by "Tina Turner" and "Wayne Newton," while "Sylvester Stallone" and "Tom Cruise" made their way around the room. This was also the site of the Liza Minnelli and Elvis look-alike contest (couples dressed as both scored extra points.)

Several artists also decided to get into the spirit, like Jack Johnson, who paid tribute to the great Jimi Hendrix. Likewise, the Shins dressed up as a group of nuns and on several occasions had to slap "Sister" Hernandez with a large [illegible] for [illegible] behavior. Their live show is newer than [illegible] work, and put an interesting spin on many [illegible], including the "Garden State" [illegible].

Beck and his band [illegible] and dressed as a group of Boy Scouts and also kept in the spirit of their costumes, gathering around the campfire between songs. Beck played songs off most of his albums, including a few [illegible] from 2002's "Sea Change."

The Flaming Lips put on their [illegible] strange show, complete with multimedia presentations, people in animal costumes and Wayne Coyne crowd surfing in a giant bubble. They got things rolling by leading everyone in a [illegible] rendition of Queen's "Bohemian Rhapsody," and kept the energy high even while playing a song that they composed using a rewired toy that originally made animal noises. They ended the set with a [illegible] on activism from Coyne to the audience, and a [illegible] cover of Black Sabbath's "War Pigs."

The Arcade Fire [illegible] not long after, and impressed the crowd with its [illegible] set featuring most of the songs from their acclaimed first album, "Funeral." They also played several interesting covers, New Order's "Age of Consent," which sounded surprisingly good, and Bruce Springsteen's "State Trooper."

The night, and the festival, ended with a three-hour performance by Widespread Panic, and considering the diversity of the artists who were there, it would have been difficult to leave dissatisfied.

'Home Land Security' analyzes post-9/11 attitudes in Maine

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

"Home Land Security": three words instead of two. At the world premiere of the multimedia presentation Friday night at the University of Massachusetts' Bowker Auditorium, writer and director Marty Pottenger explained that homeland security is a difficult word.

"I broke it up, put it into smaller letters and thought it's a good place to start," Pottenger said to her audience before the show. "We're all part of homeland security; take time to think about it and its issues."

"Home Land Security," presented by the Center for Cultural Exchange, was created to show the "impact of September 11th and the War on Terror on the lives of New England Minority Communities." The six participants, each one from a different community of Portland, Maine, raised serious points throughout the presentation detailing the importance of homeland security, as well as their love for their home in Portland.

"It's not perfect here, but it's a good place to start," said member Billy Woolverton, a man from Portland who says he lives either on the street or in the woods. "There's a lot of had apples, trust me on that one coming from a homeless guy, but there's a lot more good people."

A small orchestra made up of a violin, a small drum and a guitar, played frequently when the members were not speaking. Also, occasionally the participants would use hats for a statement, whether it was a rain hat, a "trucker" hat or a hunter's hat, while standing silently as the "sounds" of America filled the theater. These "sounds" included sirens of ambulances and police cruisers, trees being maliciously cut down and, of course, the sound of hurricanes and natural disasters. Each sound segment was followed by a Portland news broadcast which always affected at least one community of the six participants.

In between the music and news, each member gave small explanations of their lives before coming to Portland, their heritage, their experiences while in Portland, their thoughts on the war and the effects the post- 9/11 world had on them. Each narrative from each participant provided touching stories in which homeland security was a major factor.

"Most of my experience of land was that I didn't own it," said member Jill Duson, Mayor of Portland. "I just used it."

Another participant, Heather Augustine, a student at the University of Southern Maine and member of the Micmac Tribe said, "I don't know if I love America. I love the people. I love the land. But to me, that's not America."

The presentation focused a lot on the somewhat universal feeling that Portland is a small scale version of America. The participants spoke on their fears that people who believe they are "native" Americans, or non-immigrants, or the all-white people living in the United States, would never come to their senses and realize this is everyone's country.

Duson touched on the subject of racism. She told a story from before she lived in Portland, when a white man confronted her.

"Who do you think you are? Why don't you take your people and go back where you came from?" the man said to her. Duson said it surprised her at first, mainly because she didn't "come from" anywhere; she was born in the United States. She also did not think issues like this still lived within people.

"I realized we're all in the same world," she said. "We're not on Mars."

Along the lines of the war, the government and actions taken to "help" minorities, the participants had much to say. Each spoke of his or her first hearings of the attack on the World Trade Centers in 2001.

"Please don't be one of my people," each member thought to themselves at the moment they heard the phrase terrorist attack.

Now knowing that not everyone likes America, and that some people think it is OK to hate, the participants expressed their strength through it all. They touched upon their different attitudes on the war, their feelings towards President Bush, the basis of homeland security and their fears on the future of their country, America, but furthermore, their home, Portland.

"There's a choice. We can become a greater police state, or more vulnerable state," said member Reverend Virginia Marie Rincon.

Homeland security, Pottenger's audience learned, is not a simple word. So what did the audience learn about homeland security? Home is where one lives. Land is what one lives on. Security is safety.

Perhaps the cast did not, in fact, speak directly on the act of homeland security, but felt it more necessary to speak on their lives in America, and in Portland.

"You meet me, you meet Maine," each member stated, ending the presentation. "You meet me, you meet Maine."

"Home Land Security," a multimedia presentation by Marty Pottenger, raised questions about post-9/11 attitudes in Portland, Maine and America in general.

Love often means different things to different people

Lovers Only
Hannah Drake

Love. What exactly is it? I'm not even sure, and I write this column.

Nobody has really defined it, that's why there are countless songs, quotes and poems about it.

There are some great quotes out there on love. Some are kind of dumb and make no real sense, so I'm not going to write about them. You know what I mean, the ones like: "Love is like swallowing hot chocolate before it has cooled off. It takes you by surprise at first, but keeps you warm for a long time." "Love is friendship set on fire." "If love is blind, why is lingerie so popular?" They're cute, but have no deep meaning.

The movie "Meet Joe Black," on the other hand, comes the closest to defining it. Love quote number one is, "It's like, you know each other's secrets. Your deepest, darkest secrets. Yeah, and then you're free. You're free, you're free to love each other completely, totally, just no fear. So there's nothing you don't know about each other and it's okay."

The second, in dialogue form: William Parrish: "How perfect for you — to take whatever you want because it pleases you. That's not love." Joe Black: "Then what is it?" Parrish: "Some aimless infatuation, which, for the moment, you feel like indulging — it's missing everything that matters." Black: "Which is what?" Parrish: "Trust, responsibility, taking the weight for your choices and feelings, and spending the rest of your life living up to them. And above all, not hurting the object of your love." Black: "So that's what love is according to William Parrish?" Parrish: "Multiply it by infinity, and take it to the depth of forever, and you will still have barely a glimpse of what I'm talking about."

And, lastly, "Love is passion, obsession, someone you can't live without. If you don't start with that, what are you going to end up with? Fall head over heels. I say find someone you can love like crazy and who'll love you the same way back. And how do you find him? Forget your head and listen to your heart. I'm not hearing any heart. Run the risk, if you get hurt, you'll come back. Because, the truth is there is no sense living your life without this. To make the journey and not fall deeply in love — well, you haven't lived a life at all. You have to try. Because if you haven't tried, you haven't lived."

Other movies try to explain love in a more realistic way. Take, for example, a quote from "Captain Corelli's Mandolin:" "When you fall in love, it is a temporary madness. It erupts like an earthquake, and then it subsides. And when it subsides, you have to make a decision. You have to work out whether your roots are become so entwined together that it is inconceivable that you should ever part. Because this is what love is.

Love is not breathlessness, it is not excitement, it is not the desire to mate every second of the day. It is not lying awake at night imagining that he is kissing every part of your body. No, don't blush. I am telling you some truths. For that is just being in love; which any of us can convince ourselves we are. Love itself is what is left over, when being in love has burned away. Doesn't sound very exciting, does it? But it is!"

Funnily enough, and as boring as that last quote sounds, it's true. Love is exciting, literally and physically. We get butterflies and sweaty palms and we can't eat and we can't sleep. It sounds like some terrible illness, doesn't it? Yet, when it's experienced, there's nothing comparable. There's even a quote that talks about it. "Wanna hear something really subversive? Love is all it's cracked up to be ... it really is worth fighting for, being strong for, risking everything for. And the fact is, if you don't risk anything, you risk even more."

Even children understand love — maybe better than any of us, because they seem to be the most eloquent about it. This quote is from a seven-year-old: "Love is when you tell someone something bad about yourself and you're scared they won't love you anymore. But then you get surprised because not only do they still love you, they love you even more." And this one is from a six-year-old: "Love is when someone hurts you. And you get so mad, but you don't yell at them because it would hurt their feelings."

After reading all of these quotes, and after being in different situations, my conclusion is that we have trouble defining love because it means different things to us at different times in our lives, and every time we fall for a new person, we swear it couldn't have been love the last time. Just like people have different priorities, they will have different expectations and hopes for the love that they want. And now I'll leave you with one of my newest personal favorites,

"It's like all of the bad stuff that you went through, that you hated along the way, the people who disappointed you, the things that didn't go the way you wanted, suddenly you feel grateful to them because they're the things that got you to here. To this." - The perfect man.

Need Advice? Have Comments? E-Mail Hannah at

Loversonly@gmail.com

Dr. Andrew Weil speaks on 'Healthy Aging' at Mt. Holyoke

BY NINA FOROUTAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Dr. Andrew Weil's presentation at Mount Holyoke's Chapin Auditorium on Oct. 28th was undeniably a huge success.

Mark Auerbach, special project events coordinator for WFCR (88.5 FM), estimated an audience of about 1000 people. The onstage interview given by a representative from Baystate Health and The Valley Advocate, the two sponsors of the event, engaged the audience, as well as Weil, with interesting and conventional questions.

Weil, who kept the mass of people in the audience engaged and enlightened, gave important information about several areas of health according to integrative medicine.

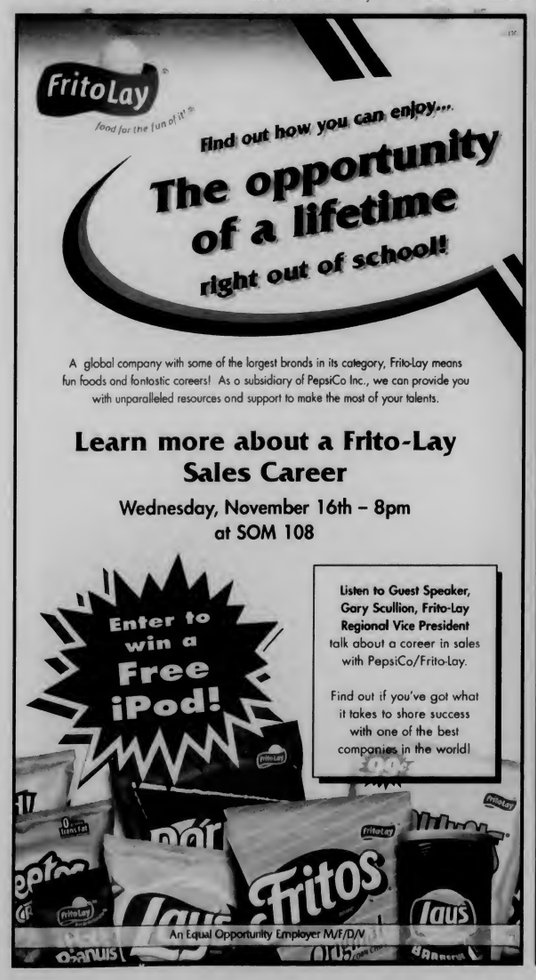
A few topics he spoke about were how to improve cognitive development and memory as we age, diet and issues with obesity, his specific work in the integrative medicine field and last, but not least, the significance of acknowledging our spirit in relation to health.

Weil stated that as we get older, we should continue to make connections to the world around us. Such activities as learning an extra language and playing a chess game will help protect our minds against early cognitive loss.

The problem with society these days, according to Weil, is that elders are put into communities with other elders, causing them to feel disconnected with the world around them and eventually causing their brain to stop making as many cognitive connections.

Diet was a big issue during the hour-and-a-half interview. Weil questioned the belief that obesity in the United States is purely an individual problem. He pointed out the government's unfair advice to just "do sit ups in front of the television." He explained that because of federal subsidies on corn production, cheap food is usually of low quality. In his opinion, the lowest cost public health benefit is to implement a daily vitamin to all children at their elementary schools. This point caused a loud roar of clapping and even a standing ovation.

The next question he answered was about the details of the integrative health movement. Weil described it as "healing oriented medicine." He went on to say that this practice takes account not just the physical aspect, but also the emphasis on doctor-patient relationships in order to restore the core values of medicine. Weil also noted the importance of the "placebo" response. This technique is done with minimum intervention and causes the body to heal on its own without the presence of any outside treatments. Spirituality is also a key staple to integrative medicine.



Weil told the audience that people these days neglect their spirit, which, believe it or not, can cause numerous illness and health problems. Spirituality can be improved by simply spending time with good company, putting fresh flowers around your house and even listening to music you enjoy. In addition, three easy, important ways to improve your health are to walk as much as you can on a daily basis, begin breathing exercises to reduce stress and take supplements of vitamins you cannot acquire enough through food.

Weil ended the interview by taking questions from the audience. Lines of people filled the isles, each one waiting patiently to ask Weil a personal health question. After the answer and question portion was over, almost every person in the room raced to the front in order to get Weil's book, " Healthy Aging," signed by him.

Everyone who left the Chapin Auditorium that night was left with tips on how to live a healthier, happier life. Dr. Weil's new book, "Healthy Aging," is available in book stores nationwide. For more information visit drweil.com.

Dr. Andrew Weil, author of "Healthy Aging" and practitioner of integrated medicine, spoke at Mt. Holyoke on Oct. 28.

Super Bowl team is not the same

PATS from page 10

But the usually media-friendly quarterback showed some quick scrambling moves after Monday night's game when he made a brief statement to reporters then left the podium without taking questions.

"We need to play better and we've got to fight harder," Brady said. "And give a lot of credit to the Colts. They played really well. I think we just made too many mistakes. And there's a lot of football left."

The second half of the season starts Sunday in Miami, where the Patriots play the first of their five remaining division games. The Dolphins are tied with Buffalo at 3-5, one game ahead of the New York Jets, but gave Atlanta (6-2) a tough game before losing 17-10 last week at home.

The Patriots nearly lost to Buffalo at home Oct. 30 when they overcame a 16-7 lead with 14 fourth-quarter points for a 21-16 win. The teams meet again in Buffalo on Dec. 11.

New England has two games left against the Jets and one each at Kansas City and at home against New Orleans and Tampa Bay.

At least they don't have to face Manning again in the regular season after he got his first win in eight career games against New England with three touchdown passes and 321 yards passing.

"We thought we were prepared coming in, but what they did out there was impressive," Bruschi said.

Brady, known for pulling out games in the fourth quarter, may need to lead a strong finish for the Patriots simply to make the playoffs.

"We've got a lot of division games and, hopefully, we can turn it around," he said. "But the Colts certainly outplayed us. They were the better team. And that's it. Thank you."

With that — and a downcast look — he walked away toward the rest of the season.

Corey Dillon and the New England Patriots, 4-4, have been inconsistent in 2005 and have yet to win two consecutive contests. The Colts beat the Pats on Monday, marking the first win in Foxboro for quarterback Peyton Manning.

Drug legislation on the way

STEROIDS from page 10

During a series of congressional hearings and in private meetings with lawmakers, the commissioners of the pro leagues criticized the earlier suggested penalties as too harsh.

Banning pro athletes for two years for a first offense would be "depriving them of their livelihood," NHL commissioner Gary Bettman said last week before a meeting with Davis. "The penalties should be severe, they should be harsh, but they shouldn't be such that the punishment doesn't fit the crime."

In April, baseball commissioner Bud Selig proposed raising that sport's penalties to a 50-game suspension for an initial positive test, a 100-game ban for a second offense, and a lifetime ban for a third. Union head Donald Fehr rejected that proposal, and the sides have been negotiating.

The primary disagreement between players and owners is the length of the initial penalty, a baseball official familiar with the talks said on condition of anonymity because the discussions are secret.

The Senate bill would mandate that each player is tested at least five times a year and would urge leagues to erase records achieved with the help of performance-enhancing drugs.

The legislation would take effect a year after being signed into law, giving the leagues that time to change their own steroid policies and make them at least as tough as the law.

Owens looks for forgiveness

OWENS from page 10

Team spokesman Derek Boyko said the Eagles had no comment.

A day earlier, Owens was told by the team not to return this season because of "a large number of situations that accumulated over a long period of time," Reid said.

He said Owens had been "warned repeatedly about the consequences of his actions."

The All-Pro wide receiver didn't play in Sunday night's 17-10 loss at Washington, and will remain suspended for three more games without pay. After that, the Eagles plan to deactivate him for the rest of the season.

NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said Tuesday that the players' union has filed a grievance on behalf of Owens seeking to overturn the suspension. It will be heard Nov. 18 before arbitrator Richard Bloch.

Owens was suspended Saturday, two days after he said the Eagles showed "a lack of class" for not publicly recognizing his 100th career touchdown catch in a game on Oct. 23. In the same interview with ESPN.com, Owens said the Eagles would be better off with Green Bay's Brett Favre at quarterback instead of McNabb.

Owens apologized to the organization for making those comments, but didn't address McNabb, even though the statement he read from included a direct apology to the five-time Pro Bowl quarterback.

This time, Owens said he was sorry not only to Reid and McNabb, but also to Eagles president Joe Banner and owner Jeffrey Lurie.

"I would like to reiterate my respect for Donovan McNabb as a quarterback and as a teammate," Owens said. "I apologize to him for any comments that may have been negative."

The Eagles are 4-4 this season and last in the NFC East. Last year, they were the top team in the conference, going 13-3 on the way to the Super Bowl.

"It really hurts me not to be part of the team anymore," Owens said. "I came here to help the Eagles get to the Super Bowl and win the big game."

Owens' relationship with the Eagles took a drastic turn after he fired longtime agent David Joseph, hired Rosenhaus and demanded a new contract just one season into the seven-year, $48.97 million deal he signed when he came to Philadelphia in March 2004.

Eagles wide receiver Terrell Owens walks away from the media yesterday, after apologizing for comments he made about quarterback Donovan McNabb.

While Rosenhaus spoke to reporters and refused to answer several questions, Owens stood stoically alongside a burly bodyguard.

He flashed his trademark smile and winked at a reporter who asked Rosenhaus what he's done for his client other than have him kicked off the team.

Rosenhaus skipped over that question and criticized the media for being "unfair" to Owens.

"There are players in the NFL that are arrested who violate the program when it comes to drugs and substance abuse and they are not punished as severely as him," Rosenhaus said.

Owens clashed with management this summer and earned a one-week exile from training camp after a heated dispute with Reid that followed a shouting match with offensive coordinator Brad Childress.

Owens forced a trade to the Eagles last year after eight seasons with the 49ers and invigorated the offense with his superior skills. He had 77 catches for 1,200 yards and 14 TDs in 14 games.

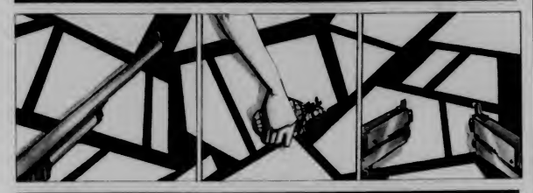
Soon after Philadelphia lost to New England in the Super Bowl, Owens took his first shot at McNabb, suggesting he was tired in the fourth quarter of the loss.

McNabb responded harshly and the two didn't speak for a prolonged period in training camp. They eventually reconciled their relationship and performed well together on the field — Owens has 47 catches for 763 yards and six TDs this season.

Watroba's Liquors
79 Sunderland Road North Amherst (liquor store 11:00AM - 11:00 PM)
Just before the Harp!
Watroba's Market
Red Bull 4 - Pack $7.29 plus deposit
• Corona and Corona Light Loose Case Bottles $20.99 + dep
• Jim Beam Kentucky Whiskey $19.99 1.75 ml Btl
• SKYY Vodka $14.49 750 ml Btl
• Svedka Vodka $17.99 1.75 ml Btl
• Mirassou Assorted Wines $7.99 750 ml Btl
• Pabst Blue Ribbon 30 Pack $13.99 + dep
• Genny Light 30 Pack $12.99 + dep
• Vast array of HUGE Deli Sandwiches
• Coke 12 Pack Cans and Coke products 2 for $6.00 + dep
Jagermeister $20.99 750 ml Btl With FREE T-shirt or FREE shot glass
KEG SPECIALS
Bud & Bud Light $63.99+
Michelob Lager & Ultra $63.99+
"Natty" Light & Ice $59.99+
Miller Lite $59.99+
Pabst Blue Ribbon $44.99+
Try our selection of European and Micro Brew Beers

RAIN
Three Clubs / DJs Under One Roof! Party Till 2 a.m!
HOT BODY CONTEST
Every Thursday Night
18+ College Night
Weekly $100.00 for Top Male/ $100.00 for Top Female
GRAND PRIZE $500.00 Cash & Other Prizes for Top Male and Top Female
Cover Charge 18+ with College ID $10.00 21+ $5.00
Party till 2am!
HAREM FRIDAYS
19 + for Ladies
21+ for Men
"Party with the Harem Girls!!!"
Rain transforms into a Sultan's tent
Present this flyer and receive FREE Admission for 21+ until Midnight
Now Hiring: Bartenders, Waitstaff, Promotions and Security Staff
10 Stearns Square - Springfield, MA 01103 - (413) 827-9000 - www.RainSpringfield.com

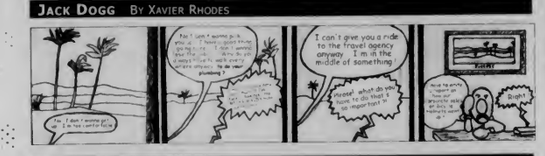
WHAT'S MY NAME, FOOL!
Sports and Resistance in the United States



"I love this book. It's so refreshing to have a sportswriter who writes with such verve and intelligence, who also has a social conscience, and who refuses to keep those parts of his life separate. This is a rare contribution to social history, something. I have been looking for, a sports history that understands how the issues of race and class are inextricable from the world of sports."
- Howard Zinn, Author of A People's History of the United States
Book Talk and Discussion with Sportswriter Dave Zirin
Thursday, November 10 at 7:00 PM
UMass Isenberg School of Management, Room 133
Sponsored by Haymarket Books
International Socialist Organization
www.isowmass.org 413.301.1385 contact@isowmass.org

Enter for a chance to win a
$1000 Zanna Shopping Spree!
Tuesday, November 8 through Saturday, November 12
Come to our Anniversary Sale.
$1000 Zanna Shopping Spree! All week
Big Sales. Bargains.
5 DAYS ONLY!
www.zanna.com

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

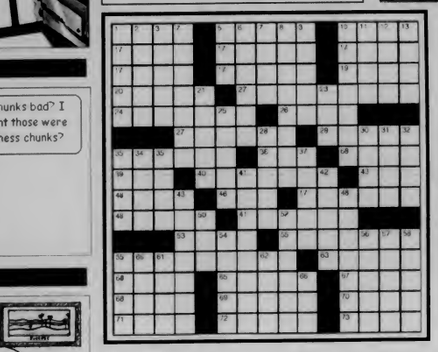


ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Kryzkowski

RANDOM CHATTER By Chris Sala

JACK DOGG By Xavier Rhodes

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner



ACROSS
1 Oscar winner Kadrova
5 Carla
10 Medicinal plant
14 Big screen superstar
15 Packing heat
16 Gray wolf
17 Summerville or Pickens
18 Sea's end?
19 Religious image
20 Goose eggs
22 Comparisons based on similarities
24 Capital on the Delaware
26 Low in fat
27 Dismantle
29 Irritable
33 Assembling
36 Winter hrs. in Boston
38 Be gabby
39 Circle part
40 Speaker's stand
43 Pastoral spot
44 Jet set jet
46 Greek letter
47 Last follower
49 Work
51 Put in a box
53 Duration
55 Inflexible
59 Information collection
63 One cubic decimeter
64 Coup d'
65 Jocularity
67 Lima's country
68 Alaska port
69 Yogi of baseball
70 Five star review
71 Went fast
72 Fiery leony
73 Actor Sharif

DOWN
1 Composer Franz
2 Couch potato
3 French river
4 Ellipsoidal nuts
5 More in Mexico
6 Mysterious
7 Fed
8 Language of Kathmandu
9 Fred's first partner
10 Trued up
11 Focal points
12 Tubular woodwind
13 Many, many millennia
21 Harden
23 Cereal grain
25 More senior
28 Range of the Rockies
30 Table seasoning
31 Baobab or Sahyan
32 Calendar length
33 Galleria
34 Neighborhood
35 Sign of healing
37 Tire feature
41 More shoddy
42 Twangy
45 Spun
48 Part-time athlete
50 Chest bone
52 Fidel of Cuba
54 Deadly African snake
56 Mr. T's outfit
57 Emperor before Trajan
58 More authentic
59 Lairs
60 At the summit
61 Domesticate
62 Goofs
66 Chinese dynasty

Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP
Irish Pub
NEW!! Wireless Internet
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
NOVEMBER SPECIAL!
$1.50 PBR Bottles, Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 a pitcher
Tonight. • Cold Duck Complex!
Thur. • DJ Oliquist
Fri. • Irish Seisiun
Sat. • Alchemystics
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments

Submit your comic!
e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You will be contacted by aliens in your dreams tonight.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You should invest in some plastic utensils.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You will get yet another parking ticket today.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Your backpack will develop an unsightly tear.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
You will run out of both paper clips and staples.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You don't need that measuring tape. Take it back to the hardware store.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You have entirely too much makeup on your face right now.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You should really make an effort to stop biting your nails.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Sundays are definitely the best for prime time TV.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Nick at Nite is something you should definitely watch more of.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You're more of a danger to yourself than to anyone else.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Invest in some quality wood polish. Your coffee table could really use it.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"It's like being inside a dream or something. There's truth but no logic."

—Titanic

★ Submit your comic ★
e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend New Years Party $129 Complete cocktail age 18 781-979-9001 Call now montrealexpress.net

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments, Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

EMPLOYMENT

Mystery Shoppers get paid to shop! Up to $150 a day. Training provided Call 1-800-690-1273

EMPLOYMENT

Part-Time Workers Needed We are looking for part-time assistance with a variety of office and clerical tasks. Preferred candidates will work quickly and accurately and be able to work from 5pm-9pm on days that they work. Pay is $8.00/hour. For consideration, please call (413) 256-0444 for an application or mail resume to: National Evaluation Systems, Inc., Personnel Depart-ment, P.O. Box 226, Amherst, MA 01004-0226. Resumes may also be emailed to: personnel@nesinc.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Looking to be a Legal Assistant? Spring 2006 Internship applications are available at the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients while earning 12 undergraduate credits. Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

Aupair for my daughter, Eleven years old, to share home in Leverett, MA 10 min to UMass. Private room & semi-private bath, share kitchen in exchange for some childcare Call c:413-522-3175 h:413-548-9498

EMPLOYMENT

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8.00 Hr. 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location NO SALES! Night & wknd; shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience nees. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

FURNITURE

Sealy Mattress Set KING $575.00 QUEEN $465.00 FULL $365.00 TWIN $195 Save 50% or more off store prices. For more details call 215-431-9584

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Have you been ripped off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995.

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

ACT NOW SPRING BREAKERS Book early & Save! Free meals/parties by 11/7. Lowest prices. Be a rep & TRAVEL FREE! Get the ultimate hookups with STA TRAVEL 413-256-1261.

WANTED

Pregnant? Bilingual Spanish couple waiting to adopt. Love nature, music, and animals. Will share these interests with your baby. Happy to share letters, pictures and to stay in touch. Call Brightside 24/7 and ask about Dawn and John. 1-877-777-7774 license# 1465107

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

No. 5 UMass at Army Saturday, Noon ESPNU

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 2005

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Coen earns honors

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

With eight games, a 6-1 starting record and multiple honors already under his belt, redshirt freshman quarterback Liam Coen of the Massachusetts football team was recently given the Golden Helmet Award, which signifies the best college player in New England for the week.

Coen was bestowed this award after ripping through the Delaware defense on Saturday, completing 21-of-26 passes for 318 yards and one touchdown during the Minutemen's 35-7 victory over the Fightin' Blue Hens. One of his completions, an 84-yard missile to receiver Rasheed Rancher in the third quarter, goes down as the second-longest pass in UMass history and proved to be the difference maker on the day.

The Golden Helmet Award is just one of numerous accolades that Coen has nabbed during his first season as a Minuteman signal-caller.

The freshman has been named the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week three weeks in a row.

Following his aerial attack in Delaware, Coen was also named the UMass Dinn Brothers Athlete of the Week for the second time this season.

So far in 2005, Coen has completed 135-of-210 passes for 1758 yards, 10 TDs and three interceptions. He is averaging 219.8 yards per game and has completed 64.3 percent of his passes.

Only three other quarterbacks in the A-10 have a better pass efficiency rating than Coen and he is fourth in the conference in yards per game. His 147.5 rating is also 13th in all of Division I-AA football.

Coen has been the man for UMass since Sept. 17 when former starter Tim Day, a senior, left the game with a rib injury and was replaced by the Rhode Island native. Since that loss against Colgate, Coen has led the Maroon and White to a No. 5 ranking in the country and the top slot in the A-10 alongside New Hampshire. Day is now one of Coen's targets as a receiver.

The last UMass player to achieve the Golden Helmet Award was Steve Baylark following his performance against UNH on Oct. 16, 2004 where he rushed for 192 yards and three touchdowns.

Coen and the Minutemen will look to utilize their passing game when they take on Division I-A Army at Michie Stadium on Saturday at noon.

KAREN WINSLOW/COLLEGIAN

Freshman quarterback Liam Coen was awarded the Golden Helmet Award after his effort in the Minutemen's 35-7 win against Delaware on Saturday.

Changes have hurt Pats

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. — The team that won two straight Super Bowls can't even win two straight games.

Depleted by injuries and dominated by Peyton Manning, the New England Patriots reached the midpoint of their season knowing they have little time to make a big improvement.

"We are back on that roller coaster," linebacker Rosevelt Colvin said. "Up and down, up and down. We have to get off of it if we expect to move forward any time soon."

The Patriots lost 40-21 to the Indianapolis Colts on Monday night and have alternated wins and losses this season. They are 4-4 after going 34-4 the last two seasons. Still, they lead the weak AFC East by one game and, if they finish first, would qualify for at least a wild-card game at home.

Advancing beyond that? Not the way they've played.

When it comes to personnel and performance, the Patriots are much different than they were last season when they beat Philadelphia for the championship and put themselves in position to become the first team to win three consecutive Super Bowls.

How things have changed:

— On defense, the Patriots allowed the ninth fewest yards in the NFL last year but the second most this year. They've already given up 220 points after allowing 260 last season. And they have only six turnovers and 10 sacks.

— On offense, the running game has slowed to a crawl. Corey Dillon, playing with an ankle injury, has rushed for 441 yards in the first eight games, less than half his total of 900 in the same span last year.

— On the sideline, the Patriots are loaded with injured key contributors. Intimidating safety Rodney Harrison was lost for the season in the third game with a knee injury and two Pro Bowl players from last season missed considerable time — linebacker Tedy Bruschi for the first six games after having a mild stroke and defensive end Richard Seymour for the last four with a knee injury. Offensive tackle Matt Light and third-down running back Kevin Faulk also have missed most of the season and are still out.

The only bright side: two-time Super Bowl MVP Tom Brady has been outstanding. He had to be, considering the running problems.

See PATS on page 8

MATT ZAMORA/INDIANAPOLIS STAR

Indianapolis Colts receiver Reggie Wayne makes a TD catch during the team's win against the Patriots on Monday. The Pats now stand at 4-4.

Colon wins Cy Young

By Mike Fitzpatrick
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Bartolo Colon won the American League Cy Young Award on Tuesday in a surprisingly one-sided vote, becoming the first Angels pitcher in 41 years to take home the honor.

Colon, who led the league with 21 wins, was listed first on 17 ballots and second on the other 11 for 118 points in voting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America. He was the only pitcher named on every ballot, easily beating out New York Yankees reliever Mariano Rivera, who received 68 points.

Rivera got eight first-place votes, while 2004 winner Johan Santana of the Minnesota Twins received three and finished third.

"After the season, yeah, I've been thinking about it a lot," Colon said through a translator during a conference from the Dominican Republic. "And one of the prevailing thoughts was the fact that maybe I won't get it. Maybe it was going to go to somebody else. A lot of crazy things came into my head."

Dean Chance was the only other Cy Young Award winner in the Angels' 45-season history, winning in 1964.

Though Colon (21-8) was the league's only 20-game winner, this year's Cy Young race was thought to be close. His 3.48 ERA and 157 strikeouts ranked eighth, while Rivera racked up 43 saves and a career-best 1.38 ERA. Santana went 16-7 with a 2.87 ERA and led the majors with 238 strikeouts.

A shoulder injury sidelined Colon in the playoffs, but voting for all BBWAA awards takes place at the end of the regular season and excludes postseason performance.

"Mariano had a great year," Colon said, thanking Rivera for teaching him how to throw his cut fastball one day during batting practice years ago. "I did think about the fact that maybe he was going to come away and be the winner."

Both pitched for division champions, but the voters ultimately gave more weight to the starter: Colon threw 222 2-3 innings to Rivera's 78 1-3.

And the award was big news in Altamira, Colon's hometown of about 3,000 people.

"You don't even imagine what the scenery is around here. People stopping by and honking their horns," Colon said. "It's been really, really crazy, crazy, crazy. It's the first time ever that we are celebrating something like this. ... There's going to be a lot of partying."

Unfortunately for Los Angeles, Colon wasn't much help in the playoffs. After pitching through back pain all season, he lost Game 1 to the Yankees in the first round, then left Game 5 after only 23 pitches because of inflammation in his right shoulder.

"We would not have been in the position that we were without the year that Bartolo had," Angels manager Mike Scioscia said. "He's got an incredible work ethic.

"His ability to turn his fastball into three different looks is really the key to what he does on the mound. To combine the velocity with the command that he has is a unique package. It puts him in an elite group."

The injured ace was left off the roster for the AL championship series against Chicago, and the Angels were eliminated in five games by the White Sox, who went on to a World Series sweep of Houston.

"I really, desperately wanted to pitch against the White Sox," Colon said. "Mike Scioscia knows the pain that I felt, how hard it was for me to come out of that game and leave the team behind like that."

Cleveland Indians left-hander Cliff Lee came in fourth with eight points, and Mark Buehrle of the White Sox was fifth with five.

Colon gets a $500,000 bonus for winning the award — more than the entire salary of Lee, who made $345,000. Buehrle receives $60,000 for finishing fifth.

PAUL J. BERSWELL/SUN-TIMES

Los Angeles pitcher Bartolo Colon was awarded the Cy Yound Award yesterday after leading the league in wins with 21. Colon is the first pitcher to grab the award for the Angels in 41 years.

Owens apologizes for comments

By Rob Maaddi
Associated Press

MOORESTOWN, N.J. — For once, Terrell Owens put aside his pride, admitted he was wrong and pleaded for a second chance with the Philadelphia Eagles. The team appeared unmoved.

A contrite Owens, hoping to overturn his dismissal from the Eagles, on Tuesday apologized to coach Andy Reid, quarterback Donovan McNabb, the team's owner and president, and fans.

"The mentality that I have, my greatest strength can also be my greatest weakness," Owens said, reading a statement outside his house. "I'm a fighter. I've always been and I'll always be. I fight for what I think is right. In doing so, I alienated a lot of my fans and my teammates."

"This is very painful for me to be in this position," his said. "I know in my heart that I can help the team win the Super Bowl and not only be a dominant player, but also be a team player. I can bring that."

His agent, Drew Rosenhaus, said Owens made a public apology in hopes of returning to the Eagles immediately.

"We hope he plays again for the Philadelphia Eagles," Rosenhaus said. "We hope he plays right away. We hope he plays against the Dallas Cowboys" on Monday night.

See OWENS on page 8

Steroid legislation modified

By Howard Fendrich
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Athletes who test positive for performance-enhancing drugs would be banned for a half-season instead of two years for a first offense under changes made Tuesday to gain support for steroid legislation in the Senate.

The bill, sponsored by Sens. Jim Bunning, R-Ky., and John McCain, R-Ariz., calls for a one-season ban for a second steroid offense and a lifetime ban for a third. It would apply to Major League Baseball, the NFL, NBA, NHL and baseball's minor leagues.

The leagues and their players' unions say they should continue to set their own drug-testing rules and penalties through collective bargaining.

"I think, seriously, that they are under the opinion that we will not act," said Bunning, a former pitcher elected to baseball's Hall of Fame. "We tried to explain to them that we are going to act because of their failure to do so, and I don't think it's sunk in."

Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., has signed on as a co-sponsor, and a vote could come this week. Bunning planned to meet with House leaders and sponsors of similar bills in that chamber.

Under current rules, a first failed drug test draws a 10-day ban in Major League Baseball (roughly 1/16th of a season), a 10-game ban in the NBA (about an eighth of a season), a four-game ban in the NFL (a quarter of a season), and a 20-game ban in the NHL (about a quarter of a season).

The previous Senate bill was based on the penalty model used by the Olympics — a two-year suspension for a first offense, a lifetime ban for a second.

The House has three versions of steroid legislation, including one by Rep. Cliff Stearns, R-Fla., that calls for a half-season ban for a first offense.

"That we can agree on the penalties is very important," Stearns said in a telephone interview. "It's good news for trying to pass a steroid bill."

House Government Reform Committee Chairman Tom Davis, R-Va., whose panel held a March 17 hearing with baseball stars Rafael Palmeiro, Mark McGwire, Jose Canseco and others, has told Bunning and McCain that he probably would accept the three-tier penalty structure, Davis spokesman Dave Marin said.

See STEROIDS on page 8

WHAT'S THE SCORE?

New England's Largest College Daily · Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Thursday, November 10, 2005 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXVI Issue 45

SGA allocates $9,500 to state student group

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association of the University of Massachusetts voted to allocate $9,500 to the Associated Students of Massachusetts from its long-term reserves at last night's SGA meeting.

The Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) organized a state student association named The Associated Students of Massachusetts in 2004, in order to lobby the Legislature on behalf of the students in the public higher education system.

The ASM tracks and lobbies federal legislation and policy, and organizes students from across the state to participate in the political process thorough testifying in official congressional hearings.

The ASM successfully lobbied the Massachusetts Legislature for the Fiscal Year, 2006 budget resulting in an increase of millions of dollars for the UMass system and state and community colleges.

In order to continue and expand efforts such as those that result in increased affordability and accessibility of public higher education, membership dues in accordance with ASM asked the SGA Senate for an allocation of $9,500.

"ASM works to ensure the quality, accessibility and affordability of public higher education and to advocate on issues of public higher education that directly affect the students of the Commonwealth," said ASM member Casey Thomas.

"ASM also develops and maintains relationships with government officials and students of public higher education," said Thomas. "We promote an awareness of issues in public higher education and maintain an active research component while involving students in the political process and educating them on the issues that affect them."

According to the ASM campaign memo, the Massachusetts Governor makes decisions regarding higher education every year with little student input. And with students in Massachusetts public higher education system are effected by these decisions, it's logical to have students lobbying for students.

See SGA on page 2

DAN TERK/COLLEGIAN

Two ROTC students from UMass stand outside Memorial Hall yesterday afternoon as part of a day-long vigil in commemoration of Veteran's Day. A 21-gun salute followed the vigil last night.

Veteran's Day vigil honors fallen soldiers

By Dan Terk
Collegian Staff

A day-long Veteran's Day vigil came to an end as a small group of veterans, ROTC cadets, professors, students and other members of the University of Massachusetts community gathered inside Memorial Hall last night.

While the ceremony was taking place inside, the vigil that began the day before continued on outside. In addition to the two ROTC cadets standing guard in front of the building, another group of cadets stood waiting on the north side of Memorial Hall.

At the beginning of the ceremony, a passage from "What is a Vet" by Father Denise E. O'Brien, Lieutenant Colonel U.S. Marine Corp., was read, which said that sometimes "veterans bear a visible sign of their service: a missing limb, an aged scar, a certain look in their eyes. Others may carry the evidence inside them: a pin holding a bone together, a piece of shrapnel in the leg, or perhaps another sort of inner steel — the soul's value forged in the refinery of adversity."

The group was asked to stand as The Star Spangled Banner was played. After this, an Army ROTC cadet and a Vietnam veteran placed a bouquet of flowers on a table surrounded by four empty chairs in honor of all of those that have served in wartime or have given the ultimate sacrifice for their country.

Lt. Col. David T. Vacchi spoke about what he considered to be the "the new veteran."

"These new men are different," said Vacchi, "[They] are not old, and not ashamed to tell you about their service. They will tell you that they ... have served simply to repay a debt for being a citizen of the greatest country on Earth."

New veterans very well may not be a he,

See VIGIL on page 2

Professor receives grant to study Autism

A team of professors in the Department of Communication Disorders at the University of Massachusetts received a four-year, $730,000 grant from the United States Department of Education to better educate and train graduate students to work with children with Autism Spectrum Disorders (ASD).

The team was led by Associate Professor of Communication Disorders Shelley Velleman, with the help of Mary Andrianopoulos, Christina Foreman and Elena Zaretsky, also associate professors in the Department of Communication Disorders. They collaborated with Dr. Mary Lynn Boscardin, a professor of special education, to implement the objectives of the grant.

ASD is a broad term that is used to describe autism and several other syndromes of similar characteristics. Autism is a developmental disability that can usually be diagnosed within the first three years of life. Its exact cause is unknown, although it is believed to be biological in nature.

Its symptoms are usually manifested in difficulties in the development of language, social and physical skills, as well as abnormal responses to specific kinds or combinations of sensory input. According to Velleman, 50 percent of autistic children do not succeed in communicating orally and depend on sign language. She believes that some of this is due to the way language skills are taught to kids with autism.

"It is our belief that the appropriate assessment and remediation of individuals with ASD hinges on training school personnel, especially speech-language pathologists, to properly determine the nature of the children's speech deficits and to tailor their interventions accordingly," said Velleman.

The diagnosis of ASD has skyrocketed across the United States over the past few decades, according to Velleman. In Massachusetts, the number of school-aged children rose 634 percent from 1992 to 2003. During the same time period school budgets shrunk, forcing children who would be going to specialized schools into schools where the staff is not as knowledgeable about their condition.

The program will seek to remedy this problem by teaching speech-language pathology graduate students how to better assess and treat speech problems in children with ASD. Participants in the program will be trained for this through specialized coursework, training seminars, workshops, and real world experience working with children with ASD from Amherst, Chicopee, Holyoke and Springfield. Over the next four years they will work with between 75 and 100 children with ASD in an on-campus clinic and in their schools.

The program is slated to become a permanent part of the communications disorders curriculum.

—Hayden Marx

Harvard professor talks of hardships for Chinese youth

By Nicole Boonjakuakul
Collegian Correspondent

"Hard work. Hard study. Easy life. STOP DREAMING," was the harsh truth Dr. Vanessa Fong of Harvard University shared with her audience at a lecture at Amherst College Tuesday evening.

Fong wasn't addressing the reality of the American youth. Rather, she spoke of the reality that youths in Dalian, China face everyday.

During the lecture, sponsored by Amherst College's Department of Anthropology and Sociology, Fong examined the dilemmas of the transnational Chinese youth who believe that studying abroad will increase their chances of entering "the global elite."

"Upward mobility is hard to obtain in China," said Fong. "Studying abroad is a youth's ticket to a prestigious education, a career in a First World country, and the acquirement of residency rights in a capitalist nation."

An audience of over 60 people crammed into an average-sized classroom to learn about the reality Chinese youths face in their pursuits of First-World prosperity. Several case studies conducted by Fong illustrate that studying abroad does not guarantee success. In her studies, Fong found situations of unplanned pregnancies in female students, the problem of language and racial barriers for Chinese students, increases in health risks, and severe cases of separation anxiety — all of which were experienced during studying abroad.

"Many females of Dalian, China were never exposed to a lifestyle of sexual freedom," said Fong. "Once these women reached foreign countries that did so, their lives changed immediately. They now faced problems with unplanned pregnancies or making decisions about fertility which led to a downfall in their educational opportunities."

A male student studied by Fong experienced a great deterioration in his health, as well as racial discrimination while studying abroad in Great Britain.

"This student had hopes to earn a degree in First-World Britain," she said. "But he became so consumed with work and paying off his student costs that he fell victim to severe back pains. When he sought help from local British doctors, they refused to help him because he was Chinese."

According to Fong, situations such as these were common. Many Chinese students in Australia, Ireland, and the United Kingdom were forced to work manual labor to pay for their education, which not only caused health problems, but failed to contribute to a growth in their English-speaking skills.

Fong explained that this study abroad obsession is a result of early exposure to First-World prestige to the children of Dalian.

See CHINA on page 4

Suicide bombers shake Jordan's capital

By Jamal Halaby
Associated Press

AMMAN, Jordan — Suicide bombers attacked three hotels frequented by Westerners in the Jordanian capital Wednesday night, and at least 53 people were killed and more than 300 wounded in the near-simultaneous explosions, a top government official said.

Deputy Prime Minister Marwan Muasher gave the casualty estimate during an interview with CNN, in which he also said a car packed with explosives approached one of the hotels attacked in the heart of the capital. He said there was no claim of responsibility, but Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, the Jordanian-born leader of al-Qaida in Iraq terrorist group, was a "prime suspect."

Police Maj. Bashir al-Da'aja said officials believe the blasts at three U.S.-based hotels were carried out by suicide bombers. The explosions indicated the involvement of al-Qaida, which has launched coordinated attacks on high-profile, Western targets in the past, a police official said.

One explosion occurred in a wedding hall where 300 Jordanians were celebrating. Muasher said a suicide bomber detonated his explosives in the wedding party. Black smoke rose into the night and wounded stumbled out of the hotels.

A U.S. counterterrorism official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, also said no one claimed responsibility for the attacks.

However, the official said, the strong suspicion is that al-Zarqawi was involved because of his known animosity for Jordan and the fact that suicide bombers were involved, one of his hallmarks.

In Washington, Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice called the bombings "a great tragedy. It again shows that people will take innocent life without any remorse."

She added that the bombings demonstrate the difficulty the nation is facing in the war on terrorism.

The first blast was reported at about 8:50 p.m. at the luxury Grand Hyatt hotel, popular with tourists and diplomats, and completely shattered its stone entrance.

An Associated Press reporter counted seven bodies being taken away and many more wounded being carried out on stretchers. Prime Minister Adnan Badran later arrived at the scene.

A few minutes later, police reported an explosion at the Radisson SAS Hotel a short distance away. Police said five people were killed and at least 20 were wounded in the blast at a wedding hall where at least 300 people were celebrating.

The hotel is popular with American and Israeli tourists and was the target of a plot in 2000. Israel's ambassador to Jordan, Yaakov Hadas, told Israel TV from Amman there were no reports of Israeli casualties.

"We thought it was fireworks for the wedding but I saw people falling to the ground," said Ahmed, a wedding guest who did not give his surname. "I saw blood. There were people

See JORDAN on page 3

CNN/REUTERS

A suicide bomb rocked the Raddisson Hotel and two others in Amman, the Jordanian capitol, yesterday. 53 were killed and over 300 were wounded.

Higgins re-elected as Northampton's mayor

Two closely watched mayoral races in Chicopee and Northampton came to a close yesterday.

The winners: Northampton incumbent Mary Clare Higgins, and Chicopee candidate Michael Bissonnette, who won by a landslide after the city's current mayor, Richard Goyette, was arrested on federal extortion charges.

Mayor-elect Bissonnette said he'll be ready to take over control of the Chicopee by the end of the week. He just needs the OK to do it.

The city's Board of Aldermen has asked Goyette to resign, but the mayor has told them he has no plans to step down before his term expires in January.

If Goyette bows to mounting public and political pressure to change his mind, Bissonnette can take over immediately.

Bissonnette, a 51-year-old lawyer, said Wednesday should be "a day of reflection for the sitting mayor."

"The voters sent him a message for what he should do," Bissonnette said, stopping short of making a personal plea for Goyette to resign.

Goyette, 36, could not be reached for comment Tuesday night. His telephone line was busy, and he's been largely out of public view since his arrest.

Goyette withdrew from his bid for a second two-year term last week, two days after the FBI arrested and charged him with taking two illegal $5,000 campaign contributions from city businessmen.

Meanwhile, Higgins, who won 61.5 percent of the vote against challenger Richard J. Feldman, celebrated her victory at Café Lebanon in Northampton Tuesday night.

Winning this election is "an affirmation of the work I've done over the past few years," Higgins told the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

Higgins won six of Northampton's seven wards in the election.

Feldman won 38.5 percent of the vote. He only announced his candidacy four months ago.

"I can't say I'm shocked," Feldman said to the Hampshire Gazette. "I was basically an unknown entity until very late in the campaign."

—Associated Press and Collegian Staff

ARTS & LIVING
DO A DEGRASSI
Jay and Silent Bob strike back... again, in 'Do a Degrassi.'
PAGE 6

EDITORIAL/OPINION
NO MORE 'REAL WORLD'
With type cast house-mates when will the producers learn?
PAGE 5

WEATHER
TODAY Showers, H50°
TONIGHT L27°
TOMORROW Sunny, H46°, L26°

SPORTS
WAR TIME
UMass squares off with Division I-A foe Army in West Point Saturday.
PAGE 12

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael Busack
Managing Editor Cameron J. Woods
Business Manager Hirak Shah
Production Manager Nicholas Belanger
Night Supervisor Sheryl Wolnik
Advertising Manager Kerry O'Grady
Advertising Production Lauren Egavian
Editorial Production Amanda Allen
Arts & Living Editor Matthew O'Rourke
Comics Editor Amanda Allen
Editorial Editor Allison Edles
News Editor Dan O'Brien
Photo Editor Kate Sachenmaier
Sports Editor Jeff Howe
Circulation Manager Thomas Hecht
Distribution Manager Nick Gleason
Finance Manager Daniel Conti
Human Resource Phil Smoller
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Caren Tortorici
Assistant Business Nathan Chomsky
Asst. Arts & Living Mackenzie Isler
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Jones
Assistant News Megan Daley
Assistant News Matt Bellavan
Assistant Photo Elizabeth Carlisi
Assistant Sports Eric Athas
Assistant Sports Dan Duggan
Assistant Editorial Kristen LaCasse

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian was men's broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

Night Editor
Sheryl Wolnik

Photo Technician
Jamie Lau

Copy Editor
Katie Huston

Production Supervisor
Nick Belanger

Production Staff
Chris Mann, Kristen LaCasse

UMass honors vets

VIGIL from page 1

but rather a she. They are also young. Unlike in the past, where veterans have been middle aged, there is a growing number of veterans who have served their one tour, feel that they have paid their service, and "have moved on to the next chapter of their lives," said Vacchi, who said there are two to three hundred of these "new veterans" attending UMass.

Vacchi's speech was followed by an explanation of the 21-gun salute and the playing of "Taps."

The 21-gun salute is an internationally recognized symbol of peace that was first used in the fourteenth century when a single shot of a cannon rendered it useless.

"Taps" is regard as "the most beautiful of all bugle calls," according to Cadet Wilson. "Played smoothly and softly, it has a smooth, tender and touching character," Wilson said. It was written by a Civil War general and his bugler in 1872.

After losing over 600 men, the general encouraged his men back into battle, and "Taps" is now renowned as the musical tribute to fallen comrades.

The final moments of the ceremony were the most solemn. The crowd again rose and faced the window as if the sound of the seven guns fired in three volleys by unseen cadets would not be loud enough to hear. This was followed by the playing of "Taps," once from a bugler inside the building, and again from one outside. With the final note of "Taps," the vigil, along with the ceremony, was over.

Vacchi said after the ceremony, "I think now, with more and more veterans ... it is very important, at any moment, to know who you are talking to and that you may be talking to a veteran, and that they may not be this flag-waving, conservative, right wing person — maybe they are just someone who served, and we ought to thank them for that every chance we get."

SGA allocates funds

SGA from page 1

According to Thomas, Massachusetts spending on higher education has decreased over 30 percent and tuition and fees at UMass have increased over 50 percent in the last five years.

"In the 2002-03 academic year, Massachusetts was leading the way in tuition increases," said Thomas. "It jumped 24 percent at four-year colleges and universities."

According to ASM, UMass Dartmouth and UMass Lowell had the third and fourth highest tuition increases in the country.

In addition to rising tuition fees, financial aid support is falling, according the ASN campaign.

"The Federal Pell Grant. The cornerstone of financial aid used to cover 35 percent of educational costs in 1980 Currently, the average Pell Grant is approximately $2,500 and the program only covers 23 percent of educational costs. The state has also cut financial aid spending. In 2002-2003 academic year financial aid spending was cut 24 percent, from $113.9 million to $86.9 million."

The ASM is part of the United States Student Association that lobbies for students on a national level.

The Senate also allocated $1,700 from the Finance reserves to the UMass Wrestling Club.

According the SGA, the Wrestling Club is one of the University's most active Registered Student Organizations as well as one of its most successful club teams, currently ranked second in the nation among more than 200 club wrestling teams.

President Pavel Payano also praised UMass students for their input in last weeks Faculty Senate meeting, in which students debated with officials over the possibility of random room searches.

"The meeting was originally to be about alcohol abuse on campus, but the students really forced the issue and brought random room searches into debate," said Payano. "The Faculty Senate originally told us that they are 'implementing' the random room searches, after this meeting it changed to 'possibly' implement this change."

For the record...

In last Thursday's Daily Collegian, the article "SGA allots funds for student litigation service" incorrectly said Vice Chancelor Michael Gargano withdrew certain litigation powers from the Student Legal Services Office, which was incorrect. We apologize for the error.

Popular French cities impose curfews in face of civil unrest

By Jocelyn Gecker
Associated Press

PARIS — The French Riviera cities of Nice and Cannes, best known for glitz and film festivals that attract Hollywood stars, were among areas that imposed curfews for minors Wednesday even as rioting abated.

The government toughened its stance against those involved in France's worst civil unrest since its 1968 student riots. Interior Minister Nicolas Sarkozy said local officials have been told to deport the 120 foreigners convicted so far for their roles in the violence.

Although rioting persisted in some places for a 13th night, car burnings fell by nearly half and reports of violence dropped. Nonetheless, looters and vandals defied a state of emergency imposed by the government Tuesday, with attacks on superstores in northern France and a newspaper warehouse and a subway station in the south.

New arson attacks broke out Wednesday evening in the southern city of Toulouse, which was hit earlier this week. Vandals set four cars ablaze and rammed a burning car into a primary school, damaging its entrance, the local government said.

The 12-day state of emergency went into effect at midnight Tuesday. For much of France — including Paris — it had no perceptible effect. That such extraordinary measures were needed, however, has fueled national introspection about the country's failure to integrate its African and Muslim minorities — seen as a key reason behind the rioting.

The decree paved the way for possible curfews in Paris, the surrounding communities, and more than 30 other cities and towns nationwide if officials feel they are needed. By Wednesday evening, only a few municipalities and regions imposed them; Paris had not.

In Nice, Cannes and 19 other towns in the Riviera region known as Alpes-Maritimes, including the resort of Antibes, minors are forbidden from being outdoors between 10 p.m. and 5 a.m. without adult supervision. Certain bars in Nice were ordered closed during those hours for 10 days.

There have been no direct clashes between youths and police in the Riviera but unrest that began in the area Friday had persisted in some towns for four nights.

Arsonists struck a warehouse used by Nice-Matin newspaper in the town of Grasse, national police spokesman Patrick Reydy said. A total of 161 cars have been burned — about half in the Nice area — and nine buildings damaged across the Riviera region.

Interior Minister Nicolas Sarkozy, who previously inflamed passions by referring to troublemakers as "scum," said 120 foreigners have been convicted for roles in the violence, and he called on local authorities to expel them.

"I have asked regional prefects to expel foreigners who were convicted — whether they have proper residency papers or not — without delay," he said.

Far-right leader Jean-Marie Le Pen, in an interview Wednesday with The Associated Press, said French nationals of immigrant backgrounds should be stripped of their nationality and sent "back to their country of origin" if they committed crimes.

He and others on the extreme right are trying to capitalize on the unrest by arguing that it shows the dangers of immigration. Le Pen said the riots were "just the start" of conflicts caused by "massive immigration from countries of the Third World that is threatening not just France but the whole continent."

The state-of-emergency decree invoked a 50-year-old security law dating from France's colonial war in Algeria. It empowers officials to put troublemakers under house arrest, ban or limit the movement of people and vehicles, confiscate weapons and close public spaces where gangs gather.

The violence started Oct. 27 among youths in Seine-Saint-Denis, a town northeast of Paris, angry over the accidental deaths of two teenagers, but it grew into a nationwide insurrection of arson and clashes with police.

Anger and unrest appears to be subsiding in Seine-Saint-Denis, which decided not to impose a curfew.

"Things have got better," said Bernard Fragneau, the top government official for the Essonne region southwest of Paris. He noted that car burnings there have decreased and there were no direct clashes in the past two nights. He said he had decided against a curfew.

In Normandy, the Seine-Maritime department announced curfews for minors in four towns, including Rouen and Le Havre. Similar curfews were announced for the northern city of Amiens and central Orleans. Curfew violators face up to two months in jail and a $4,400 fine, the Justice Ministry said. Minors face one month in jail.

In some towns, residents have banded together to keep overnight watch on public buildings and to patrol their neighborhoods, some armed only with fire extinguishers. Police have been reinforced, with an additional 1,000 officers dispatched overnight to bring the total deployment to 11,500, said National Police Chief Michel Gaudin. He attributed the drop in attacks to police sweeps and cooperation from community groups.

Second suspect arraigned in Marlborough Amber Alert case

MARLBOROUGH (AP) — A man accused of helping his girlfriend kidnap her daughter from her foster home by hiding the 5-year-old in a suitcase was ordered held without bail on Wednesday.

Denis Piper, 43, pleaded innocent in Marlborough District Court on charges including kidnapping and assault. Prosecutors say Piper helped his girlfriend, Cathleen Trotta, kidnap her daughter, Grace, from her foster home in Marlborough on Monday.

The pair allegedly assaulted Grace's foster mother, Rebecca Borey, and her 18-year-old daughter before kidnapping Grace and Borey's 3-year-old son.

The boy, Christian Borey, was found later Monday in Malden unharmed. A statewide Amber alert had been issued for the public's help in finding the children.

Grace was discovered zipped inside a suitcase at a hotel near Logan Airport, where Trotta had gone to hide from police.

Trotta, 37, was arraigned Tuesday and ordered to undergo an evaluation for competency and criminal responsibility. She is expected back in court at the end of the month.

Piper is scheduled to be in court on Monday for a dangerousness hearing, the Middlesex District Attorney's Office said.

Associated Press

I AM INSTANT MESSAGING
I AM EMAIL
I AM TEXT MESSAGING
I AM VOICE CHAT
I AM VIDEO CHAT
I AM AIM
AIM.COM

Campus to Career PROGRAMS
Expanding knowledge beyond the classroom
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Networking...
It's All WHO You Know.
Learn how to identify contacts and leverage relationships to build your career.

Tuesday, November 15, 2005
4:00 p.m. - Memorial Hall

WITH ALUMNI GUEST SPEAKERS

Eric Friedberg '90
Eric is a founding partner at Cohen-Friedberg Associates (CFA), a marketing firm specializing in traditional, retail specific and online promotions for national and regional clients such as Gorton's, Jolly Time Popcorn, Pizza Hut and Dunkin' Donuts. Prior to CFA, he founded UniverCity Newspaper and UniverCity.com. He also developed one of the first Fantasy Sports challenges.

Patrick Hadley '90
Patrick founded Hadley Media, a diversified media and marketing services firm located in New York City that works with Fortune 500 companies to connect their brands with consumers. He first gained experience in sales and marketing as representative for Van Den Berg Foods, a division of Unilever, and also with Becton Dickenson.

FREE PIZZA • FREE SODA

To register for this FREE event, visit the Alumni Association website at www.UMassAlumni.com/students.

For more information contact Melanie Corbeil, Associate Director for Student and Alumni Programs at 545-9705 or mcorbeil@admin.umass.edu

Suicide attack rocks hotels in Jordan

JORDAN from page 1

killed. It was ugly."

Dana Burde, from New York, was in the lobby of the Radisson at the time of that explosion.

"We were sort of blown out of the room, but the wall sort of caved in," Burde told CNN. "There was a lot of debris, certainly people were killed."

A third explosion was reported at the Days Inn Hotel. Muasher said a car packed with explosives approached the hotel but could not cross a protective barrier, so it detonated outside.

At the Grand Hyatt, an American businessman said the explosion occurred in the lobby of the five-star hotel. Witnesses saw smoke rising from the building.

The Grand Hyatt Amman has 316 guest rooms and 50 luxury residential apartments in the adjoining Hyatt Tower. The hotel, with a beige-and-cream facade and a shiny gold revolving door, is located in the heart of Amman's business and diplomatic district on Hussein Bin Ali Street.

The five-star Radisson SAS Hotel has 260 guest rooms. Its main entrance is covered by a white portico with several dozen international flags lining the top.

The three hotels have security guards hired from a private Jordanian firm stationed in the reception areas. Each of the hotels has one or two police cars guarding the buildings around the clock.

Amman has become a base for Westerners who fly in and out of Iraq for work. The main luxury hotels downtown are often full of American and British officials and contractors enjoying the relative quiet of the Jordanian capital.

The hotels also have become a gathering spot for affluent Iraqis who have fled their country's violence. Their presence — and money — has caused an economic boom, with high-priced prostitution also putting in an appearance.

King Abdullah II cut short his official visit to Kazakhstan and was returning home immediately. "The hand of justice will get to the criminals who targeted innocent secure civilians with their cowardly acts," he said in a statement carried by the official Petra news agency.

Security was beefed up across the capital, especially around hotels and diplomatic missions, police said. Armed policemen and cars patrolled the streets, and Badran declared Thursday a national holiday — apparently in order to allow tightened security measures to take hold.

Jordan, a close U.S. ally, has arrested scores of Islamic militants for plotting to carry out attacks in the moderate Arab kingdom. It has also sentenced numerous militants to death in absentia, including al-Zarqawi.

In July, prosecutors indicted five Jordanians in an alleged conspiracy to attack intelligence agents, tourists and hotels in Amman. Al-Zarqawi has not been linked to the alleged plot.

Explosion leaves Lexington home in pieces

LEXINGTON — A Lexington home exploded in a ball of fire Wednesday after an apparent natural gas leak, prompting the fire department to evacuate 1,500 homes in the area.

The house, located at 3 Hancock Ave., is owned by Dr. Elliot Thrasher, a surgeon at Massachusetts General Hospital, and his wife Antra Thrasher.

Antra Thrasher and her son escaped the blast with minor injuries, said Fire Chief William Middlemiss, adding that they were "fortunate to get out."

"The son, from our understanding, was working inside the house. He heard something pop. He went downstairs. He smelled the odor of gas. As he exited the building, the building exploded," Middlemiss said.

The mother was reportedly outside raking at the time of the explosion. They were both treated at Massachusetts General Hospital.

Firefighters from Lexington, Waltham, Bedford, Belmont, Burlington and Hanscom Air Force Base battled the roaring blaze for about two hours. The two-story house was burned to the ground.

Middlemiss said crews from gas company KeySpan Energy were working to shut off the natural gas in the area. He said the system "overpressurized" at some point Wednesday morning and that "overpressurization led to the explosion."

A shelter was set up by the Red Cross at a local high school for the evacuated residents.

—Associated Press and Collegian Staff

A firefighter tends to the rubbel that once was a Civil War-era home on 3 Hancock Ave. in Lexington, which exploded yesterday due to "overpressurization" of a natural gas line.

Uncle of girl behind 'Melanie's Bill' busted for D.U.I.

BOSTON (AP) — The uncle of a 13-year-old Marshfield girl whose death in a drunk driving accident inspired a law in her name has been arrested for operating under the influence.

Kevin Satterthwaite, 49, is the uncle of the late Melanie Powell, who was struck and killed by a repeat drunken driver in 2003.

Quincy police said Satterthwaite was intoxicated behind the wheel of his Ford Expedition on Saturday evening, just a week after the new drunk driving law took effect.

The Boston Herald on Wednesday reported that Satterthwaite headbutted and kicked a police officer during his arrest.

"I'm very remorseful," Satterthwaite told the newspaper at his Quincy home. "This is very emotional. It's a difficult time for me. I carried Melanie's coffin down the church aisle."

Police said it was his second offense, meaning he could face tough new penalties under "Melanie's law."

The new law lets prosecutors use certified court records to prove prior convictions when seeking punishment for repeat drunken drivers. In the past they had to rely on the testimony of eyewitnesses or the arresting officer — a difficult task in cases where the prior offense occurred years earlier.

Satterthwaite is divorced from Melanie's father's sister, Elisabeth Powell. He said he attends Alcoholics Anonymous meetings and has been struggling with the divorce and unemployment.

"I made a mistake," he said. "I'm just glad no one was hurt."

As a condition of reinstatement for repeat offenders who lose their licenses, the new law mandates the use of "interlock devices," which require drivers to blow into a tube to prove they haven't been drinking before they can start their cars.

Kevin Satterthwaite, the uncle of drunk driving victim Melanie Powell, inspiration of "Melanie's Bill."

—Associated Press

Menino gets four more years as Boston's mayor

Boston Mayor Tom Menino celebrates Tuesday night.

BOSTON (AP) — Incumbent Thomas M. Menino, once derided as Boston's "accidental mayor", handily defeated challenger Maura Hennigan on Tuesday to win a fourth term as mayor, setting his sights on becoming the city's longest-serving chief executive.

It was a sweet victory for the lifelong Boston resident after a sometimes testy battle for the city's top political office. Menino received about 68 percent of the vote to Hennigan's 32 percent, unofficial results showed.

Menino, who had battled charges of stagnation during the campaign, pledged a fresh start, promising to recruit new faces and promote fresh thinking in his administration.

"Tomorrow things will be different. The voters have a new expectation for us. You have new hopes for me. And I have new dreams for this city," Menino told hundreds of cheering supporters at the Fairmont Copley Plaza in Boston. "Four years from now we will look back and say we tackled the biggest challenges."

Until the end, Hennigan held out hope for an upset win. During her concession speech, she thanked supporters and told them she had called Menino to concede.

"I want you to know that I said to him take good care of this city because this city deserves it," she said. "We made a difference in making this city a better place."

Associated Press

WHO WILL BE THE NEXT
Massachusetts Governor?

Tom Reilly
Democrat
Attorney General of Massachusetts

Deval Patrick
Democrat
Former US Deputy Attorney General

Hear the candidates speak
BACK TO BACK!
This Saturday Nov 12th
Student Union Ballroom 10am Sharp

Keynote Address by U.S. Congressman
Barney Frank (D)

Only 10 bucks - breakfast & lunch included
To attend this exclusive event,
you must register at:
www.UMassDems.org

WHY WAIT FOR AN ELECTION YEAR?
BUY YOUR POLITICS THIS SATURDAY NIGHT!
Liberal DATE AUCTION
Student Union Ballroom, 9pm

Enter to win Gift Certificates to great area restaurants!

Monday, Nov 14th at Franklin DC
Franklin favorites
Sirloin Tips with Red Wine
Chicken Fingers
Caesar Salad
Taco Bar
Mexican Rice
Ben & Jerrys
Lemon Creme Cake
Starbucks
from 5-8pm

Tuesday, Nov 15th at Hampshire DC
cafe talésai
Tom Khar Gai Chicken Coconut Soup
Thai Spring Rolls with Sweet Chili Sauce
Thai Salad Station with Authentic Thai Salad Dressing
Shrimp Satay with Peanut Sauce
Tofu Saute with Peanut Sauce
Grilled Salmon with Penang Curry
Roast Pork with Yellow Curry
Pad Thai Noodle with Tofu
Jasmine Rice
Stir Fry Vegetables
Black Glutanous Rice with Coconut milk
Coconut Custard
from 5-8pm

Restaurant WEEK
NOV. 14-17th

from 5-9pm
EASTSIDE
Spicy Buffalo Style Portobello Mushrooms
Mojo Pork Tenderloin with Salsa Verde Cream
Chicken Etouffee
Wild Salmon with Black Olive Vinaigrette
Shrimp Czarina with Tomato Risotto
Parmesan Asparagus
Garlicky Pasta with Asparagus
Bananas Foster Bread Pudding

Thurs. Nov 17th at Worcester DC

from 5-9pm
長城 Great Wall
General TSO Chicken
Shrimp Stir Fry
Spare Ribs
Spring Rolls
Vegetable Fried Rice
Roast Pig
Scallion Pancakes
Mandarin Salad
Fortune Cookies

Wed. Nov 16th at Berkshire DC

from 5-9pm

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Dining Award

British lawmakers reject anti-terror bill

LONDON (AP) — In a political blow to Prime Minister Tony Blair, British lawmakers on Wednesday rejected tough anti-terrorism legislation that would have allowed suspects to be detained for 90 days without charge.

The House of Commons vote was the first major defeat of Blair's premiership and raises serious questions about his grip on power. Blair had staked his authority on the measure and doggedly refused to compromise.

Lawmakers, including 49 members of Blair's Labour Party, opted instead for a maximum detention period for terror suspects of 28 days without charge.

Michael Howard, leader of the opposition Conservative Party, said Blair's authority had "diminished almost to vanishing point" and said he should consider resigning.

"This vote shows he is no longer able to carry his own party with him. He must now consider his position," said Howard.

But Blair was defiant. He ruled out resignation and insisted lawmakers had been wrong to put the civil liberties of a small number of terrorists ahead of the "fundamental civil liberty of this country to protection from terrorism."

"The country will think that Parliament has behaved in a deeply irresponsible way today," he added.

Lawmakers voted 322 to 291 against 90-day detentions and backed the 28-day period by 323-290 votes.

The result is a humiliating blow to Blair. For eight years, his Labour government commanded an unassailable lead in the Commons and easily swatted aside opposition to its legislation.

Texas voters ban same-sex marriages

HOUSTON — Voters made Texas the 19th state to constitutionally ban same-sex marriage in a landslide vote Tuesday.

As of 10:30 p.m. Tuesday, with 70 percent of precincts reporting, 72 percent of voters supported Proposition 2, which will establish a state constitutional amendment defining marriage as only between a man and a woman.

Like every other state except Massachusetts, Texas didn't permit same-sex marriages previously, but the constitutional amendment was touted as an extra guard against future court rulings, and the amendment also bars state institutions from recognizing the legal status of same-sex marriages or civil unions created outside of Texas.

The lopsided returns shocked gays and gay rights leaders, but they vowed to continue a state-by-state battle for recognition of same-sex unions, The Associated Press reported.

"The fight for fairness isn't over, and we won't give up," President of the Human Rights Campaign Joe Solmones told the AP. "These amendments are part of a long-standing effort by the extreme right to eliminate any legal recognition for gay people and our families."

—U-WIRE

School shooting suspect arraigned

JACKSBORO, Tenn. (AP) — A 15-year-old accused of shooting an assistant principal to death and wounding two other administrators should be tried as an adult, the district attorney said Wednesday, adding that the victims performed heroically to keep the shootings from becoming even worse.

Ken Bartley Jr. was being held without bond in a juvenile detention facility in Knoxville and could have an initial court appearance in the next few days. A judge ultimately will decide whether he should be tried as a juvenile or an adult.

"It is appropriate that he be tried as an adult and subject to adult penalties," District Attorney Paul Phillips said.

Authorities said the shooting Tuesday at the 1,400-student Campbell County Comprehensive High School began after Bartley, a freshman, was called to the office because other students had seen him with a gun on campus.

When Principal Gary Seale and Assistant Principals Jim Pierce and Ken Bruce began questioning the boy, he allegedly opened fire. The administrators and an unidentified teacher wrestled the .22-caliber pistol from him.

Bruce, 48, was shot in the chest and died at a hospital.

Seale, 55, was shot in the lower abdomen and Pierce, 56, was hit in the chest. Both were hospitalized in intensive care, but investigators planned to interview them Wednesday.

Their families asked "for privacy as they concentrate on the recovery of their loved ones," hospital spokeswoman Lisa McNeal said.

Bartley was wounded in the hand when his gun discharged.

Senate fuels arguments against oil execs

By H. Josef Hebert
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Oil executives sought to justify their huge profits under tough questioning Wednesday, but they found little sympathy from senators who said their constituents are suffering from high energy prices.

"Your sacrifice appears to be nothing," Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., told the executives, citing multimillion-dollar bonuses the officials are receiving amid soaring prices at gasoline pumps and predictions of more of the same for winter heating bills.

There is a "growing suspicion that oil companies are taking unfair advantage," said Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M. "The oil companies owe the American people an explanation."

The executives represented five major companies that, along with their global parent corporations, earned more than $32.8 billion during the July-September quarter. Consumers, meanwhile, saw gasoline prices soar beyond $3 a gallon in the aftermath of supply disruptions caused by Hurricanes Katrina and Rita.

Lee Raymond, chairman of ExxonMobil Corp., the world's largest publicly traded oil company, acknowledged the high gasoline and home heating prices "have put a strain on Americans' household budgets," but he defended his company's profits. Petroleum earnings "go up and down" from year to year and are in line with other industries when compared with the industry's enormous revenues.

It would be a mistake, said Raymond, for the government to impose "punitive measures hastily crafted in response to short-term market fluctuations." They would probably result in less investment by the industry in refineries and other oil projects, he said.

ExxonMobil earned nearly $10 billion in the third quarter. Raymond was joined at the witness table by the chief executives of Chevron Corp., ConocoPhillips Co., BP America Inc. and Shell Oil Co.

But senators pressed the executives to explain why gasoline prices jumped so sharply in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, when prices at the pump in some areas soared by $1 a gallon or more overnight.

Sen. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., asked why the industry didn't freeze prices, as it did after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

"We had to respond to the market," replied Chevron chairman David O'Reilly.

Raymond said that after Sept. 11 "the industry wasn't concerned about whether there was adequate supply," as it was after this year's Gulf storms. By keeping prices higher, adequate supplies were assured, he maintained.

Democrats said that during the storm some ExxonMobil gas station operators complained the company had raised the wholesale price of its gas by 24 cents a gallon in 24 hours.

Raymond said his company had issued guidelines "to minimize the increase in price" but added, "If we kept the price too low we would quickly run out (of fuel) at the service stations."

"It was a tough balancing act," said Raymond, who said ExxonMobil was not price gouging.

A number of Democrats have called for windfall profits taxes on the industry. Other senators, including Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., have said it may be time to enact a federal law on price gouging.

Some Republican and Democratic lawmakers have suggested that the oil companies should funnel some of their earnings to supplement a federal program that helps low-income households pay heating bills.

That brought a cool reception from the executives.

"As an industry we feel it is not a good precedent to fund a government program," said James Mulva, chairman of ConocoPhillips.

The head of the Federal Trade Commission said a federal price-gouging law "likely will do more harm than good."

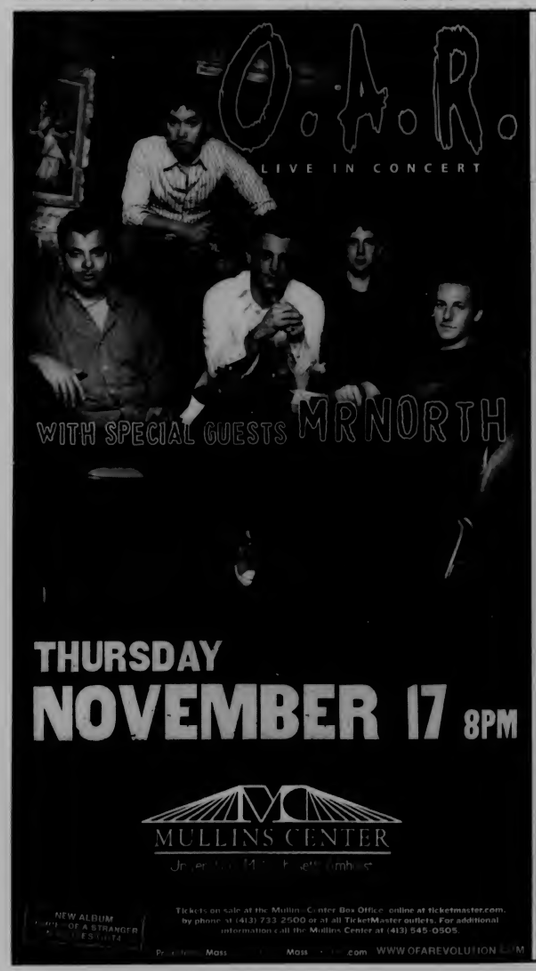
"While no consumers like price increases, in fact, price increases lower demand and help make the shortage shorter-lived than it otherwise would have been," FTC Chairman Deborah Platt Majoras told the hearing.

Lee Raymond, C.E.O. of ExxonMobil, left, takes his seat before the start of yesterday's joint Senate Energy and Commerce Committee hearing on record industry profits on Capitol Hill.

Chinese youth face uncertainty

CHINA from page 1

"Babies can be seen wearing bibs that say 'To Europe by train,'" she said. "There's tons of American and European advertisement in China, which associates the idea of 'coolness' with these nations. The capitalist world convinces teenagers that the First World is so much more fun than China."



Another reason for the promotion of studying abroad deals with China's "One Child Policy," a policy that pushes parents to invest everything in their only child to create the "Super Child." Because of capitalist propaganda and ambitious parents trying to create their "Super Child," studying abroad for students in Dalian, China has become a craze. Parents in China, according to Fong, believe that "hard work builds endurance for hardships," which is why they send their children to foreign countries alone.

"It's now a matter of quality over quantity in China, and in order to gain that 'quality,' a teenager must step out of Third-World China and into a First World nation," said Fong.

At the end of the lecture, several students in the audience stated their opposition to the presented information. They believed it was unfair to represent the idea that every Chinese student who goes abroad fails to achieve success, or just to represent China as a whole in that way.

After two rounds of applause for Fong's studies, an Amherst College professor proclaimed, "Global capital is shifting to Asia!"

For more information on Fong and her studies, visit: www.harvard.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2005

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." —Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Coming to grips with reality

Matt Brochu

My relationship with MTV's "The Real World" began in 1992. Being 10 years old, I wasn't allowed to watch MTV, and looking back on it, I don't really blame my parents. Tuning into "The Grind" was like watching an X-rated workout video — just a tangled mess of arms, legs covered in jean shorts, Marky Mark, his Funky Bunch and too many good vibrations for one half hour to handle.

Sure, "The Real World" and I had our ups and downs — Miami, London and Montana being the low points — but every time I thought we were through, someone like Puck would stick his booger-covered finger in someone like Pedro's peanut butter and I'd be sucked back in. But time passes. People grow up. Reality television shows change. Though I hoped it would never come to this, "The Real World" and I are just in different places now, and as a result, I've stopped watching.

For starters, the new cast is miserable. When the phenomenon began, you actually felt like you had a shot at getting picked to live in a house to find out what happens when people stop being polite and start getting real. These were normal people with normal goals and normal flaws. Granted, the most common flaw was ugliness (Pam from season two would have to go on "The Swan" three consecutive times before the Miz would date her), but even Six from "Blossom" seemed cute in the early '90s, so everything's relative. Nowadays, with the exception of the "weird one" (whose sole purpose is to tie up the house phone by complaining to her Goth boyfriend), everyone looks like they were plucked right out of a Hollister dressing room.

> Let's face it, I could throw 100 water balloons into a strip club and 99 of them would hit girls with better personalities than the one possessed by Robin from "Real World: San Diego."

Being one myself, I have no problem with really, really good-looking people. Not only that, but Real Worlders usually have cool names to match. Genesis, for instance, was named after an '80s band fronted by Phil Collins. But beyond the names and the six-packs, there's no substance, no personality, no reason to progress past the, "What kind of cheap beer is this?" question in the keg line. Let's face it, I could throw 100 water balloons into a strip club and 99 of them would hit girls with better personalities than the one possessed by Robin from "Real World: San Diego."

For reasons unbeknownst to me, the casting directors at Bunim-Murray Productions lost their touch. Instead of looking for individuals who bring something to the table, they began seeking out individuals who will get hammered and dance on tables. At this point, they could pick six good-looking kids out of the Antonio's line after the bars let out on a Friday night, add a homeless dude to play the part of the weird one, and end up with a virtually identical set of seven strangers.

On top of this, the entire scope has changed. The original cast members didn't move to New York with hopes of being recognized in bar bathrooms across the country. They didn't forfeit their privacy for the chance of one day hooking up with a 31-year-old Veronica on "The Inferno 9." And they sure as hell didn't put their lives on hold for the opportunity to give Brad an atomic wedgie in a moving van.

They ventured to New York for the same reasons that you or I would — to test-drive a city for six months with no pressure to buy, to be able to go out to dinner without being waited on by a member of their high school class, to pursue careers that wouldn't have been possible in their boring, backwoods hometowns, and to do all of this without expectation — and more importantly, without rent.

In the first few seasons, we watched Heather B scrape together cash to record hip hop classics like "Da Heartbreaka" and "All Glocks Down." We looked on as Judd struggled to find work as a cartoonist and as Eric Nies competed against other pretty boys — and against his receding hairline — to fulfill his dream of becoming a model. These people weren't necessarily successful, but at least they tried. And we continued to watch, in part because we knew that some day we'd have to go through the same thing.

Not anymore. Instead of being given the freedom to explore the city for the purpose of finding out what it has in store for them, jobs are now shoved down their throats by the second week. Their futures are now more predictable than Harry Potter 7 (he'll kill Voldemort, save the world, then lose his virginity), and it's fairly certain that their newfound pseudo-celebrity lives will bear no resemblance to our own. Will we ever be able to sip Coronas by a pool as the spin-off offers roll in, knowing full well that at any time, we could win $50,000 and a brand new Saturn Ion for eating horse testicles off Tanya's bikini-covered butt in under 60 seconds? I hardly think so.

Nowadays, the previews tell the story. This week on "Real World: Austin," Johanna gets drunk and assaults a homeless person, Wes calls 15 "groupies" and still comes home alone, a teary-eyed Mel talks about her "deep connection" with Danny in her underwear. Do they have the money to post bail? Will they get to work on time? Does anyone care? Tune in Tuesday night to find out.

The "Real World" is irreconcilably different now, and joining the cast has merely become an excuse to take a rain check on joining the cast of the real world. Will I continue to watch? Not a chance. Will I drop everything if the casting directors finally choose me? Pass the horse balls, please.

Matt Brochu is a UMass graduate student.

Rubrics we're confined to

Steven Thomas O'Toole

We can relate a scale of understanding, a rubric of decision-making, to the effort put forth on a Friday night to get laid and the chance that the best girl for you was in the library when your sour face couldn't attract even the bitterest beer. I mean, you attempted the cute one, but the reality of your interactions evaded you amidst papers and whatnot. If you tell yourself, "I'll run three miles," you may damage your body easier than running until, say, you get tired. Sparing the rubric is often to one's benefit.

Though Veteran's day could be a rainy one, it'll keep us all inside and start our weekends on odd notes, in which case the week after UMass War Week would parallel the depression felt reflecting on the war our country wages.

I used to listen to the radio more often than I do now. In the vicinity of two-plus hours a day, I spent a summer at the reception of radio waves. It can be exciting, but most importantly it's introspective. The radio creates genre. It divides, molds and directs a listener, even — in fact, especially — a person who occasionally replaces the CD or iPod with the tuner.

I've localized my range of reception to the lower 52 tuning channels. Music that "Brave New World's" professor David Lenson would project to be segregated on the radio waves. The Clear Channel stations and playlists, the ones on classic rock and any genre that we lapse our car soundtracks with. There is a stability to stagnancy, but are we lefties not recommended to brush our teeth with our right hands?

This suppression of art, which comes with repetitive stagnancy and social acceptance through simple connection-making, surrounds more spheres than radio waves. We could analogize this to any discipline. Elaborating on a true study, rather than pumping obvious outputs, gives more space to interact with the work. It allows a certain level of reflection, changing memes (social followings) and implementing an energy-provoking life, a thought-evolution. However, the more punished for escaping a rubric we are, the less elaborately we will experiment and leave a signature on our work.

> The more punished for escaping a rubric we are, the less elaborately we will experiment and leave a signature on our work.

I can recall trying to get into a tent very quickly; the task of unzipping the flap became a long-term endeavor as my body was flushed with adrenaline. With our disciplines, we need to attach ourselves to the rubrics of accepted reality; we need to examine them and respond to them. The response is art. If a teacher feeds off what they give, aren't they cannibals to education? If a radio station feeds what it knows will be eaten, without varying its rubric of musical exploration, isn't it eating the very crux (music) on which its advertisements pay the waves' and CEO's bills? Though the scenario tells you to rush profit, the benefits may only appear (as the inside of the tent) with long-term investments; find the objective and attain it, upon reflection.

The rubrics of life often have adverse effects on the long-run goals associated with benefits we see come from scales. Lines point directions, but while we live planned and scheduled lives, remember how much in Friday's rain you'd more appreciate Monday's (or more so Sunday's) sunshine .... and how Monday's encounters may be what you looked for on Friday night.

Steven Thomas O'Toole is a UMass student

Beware of addictions

Katelyn Harding

Alcoholic. Shopaholic. Singaholic? These words refer to things UMass students could be guilty of. I'm not saying all students at UMass are drunks who spend money on impulse and burst out in song while doing so. I am merely saying that we are all susceptible to these vices.

This revelation came about when I was talking to my friend, who told me that he and our other friends have started to develop an addiction to playing pool. This got me to thinking: besides drinking, shopping and playing pool, they are many other things that we inundate ourselves with, and are in jeopardy of becoming addicted to. To see if you are in danger of falling into the category of an "-aholic," I will define some of the addictions that pertain to UMass, so you can catch yourself before you become addicted.

THE SINGAHOLIC.

This is pretty harmless, just for fun, and I haven't heard of anyone getting hurt by singing in a bar — but then again, there is always a first time for everything. I am talking about us shmucks who go to the bar and sing along to every single song that's played on the jukebox, whether we know the words or not. Not knowing the words only adds to the fun of singing. A night downtown would not be complete without the entire bar belting out "Don't Stop Believin'" or "Pour Some Sugar on Me" or the ever-popular "Piano Man."

There is no certain reason as to why this event is so popular and intriguing, but every time the song is played, it is as if it's for the first time, and a collective "I love this song!" exclamation ripples through the crowd, picking up energy and bursting out in a cacophony of inebriation-induced singing voices. It is addicting, but I doubt being a Singaholic would be detrimental to anyone's life.

THE ANTONIO-AHOLIC.

Ah, the best restaurant in Amherst — if it can even be considered a restaurant, because you are pretty lucky if you can find a place to sit once inside. Still, we all know that Antonio's is the best place to get a slice of pizza in Amherst, no matter what time of day or night it is. We are all guilty of liking Antonio's a little too much, but sometimes people can take their addiction of eating it too far.

If you have ever found yourself going to this pizza place two to three times a day, you should really start re-thinking your eating habits. Understandably, the person might just be trying to get a piece of pizza they have never gotten. Those pizza guys might have developed a new hybrid of vegetables and meats overnight that would result in the pizza of all pizzas, and you might feel the need to continuously get some so you will be the first to know. But that has got to be crossing some sort of line. A true Antonio-aholic can never get enough pizza; they are in the mood for it all day, every day. Could we all be secret Antonio-aholics and not even realize it?

THE LIBRARY-LOUD TALKER ON YOUR CELL PHONE-AHOLIC.

I am referring to the person who sits in the library and acts as an answering service, constantly picking up their phone and gabbing away as if they were getting paid by the minute for it. I could understand once or twice, if the call was important, but after two, they need to be cut off. Why are they even at the library? Not only are they talking on their cell phone continuously, they are talking in an outdoor voice, and most of the time their conversations are ones that should wait to be communicated in person. They are a true Library-Loud Talker on your Cell Phone-aholic, and need to be stopped. They are doing themselves a disservice, along with those around them, because not only are they not getting any work done, but they are preventing others from getting anything done as well.

Now that you know some of the "addictions" that can occur on and around the UMass campus, I hope you do your best to avoid getting caught in their tempting traps. I've got to run, though; I'm getting Antonio's and heading to the library. I'll call you when I'm there to make plans about the Guitar Dudes later.

Katelyn Harding is a Collegian columnist.

How many more need to die?

Justin Jackson

Many of you may know of the "Week on the War" events that the UMass Anti-War Coalition has organized on campus this week. These events will culminate in a speech from the literal "mother" of the anti-war movement, Cindy Sheehan.

Sheehan and our student veterans on campus exemplify the central problems of this war for our country. Sheehan's son, only 24 when he was killed, is only one of the now more than 2,051 American servicemen and women who have been killed since March 2003. Estimates of the number of Iraqis killed, civilians and combatants, range from a conservative 20,000 to the more probable 80,000 or 100,000.

Remember — none of these people had to die. They weren't destined to die. They died because of the choices President Bush made, the choices his policy makers helped him make, the choices our Congress — Republicans and Democrats — made, and, by default, the choices we make or do not make every day.

> If you support the troops, then you better walk the talk. By any measure, the war has been a complete failure and disaster. This you can't deny, even if you think the invasion was necessary in the first place.

Here, even at UMass, we must face the human cost of the war in Iraq. We face cuts in state funds that went to the war instead. We have the FBI on campus, intimidating international students and eroding our civil liberties. We facilitate military research for our government's imperial foreign policies. We also have many students here on campus who either have returned from Iraq or may soon be deployed to Iraq.

Many of those students are members of the Reserves or National Guard. They already have or may soon honor their duties and follow commands, just as decent soldiers should. They have gone or may soon go to Iraq, to be possibly maimed or killed. Perhaps worse, they may maim and kill others. Many enlisted to serve their country. Many enlisted for promised funds to pay for college. Today, those who have served in Iraq are walking around this campus, trying to get on with their lives and get an education. They deserve that and more.

And yet they fought in the war with deficient equipment — Humvees with no armor to protect them against rockets and roadside bombs. They are struggling to get adequate medical treatment from a Veterans Administration hospital system that is severely poorly funded and understaffed, and has been for decades. They are reporting unprecedented levels of mental distress — post-traumatic stress, depression and suicides. They report strange illnesses, perhaps from chemical weapons. And they are struggling to re-integrate themselves into civilian America after fighting in a very different, faraway place.

How do we support our troops, then? Our veterans?

If you support the troops, then you better walk the talk. By any measure, the war has been a complete failure and disaster. This you can't deny, even if you think the invasion was necessary in the first place. How do we support our troops, then? By bringing them home.

And I ask you: How many more of our brothers and sisters have to die or lose a limb in Iraq before we leave? 2,000 more? 4,000 more? 10,000? The military says we could be there for 10 more years — they really just don't know.

For those of us who opposed the war from the beginning, we have an even greater moral responsibility to bring the troops home. We expected too much, and thought we could prevent the war before it started. We were wrong. Bush and his administration aren't influenced by "focus groups" — millions of people in the United States protesting the war on Feb. 15, 2003, at the Republican convention in August 2004, or even this past September in D.C. So we had better start thinking seriously and acting seriously on what we say right here in Amherst, or we should get out of the way.

Justin Jackson is a UMass graduate student

Ed/Op Poll

How worried are you about the bill which threatens to cut $9 billion from student loan programs?

A. This will be my last year at college, because I rely heavily on my student loans.
B. I'm worried, but not that much. I don't have a lot of loans.
C. My parents pay for my school.
D. What bill?

Go to www.dailycollegian.com to vote!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2005 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Jay and Silent Bob

'Do Degrassi' in style

by MICHAEL DEEHAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

What happens when a famous director known for his vulgarity-strewn movies joins the cast of his favorite childhood teen drama for a three episode arch? A very strange DVD experience is created, one which combines the classic potty humor of Kevin Smith's films with the kitschy charm of Canadian television.

"Jay and Silent Bob Do Degrassi" is a one-disc DVD collecting three episodes of "Degrassi: The Next Generation," guest-starring director Kevin Smith ("Clerks," "Dogma"). It was released Tuesday for a suggested retail price of $24.98.

Admit it, you watch "Degrassi: The Next Generation." Even though the UMass cable service doesn't carry "The N," the network that broadcasts "Degrassi," we all desperately seek out the show whenever we can. It's not cool to admit it, but you know you love that saucy Canadian melodrama. Now there's an excuse to revel in the three final episodes of last season while maintaining the nerd-chic image of a Kevin Smith fan you've fought so hard for.

The DVD contains the episodes "West End Girls" and the two-parter "Goin' Down the Road." It's great to have all the cat-fights, love triangles and sloppy make-out sessions of the show captured forever in your home video library, but the real reason to check out this DVD is for the additional nuggets of Kevin Smith greatness. However, unless you're a fan of both Degrassi and Smith's films, many of the jokes on this disc will fall on deaf ears.

'Jay and Silent Bob Do Degrassi'
Starring Kevin Smith, Jason Mewes
Rating 3/5

The commentaries feature Smith, Mewes, actress Stacie Mistysyn, associate producer Jim Jackman and head writer Aaron Martin. The tone of the commentary can be, at best, described as "adult only." It's the typical banter we've come to expect from a View Askew movie with a hilarious nostalgic twist.

The "Kevin and Jason Intro Rant" is possibly the most vulgar footage Smith and Mewes have ever appeared in, and it is also absolutely hilarious. An extension of the DVD's introduction sequence, the bit is an improvised dialogue between the men behind Jay and Silent Bob on a variety of topics, from their love of the Degrassi series to Jay's interest in Canadian statutory rape laws. It's absolutely disgusting, and any fan of Smith's witty-yet-vulgar style will not want to miss it.

The extras include a rather lengthy 31 minute interview with Smith where the director discusses his own personal history of Degrassi fandom. Smith has been a genuine fan of the series since his days behind the counter of the Quik Stop. This interview is less humorous than the other parts of the disc, but is an interestingly candid talk with Smith about the show and its impact on him.

Yet with all the great new footage and bonuses on this DVD, even the great Kevin Smith can't escape the trappings of typical DVD garbage "bonuses." Extras include a blooper reel showing some of the Mewes's more off-color ad libs, Smith's attempts to film a promo for the show, and a behind-the-scenes look at the final episode's climactic Canadian Ninja battle. Surprisingly, the ninja footage is astoundingly boring and easily the least interesting or funny part of this otherwise hilarious disc. A "Photo Album," cast list, and quotes section round out the DVD extras, which contain some major highs and several bland, generic lows.

"Jay and Silent Bob Do Degrassi" has more laughs than Emma's got bracelets, and passes the time faster than Walt Flanagan's dog, but the amount of inside jokes makes it one of the least accessible DVD releases this year. For fans of either "Degrassi" or Smith's films, the disc makes for a great evening of indulgent high school reminiscing or a wonderful drinking game (one sip for each "oot" spoken and chug for each "aboot").

"Jay and Silent Bob Do Degrassi" gets four maples leaves out of five for fans, but only two maples leaves for anyone else.

Crime thriller meets love triangle in Fellowes' 'Seperate Lives'

By PETER FRISMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Julian Fellowes's "Separate Lies" recounts the story of a trio of glum aristocrats in an England that lives up to its stereotypical blandness, based on the novel "A Way Through the Wood" by Nigel Balchin. A standout among the music video-influenced, noise-saturated movies designed to appeal to younger audiences, the film seems determined to be able to fit comfortably alongside the films noir of yesteryear, and willing to run the risk of being an anachronism to do so.

Tom Wilkinson ("Shakespeare in Love") plays James Manning, a perfectionist Brit who is the spitting image of the picture Americans get in their heads when they hear the phrase "upper-class English businessman." His relationship with his wife, Anne (Emily Watson, "Punch-Drunk Love") is so frigid that the viewer may not get the impression the two are married until it is signified by the dialogue. Anne is having an affair with the officious yuppie William Bule (Rupert Everett; "Dunston Checks In," among other flicks). Their relationships are ruptured by a hit-and-run car accident, and they are forced to deal with each other and their newfound knowledge of each other's affairs as they decide how to deal with the crime.

'Seperate Lies'
Directed by Julian Fellowes
Starring Tom Wilkinson, Emily Watson, Rupert Everett
Fox Searchlight
Rated R
87 mins.
Grade B

There are actually two main plots to "Separate Lies." The crime cover-up and the love triangle. The two story lines mesh together like a kid's science project with olive oil and water in a jar — shake it up all you can, but there's simply no way to make it truly mix. It's as if somebody wanted to make a neo-noir and a romance picture, and decided to save time by making them into one movie. The three leads are excellent in their portrayals of criminals, plutocrats, and dissatisfied lovers, yet they do not succeed in making the romance plot as riveting as the crime plot. Whenever there is a scene about the leads' relationships in the middle of the crime investigation, the viewer might prefer the film switch to the hit-and-run story, as there is a good chance he or she will not relate to the characters enough to understand why the story of their love lives are just as important. Little effort is made in the film to explore the backstory of the characters and how they are now in moral quagmires.

To the film's credit, however, each storyline is quite intriguing. The plot of a man's vehicular homicide and the crime's subsequent coverup acts like a solid whodunit in

See LIES on page 7

COURTESY FOX SEARCHLIGHT PICTURES

Director Julian Fellowes capitalizes on the poignant use of silence in "Seperate Lies" to better emphasis the use of the characters' voices.

Lee returns to 'Kindergarten'

By DAVID PESSAH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When Ben Lee stepped onstage at around 8 p.m. on Tuesday, many patrons were finishing up their meals and drinks at the tables around the stage. Earlier, New Buffalo had simultaneously displayed her impressive voice and lack of stage presence while the crowd watched from their tables. With the detached stage, clanging of silverware, and background chatter, it was as if she was on TV during the family dinner. There was minimal crowd participation, save for a few claps at the end of each song. As Lee started his show with the aptly titled "Begin," not many in the crowd wanted to deviate from the crowd and move from their seats to the stage. As soon as "Begin" ended, Lee was as much the event coordinator as the lead singer of his band.

"Will everyone leave their tables and sit on the floor here in front of the stage?" Lee asked. "We'll do this like Kindergarten." And just like that the stage was surrounded by seated fans. This began what was to be as much a campfire sing-along as a rock concert, as Lee's unique performance style was showcased in multiple ways.

Australian-born Lee looked hobbit-like with his short frame and bushy hair. Strap a ring around his neck, and he'd be on a mission to destroy an evil ring in a pit of fire. Lee has self-appointed himself to a different mission, though. His calling is to play live music, because, as he said, "You can listen to music on your iPod, laying down, in your bed, but here, this is really what it is about." He's been constantly touring for over a decade now.

So what did he play? A little bit of everything, but each came with their own unique twist. Before "The Debt Collectors," he told the crowd that the song was inspired by a dream where Conor Oberst — the lead singer of Bright Eyes — put prescription drugs in his luggage before he passed through customs. For one song, he called a female fan onstage to be his muse and sang to her. He ran around the stage and threw flower petals on his band mates during others.

For a time, Lee kicked his band offstage and played solo. He sang, "What I want to sing to make me happy, well happier, because I am happy." Then, taking requests, he had to ask the requester for the beginning lyric before bursting into the entire song. The lyric was "Ocean." The crowd was asked to perform backing vocals for his ode to "My Guitar."

For those who haven't been there, the Aussie mantra is "no worries," and Lee displayed it well. During the set he wore a perpetual smile. He constantly joked with the crowd. He affirmed his credentials as a rock star by sharing an anecdote of how he sang songs from "Jack and the Beanstalk" when his kindergarten teacher left him in charge of the class.

During the set, he looked fans directly in the eye and asked them how they were doing. For the "encore requirement," he asked the crowd if he could just turn his back to them while they cheered instead of going to the dressing room because "the dressing room is too far away." The crowd answered with a resounding "yes" and a round of cheers.

The Iron Horse was the perfect venue for a performer like Lee. He loves playing music for people, but connecting with them at the same time. As he said, "a room of 15 and a room of 15,000 is the same to me." At the Iron Horse he was able to walk offstage and into the crowd during his songs. He was able to talk directly to fans. He was able to tell a joke that got the whole venue laughing.

During the final song of his encore, Lee walked across the floor of the venue with his guitar, trailing the cord to his amp, and climbed onto the railing between the tables and the floor in front of the stage. He was left there on the railing as the song ended and the lights came on. As everyone stood up to leave and his band started packing up its gear, Lee pulled out the cord to his amp and began to strum another song. And that is exactly what makes Lee unique. As Lee played "Naked" sans stage, amp, and microphone, he became your friend in the dorm with a guitar — and that's exactly what he wanted to be.

COURTESY BEN LEE

Australian singer-songwriter Ben Lee believes the key to playing every show well is to perform as though each show was in private.

Jam band spams Northampton

by BRADLEY FARBERMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Phish have excellent taste in music.

They've covered songs by Ween ("Roses Are Free"), Los Lobos ("When The Circus Comes"), and Frank Zappa ("Peaches En Regalia"). They've covered whole albums by The Beatles ("The White Album," Halloween '94), The Who ("Quadrophenia," Halloween '95) Talking Heads ("Remain In Light," Halloween '96) and Velvet Underground ("Loaded," Halloween '98). They've even covered Prince (they did "1999" on New Years Eve 1998).

They know what's up. So it came as no surprise last year when a member of Phish turned the ears of the world onto a great little group from the Everglades.

On tour in 2004, Vida Blue was augmented by guitar, saxophone, flute, trombone, congas, timbales and turntables (for those of you on the outside here, Vida Blue was a trio composed of Phish's Page McConnell on keys, Oteil Burbridge of the Allman Brothers Band on bass, and Russell Batiste of the funky Meters on drums). Needless to say, the energy onstage was off the charts; the band was on fire.

Due in large part to those mighty augmenters, a clan of Miamians known as The Spam Allstars formed. And, interestingly enough, the Allstars will be heating up Northampton's Iron Horse Music Hall tonight, following a performance by Pencilgrass.

The Spam Allstars
Iron Horse Northampton
Nov. 10
10 p.m.
$11, $14 at door

Attendees will bear witness to the funk that fried so many circuits around the country last year (which is not to say that McConnell, Burbridge and Batiste were not excellent as well; it's just that one is guaranteed to be more excited by the Spammers and their batch of high-octane Latin soul).

One might be hesitant to embrace the Spam, though. That person might wonder why Miami's dopest musical export goes by the name Spam Allstars. Well, all signs point to the Allstars' founder, turntablist and namesake, Andrew Yeomanson, a.k.a. DJ Le Spam.

He came up with the name back in 1993, when the Allstars were just starting to gig around Miami. And in just over ten years, so much has changed: the Allstars have been around the world (they hit London and Denmark this past summer) and played over 200 shows a year in the U.S. alone. They even scored and appeared in a television commercial for the Miami Heat.

One might like to know a little more about their sound, too. About guitarist Adam Zimmon's James Brown guitar licks. About the Latin jazz sax section of AJ Hill and Steve Welsh, and the swirling flute of Mercedes Abal. About the infectious, intersecting grooves of percussionists Tomas Diaz and Lazaro Alfonso.

But one should never know about that stuff ahead of time. One should come out and experience the sound for oneself. It's Latin, it's jazz, it's hip-hop, it's salsa, it's funk, and serious tonal appreciators will be sorry if they miss what the Miami Herald called a "cutting-edge, only-in-Miami fusion" on vacation in western Massachusetts.

Likewise, one would not want to miss fellow Miamians Pencilgrass, a likeminded party machine of a band. Pencilgrass has more of an emphasis on rock and vocals, but the message is the same: these bands want you to dance and have fun. Why resist? Tickets are $11 in advance and $14 at the door; the show starts at 10. Be there and be square.

Silence is key in 'Seperate Lies' reverse. The falling out between James and Anne presents a rather interesting study of the need to feel comfortable enough in a relationship to be able to make mistakes. And it's somewhat nerve-wracking to see James, Anne and William try to keep their stories straight about the hit-and-run without tripping over their lies.

LIES from page 6

As "Separate Lies" is almost always quiet and subdued throughout, its shouting moments are all the more memorable. The smashing of a serving tray in this film has more potential to startle than a downed villain suddenly leaping up for one final attack. When Anne reveals that she is having an affair, the news causes Tom to explosively vomit. Even her confession that ties her to the accident, while quietly spoken, is enough to send ripples through the audience. And all three of these instances take place in the same scene. The films of today, many of them loud for the pure sake of loudness, could take a lesson from "Separate Lies" and learn that silence is the best way to emphasize noise.

While this movie never succeeds in combining and interweaving its plot lines, each plot is worth at least half the price of a movie ticket. Even though this film is obviously not engineered to appeal to the younger demographic, all audiences could stand to benefit from "Separate Lies."

WE'RE HIRING FOR THE SPRING SEMESTER.
GRAB AN APPLICATION TODAY.
FIND US IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on eyeglasses from the on-site Optical Services at UHS
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 Convenient hours and location
4 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5383
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

GO AWAY. NOW.
London R/T air From $179
Rome R/T air From $239
Australia transpacific air & 3 flights within Australia From $999
U of M Campus Center, Rm 224
(413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND

rebecca taylor • diane von furstenberg
Seven for all Mankind • Susana Monaco
Wendy Hill • Nicole Miller • James Perse
G1 • Plenty
cathy rose FOR WOMEN
151 Main Street • Downtown Northampton • 413.586.9098
www.cathyrosefashion.com

WE'RE LOOKING FOR A FEW EXCEPTIONAL STUDENTS.
At Quinnipiac University School of Law, you'll find everything you need to succeed. From a challenging yet supportive academic environment to faculty members who will become intellectual colleagues. From live-client clinics to real-world externships. Plus annual merit scholarships ranging from $3,000 to full tuition. For more information, visit http://law.quinnipiac.edu or call 1-800-462-1944.
• Outstanding faculty
• Rigorous academic programs
• Six concentrations
• Extensive experiential learning opportunities
• Student faculty ratio 15:1
CRIMINAL | DISPUTE RESOLUTION | FAMILY | HEALTH | INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY | TAX
QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW
Hamden, Connecticut

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
THIS SATURDAY!
"Dr. Dirty" Returns!
Back by Popular Demand!
JOHN VALBY
NOV. 25TH
Star of the HBO special "Robert Schimmel: Unprotected"
ROBERT SCHIMMEL
DEC. 3RD
CHARLIE MURPHY & FRIENDS TOUR
Tickets On Sale!
Tickets On Sale!

50 Cent details life in the hood, clashes with other rappers

By Terrence Williams
FSView & Florida Flambeau
(Florida State U.)

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — As the release of 50 Cent's first feature film "Get Rich or Die Tryin'" nears, it seems proper, for the benefit of his many fans, to re-examine the rapper's first foray into extra-musical commercial media, so as to better prepare them for what they will see on the screen Nov. 9. Since the movie has been billed as being loosely based on his life, then we as an audience can get our own special sneak preview on what the movie's subject matter will contain through the analysis of 50's first book, "From Pieces to Weight: Once Upon A Time in Southside Queens," which was released earlier this year.

This autobiography takes readers to urban New York, where 50 (also known as Curtis Jackson III) recounts the events in his life that tailored the garments of success he dons today. From the discipline instilled in him through boxing in his youth to his grandparents' backyard dollar parties, which showed him both the value of marketing and the lucre of entertainment, many occurrences in 50's life were cited as altering and hemming his personality's robes. Oddly enough, however, the foremost molder and designer of his personage — his Versace, so to speak — was none other than the advent of crack cocaine.

Over three-fourths of the narrative is devoted to the drug, and its office as the author's lifeblood and source of financial sustenance during the late '80s and early '90s accounts for most of the book's driving action. He first learned of the cocaine hustle from his mother, who was always able to afford nice clothes and new toys for him whenever she would come around. From there, the combination of his grandparents' inability to do the same and the influence of seeing the most noted dealers riding around in the freshest cars and sporting the latest apparel daily prompted 50 to try his hand at the trade. At the time of his first cocaine sell, he was only 11 years old.

His evolution in the realm of illegal trafficking, as explained by the title, saw his involvement with smaller quantities of raw cocaine — quarter grams when he was 11 — mature into the distribution of major weight, multiple kilograms of cocaine that could be cooked, cut, and turned into crack. By the time he was sixteen, he had already been able to afford for himself brand new Land Rovers and motorbikes, all of which he paid for with duffel bags full of cash.

Relatively little time is given to 50 Cent the musician, but of that time, two chapters are given to the exposition of his feud with rival and fellow Queens native, Ja Rule. In chapter 20, he explains how the friction was ignited.

"A friend of mine robbed Ja Rule. That's how the beef was originally started. Later Ja saw me in a club with the kid who had robbed him. I went over to say 'What's up,' to Ja, and he acted like he had a problem with me — that pissed me off."

50 goes on to give his account of two physical altercations between the two rappers and their cliques, one in which he punches Rule in the eye and takes his chain, and the other in which he is stabbed by a member of Rule's entourage in a recording studio in Manhattan. This portion of the narrative goes to show that the hostilities between the multi-platinum selling artists transcend the confines of musical boundaries and will thus, most likely, never be subject to civilized settlement.

"From Pieces to Weight," though not at all a candidate for any literary canons, does well to provide its audience with insight as to how one of the most popular performers of the day was a direct product of one of society's most abject environments. Though more detail could have been provided in the way of his celebrity and lifestyle changes after the extraordinary success of his debut album "Get Rich or Die Tryin'," and in spite of an abrupt ending to the autobiographical affair, it is, nonetheless, a read that is sure to captivate 50 Cent fans and what appetites for its fast-approaching cinematic counterpart.

Curtis "50 Cent" Jackson is cashing in with the release of his latest film, "Get Rich or Die Tryin'," an album featuring music specifically made for the film, and a memoir of his life in New York and his relationships with other hip-hop artists.

Lifestyles of the rich and famous exposed

Pop Doppler
Jacqueline Ronan

In the beginning, people watched television to escape their mundane rituals and everyday worries. Back then, bus drivers schemed to get rich quick, genies were dreamy, and people lost at sea happened to be carrying their entire wardrobes with them.

But then in 1973, PBS premiered "An American Family." The show chronicled the real-life, upper-middle class Loud family. Unlike its glossy, happy counterparts that featured nuclear families, in the show's 13 episodes Mrs. Loud demanded a divorce and son Lance lived an openly gay lifestyle. The show drew in 10 million viewers and introduced America to reality TV.

That grew, of course, into the reality TV explosion of the late '90s. Primetime was chock-full of everyday, "average Joes" plucked off the street. Suddenly everybody knew who Rudy, Darva and Clay were. In 2005, Nielsen Media Research found that 56 percent of all American television (including both cable and broadcast) is reality TV.

But since the '90s, the genre has lost its appeal. Ratings for "The Apprentice" (NBC's lifesaver) have dropped dramatically. TV's 25 top-rated list used to be choked with reality shows; now two or three make the cut at most. People have become bored with million-dollar bug eating contests and choosy brides-to-be.

And the people on reality TV have gradually become not-so-average. Compare the original Real Worlders to the recent casts. They went from being doughy and pockmarked to looking like they'd stepped out of the Spring catalog of Abercrombie & Fitch.

That's because people don't watch television to see themselves. They still want coconut radios and bottle-dwelling semi-slaves. So in the great tradition of television, the networks spiced it up. However, rather then having a baby or bringing in a new love interest, they turned to the rich and famous. People still want to the "unpredictability" of unscripted situations, but with a lot less reality.

In the past few years, MTV (which still has the nerve to put "music" in its title) has been pumping its primetime with this "rich reality." It started off with "Rich Girls" two years ago. The daughter of Tommy Hilfiger and Leo Gleicher (founder of Innovation Luggage) "dealt" with life in uber-class Manhattan.

Reality television shows, such as Donald Trump and Martha Stewart's versions of "The Apprentice" have proven to be "ratings savers" for networks like NBC.

"Laguna Beach" follows around a bunch of "average" kids in their last years of high school. Yes, in this "average" beach front town, the "average" income is $102,816 and the "average" property value sales are $747,948, according to homegain.com. They deal with everyday teen problems, like being a complete heifer and having to settle for the size 4 Marc Jacobs dress as opposed to the size 2, or finding that only the 34-foot stretch Hummer is available for prom and not the 39-foot. You know, stuff every teenager can relate to.

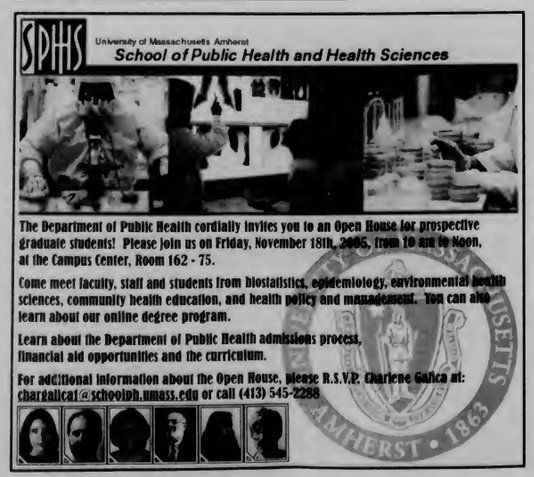
But nothing can prepare one for the indulgence that is "My Super Sweet 16." Every week, one super-rich teenager plans the ultimate birthday party — using Daddy's wallet. Rather then using the money to send an inner city kid to college or feed an entire African country, these parents spend a small fortune to celebrate a minor stepping stone in their children's lives. Lord knows what the wedding is going to cost. In the real world, you're lucky if your parents rented out a hall at the Knights of Columbus.

These shows and countless others, like "Filthy Rich Cattle Drive," "Growing Up Gotti" and "Gastineau Girls," all have one thing in common: they're spending someone else's money. Nobody in these shows earned their income; they were given it.

Then, of course, there is "The Simple Life." The simple plot found hotel heiress Paris Hilton and Lionel Richie's daughter Nicole, living with poor folks. The girls were thrown into crazy fish-out-of-water situations, like working or preparing their own dinners. This show propelled Hilton to fame (among other things).

This brings us to our next trend: celebrity. If you are or were a minor figure in pop culture, guess what? You are interesting enough to have your own reality show.

Very reminiscent of "An American Family," "The Osbournes" was MTV's highest rated show of all time. The family's crazy yet heart-warming antics connected with audiences. This was the first of many shows featuring famous and "famous" people in a number of reality genres. The idea is that anything and everything is far more entertaining when famous people do it.



VH1 (which also still has the nerve to put "video" in its title) currently has eight celebrity reality shows in its line-up, which the network has dubbed "CelebReality" — though celebrity has become a very lose term in reality TV. "The Surreal Life" finds famous folks in a Real World-like setting. The show has snagged superstars like Carey Hart, Jerri Manthey and the guy who played Joey from Full House. God knows how they pulled that casting miracle! "Celebrity Fit Club" whips cast members like Wendy the Snapple Lady and Willie Aames back into shape. "But Can They Sing?" answers the burning question of whether Morgan Fairchild or Antonio Sabato Jr. have completely given up on real acting careers.

Other networks have been serving up their own form of CelebReality. E!'s "Taradise" documents party-girl/actress Tara Reid's future liver failure and wild flings in tropical ports. Bravo's "Being Bobby Brown" follows the more sad then outrageous lifestyle of Brown and his wife Whitney Houston.

Reality TV hasn't been real since people started getting voted off by tribes; wealth and CelebReality are really just the next step in this illusion. So why do we love it? Maybe it's a realistic fantasy. Nobody can be inspired to have the gift of flight after watching "Smallville," but you could win the lottery … and then you could lose weight or live with a group of strangers in front of a bunch of cameras.

DAILY COLLEGIAN.COM
GET RICH
— OR —
WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN
DAILY COLLEGIAN.COM

UMass battles Army

FOOTBALL from page 12

ball teams, and the last four I-A programs that the Minutemen have faced have outscored them by a margin of 172-58.

In order to break that trend, the Minutemen will have to halt Army coach Bobby Ross and his squad, which is riding a two-game winning streak, beating Akron on Oct. 22 and Air Force on Nov. 5.

Offensively, it has been Carlton Jones who has carried the load, rushing for 699 yards on 191 attempts and scoring three touchdowns. Although second-string ball carrier Scott Wesley is only averaging 48.5 yards per game, he has been able to reach the endzone a team high of seven times.

Brown understands that the Black Knight offense has the ability to beat a defense in several aspects of the game, but it starts with the rushers.

"They're going to pound you," Brown said. "They're going to run the ball at you. They've got an excellent tailback. They're going to utilize play action pass. They're going to try to control the clock."

The Minutemen will counter the Army offense with their defense, which leads all of I-AA football in scoring defense and is third in total defense. All season it has been senior captain Shannon James leading the way at free safety. James leads the team in interceptions with four on the season and is the fourth-leading tackler on the team with 45 total take-downs this season.

Although the UMass defense has excelled all season, the offense has been effective as well, with freshman quarterback Liam Coen looking more like a veteran than a rookie lately.

During the team's loss against New Hampshire on Oct. 29, and their victory over Delaware, Coen has completed a combined 52-of-76 passes for 719 yards and three touchdowns, without throwing any interceptions.

Despite the season he is having, Coen understands the type of defense he will be looking at when he steps up to the line of scrimmage on Saturday.

"Very aggressive," Coen said. "They're a group of guys, obviously, they're going to do what they do, and they're going to do it well. They're going to come after you. They have a bunch of guys that run well. Their D-line likes to bull-rush, and they're going to come after us."

"Defensively, [Army] never quits," Brown said. "They're aggressive in their approach, and they're going to twist, and move, and blitz, and try to make it tough on you. And very typical of an Army team, they're going to come after you for 60 minutes."

Aside from the players, coaches and schemes, another factor that UMass will take into consideration is the atmosphere at Michie Stadium. The 40,000-seat stadium is known nationally to have a considerable fan base.

"It's in the back of your head," Brown said. "You know you're going to play in one of the top five environments in the country."

PROJECTED STARTERS

UMass — Army

Offense
QB 12 - Liam Coen, Freshman
RB 5 - Steve Baylark, Junior
FB 13 - Kyle B. Harrington, Sophomore
WR 81 - Brandon London, Junior
TE 44 - Mike Douglas, Senior
LT 67 - Brent Caldwell, Senior
LG 68 - Matt Austin, Sophomore
C 62 - Alex Miller, Junior
RG 73 - David Thompson, Junior
RT 63 - Sean Calicchio, Freshman
WR 9 - Dominique Stewart, Senior

Defense
LE 95 - Keron Williams, Senior
DT 57 - Justin Schweighardt, Senior
NT 55 - John Hatchell, Junior
RE 48 - David Burris, Sophomore
WLB 29 - Brad Anderson, Senior
MLB 51 - Serge Tikum, Senior
SLB 29 - Jason Hatchell, Sophomore
CB 26 - Tracy Belton, Junior
FS 6 - Shannon James, Senior
SS 7 - James Ihedigbo, Junior
CB 2 - Steve Costello, Senior

Special Teams
K 31 Armando Cuko, Freshman
P 13 - Christian Koegel, Junior
KR 3 - R.J. Cobbs, Senior
PR 2 - Steve Costello, Senior

Offense
TE 88 - Jared Ulekowski, Senior
LT 75 - Ray Zelenak, Sophomore
LG 58 - Dan Evans, Senior
C 67 - Pete Bier, Senior
RG 70 - Matt Weisner, Junior
RT 72 - Jonathan Connon, Junior
QB 7 - Zac Dahman, Senior
FB 33 - Mike Viti, Sophomore
TB 30 - Carlton Jones, Senior
WR 2 - Walter Hill, Junior
WR 5 - Jeremy Trimble, Sophomore

Defense
DE 95 - Brandon Thompson, Sophomore
DT 66 - Tony Fusco, Sophomore
DT 69 - Seth Lotts, Senior
DE 94 - Cameron Craig, Junior
SLB 22 - Luke Pell, Junior
MLB 54 - Cason Shrode, Junior
WLB 55 - Barrett Scruggs, Junior
FC 29 - Ray Stith, Senior
SS 13 - Caleb Campbell, Sophomore
FS 4 - Randy Chasten, Junior
BC 20 - Dhyan Tarver, Senior

Special Teams
K 49 - Justin Koenig, Junior
P 1 - Owen Tolson, Sophomore
KR 82 - Scott Wesley, Senior
PR 82 - Scott Wesley, Senior

Stoetzel returns to uniform

NOTEBOOK from page 12

that he wouldn't make it back at all, meaning his collegiate career would have ended with him standing on the sidelines.

But that isn't how Stoetzel wanted to go out, and he even switched from his normal spot at left tackle to play on the right side Saturday so he could get back on the field and help the team in its drive for a national crown.

"It was nice to see him back in there with the '77' on, and he really gave us some significant minutes and did a solid job," Brown said. "I don't remember any of the offensive coaches saying anything in particular during the course of any of the drives that had been negative on his part."

UMass quarterback Liam Coen has won three consecutive A-10 Rookie of the Week awards, but he would trade them all for a title.

"I was surprised to see him out there in practice [last] week," Baylark said following Saturday's game. "Seeing him in the huddle brought back old memories because I know he is a great lineman and a good leader out there. It was good having him out there, especially since it's his last year, so I'm pretty happy for him."

Three in a Row

For the third time in as many weeks, freshman quarterback Liam Coen has garnered A-10 Rookie of the Week honors, among a plethora of other awards he has been given.

He is coming off a 21-of-26 performance against Delaware in which he threw an 84-yard touchdown pass and ran for a three-yard score. In the last two weeks, he has thrown for 719 yards and three touchdowns, setting himself up as a leading candidate to win the league's Rookie of the Year Award.

And though the awards are nice, he would trade them all for a national championship.

"Frankly," he said. "Any day. There is nothing else like getting a ring. You can get all the plaques in the world, but if you get a ring on your finger, it's a lot different."

Regionals next for UM

By Joey White
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's cross country team will compete in its last scheduled meet of the season when it travels to Franklin Park in Boston for the second time this year in an attempt to qualify for Nationals.

On Saturday, the Minutewomen will compete in the NCAA Northeast Regional, where the top two teams automatically qualify for Nationals and the first four individuals not on a qualifying team also earn an automatic berth.

"It's very difficult to qualify for nationals," UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said. "The only we way can go is [qualifying] on [Saturday]."

The NCAA Northeast Regional is comprised of only Division I schools from New England and New York. Last year at the event, which alternates its site year-to-year with Van Cortland Park in New York, the Maroon and White finished 21st out of 35 teams.

Sophomore Christina DeRosa, who became the first women's cross-country runner since 2001 to earn All-Conference honors with her sixth-place performance at the Atlantic 10 Championship, led the Minutewomen (as she has for 13 consecutive races) last year with a 63rd-place showing.

LaFreniere was hoping to do better this year, but it is going to be difficult, as the so-called flu season has caught up with her runners. Juniors Erin O'Donnell and Cuisle Kierans are on penicillin as they are recovering from tonsillitis. Sophomore Amanda Bodette was out for a while, and junior Suzanne Simmons had strep throat.

"It's a tough time of year, and when that happens, it's not usual," LaFreniere said. As of now, however, all of the Minutewomen are going to compete this weekend.

LaFreniere said that if O'Donnell and Kierans are not feeling well, then she will not make them run. She also admits that "the extra rest didn't hurt them" as they had two weeks off since the Atlantic 10 Championships.

"Your entire season culminates with this one race," LaFreniere said. "Teams who aren't in position to qualify, it gives them a chance to run with these teams that are approximately going."

There will be a lot of cross-country championships determined at Franklin Park on Saturday. Even before the Minutewomen step up to the starting line, there will have been seven high school races. The Massachusetts men's cross country team will compete.

The Minutemen placed 21st in this event last year out of 37 teams. The men's race is a 10K, as opposed to 6K for the women, and will start at 2:15, an hour earlier than the women's race.

The Maroon and White will be looking toward sophomore Nils Fischer and senior Ryan Corbett to lead them as they have been all season long. Fischer has crossed the line in five-of-six meets for UMass, but it was Corbett with his experience who stepped it up in the A-10 Championship; he was the top runner and placed 25th overall.

Corbett also led the Minutemen in the NCAA Northeast Regional last year with a 62nd-place showing out of 233 runners. As Corbett did last year, Fischer has led all but one race for the Maroon and White this year. Fischer, in his rookie season, placed 173rd in this event.

Minutewoman sophomore runner Christina Derosa has finished first for the team in 13 consecutive races. She looks to extend the streak Saturday.

UMASS
Ski 'N Board Club
The 38th Annual GREAT UMASS
SKI SALE
50-70% off all new equipment
November 17th 11-8
November 18th 11-8
November 19th 11-6
In The Student Union Ballroom
on the UMass Amherst Campus
434 Student Union | 545-3437
skiclub@stuaf.umass.edu
http://www.umass.edu/rso/skiclub

BU to pose early test

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Call it a mirror match.

The undefeated Massachusetts swimmers and divers return to their home pool this weekend for the first time since facing Stony Brook two weekends ago, where they face some challenges from a Boston University squad that shares some of the same strong qualities. Historically, UMass and BU are two of best programs in New England when it comes to divers.

Last weekend at Southern Connecticut State, the Minutemen struggled to stay ahead of the Owls, thanks to some impressive final laps by the SCSU swimmers. Enter the diving squad, led by sophomore standout R.J. Rappe, who helped UMass lock up 10 of the last 12 top-three finishes over the remaining four events with a stellar performance in the three-meter dive. Rappe, by the way, won both diving events on the day — which ultimately proved integral to the Minutemen's win.

Now, as they get ready to dip back into their own waters, UMass faces arguably its best competition on the diving board so far this year. Freshman Brian Lawler broke both the one-meter and three-meter diving records in last weekend's meet against New Hampshire in Boston. Basically, the diving aspect of UMass swimming helped bail out the men last weekend after a slow start, and since the diving points will be that much harder to earn, they can't afford another slow weekend.

Rappe, a 5-foot-10 Farmington, Minn., native, has won every event he has competed in this season as UMass's top diver. The school record holder in the three-meter dive, he will once again be counted on to help lead UMass.

As mentioned before, the men got off to a slow start, but finally blew past the Owls in the end thanks to some great swimming efforts. In the event that preceded Rappe's meet-sealing dive, the Minutemen went 1-2-3 in the 100-yard butterfly (Nate Bromage winning, Tristan Partridge finishing second and Mike Herald and Mike Cordes tying for third) to start the rally.

While the Terrier women got shellacked by UNH last weekend, they won both of their diving events, a true testament to the competitive nature of these divers. They are led by junior Megan White and freshman Alex Crerar.

Even though BU didn't do a whole lot of damage to the UNH Wildcats, other than in the diving and medley events, and ultimately lost 142.5 to 98.5, don't be fooled. This isn't your mother's BU Terriers swim team. There is a new attitude in place this year.

"The big thing is this BU group is probably one of most improved programs in the area," UMass women's coach Bob Newcomb said. "Watching a lot of their swimmers last year, they didn't swim that well. This is a completely different team. Our women have to understand that and race well right from the beginning of the meet."

For UMass's woman divers, freshman Karen Upperco has made a giant leap from high school to the college swimming pools. Last weekend at SCSU, she was one of two women, alongside fellow freshman sensation Christa Narus, to win two events. She won the one-meter dive with a score of 236.25, and the three-meter dive with 267.68.

But this is a meet that won't be won on the efforts of one person alone.

"The thing I like about our diving program is that we're going to have four good competitors, not just one," Newcomb said. "Karen has definitely risen to the front in the early season, but this is going to have to be a full effort from all four of them this weekend."

He's talking about Upperco's teammates atop the diving board, like Melissa Pond, Sarah Horstmann and Mary Jenkins. Pond got a second-place finish in the one-meter and a third-place finish in the three-meter last weekend to help guide the Minutewomen's victorious efforts.

But enough about the divers. This is just as much about having a great day in all parts of the meet as it is about having a great landing, or whatnot.

"I expect every race to be neck and neck," Newcomb said. "We've had some absolutely fabulous meets with them in the past that have gone right down to the wire. I don't look at any race specifically as standing out. One advantage I think we will have, though, is depth."

The Massachusetts swimming and diving team returns to its home waters to face a much-improved Boston University team.

ASIAN ARTS & CULTURE PROGRAM
YUNGCHEN LHAMO
in concert
Wednesday, November 16
Bowker Auditorium at 8pm
Yungchen Lhamo, Tibet's internationally acclaimed diva and award-winning singer and songwriter, walked over the Himalayas from Tibet to India on a perilous journey to meet and receive blessings of His Holiness the Dalai Lama. The power and purity of Yungchen's voice gives heart to her spiritual devotion and performance. Join us to shower blessings on the people around the world.
General Admission $15, Students $7
For more information go to www.finearts.center.com/asian
FINE ARTS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
TICKETS 1 800 999 UMAS or 545 2511

Senior duo returns to playoffs

Rob Greenfield

Massachusetts men's soccer team took a three-year hiatus from the Atlantic 10 tournament, and has returned to postseason play this year on the backs of their two senior captains, Oral Bullen and Ernie Billittier, who also happen to be the only two players on the team who have played in the postseason.

Both Bullen and Billittier were on the team that made it in 2002. They were freshmen then, and from what they remember, this year's team is completely different and has taken a far more difficult path to the Atlantic 10 tournament.

"Every game we played my freshman year, we just knew we were going to win," Billittier recalled. "There wasn't any doubt. We stepped on the field and expected to win."

"Our first year, we knew we were going to make [the A-10 tournament]," Bullen added. "We won the regular season title and had a whole lot of success. This team was different. We didn't expect the same amount of success."

Bullen took a year off from soccer when he came to UMass, and began his stint with the Minutemen in his second academic year, the same time Billittier was coming in as a freshman. They won the league title that year, and both future captains thought that going to the postseason was the norm. But after a two-year drought and no appearances in A-10 tournament play, they know now not to take opportunities for granted. It is something that both Bullen and Billittier have tried to help the younger players on the team understand.

"Before we played Saint Bonaventure, we had a team meeting like we always do," Billittier said. "But before we left, Oral stopped the group and he goes, 'Guys, I really want you to know, don't take anything for granted. Ernie and I were in this situation as freshmen, and we had a really solid team coming back as sophomores when we were starting, and we didn't make it back then. We figured we'd be back the next year, but you just can't take anything for granted. Nothing is set in stone.'

For me and Oral, it means so much to us to get back there."

"I told the guys that our freshman year, after we made it [to the postseason], we were so used to making it that we thought we were going to make it again next year," Bullen recalled telling his team before last Sunday's game. "And I told the guys that we didn't make it again the next year, or the year after that, so this is an opportunity that we have."

UMass coach Sam Koch has seen these two four-year players progress through the years they have spent together, and believes that his team would not have made it this far without the leadership and mental strength of his two captains.

"We had some firepower on that other team [in 2002], so their leadership is even more important [this year]," Koch said. "Because of their leadership, we've been able to accomplish what we've accomplished. They've been able to help refocus the team, a young team that has gone astray at times in games. They've been able to bring them back."

The final challenge for the 2005 team came last weekend with a win-or-go-home game at Saint Bonaventure. The weather was suspect, and the field conditions were sub-par, but two lightning delays later, the Minutemen had a 1-0 victory and were headed to A-10 tourney play.

Bullen, the normally reserved captain who leads by example, has been on Cloud Nine since that victory.

"I can't stop smiling," he said. "The fact that we ended up winning two [games] just made the trip so much better. We didn't even care if we had to stay another night or travel, miss anything. It was just all smiles around the room."

"You'd think someone cut out his tongue half the time," Koch said of Bullen. "He's definitely quiet, so for him to speak up [before the Saint Bonaventure game] was big. When he does speak up, everybody listens."

Bullen hasn't been the offensive force he was in the past, and a mid-season ankle injury might have held him back from putting up bigger numbers. It was a season that Bullen was not obligated to play, considering that he took his freshman year off and had already graduated academically.

As Koch points out, the men's team was not guaranteed to make the tournament this season, and it was in the middle of a rebuilding process, bringing in a lot of young talent that wasn't necessarily ready to take the team into the postseason. But Bullen came back anyway, to Koch's delight, and has led an underdog squad to UMass soccer's first tournament appearance since his freshman year.

"He didn't have to come back because this is his fifth year," Koch said. "But he came back. He didn't come back to a team that was picked to go to the NCAA tournament. He came back to a team that was in a huge rebuilding situation. And he decided to come back. A lot of other people wouldn't have, and he did. I'm very happy for him. Now we've got to win some games for him. You don't want to get [to the tournament] and come home [empty]."

"I definitely came back for Coach," Bullen said. "He's definitely been a big help for me. I wanted to give myself another chance of making it back."

The Minutemen play Rhode Island tonight and have been ousted from the A-10 tournament the last three times these teams have played. But both Bullen and Billittier know that postseason play throws out all of the rules and the records, giving every team a 0-0-0 record and a fresh start. Every team is three wins away from the title.

"The rankings don't matter," Billittier stated. "Everything that happened — conference, non-conference — is out the door. It's a clean slate for everybody. You take it game by game, and that's your only focus. Anything can happen. And if we keep putting our effort and the heart into our performances — we just keep trying to stress that anything can happen. The season is far from over if we put in the effort."

Spoken like a true captain — someone who has experienced nearly everything that Division I soccer has to offer, except winning an A-10 championship. Bullen is all smiles right now, and can barely hold his excitement back thinking about going to Saint Louis and facing the Rams. He loves his team and his coach and is proud to have made it this far.

For a captain and a talent as humble, team-oriented and deserving as Bullen, I'm sure everyone would like to see him end his last year with a victory.

Rob Greenfield is a Collegian columnist.

Tourney time for UM

SOCCER from page 12

KAREN WEINBERG/COLLEGIAN

Freshman forward Mike DeSantis and the Minutemen will take on Rhode Island in the first round of the A-10 Tournament today at 5 p.m. in St. Louis.

The Rams have ended UMass's season in each of the past two years. Both losses prevented the Minutemen from even making the conference tournament.

"Well, it doesn't matter what happened the last two years because it's this year, and [URI] is our next game," Koch said of his team's recent misfortunes against the Rams. "Our job is to beat the opponent whether it's Rhode Island, Charlotte or any other team. It doesn't really matter."

In 2003, it was a 3-0 URI victory that sent the Minutemen packing, and last season the Rams once again shut out UMass to end its tournament hopes, this time by a 2-0 score.

This will also mark the second time this season that the Maroon and White has seen the Rams on a soccer field. Just over a month ago, the two schools opened up conference play against one another with a 2-1 URI win at Rudd Field in Amherst.

The two teams played back and forth to a 0-0 tie for much of the game until UMass sophomore Matty Lemire broke the ice in the 82nd minute of play to put the Minutemen on top 1-0. What looked like a stellar win for Lemire's team soon turned into an ugly loss. URI scored two goals in a matter of two minutes to tie and eventually win the game, 2-1.

Koch believes that both teams will enter this contest a little bit different than their last meeting, and commented on what he expects to see today.

"They're going to try and stop our set pieces and try and stop our long throw-ins," he said. "I think they'll try to do some things that will hamper us from getting those situations, but I don't know if they can. I think our strengths going against their weakness match up for us."

This 2005 season has been a rollercoaster of sorts for the Minutemen. They started off strong, beating a Big Ten school (at the time undefeated) in Michigan, but then the injury bug hit the team and they proceeded to lose eight of their next 11 games, including two separate three-game losing streaks.

As of late, they are a completely different team, going 4-0-2 in their last six games.

Koch said he believed the turning point to his team's season came in a 5-0 demolishing the Minutemen took at the hands of the No. 1 seed in the tournament, St. Louis.

"I think at St. Louis, down 5-0 with 30 seconds to go, we're fighting in the 18-yard box to score a goal," he said. "Whether that was the turning point or an indication of the drive of this group I think that was big."

UMass sees familiar foe

REMATCH from page 12

outplayed URI for most of the game, and held a 1-0 lead with under 10 minutes left in regulation. From there, it was an extreme letdown that led to the two goals, but the first 80 minutes — when the Minutemen were the better team — are what Koch and company are focused on.

"That's a game that we look back and said, 'Man, if we would have won that game, it wouldn't have put us in the position that we were in on the weekend [facing Duquesne and Saint Louis],'" senior captain Oral Bullen said. "Having that game, especially URI, I haven't beaten them in the four years I've been here, so I'm dying to get a chance to beat them."

UMass is a different team now than it was when it faced the Rams in early October. It has many young players who, according to Koch and the captains, have matured over the last few games, especially in last weekend's pressure-cooker triumph over the Bonnies.

In their last six games the Minutemen have gone 4-0-2, an undefeated streak that propelled them from 12th in the conference after three A-10 games to sixth place by the end of the season.

A turnaround of such magnitude is the product of a blend between the maturation of the young players and the newfound leadership of Bullen and Billittier.

"The heart that this young group showed [against Saint Bonaventure] — I think they grew up a lot over the season," Bullen said. "Each week, we kept making steps, and we kept giving ourselves a chance and giving a reason to train hard. And we trained hard, and it finally paid off."

"There was so much drama on that trip [to St. Bonaventure and Fordham last weekend]," Billittier said. "We were in planes, in buses, in different hotels just traveling all over the place. We got stuck in traffic in New York City on the way to Fordham.

"We knew what we had to do, we did it, and it was just such a great feeling," he added. "Our backs were against the wall, and I'm proud of everybody that we got the job done."

Billittier saw his team go head-first into a two-game road trip that would decide the season, win both games despite logistical issues and two lightning delays against the Bonnies, and come away with the team's first A-10 appearance in three years.

This was not something that the Minutemen could have done a month ago — when newcomers were still getting accustomed to starting roles and injuries to both Bullen and Billittier left UMass with no on-field leadership to keep the team on track.

UMass has gone 0-for-3 so far in A-10 tournament play against Rhode Island and will face it in the playoffs — a task that will dwarf the Minutemen's dramatic late-season charge to make the postseason.

"To be honest, it didn't matter who we were playing [in the first round]," Koch stated. "We're just happy to be playing a game once the regular season is over."

The Minutemen are content to be in Saint Louis playing in the A-10 tournament for the first time since 2002, but now there is only one thing on their minds: revenge.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.northamherstmotors.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repairs & Glass Replacement

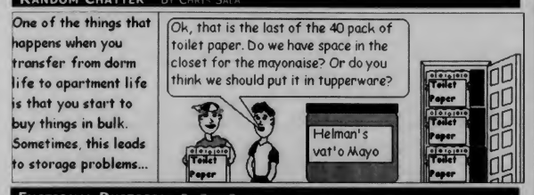
Monday-Friday 7:30-6
Thursday 7:30-8
Saturday 7:30-4
Saturn of Hadley
40 Russell St, Route 9
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 584-6066
SATURN.
Our service center repairs all kinds of cars...not just Saturns.
Oil & Filter Change Only $19.99
Includes topping off all fluids, adjusting tire pressures, Check antifreeze for winter protection.
FREE wash & vacuum. FREE 27 point inspection.
• Mass State Inspection Station
• Free shuttle service to & from UMASS
• Located directly on bike path & PVTA stop.
No Appointment Needed
10% off mechanical repairs
Late hours on Thursdays

Regency Hair Stylists
"Get a new look for fall"
$ 5.00 OFF a haircut
Monday - Thursday
Bring this ad and your Student ID.
Call for an appointment or stop by the salon
253 - 9526
189 N. Pleasant St
Amherst, MA 01002

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

T-Shirts
with this ad
across the street from Walmart
YOUR DESIGN OR LOGO!
PRINTED!
Sunraise
322 Russell Street • Hadley, MA 01035
E-mail. print@sunraiseinc.com
www.sunraiseinc.com
586-7133

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
333 Russell St., Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174
Sale date: 11/10/05 - 11/16/05
not responsible for typographical errors.
Liquor
Grand Marnier 750 ml $29.99
Navan Vanilla Cognac 750 ml $29.99
10 Cane Rum from Trinidad 750 ml $29.99
Ciroc Vodka 750 ml $24.99
Jim Beam 1.75 liter $22.99
Jose Cuervo Tradicional Tequila 750 ml $22.99
Boru Irish Vodka 1.75 lt $19.99
Godiva Liqueurs 750 ml $16.99
Seagram's 7 Whiskey 1.75 liter $16.99
Gilbey's Gin 1.75 liter $13.99
UV Flavored Vodka 1 liter $10.99
Pinnacle Vodka 750 ml $10.99
Wine
Chandon California Sparkling Wines 750 ml $14.99
Solaris Winery 750 ml $10.99
Chardonnay, Merlot, Cabernet, P Noir
Clos du Bois Chardonnay 750 ml $9.99
J. Lohr Chardonnay 750 ml $9.99
Guenoc 750 ml $9.99
Cabernet, S. Blanc, Chardonnay
Principato Pinot Grigio 1.5 lt $8.99
Carlo Rossi 4.0 liter $8.99
B.V. Century Cellars 1.5 lt $10.99
Chardonnay, Merlot, Cabernet
Barefoot Vineyards 750 ml 2 for $10.00
Bunrock Station 750 ml 2 for $10.00
Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot, Shiraz
Barton & Guestier 750 ml 2 for $10.00
Chardonnay, Merlot, Cabernet
Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm, Sunday 12pm - 11pm



VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS By Charlie X

LABRAT By Richard Martell

RANDOM CHATTER By Chris Sala

FUCTIONAL DYSTOPIA By Zeke Risan

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

Quote of the Day

"Millions of galaxies of hundreds of millions of stars, in a speck on one in a blink. That's us, lost in space."

—Collateral

ACROSS
1 Inarticulate grunt
4 Stitches loosely
10 Inland Asian sea
14 Likewise
15 Whitener
16 Hatcher of 'Desperate Housewives'
17 In particular
19 Canadian cops
20 Small outbuilding
21 Rubicon crosser
23 Not new
27 Yes
28 NASA partner
31 Tampa pro
35 'The Winding Stair' poet
37 Let go of
38 Trademark swab
39 Kill, old-style
40 Ms. Farrow
42 Artful deception
43 Fair-to-middling
44 Poe poem
46 Washstand accessories
48 Like a landlocked country
49 NBC classic
50 Big coffee container
52 Sailing vessel
53 Use for cash
56 'Downs Under the ___'
60 Lena of 'Alias'
62 Obliterated
66 Ed or Early
67 Virgil's epic
68 Gridiron
69 Stool supports
70 Grooms like a cat
71 Sen. Kennedy
DOWN
1 Shoshones
2 Golly!
3 Optimistic feeling
4 Eng. channel
5 Pugilist Laila
6 Red or Black
7 Baby powder
8 Cream-filled treat
9 More like a wallflower
10 Gillette razor
11 Like pastimes
12 Limb
13 Cup rim
18 Teacher of the Year, e.g.
22 Claude Rains
24 Ali there
25 Bring to a halt
26 View as
29 Entrance gates
30 Quaking trees
31 Kisses
32 Yen to be out
33 Using unethical methods
34 Mrs. Bunker
36 Matched in value
41 Mariner's hail
42 Got bigger
45 Notable time
47 Yule or Bronco
48 Noisy sweeper
51 Hit the high points, briefly
54 Travel lodges
55 Zilch
57 Golf ball's arc
58 Stubborn beast
59 Upright post
60 Hooter
61 Sodium hydroxide
63 Get the point
64 Religious prohibition
65 Asner and Wynn
Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

the Moan and Dove
Because we're a bunch of pretentious beer snobs.
Doesn't mean it's a bad place to hang out.
themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

15 minutes from campus on Rt. 63
LIVE ENTERTAINMENT
5 nights a week
Friday 11th
Strang Brew 9:30pm
Classic and Updated rock
Saturday 12th
Strangers (AKA Heroes)
Rockers 9:30pm
Sunday
Acoustic Jam 1pm-7
Thursday & Sundays
Karaoke/Guitaraoke
T-N-T Productions 8pm
Wednesday
Open Mic 9:00pm
$5 pitchers of Bud and Bud Light
www.rt63roadhouse.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Oh my goodness I think you just ran over a poodle.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Your mommy will be oh so happy to see you this weekend.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You need some pink highlighters in your life.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Maybe if you did the dishes you wouldn't have so many fruit flies everywhere.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Buying tickets to a concert without consulting a calendar is never a good idea.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You could really use a nice pair of mittens.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You should buy a holiday CD and blast it at 3 a.m.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
It's almost time for you to start wearing those long johns.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You will go on a hot date over the weekend.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Stop listening to sad songs in your room and make some friends.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You would look wicked cool if you wore chapstick on a lanyard everywhere.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
It's really not nice to throw things at people.

New in Town?
Amherst Hairstylists
Caren's Place
You can trust us with your hair.
40 Main St.
Downtown Amherst
(Next to Newbury Comics)
413 253 1200
Mon-Fri 10-6
Sat 10-4
Visa/MC/S
This Ad Will Run Mon & Thurs
•Haircuts & Styling
•Hair Coloring (Free Highlighting Consultation)
•Multi-Color Highlighting
•Body & Facial Waxing
•For Both Men & Women
•Walk-Ins Welcome!
Get it done right the first time!
Fall Semester Coupon Specials!
1/2 price facial waxing on Wed through December.
$1 off any service with this ad until 12/05
Only with this coupon
www.carensplace.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend
New Years Party $129
Complete cocktail age 18
781-979-9001 Call now
montrealexpress.net

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom spacious apartments, Great location, Bus Route, All utilities included No Fee Call 413-253-3000

EMPLOYMENT

November 18th is the last day to apply to become a Legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience. Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center to pick up an application.

EMPLOYMENT

GET PAID VIEWING ADS ON THE INTERNET: $6,000/mo. Potential. START TODAY!! www.ezmoney.FindHere.org

Rent us your ears! Listening experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837.

Looking to be a Legal Assistant? Spring 2006 Internship Applications are available at the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients while earning 12 undergraduate credits. Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center

EMPLOYMENT

Part-Time Workers Needed We are looking for part-time assistance with a variety of office and clerical tasks. Preferred candidates will work quickly and accurately and be able to work from 5pm-9pm on days that they work. Pay is $8.00/hour. For consideration, please call (413) 256-0444 for an application or mail resume to: National Evaluation Systems, Inc., Personnel Department, P.O. Box 226, Amherst, MA 01004-0226. Resumes may also be emailed to: personnel@nesinc.com.

Mystery Shoppers get paid to shop! Up to $150 a day. Training provided Call 1-800-690-1273

EMPLOYMENT

PART-TIME POSITIONS Ideal for students or 2nd job $8.00 Hr. 20+ hrs/wk; Conduct surveys over the phone Hadley location – NO SALES! Night & wknd; shifts PVTA accessible. RSW Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381 or email: dhayes@retail-solutions.us

"Bartending" $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

FURNITURE

Sealy Mattress Set KING $575.00 QUEEN $465.00 FULL $365.00 TWIN $195 Save 50% or more off store prices. For more details call 215-431-9584

LOST

Green & Black USB Storage Device left in open access computers in the library on Tuesday Morning 9:30 $20 REWARD Contact dmurphy@student.umass.edu

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

Bahamas Spring Break Cruise! 5 Days From $299! Includes Meals, MTV Celebrity Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Jamaica From $499! Campus Reps Needed! Promo Code:31 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

SPRING BREAK FROM $569 BAHAMAS, CANCUN, ACAPULCO, JAMAICA! FREE PARTIES, FREE DRINKS. Sign up early and save. Organize a small group and you travel FREE. Or become a CAMPUS REP and GET PAID COMMISSION on each trip sold. Call today and get started 1-800-GET-SUN-1

TRAVEL

ACT NOW – SPRING BREAKERS Book early & Save! Free meals/parties by 11/7. Lowest prices. Be a rep & TRAVEL FREE! Get the ultimate hookups with STA TRAVEL 413-256-1261.

WANTED

Pregnant? Bilingual Spanish couple waiting to adopt. Love nature, music, and animals. Will share these interests with your baby. Happy to share letters, pictures and to stay in touch. Call Brightside 24/7 and ask about Dawn and John. 1-877-777-7774 license# 1465107

Collegian Advertising
545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

War time

Minutemen vs. Army

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

Playing in one of the most treasured college football stadiums in the nation against a Division I-A program that is steeped in tradition is only a fraction of the story for the No. 5 Massachusetts football team (7-2 6-1 Atlantic 10) when it takes on Army (2-6) on Saturday at Michie Stadium.

The contest is vital for UMass to remain as one of the top contenders in the A-10, as it is tied at the No. 1 slot with New Hampshire, with the Wildcats taking the tiebreaker.

This game is the second of three on the road for the Minutemen, and they will travel to West Point, N.Y. following a 35-7 shelling of Delaware on Saturday before returning to New York on Nov. 19 to face Hofstra.

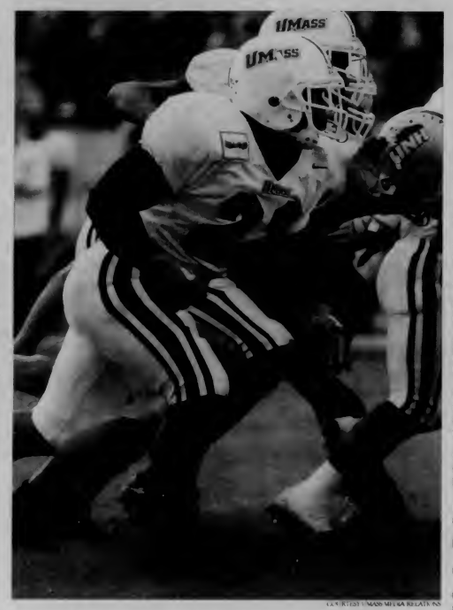
Although wins have not been a regular topic of conversation in West Point, the Minutemen have to fight history if they want to down the I-A program.

"Since '93, when we really went to the new Atlantic 10, we have never beaten a I-A team," UMass coach Don Brown said. "The reality is, we have not risen up and beaten a I-A team, so we're trying to get that done, so there's motivation there. Obviously we're playing in front of a great crowd, a program with tremendous tradition, and trust me, we're excited about playing."

Brown has had a knack for upsetting I-A teams, too. During his coaching time at Northeastern from 2000-03, Brown was able to knock off two Division I-A schools in UConn and Ohio.

UMass recently has not faired well against upper-tier foot-

See FOOTBALL on page 9



GAME DAY CENTRAL

No. 5 UMass	Army
(7-2 Overall 6-1 Atlantic 10)	(2-6)
Last Week: 35-7 Win at Delaware	Last Week: 27-24 Win at Air Force

Michie Stadium, West Point, N.Y. (40,000)
Kickoff: Noon

Television: ESPNU, Streaming Video: ESPN360
Radio: UMass Sports Network - WRNX 100.9 FM Holyoke, flagship (Bob Behler: play-by-play, Matt Goldstein: color commentary, Mike Mazzelli: sidelines)

Series: Army leads 1-0
Last Meeting: Army 34, UMass 10 (Sept. 10, 1977)

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior tailback Justin Montgomery has gotten a bit of action this season as a backup for Steve Baylark and R.J. Cobbs. Montgomery found the endzone in Saturday's win over Delaware.

Montgomery fills in nicely

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

He hasn't had many opportunities to show his worth on the football field this season, with two star-studded tailbacks ahead of him on the depth chart in Steve Baylark and R.J. Cobbs, but when Justin Montgomery has seen action on the gridiron for the Massachusetts football team, he has done nothing but prove to coach Don Brown that this team is as deep in talent at that position as any.

"He just makes plays," Brown said. "Whether it's on special teams or offense, he just finds a way to make plays every week."

His best performance this season was in a relief appearance during UMass's 40-0 drubbing over Albany on Sept. 17, when he rushed 12 times for 53 yards and a score, but his role against Delaware on Saturday was heightened with Cobbs's limited services due to a nagging injury.

As a nice compliment to the bulldozing Baylark, Montgomery slashed his way for 31 yards on seven carries and made another trip to the endzone to seal the victory in the fourth quarter.

"When it's your time to step up, you step up," Montgomery said. "Hopefully, you can do a good job, and that is all I've been trying to do. If somebody goes down, somebody gets injured, I just try to step up and help the team."

And his low center of gravity (he is listed at a generous 5-foot-9) makes him very tough to take down, whether he runs someone over or leaves a defensive back scratching his head after burning him with a quick juke.

"I'm a physical runner. I like to go downhill. Sometimes I like to make people miss to make it exciting, make it fun and make it a little entertaining."

Right in Line

It was one of the feel-good stories of the year, but you'll never read about it on a stat sheet.

Captain and senior tackle Colin Stoetzel made his return to the offensive line on Saturday after missing the first seven games with a torn ACL in his right knee, causing concern

See NOTEBOOK on page 9

UMass faces two Boston teams

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

Something eventually has to give for the Massachusetts hockey team. So far in the early stages of the 2005 campaign, the Minutemen have run into trouble in the form of a bad powerplay (4-41 on the season), game disqualifications (freshman Alex Berry against Clarkson, senior Marvin Degon against New Hampshire and freshman Chris Davis against Providence), and really good Hockey East opponents (UNH, Maine and Providence).

The Minutemen's 1-6 (0-4 HEA) start to the season is the first time the team has opened up a season this poorly since they began the 1996-97 season with the same 1-6 mark.

Things just haven't been going UMass's way for the better part of this season. The team is struggling to capitalize on the many opportunities it creates for itself, and its man advantage has been nearly non-existent.

One bright spot this season has been the stellar play of freshman goaltender Jon Quick. The newcomer was named HEA Co-Rookie of the Week for his efforts against Providence this past Friday night. In the 4-2 loss, Quick stopped 49 shots, the most in a game by a UMass goalie since Nov. 12, 2004.

This weekend won't be any easier for the Minutemen, as they travel to Northeastern (0-6-1 0-3-1 HEA) on Friday night and welcome another conference foe to Amherst on Saturday in the form of Boston University (3-2-0 3-1-0 HEA).

Despite their losing record, the Huskies feature a host of young players on their roster. In their seven games this season, freshmen have accounted for 21 of the team's 34 points scored.

The rookies on the team are led by Quick's HEA Co-Rookie of the Week counterpart, Ryan Ginand. In NU's loss to UNH on Friday night, Ginand recorded his first three career goals on his first career hat trick. The three goals were scored in a matter of less than eight minutes at the 3:56, 5:34 and 11:40 marks of the second period in the 6-4 loss against the Wildcats. Ginand's hat trick was the first by a rookie in HEA play since March of 2000.

BU, on the other hand, is enjoying what could be a good start for the team. Despite the loss of Chris Bourque to the Washington Capitals' organization, the Terriers knocked off two of the top teams in HEA last weekend, defeating Vermont 4-2 and Maine 2-1.

The win against Vermont was BU coach Jack Parker's 300th victory in HEA play. He is the only coach in the 21-year history of the conference to accomplish that feat.

UMass coach Don Cahoon and Parker share a history of their own. Cahoon played for Parker at BU, winning national championships in the 1971 and '72 seasons. He also coached with Parker at BU during three different stints at the school: 1974-79, 1987-88 and the 1990-91 season.

The Terriers also feature this week's HEA Player of the Week, junior goaltender John Curry. In the win over Vermont on Friday night, Curry saved 19 of the Catamounts' 21 shots and then stopped a season-high 37 shots en route to defeating the Black Bears on Saturday night. His 37 saves against Maine included 19 in the third period alone.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Tipoff time

Senior Jeff Viggiano and the Massachusetts basketball team open their season with an exhibition game against Dowling at the Mullins Center tonight at 7 p.m. This will mark the beginning of the Travis Ford era.

Playoff time for UM

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

The road has been long and treacherous this season, but make no mistake about it that at the end of the day it was all worth it for the Massachusetts men's soccer team (8-9-2 4-3-2 Atlantic 10). After two gutsy wins this past weekend over Fordham and St. Bonaventure, the Minutemen are making the trip back to the A-10 Tournament for the first time in three years.

With their pair of 1-0 victories over the Rams and the Bonnies, UMass managed to move itself into the sixth and final playoff spot in the A-10 and was rewarded with a November trip to St. Louis. The Minutemen's opening round game is against Rhode Island (11-7-1 7-2-0 A-10) today at 5 p.m.

Entering this past weekend the Maroon and White sat in 10th place in the conference, and the only way to keep its postseason hopes alive was to win both games on its New York state road trip to the Bronx and St. Bonaventure.

Goals by sophomore Greg Cirillo in double overtime and senior Ernie Billitier against Fordham and St. Bonaventure, respectively, vaulted the Minutemen all the way up the A-10 ladder into the final tournament spot.

"We've had a lot of guys that, at certain times, have stepped up and helped us win," UMass coach Sam Koch said about the successful weekend. "It's been a great run so far, and we're all excited that we've reached the goal of making the Atlantic 10 Tournament. We're not happy just to be there. We've got a job to do, and that's to beat Rhode Island. That's the most important game we've got right now."

The Rams enter Thursday's matchup fresh off of being named co-A-10 Champions along with St. Louis and Duquesne. URI earned the honor by downing Fordham, 2-1, on Sunday in the Bronx.

Both goals for the Rams were scored by sophomore Dawid Badecki. The win earned URI the third seed in the tournament.

See SOCCER on page 10

Reuniting with Rhode Island

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

On Oct. 9, the Massachusetts men's soccer team hit rock bottom. It was 3-6 on the season and had just lost the first conference game to Rhode Island, 2-1, after the Rams scored twice in the final seven minutes to rip the win from the seemingly strong grasp of the Minutemen.

"That game was definitely a heartbreaker," senior co-captain Ernie Billittier said. "It was the first game of conference, and we needed that boost. It was a tough first three games, and that would have helped us out a lot."

Now, after beating out several other teams for the sixth and final playoff spot with two wins over Fordham and Saint Bonaventure last weekend, the Minutemen find themselves facing Rhode Island again — a matchup that the team has been waiting for since the Rams shocked the Minutemen at Rudd Field, landing a knockout punch that UMass just recovered from last weekend with an Atlantic 10 tournament berth.

"We definitely have a chip on our shoulder as far as Rhode Island goes," Billittier said. "We know we [can] beat them so we couldn't ask for anything more as far as the matchup we got. We're looking forward to it."

"The key thing is for us to do our job — focus on us, focus on what we need to do, focus on the present and not worry about the past," UMass coach Sam Koch said under the lights at Garber Field on Tuesday.

"Obviously, you have to learn from the past. There are some things that we didn't do in that [Rhode Island] game. We don't need to review it now because we've corrected those errors. They're the next opponent. We have to play them on Thursday, and that's all we are really thinking about."

Playing URI again could drum up some painful memories and anxiety. Tonight at 5 p.m., UMass will play the team that nearly ended the Minutemen's season with one seven-minute sequence. But instead of dwelling on the negative, the Minutemen have taken a different approach to this game.

"We're looking at it like, 'If they beat us the first time, they're not going to beat us this time,'" Koch said. "And they beat us in the last minute so we're excited we have the opportunity to right that wrong."

In the regular season loss to the Rams, despite the gut-wrenching quality of it, the Minutemen actually

See REMATCH on page 10

What's the score?

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 2005 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM VOLUME CXVI ISSUE 46

Cindy Sheehan visits UMass

Sheehan shares views in one-on-one interview

By Matt Pilon
Collegian Staff

The greenery of a Texas field can be seen in the background. The camera slowly zooms in on the weary face of a 48-year-old woman. Her message, like the setting, is simple.

"You were wrong about the weapons of mass destruction, you were wrong about the link between Iraq and Al-Qaeda. You lied to us. And, because of your lies, my son died."

The face belongs to Cindy Sheehan, who first entered the media limelight in early August this year when she camped outside President Bush's Crawford, Texas vacation ranch to protest the U.S. invasion of Iraq and demand a meeting with the president.

Her son, Army Specialist Casey Sheehan, was killed in Baghdad on April 4, 2004.

The film excerpt described above is from an ad filmed in Crawford and run by Gold Star Families for Peace. The GFSP, an organization started by Sheehan, is opposed to the Iraq War on the basis that the Bush administration authorized an invasion under false pretenses.

For more than 19 months, Sheehan has become a media anti-war figurehead through public appear-

See INTERVIEW on page 2

Cindy Sheehan, the anti-war protestor who camped outside of President Bush's Texas ranch after her son's death in the Iraq War, addresses crowds of students and community members in the UMass Student Ballroom.

Sheehan urges crowds to end the Iraq War

By Katie Huston
Collegian Staff

"Peace mom" Cindy Sheehan urged Americans last Friday night to overcome apathy and demand an end to the war in Iraq.

"When are we going to force them to stop killing?" she asked the overflowing crowd of over 1,000 students and community members in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts Amherst.

A leading peace activist and founding member of Gold Star Families for Peace, Sheehan rocketed into international prominence when she demanded an audience with President George W. Bush and set up "Camp Casey" outside of his Texas ranch for four weeks in August after her son, U.S. Army Specialist Casey Sheehan, was killed in action in Iraq during April 2004.

"We as a country have to stop the war machine from eating our children, from eating them and spitting them out," she said, "We need to stop this so people don't have to pay the price I paid."

Sheehan called the war "illegal and immoral" and attacked the Bush administration's "rhetoric" as hollow and ambiguous.

"He won't tell us what 'complete victory' is," Sheehan said. "Is it when every citizen of Iraq is dead?"

See SHEEHAN on page 2

Gubernatorial candidates speak at UMass

By Christina Baron
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Democrats kicked off their weekend-long Progressive Public Policy Conference with a keynote address by Congressman Barney Frank and speeches by the Democratic candidates for governor.

Many Massachusetts Democrats, both students and community members, convened in the Student Union Ballroom Saturday morning to listen to the leaders of the Democratic party talk about what it takes to strengthen the Democratic party and win the gubernatorial election in November 2006.

Attorney General Tom Reilly and Former Assistant U.S. Attorney General for Civil Rights Deval Patrick were the two candidates whose speeches followed Frank's. When they took the stage, both focused on the need of the government to increase aid to education, especially higher public education.

Attorney General Reilly said he believes that the public education system is the hope for the middle class. He pledged that, if he is elected, the state of Massachusetts "will have a governor who will stand up for UMass."

Former Assistant U.S. Attorney General Deval Patrick also noted the need for spending in higher public education and expressed concerns about the high cost of tuition and fees. He said he believes that the solution is for state research bonds, like the one for stem-cell research, to go to public universities and then to use the proceeds from that research to be reinvested in that school.

During the question and answer period after both speeches, the candidates were faced with some hard and critical questions from the crowd on the Iraq War.

In response to the ballot initiative that campus petitioners have been campaigning for recently, which calls for the withdrawal of the Massachusetts Guard from Iraq, Patrick said that he would use the "power of public leadership to Attourney General Tom Reilly, a candidate for governor of Massachusetts, gives his speech.

Congressman Barney Frank gives the keynote address at the Public Policy Conference.

advocate for a prompt end to the war."

However, he said that he did not support the ballot initiative because he respects the right of the federal government to deploy the National Guard and to decide when to bring them home.

Reilly also did not support the initiative, saying that it was not as easy as it may sound to pull troops out of a foreign country.

"The fact of the matter is we are there," he said. "We have to stand together as Americans and support our troops."

The end of Patrick's address was interrupted when about 30 protesters who had marched from Northampton to Amherst entered the Student Union Ballroom, carrying anti-war signs and expressing their frustration with the war in Iraq and the Democratic Party. Patrick responded to them by agreeing to meet with them after the speech to answer their questions.

The candidates also addressed the social issue of abortion. Reilly said that he is pro-choice and supports parental notification laws while Patrick, who is also pro-choice, does not. Both candidates also talked about the need to pull the Democratic Party together for the 2006 elections so that, for the first time in 20 years, a Democratic Governor would be elected in the Bay State.

See DEMOCRAT on page 2

Pro-abortion group leader gives speech

By Megan Daley
Collegian Staff

The interim president of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America was at the University of Massachusetts on Thursday to give a speech that promoted the nomination of a Supreme Court justice who would uphold the controversial Roe vs. Wade court decision of 1973.

Karen Pearl, the group's president, spoke about her memories of a time before abortion was legalized, when young women took dangerous chemicals or used coat hangers to self-abort their pregnancies. She said she was worried that we were coming back to those days as the Roe vs. Wade decision is being "slowly eviscerated."

Roe vs. Wade was the 1973 Supreme Court ruling that overturned all state laws that outlawed or restricted abortions. Since the decision, there have been numerous attempts, says Pearl, to "chip away" at it.

Such attempts, according to Pearl, include state laws that require parental notification before an abortion can be performed, state mandated "waiting periods" that make women wait a few days before going through an abortion and requiring doctors to read "inflammatory and inaccurate" information to a woman prior to abortion.

Pearl says that all of these amendments to Roe vs. Wade are destroying the fundamentals of the case and will only serve to hurt women. "Restricting access to abortion will not make it go away," Pearl said, "it will just make it less safe."

Pearl claims that restricting a woman's access to abortion may make her seek out less safe ways of aborting her pregnancy. "It will cause women to die," she said.

According to Pearl, Samuel A. Alito Jr., President George W. Bush's most recent nominee for the Supreme Court, will

See PARENTHOOD on page 3

Rural poverty speech to be given

By Ashish K. Sahu
Collegian Staff

The president of International Development Enterprises (IDE) at the University of Massachusetts will give a public lecture on Tuesday about water access and its connection to rural poverty.

Dr. Paul Polak will give a speech titled, "Access and Control of Water: Combating Rural Poverty in Developing Countries" at 3:30 p.m. in the Bernie Dallas Hall in Goodell on the UMass campus.

Polak's public talk will be the fourth and final lecture in the fall semester Environmental Lecture Series on the Global Environment and Health. The series is organized by The Environmental Institute and co-sponsored by the Colleges of Natural Resources and the Environment, Natural Sciences and Mathematics, Social and Behavioral Sciences, Engineering, and the Schools of Public Health and Nursing.

IDE is a non-profit organization founded by Dr Polak in 1981, committed to working to end extreme poverty. IDE has pioneered the development and marketing of low-cost, appropriate technologies in developing countries and building more effective linkages between the rural poor and agricultural markets.

70 percent of the world's extremely poor populations live in rural areas where small plots of land are often their only asset. According to IDE much of its work is focused on access and control of water because "its absence is the most important single productivity constraint facing millions of small farmers throughout the developing world".

IDE has innovated technologies such as the "Easy Drip," an affordable micro-irrigation system for rural farmers in developing countries.

"With the help of affordable irrigation and access to markets, farmers in the developing world can grow more food and climb out of poverty," said Paul Polak in a story covered by Scientific American.

For a family in Zimbabwe with a 100-square-meter plot, Polak's group installed a low-cost, gravity-fed, drip-irrigation kit. Because the drip system brought water directly to the roots, it was far more efficient than watering the plants by bucket. As a result, the small plot produced enough corn and vegetables to meet most of the family's needs, and the family expected to earn at least $90 from selling the surplus, a substantial income for a poor farmer in Zimbabwe.

In 1985, IDE adopted a simple foot-powered treadle pump and marketed it to poor farmers through the private sector. To date, more than two million treadle pumps have been installed in Asia and Africa.

Dr. Polak will discuss these and other projects focusing on access and control of water to combat rural poverty in developing countries. In 2003, Scientific American honored Dr. Polak as a top 50 innovator for his work in pioneering poverty alleviation worldwide.

ELIZABETH CHRISTY/COLLEGIAN

Remembering the fallen...

Boots were placed near the Student Union Center to commemorate fallen soldiers of the Iraq War.

ARTS & LIVING
'CAPOTE' REMEMBERED
'Capote' chronicles the writing of author Truman Capote's crime novel, 'In Cold Blood.'
PAGE 5

EDITORIAL/OPINION
UMASS DIVERSITY FAIRNESS IN QUESTION
Speaker Tim Wise sparks minority admission debate.
PAGE 4

WEATHER
TODAY Mostly Sunny, 1158°
TONIGHT Partly Cloudy, L 35°
TOMORROW Showers, H50°, L46°

SPORTS
A FIGHT TO THE FINISH
UMass football fell short 34-27 to Division I Army on Saturday.
PAGE 8

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael A. Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Cameron J. Woods
BUSINESS MANAGER Hirak Shah
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherel Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerry O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egasian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Matthew O'Rourke
COPIES EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Allison Edles
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
PHOTO EDITOR Kate Sachsenmaier
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
HUMAN RESOURCE Phil Smoller
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Nathan Chomiak
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mackenzie Isler
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Jones
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Daley
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Bellveau
ASSISTANT PHOTO Elizabeth Carisi
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eric Athas
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Kristen LaCasse

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS FALL AND SPRING SEMESTERS. THE COLLEGIAN IS NOT PUBLISHED DURING VACATIONS OR DURING SPRING BREAK. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER HAS BEEN KNOWN AS ALMA LUX, MIRROR AND COLLEGE NEWS IN 1901, THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN IN 1924 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HANDLES BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 OR STOP BY 113 CAMPUS CENTER.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Michael A. Busack
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Kate Sachsenmaier
COPY EDITOR
Dan O'Brien
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Melody Natal
PRODUCTION STAFF
Jackie Ronan

Sheehan addresses removal of troops

SHEEHAN from page 1

Until her son was killed, Sheehan said, she had not marched in a protest or written a letter against the war. Now, her outlook has changed.

"How can we as Americans let this government continue?" she asked the crowd. "If you're not [calling for the immediate removal of troops], you're pro-war."

She dismissed criticism against her reputedly brazen and unapologetic rhetoric.

"So George Bush says we're unpatriotic. At least we're not war criminals," she said. "We are doing exactly what our constitution gives us the right to do. What we're doing is the very essence of being American."

Sheehan urged the crowd to call out their elected officials, particularly to support a bill sponsored by U.S. Rep. Jim McGovern (D-Mass.) that would prohibit the use of taxpayer funds to deploy U.S. Armed Forces to Iraq.

She also emphasized the need to support the troops so that returned soldiers do not have to fight for benefits.

Sheehan was the featured guest at a two-and-a-half hour anti-war forum. The event was a highlight of the "Week on the War," which was put on by the UMass Antiwar Coalition, the UMass group Students Against the War and the American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker organization devoted to service, development, social justice and peace.

Prior to Sheehan's speech, several professors, artists, veterans and military families spoke out against the Iraq war.

Princeton University physicist Zia Mann, an activist who has devoted much of his life to working for global nuclear disarmament, stressed the importance of addressing the underlying causes of war and the "institutionalization of violence."

Sut Jhally, a professor of communications at UMass and executive director of the Media Education Foundation, shared a 12-minute clip of his new film, "Hijacking Democracy: American Extremism and the Politics of Fear," which examines the dangerous impact of fundamentalist forces in America.

The film drew several rounds of applause, especially when it criticized Massachusetts Senator John Kerry's failure to take a firm anti-war stance.

Several local military parents shared their experiences, urging support for the troops and anti-war activism and drawing standing ovations. Laura Strandlund, a member of Military Families Speak Out whose son served in Afghanistan and Iraq, said Cindy Sheehan's activism has made her feel safe to speak up.

"Supporting our troops means more than a magnetic sticker on the back of your car. It means speaking for them because they are not safe to speak themselves," Gamber said.

Kevin and Joyce Lucey, whose son Jetlrey hung himself a year after returning from war, criticized the administration's insistence on "staying the course."

"I see no logic in honoring one's death by adding to its numbers," Joyce said.

UMass student veteran Jon Zagami reminded the audience of the hundreds of other veterans on the UMass campus and emphasized that supporting the troops doesn't necessitate supporting the war.

Several artists also performed throughout the evening, including local high school student and aspiring dancer Mike "Onion" Kim, who danced to Edwin Starr's anti-war anthem "War". Springfield poet Magdalena Gomez, who likened the current administration's tactics to the behavior of a pedophile; and peace educator Sarah Pirtle, who performed "Home for Dinner," a song she wrote about Cindy Sheehan.

Evelyn Maria Harris, formerly of the black female group "Sweet Honey and the Rock," drew the crowd to their feet in a sing-along chorus of "Down by the Riverside." Her powerful voice projected the lyrics, "I ain't gonna study war no more" through the ballroom.

The event was part of Eyes Wide Open, a traveling exhibit created by the American Friends Service Committee. The exhibit also featured 2,000 pairs of combat boots tagged with the names of U.S. soldiers who have died in the Iraq war, which were on display from Thursday to Saturday.

Sheehan voices her opinions

Cindy Sheehan discusses the death of her son, Casey, in the Iraq War and explains how that event led to her participation in the anti-war movement.

INTERVIEW from page 1

ances at anti-war rallies and stints like the one in Crawford. She gave a speech last Friday at the Student Union Ballroom as a part of the "Week on the War" series set up by the American Friends Service Committee in partnership with many other local organizations.

Cindy spoke with the Daily Collegian by phone prior to her UMass speech as she and her sister drove through New York en route to a speaking appearance. This is the transcript of that interview:

Q: What is your overall goal in your public campaign?

A: To bring the troops home and make sure that our military is never used so recklessly, irresponsibly, and carelessly again.

Q: If the administration pulled troops out of Iraq this week, would you have enough peace of mind for your quest to be over?

A: I can't stop there because, like I said, we can't ever let this happen again. We have to make sure we never get involved in another war of aggression based on lies and have our young people killed again.

Q: What is the most common criticism you hear other than "You don't support the troops?" How do you respond?

A: People say I'm a traitor and I say that, you know, what I'm doing is the American thing to do. It's my First Amendment right; it's my right as a citizen of the country to try to improve our country if I see something wrong and if I see a leader that's leading our country so terribly.

Q: Describe how you see the current state of political dissent in the United States. How do you explain the difference in ferocity from Vietnam era protests?

A: I think that the dissent is growing and I think it's different because we don't have a draft, and in Vietnam there was a draft, and that's why a lot of college students were involved. I think it's just different. Our lives are a lot different now. It takes a lot more for people to be involved than it did back then, but I see more and more people becoming more and more involved all the time.

Q: Democrats have demanded an inquiry into pre-war intelligence. A report is due back November 14. What do you see as your role in this attempt to exact information from this presidential administration?

A: I don't really think I have a role, because that was something that was promised before the election last year. This has been over a year after the election and its way past due. I want to put pressure on the administration and put pressure on the media to do their jobs to investigate what's going on.

Q: Describe media coverage of the Iraq War. In your view, have news organizations been diligent enough?

A: I believe that the administration is using the news media as propaganda tools for their lies, and like in Judith Miller's case, was willingly complicit in the lies. In other cases, they just don't investigate, they don't ask the hard questions, and they aren't reporting at all. This is America. We have freedom of the press. Why can't we show pictures of the coffins coming home? Why can't we tell the truth about what's going on in Iraq? If we didn't have the progressive media, we wouldn't know anything.

Q: Do you feel as if the media was not critical enough when evidence surfaced that there were almost certainly no weapons of mass destruction in Iraq? Could that have been a larger turning point?

A: Well actually, I think the media should have been asking the questions before we even invaded Iraq. They should have been asking all the questions instead of following it. I didn't follow it. I was a mom in California and I didn't believe anything the administration was saying. I think if the media had done their jobs maybe this war could have been avoided.

Q: What, in your opinion, will it take for this administration to admit to their mistakes and pull U.S. troops out of Iraq?

A: I don't think this administration can do that. That's why we have to work really hard at getting them out. They won't do it no matter how many of them are indicted.

Q: What will it take to get people to care enough to actually act?

A: The majority of Americans already care about this and they already want the war to end. We just have to get our elected officials to come along with us.

Q: You've pulled together a community of parents who have lost a son or daughter in the Iraq War. Describe the partisan split among those parents who agree with the war and those who do not. What can you find in common?

A: We have a lot in common. We have more in common than not. We all have wonderful loved ones who served their country and were killed. And whether or not you agree with the mission, it doesn't change the fact that our children are heroes and that our children were killed in Iraq, and I give them the space they need to grieve the way they need to. I think it would be nice if they would give me the same space.

Q: What will be your main message for the Amherst community?

A: Just take back responsibility for being a citizen of the United States of America and work to change things. One person can make a difference.

Congressman discusses party politics at Democrat convention

DEMOCRAT from page 1

Congressman Frank began the convention with a humorous and optimistic prediction for the future of the Democratic Party based on the results of last week's elections in which Democratic candidates won across the nation with bigger victories than predicted, he said.

"I think things are beginning to turn for the better," he said.

Frank said the Democratic Party is now ahead on three major policy issues: social, economic, and foreign.

Since the Terry Schiavo "right to die" case, Frank said he believes that the right-wing control of the Republican Party is beginning to backfire because people want the government to "mind its own business" when it comes to personal decisions.

"The difference between us and the Republicans," he said, "is they want to take personal moral choices and impose them on others."

Frank also criticized the current administration for allowing the inequalities in our capitalist economy get so out of hand and for its constant defense of the Iraq War.

"Bush defended a major policy decision (the war) not by saying he was right, but that other people were wrong too!"

According to the Director of Programs Kendra Salvador, the UMass Democrats held the convention with the hopes of providing the attendees with the knowledge for grassroots organization and to ultimately strengthen the Democratic Party and win the governorship in 2006.

DO YOU HAVE A Favorite Academic Advisor?
nominate them for the
Outstanding Academic Advisor Award

The Selection Committee for the 2005-2006 Outstanding Academic Advisor Award invites all students, faculty and staff to nominate undergraduate academic advisors whose practices distinguish them from other advisors. The Characteristics of an outstanding advisor include but are not limited to:

- Building strong relationships with students
- Monitoring students' progress towards academic and career goals
- Making appropriate referrals
- Knowing and understanding institutional regulations, policies and procedures

Nominations of faculty and staff who advise undergraduate students should be submitted to:

Outstanding Academic Advisor Award Committee
Office of the Provost
362 Whitmore Building

Nominations (in writing, by phone, or by email to getinde@provost.umass.edu) should be recieved by Friday 11/18/05.
For further information, call the Provost Office at 545 2554.

The Journalism Program Lecture Series on Broadcast and the Media

AFTER KATRINA:
How Radio Saved the City of New Orleans

A panel featuring
DIANE NEWMAN, News Director, WWL Radio, New Orleans
MONICA PIERRE, News Director, Clear Channel Radio New Orleans
ERNESTO SCHWEIKERT, Owner, KGLA 1540
The city's oldest Spanish language station

Wednesday, November 16, 2005, 4-5:30 p.m.

THE LEARNING COMMONS
W.E.B. DU BOIS LIBRARY
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST

Reception at Memorial Hall, immediately following

This series is funded by David '79 and Teena Kantor

Live d life o excitem or writ
News
545-17

Authorities investigate kidnapper

By MATT APUZZO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WATERBURY, Conn. — When a Connecticut salesman was charged with trying to kidnap a New York teenager from her school parking lot Halloween night, police believed it was a random, isolated abduction attempt.

Two weeks later, the man whose work van contained a tarp and a noose that night in Saratoga Springs, N.Y., is being investigated in at least three states for unsolved sex and murder cases.

Investigators are looking at crimes dating back as far as 1988 to see if there's a connection to 49-year-old John Regan, a married father of three now facing his second kidnapping charge in just over a year.

"We'll know a lot more about John Regan in the months to come, but from what we understand, he led a very interesting double life," Waterbury Police Superintendent Neil O'Leary said. "He led a life as a father, a devoted father, devoted to his kids, frequently seen at their sporting events. A nice house in a nice neighborhood, a very respected and well-liked wife. And you know, obviously there was a total dark side to John Regan."

Defense attorney Stewart Jones said the sweeping investigations only encourage false accusations.

"Obviously, he's an easy target for the police," Jones said. "I don't think they're going to turn up anything."

Detectives are reviewing Regan's business trips to Sturbridge, Mass., to see whether he was in nearby Warren when 16-year-old lifeguard Molly Bish disappeared on June 27, 2000.

"I'm glad they're looking at him," said Molly's father, John Bish, who discussed Regan's case with investigators. "I'm glad they're taking things seriously."

Across upstate New York, state troopers are reviewing abduction cases.

"We owe it to the people who are missing to make sure it's fully investigated," said James A. Murphy III, the district attorney in Saratoga County.

O'Leary also wants to revisit the unsolved murders of Mildred Alvarado and Karen Everett, two prostitutes found strangled in Harwinton in 1988 and 1989. Both women worked the streets less than a mile from Regan's home, O'Leary said.

Police charged Regan last year in connection with a 1993 attack, in which a Waterbury woman awoke to find a masked man in her bedroom. According to court documents, the man gagged her, put a pillowcase over her head and raped her.

Investigators believe the attacker knew his victim because he disguised his voice and face. But the case languished and the victim won a lawsuit against the city for mishandling the investigation.

In 2004, police received a complaint from one of Regan's employees, who accused him of pulling her onto his lap, forcing her onto her back and trying to have sex with her.

Planned Parenthood leader discusses Supreme Court provide the court with a swing vote, previously held by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor. Pearl believes that Alito will swing his votes to the right, possibly helping to overturn more facets of Roe vs. Wade.

PARENTHOOD from page 1

Pearl talked about a case that will be heard by the Supreme Court in the near future. This case will seek to limit the waiving of restrictions for abortion. For example, all restrictions that have been placed on abortion are, at this time, allowed to be waived if the woman's health is in jeopardy. The new case, if held, will allow the waiving of restrictions only if a woman's life is in danger.

"We can't underestimate the urgency of this possibility," said Pearl, "Women's health must come first...If this one law passes, we will see the exception of women's health being stripped from abortion restriction across the board."

Pearl encouraged her audience to educate their friends and family about the importance of Roe vs. Wade. "Don't let anybody tell you you're overreacting," she said, "If they ask you whether you really believe that Roe will be overturned, tell them....When people ask you what you're worried about, tell them what you know. Teach them... And don't give up."

Before she accepted her current position as interim president of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Pearl was the president and CEO of the Planned Parenthood of Nassau County, N.Y. During this time, she worked to establish sex-education programs that taught about proper use of contraceptives rather than focusing on an abstinence-only curriculum. Pearl also launched the Voices for Choice program to recruit and train pro-abortion activists.

The speech was organized by UMass VOX: Students for Choice, who, according to their Web site, "exists to educate the university community about reproductive health and rights, to translate increased awareness into pro-choice activism on campus and to serve as a coalition partner to state, national and international reproductive rights efforts."

ELIZABETH ANNE FREELAND

Karen Pearl, the interim president of Planned Parenthood Federation of America, gives a speech on the her opinions about the next Supreme Court Justice to her audience last Thursday.

President Bush's low popularity affects his influence

By TOM RAUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush's slumping popularity at home may be taking a toll on his ability to exert influence overseas.

Just a few years ago, rival and allied nations alike fretted that a cocky Bush administration was attempting to impose its will around the world.

Such swagger is harder to find these days. As Bush prepares to depart Monday on a trip to Asia, questions abound about the global consequences of a U.S. president hobbled by domestic setbacks.

In recent weeks, his administration has:

—Seen its proposal for a Western Hemisphere-wide free-trade pact torpedoed during Bush's trip to Latin America. Several other of his trade initiatives are in jeopardy, too.

—Failed to persuade the U.N. nuclear watchdog to refer Iran's suspect nuclear activities to the Security Council for possible penalties.

—Run into more obstacles in six-country talks over North Korea's nuclear agenda.

—Clashed with major European allies which, for the first time, joined other countries in supporting a move to wrest administrative control over the Internet from the United States.

"Behind the scenes, there's a recognition that the United States is tied down somewhat in Iraq and preoccupied domestically, and that this is a tough time for the Bush administration," said Kurt Campell, who was deputy assistant secretary of defense for Asia and the Pacific during the Clinton administration.

"It comes at a time when China's stock is extremely high in Asia as a whole. There's a growing recognition that China has taken enormous advantage of the challenges facing the Bush administration, in Iraq and elsewhere, to consolidate its gains in Asia," said Campell, now with the Center for International and Strategic Studies.

In Europe, Bush's principal Iraq war partner, British Prime Minister Tony Blair, is reeling from political woes of his own.

Presidents, most recently Bill Clinton, have drawn strength from foreign trips and basked in the approval of American-flag waving crowds. But Bush has drawn muted responses from many world leaders and a larger-than-usual share of anti-American demonstrations.

He never was particularly well-liked overseas, to begin with.

Now, allies might be even more emboldened in opposing positions staked out by the U.S. And antagonistic governments in North Korea, Iran and elsewhere might be less intimidated by Bush's threats, seeing how bogged down the U.S. is in Iraq.

Iran and North Korea probably are less fearful than before that Bush might use preemptive military force against them to accomplish Iraq-style changes in rule, and so, too, are their neighbors, O'Hanlon suggested.

"South Korea, for example, might have worried before about a war with North Korea they did not want. And I think they're probably less worried about it now," he said.

The U.S. still wields enormous influence, of course, if only because it remains the sole military superpower and has the largest economy.

Statements by Iran's new president advocating the destruction of Israel, and recent terrorist attacks on civilians might help Bush rally more global support.

Bush's foreign policy agenda remains ambitious and includes the spread of democracy, but he may not have the resources or public support to carry it out. U.S. forces are spread thin in Iraq and Afghanistan, and the public appetite for additional foreign entanglements seems faint.

President George W. Bush waves to the crowd after delivering his "War on Terror" speech during the Veteran's day 2005 celebration on Friday.

Book costs fought

By NICHOLAS WILBUR
OREGON DAILY EMERALD (U. OREGON)

EUGENE, Ore. - University sophomore Mike Filippelli pays for his textbooks on a credit card. His student loans go toward expenses such as rent, food and electricity bills.

Police charged Regan last year in connection with a 1993 attack, in which a Waterbury woman awoke to find a masked man in her bedroom. According to court documents, the man gagged her, put a pillowcase over her head and raped her.

Filippelli, who is the newly elected Student Senate treasurer, said he is taking two tuition-discounted classes this term.

I don't exactly have the time for another job," he said.

This scenario isn't rare.

As part of a national campaign, Oregon Student Public Interest Research Group and state PIRGs around the country are taking action against "skyrocketing" textbook prices in an effort to make college more accessible and affordable for current and future students.

A report published in July by the Government Accountability Office confirmed previous research by state PIRGs that textbook prices are rising at four times the rate of inflation.

"The average student will spend $900 each year on textbooks, equivalent to 17.5 percent of tuition and fees at four-year public colleges and 43 percent of these costs to two-year public institutions," according to Ripoff 101, the state PIRGs' higher education project from February.

"Over a four-year college career, textbooks will add $3,600 or more to the average student's college expenses," it states.

The national campaign against unnecessary new editions and the common practice of "bundling" books with CD-ROMs is now attracting the attention of student governments across the nation, including the ASUO.

Last week the ASUO Executive and Student Senate joined the coalition by signing a resolution to "keep the cost of producing textbooks as low as possible," and "pass on cost-savings to students once purely online textbooks are on the market."

Three leading higher education textbook publishers, Thomson, McGraw-Hill and Pearson, had not responded to Emerald inquiries as of press time.

News Meeting for all news writers Wednesday at 4pm in the Collegian Office. New writers welcomed!

ASIAN ARTS & CULTURE PROGRAM
YUNGCHEN LHAMO
in concert
Wednesday, November 16
Bowker Auditorium at 8pm
Yungchen Lhamo, Tibet's internationally acclaimed diva and award-winning singer and songwriter, walked over the Himalayas from Tibet to India on a perilous journey to meet and receive blessings of His Holiness the Dalai Lama. The power and purity of Yungchen's voice gives heart to her spiritual devotion and performance. Join us to shower blessings on the people around the world.
General Admission $15, Students $7
For more information go to www.finearts.center.com/asian
FINE ARTS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
TICKETS 1-800-999-UMAS or 545-2511

Enter to win Gift Certificates to great area restaurants!
Monday, Nov 14th at Franklin DC
Franklin favorites
Sirloin Tips with Red Wine
Chicken Fingers
Ceasar Salad
Taco Bar
Mexican Rice
Ben & Jerrys
Lemon Creme Cake
Starbucks
from 5-8pm
Tuesday, Nov 15th at Hampshire DC
cafe talésai
Tom Khar Gai Chicken Coconut Soup
Thai Spring Rolls with Sweet Chili Sauce
Thai Salad Station with Authentic Thai Salad Dressing
Shrimp Satay with Peanut Sauce
Tofu Saute with Peanut Sauce
Grilled Salmon with Penang Curry
Roast Pork with Yellow Curry
Pad Thai Noodle with Tofu
Jasmine Rice
Stir Fry Vegetables
Black Glutanous Rice with Coconut milk
Coconut Custard
from 5-8pm
Restaurant WEEK
NOV. 14-17th
from 5-9pm
EASTSIDE
Spicy Buffalo Style Portobello Mushrooms
Mojo Pork Tenderloin with Salsa Verde Cream
Chicken Etouffee
Wild Salmon with Black Olive Vinaigrette
Shrimp Ciarina with Tomato Risotto
Parmesan Asparagus
Garlicky Pasta with Asparagus
Bananas Foster Bread Pudding
from 5-9pm
Wed. Nov 16th at Berkshire DC
長城 Great Wall chinese restaurant
General TSO Chicken
Shrimp Stir Fry
Spare Ribs
Spring Rolls
Vegetable Fried Rice
Roast Pig
Scallion Pancakes
Mandarin Salad
Fortune Cookies
Thurs. Nov 17th at Worcester DC
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Dining Award

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 2005

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Why UMass fails at diversity

Jeff Napolitano

Last week, anti-racist author and speaker Tim Wise spoke in the Campus Center Auditorium. He made an understated observation about race and ethnicity at UMass Amherst, technically a public school. Although this school is supposedly open to the public, at the same time that the state of Massachusetts is increasing in racial and ethnic diversity, here at UMass the diversity of the student population has been decreasing. At an institution that is "color-blind" in which race is not a factor, one would expect to see the diversity of the state reflected in the student body. However, given that the state's diversity is going up and UMass' diversity is going down, one must conclude that this institution's admission policies and practices are indeed race-based. And given the disproportionate number of white faces on campus, we all know which race is being favored.

The uninformed person might wonder whether this was an intentional effort. Perhaps the top administrators of this school, Chancellor Lombardi and Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano, didn't know that UMass' policies filter out students of color. Someone who hasn't been paying attention might think that Lombardi and Gargano just don't know that students of color are getting less support than they did 10 years ago. Fortunately, there's plenty of evidence that these guys know exactly what is going on.

> According to some Commission members, when asked for a definition of "diversity," Gargano replied that a "diverse" student body is one that has students from each of the 50 states.

What is the first piece of evidence against Gargano and Lombardi? The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request filed last year. In the summer of 2004, a FOIA was sent to the administration asking for the demographics of the student body in terms of income and race. This was an attempt by then-president Eduardo Bustamante to determine exactly who is admitted and enrolled at the university.

The response? Gargano met with Bustamante, told him that administrators didn't "trust" what would be done with this public information and refused to hand it over. Bustamante then appealed to the state of Massachusetts, at which time the state supervisor of public records, after finding the administration's objections invalid, ordered UMass to hand over the data.

That was in the fall of 2004. It is now the fall of 2005, and the administration still refuses to hand over these records. After illegally withholding this information, the case was given to the Attorney General's office, where it now is being processed. On Oct. 31, Lombardi admitted that his office was "dragging our feet" because he didn't agree with the state's ruling. (One might ask what would happen to one of us if we decided that we were going to "drag our feet" in obeying state law – hell, what might happen if we "dragged our feet" paying our tuition?)

So the question remains: What are the demographics of the student body? The statistics given on the UMass Web site aren't correct, because then Lombardi wouldn't be so intent on hiding the data behind the statistics. The FOIA asks for the raw data – and that data can't be flattering, given that the Chancellor is insistent on breaking the law to hide it.

But that's just one strike against the Chancellor. Another prime example of his dishonesty is his creation of the Commission on Campus Diversity, established last year after the infamous "KKK-9" incident. At the beginning of the commission, Lombardi stated that there would be an open "conversation" about campus diversity. He told the Commission in one of its first meetings that diversity was a great concern at UMass, and he would implement all of their recommendations. Well, he lied.

On March 1, 2005, the Commission released its report. Of the 27 recommendations made, only 13 were accepted by Lombardi. The first (and arguably most important) recommendation was to "Appoint a senior level administrator ... to review and coordinate all diversity and inclusion activities." The Chancellor immediately knocked that off the table.

The Commission further stated that students and student agencies should be valued and respected. Lombardi's response? To pull the Office of ALANA Affairs, an office created by and for students of color, from the hands of the student body. "Not only did Lombardi not carry out his promise to implement the Commission's recommendations," said Uri Strauss, a commission member in a recent phone interview, "But in some cases he actually did the opposite of what was recommended."

In the last month, Strauss has been trying to get the transcripts of the testimony of those who came in front of the Commission. He hopes to bring to light some of the given statements, particularly one by Vice Chancellor Gargano. According to some Commission members, when asked for a definition of "diversity," Gargano replied that a "diverse" student body is one that has students from each of the 50 states.

Determining who goes to this school is a crucial issue. The mission statement declares that UMass is to provide an "accessible education." The diversity of the school is an implicit priority of its accessibility. The Diversity Commission was a step in the right direction. The problem is that Lombardi, the guy in the top spot at this university, was kicked out of his old school for describing a Black administrator as an "Oreo." Given this, his dishonesty and Gargano's ridiculous interpretation of diversity, how the hell can diversity be taken seriously with these guys in charge?

Jeff Napolitano is a Collegian columnist.

Comedians gain from conspiracy

Debbie Friedman

I am not big on conspiracy theories. I don't believe that the CIA had Kennedy killed. I don't believe that the video footage of our first moon landing was phony, and despite what Kanye West says, I don't think "the government administered AIDS." In fact, for a raving liberal I am pretty conservative when it comes to believing in crazy theories. However, I am quite certain that the re-election of George W. Bush is most definitely part of an elaborate conspiracy.

I am convinced there was a powerful underground movement behind his campaign. A movement fueled by people with an intense motivation to keep Bush in office, but this movement was not fueled by political aspirations. Therefore it was not Karl Rove, Scooter Libby, Rush Limbaugh or any of those neo cons scheming behind this. The people who got Bush re-elected are perhaps some of the most genius minds around today. They are the comedians who have made political punditry so humorous in the past few years.

Don't let their liberal politics or their cunning criticisms of the President fool you. Every comedian in this country wanted Bush to win and it's easy to see why. George W. Bush has made the job of comedians so ridiculously effortless, that they simply could not resist another four years of priceless comedy. Sure, the Clinton years were good times too, but Bush is like a Godsend to people in the comedy field.

Do you remember Bush falling off the Segway a few years back? You know that two wheeled machine in which falling off is supposed to be next to impossible? One would think that a man capable of running the most powerful country in the world could keep his balance, especially on a machine that actually balances itself. Well, not George. I mean if you are a comedian and something like that happens, the jokes are basically written for you. All you have to do is watch this man try and speak without a teleprompter and it's like a skit straight out of Saturday Night Live. The fact is comedians need Bush.

A couple years back, once the Monica Lewinsky jokes got old and before Bush was elected, comedic performances were getting pretty bland. This was around the time that SNL was terrible and the Daily Show was barely known. Then came Bush, and everything changed. Will Ferrell skyrocketed to stardom in part because of his impersonation of the President on SNL. The Daily Show and Jon Stewart became household names, and Bill Maher got a new deal with HBO. Basically, George W. Bush revitalized comedy everywhere.

> He even has calendars with one of his moronic quotes for every day of the year. It is hard to imagine anyone, let alone the President, having said enough stupid statements to fill up 365 days, but this guy pulls it off with brilliant execution.

It is not just comedians who are profiting from Bush's stupidity either. People in the comic merchandising business are having a field day with this presidency. For instance, there are endless amounts of books, stickers, tee shirts and figurines poking fun at him. He even has calendars with one of his moronic quotes for every day of the year. It is hard to imagine anyone, let alone the President, having said enough stupid statements to fill up 365 days, but this guy pulls it off with brilliant execution.

Despite all of John Kerry's flaws, his election to the presidency would have been devastating to the comedic industry. Sure, they could make some jokes about how stiff and boring he is like they did during his campaign. There would definitely be some skits about him getting Botox and probably some shots taken at his outspoken wife, but after a while there would not really be too much to laugh about. After all, who wants a president that does not make a fool of himself on a daily basis? Surely not comedians.

At first I was outraged to learn about this conspiracy. However, now that I really sit down and think about it, can you blame them? I mean, only once in a lifetime does a President come along who has the wit of a squirrel and the expressions of a chimpanzee. Everything about him, from his smirk to his preschool level of literacy, is pure humor. Without him, what would we laugh at when we turn on David Letterman each night? We would be reduced to the same old jokes about Michael Jackson's sleepovers with little boys or worse, Arnold Schwarzenegger quoting the "Terminator" in his political speeches.

I for one don't think I could stand another joke about any of those subjects. But I will never be too tired to hear a Bush joke or watch clips of him stammering over his words. So, while I shudder at his politics and think back to the awful mistake this country made one year ago, I can at least take comfort in the fact that I will be laughing my head off for the next three years.

Debbie Friedman is a Collegian columnist.

Battle of laundry warriors

Jackie Hai

Every week, those of us living on campus find ourselves dragged, sometimes kicking and screaming, to the battlefields in residence halls known as laundry facilities. Some enterprising individuals have turned putting off laundry, as if dodging the draft, into an art form, but sooner or later we all have to face the horrible reality that we're out of underwear and socks, and there's no more delaying the inevitable.

As a public service, I now submit for your perusal a field guide to likely encounters in the never-ending Laundry Wars:

Landmines

These are perhaps one of the most common sights on the battlefield, perplexing and confounding at once those neglected, damp lumps of laundry abandoned in washers long after their cycles are completed. And if you're unfortunate enough to run into a situation where all the washers are loaded with landmines? You could attempt to dig one out, and if you're considerate, you may even relocate it to an empty dryer with a note to the owner. Such activity, though, is fraught with risk of trauma from being exposed to parts of a stranger's wardrobe you wished you hadn't seen.

Juggernauts

Few things strike more fear into the hearts of laundry warriors than arriving on the field to find a juggernaut already there, determinedly in the process of piling two or more massive loads of dirty clothes into the washers. The faint of heart are at this point reduced to a gibbering mass of panic, unable to do more than stare, transfixed, at the barrage of musty-smelling garments pouring from seemingly bottomless hampers. More seasoned veterans are still faced with a strategic dilemma. Do you dare cut in and try to secure the last remaining washer? Faulty dryers exacerbate matters further – even if you do stake a claim on a washer, will the juggernaut muscle you out of the good dryers that fateful 33 minutes later?

Snipers

It happens to the most diligent of warriors. Basking in the glory of successfully loading a washer with your clothes, you take little notice of the warrior who has arrived just as you're leaving. While you're off waiting for the cycle to finish, you find yourself delayed by something trivial and return a few minutes late. But – oh no – all the dryers are full and you realize that the person who came after you has taken your rightful spot through speed and precision. You've just been sniped.

Paratroopers

A tactic encountered largely in the Southwest towers, where laundry rooms of one washer and one dryer each are located on multiple floors. Finding the dryer on his or her floor in use, the impatient laundry warrior may take his or her wet clothes to the dryer on another floor. It's possible to create a chain reaction in this manner, with numerous loads of laundry beginning on one floor and winding up somewhere else entirely. Like the poor sap at the bottom of Ponzi's pyramid, however, someone's always bound to lose out in the end.

Trench soldiers

Intrepid, desperate or some combination of the two? Every so often, you might come across one of the few and the proud, those who camp out in the hallway next to the laundry room. Some come equipped with a supply of reading or portable music. But don't be fooled by that textbook they seem to be absorbed in, because really they're watching you. All kidding aside, though, this strategy of devoting 45 minutes to making sure your clothes transition smoothly from washer to dryer does bear certain merits over running up and down five flights of stairs to check on the laundry room for the umpteenth time over the course of a day.

Laundry is dangerous business

Even isolated cases of "laundry rage" are not all that uncommon – chalk it up to more and more warriors cracking under the stress of battle. Believe me, an angry college student flinging damp boxer-briefs in a cramped room is a terrifying sight indeed. What can be done to stem the horrors of war in laundry facilities across the campus? Maybe we really do need more Lebensraum; after all, how can three washers and dryers (with one or more usually in some state of non-functionality) be enough for four floors full of residents? At the very least, simple things like dryers that actually dry clothes in a single cycle can have a great impact on keeping the peace. There's one glimmer of hope, though: Residence halls can pool their resources to get better machines. If the university met us just halfway, we may someday see an end to the struggle.

> Laundry is dangerous business. Even isolated cases of "laundry rage" are not all that uncommon – chalk it up to more and more warriors cracking under the stress of battle. Believe me, an angry college student flinging damp boxer-briefs in a cramped room is a terrifying sight indeed.

Until then, best of luck to you, my fellow laundry warriors, as we fight the good fight, the honorable fight, the fight for polka-dotted underwear and missing left socks.

Jackie Hai is a Collegian columnist.

'Party trumps race'

Benjamin Duffy

J.C. Watts knows about racism. He was born at the tail end of Jim Crow, and can remember sitting in a segregated movie theater in Oklahoma. He remembers being one of two Black children to integrate the all-white elementary school in his town, and he remembers ruffling some feathers when he became his high school's first black quarterback. When he went on to play quarterback for the Oklahoma Sooners, Watts found out a second time that some people weren't comfortable with a Black quarterback. His critics were silent after he led the Sooners to two consecutive Orange Bowl victories.

If people had trouble imagining a Black man being a quarterback, even more people would find it hard to imagine a Black man being a Republican. But that's exactly what J.C. Watts is: the first Black Republican to be elected from a southern state since Reconstruction. That didn't sit well with some people, namely "civil rights leaders" and racist Democrats.

During his initial 1994 campaign for the Fourth Oklahoma District, Watts was the victim of racist attacks. His opponent in the campaign, David Perryman, dug up an old picture of Watts from his high school days, in which Watt's hair was styled in an afro. By 1994, Watts was in his mid-thirties, and it made no sense for Perryman to run campaign ads using old pictures from the 1970's. No sense, that is, unless Perryman was trying to make an issue out of the afro.

That's exactly what Perryman was trying to do: to scare white voters, who might associate the afro with violent Black Panthers, or make him look like a silly "Jackson 5" wannabe. But Watts had never been a Black Panther. He wore an afro for the same reason that lots of teenagers style their hair, because his father hated it.

Watts has since retired from Congress, but more Black conservatives are facing the same uphill battle that he did. Michael Steele, for example, is the Republican Lieutenant Gov. of Maryland, and a candidate for the U.S. Senate. He's also Black, and he has taken a lot of abuse from members of his own race. Besides being called an "Uncle Tom," he was also pelted with Oreo cookies (black on the outside, white on the inside) at a gubernatorial debate in 2002.

Prominent Maryland Democrats don't seem to care either. "Party trumps race, especially on the national level," said state Sen. Lisa A. Gladden, a Black democrat. Candidates should debate the issues fervently, while racial considerations play no role. But that's not what Gladden meant. "If you are bold enough to run, you have to take whatever the voters are going to give you. It's democracy, perhaps at its worst, but it is democracy," she continues. So when she says, "politics trumps race," she really means that if your politics aren't in line, racial attacks are fair game.

Howard Dean is known for sticking his foot in his mouth, and I will never forget the time he said that Republicans are "pretty much a white Christian party." Is there something wrong with being white and Christian, Dr. Dean? Well no, he later backtracked. Nothing wrong with being white and Christian, and of course there's plenty of room for white Christians within the Democratic Party, but Republicans should strive to be more "inclusive."

So there it is. Dean says that Republicans should be more inclusive. But if a "J.C. Watts" or a "Michael Steele" comes along, "politics trumps race," and Oreo cookies and old afro-photos become political weapons. So if you're Black, you had better toe the line. Dean was just kidding when he said that Republicans should be more inclusive. He'd be perfectly happy if every Black person in America voted Democrat every year. So, if you don't want an Oreo bounced off of your skull, keep pulling that lever for the Democrats.

Benjamin Duffy is a world perspectives columnist He is currently on exchange in Germany.

PRACTICE YOUR FIRST AMENDMENT RIGHT.

WRITE FOR EDITORIAL&OPINION.

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 2005

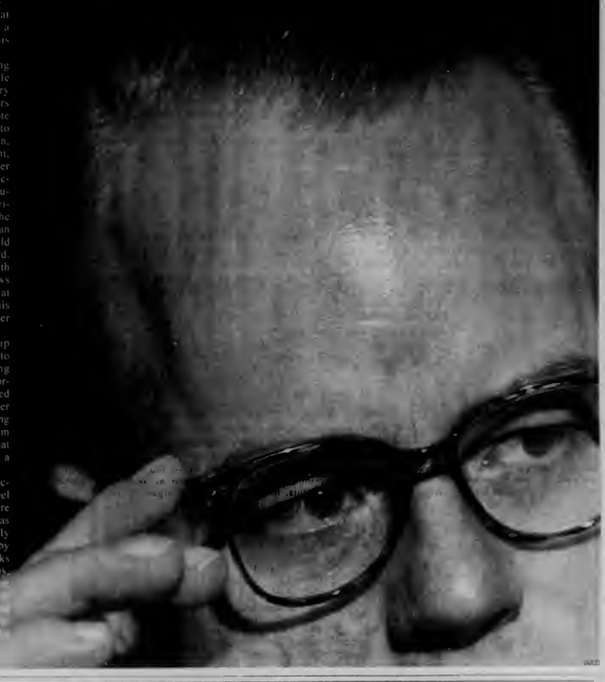
ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Capote' shows disturbing side of author

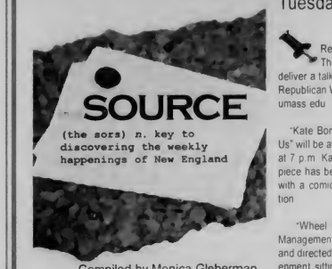
By Peter Frisman

As anyone who has seen his previous films could have predicted, the highlight of Bennett Miller's "Capote" is the performance of Philip Seymour Hoffman, in the starring role of the title character. The enigmatic Truman Capote is apparently such a difficult role to master that the viewer might get a lingering suspicion that Hoffman is fabricating some of Capote's eccentricities to better show off his acting skills.

"Capote"
Directed by Bennett Miller
Starring Philip Seymour Hoffman
Sony Pictures Classics
Rated R
98 mins.
Grade A-



Despite what its title might suggest, "Capote" is not a true biopic of the author, but a study of the events that impacted his work "In Cold Blood." We are first shown the discovery of the grisly crime the book was based on – the murder of a wealthy farm family – and then we switch off to Mr. Capote, gesticulating with gusto as he rattles off another off-the-cuff anecdote to equally dolled-up guests at a dinner party. Through this scene change, the film seems to be pointing out how a socialite like Capote is highly unlikely to dwell on the subject of a gruesome mass killing.



We will soon learn, however, that Capote is far from the average socialite. Capote has apparently had many hurtles to clear on his way to becoming a revered writer. He is gay, in an era when being gay would almost certainly be an impediment to being accepted by society; he has a bizarrely affected voice, as if he is trying much too hard to be sophisticated; and he is for the most part an all-around oddball. But he has too much pride to succumb to the pressures of others to abandon his goals. "People have always thought they had me pegged, because of the way I am, and the way I talk ... And they're always wrong." He also apparently has delusions of grandeur, or at least is pathetically insecure (he pays a train worker to compliment him on his works).

The film consists of Capote trying to write a book about the killings while forming an odd relationship with Perry Smith, one of the convicted murderers (Clifton Collins Jr. "Traffic") Capote first presents himself to Smith as his salvation, sympathetic to his plight, and the two bond over their similar pasts of rejection. Smith also has delusions of grandeur, as evidenced by the fact that he penned in his journal an acceptance speech should he ever receive an award. Capote's infatuation with Smith gradually grows more unsettling, and at one point he admits his feelings for Smith border on the romantic.

Their relationship eventually devolves into Capote manipulating Smith to provide information he can incorporate into his book. Capote is helped along the way by his colleague Harper Lee, played by Catherine Keener ("Being John Malkovich"), although the film never explores the persistent rumor that Capote was the ghostwriter of "To Kill a Mockingbird."

While "Capote" is almost always objective in its narration, one can't help but feel as if it's a morality tale, preaching pure intentions. Truman Capote is presented as a tragic hero, a man who wants genuinely to know the truth, but is so fascinated by the subject's visceral nature that he risks getting closer to the truth than is healthy, like a moth to a flame. While fans of Capote will be disturbed by this film's depiction of him, audiences will be strangely attracted to this tale of good intentions gone awry, with a curiosity reminiscent of the title character.

Compiled by Monica Gleberman

Monday November 14

"Talking About Ethics at Work: Strategies for Research, Pedagogy & Practice" will be in Isenberg School of Management starting at 3:30 p.m. Come for a distinguished lecture presented by George Cheney, Professor of Organizational Communication at the University of Utah

"Arya Tara: Sand Mandala — Drepung Loseling Monks" presented by the Mystical Arts of Tibet will be performing at the Fine Arts Center. This will be highlighting Tibetan arts and culture through a series of special events. This event is free. For more information call the FAC at 545-2511

"Dark Descendents — 21 Days In Rondebosch South Africa" will be available in the Augusta Savage Gallery starting today. Painter Donald Boudreaux shares what he learned during three weeks observing post-Apartheid South Africa as part of Augusta Savage Gallery's Arts International Residency Program. For more information call the FAC at 545-2511.

Business and Social Responsibility Fair will begin in the Campus Center Auditorium at 5 p.m. The Isenberg School first-year undergraduate class (more than 500 students) will be participating.

Tuesday November 15

Chris Mooney will give a talk, "The Republican War on Science," at Food for Thought Books starting at 6 p.m. Mooney will deliver a talk discussing his newly released book, The Republican War on Science." For more information visit umass.edu

"Kate Bornstein: On Men, Women, and the Rest of Us" will be at Bowker Auditorium. The lecture will begin at 7 p.m. Kate's autobiographical interactive signature piece has been described as Postmodern Gender 101 with a comic twist. Visit umass.edu for more information

"Wheel of Time" will be in Isenberg School of Management starting at 7 p.m. This show was written and directed by Werner Herzog. Buddha found enlightenment sitting under a tree in Bodh Gaya, India and today Buddhist monks are ordained in this holy place.

Frank Santos, R-Rated Hypnotist will be performing at the Fine Arts Center beginning at 7:30 p.m. New England's premiere hypnotist and innovative comedian has been mesmerizing audiences for over 21 years. Admission is $5 for students. For more information call the FAC at 545-2511.

Wednesday November 16

